

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

346.4

Mx. North.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

6 JUN 1991

THE
ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS
INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS

OF CASES DECIDED IN
THE HOUSE OF LORDS THE PRIVY COUNCIL
ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT AND COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1949

VOLUME 1

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, ESQ., K.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, ESQ., K.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, ESQ.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by the Proprietors of

THE LAW JOURNAL, 11 & 12 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

REPORTERS.

House of Lords	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Chancery Division ..	{ R. D. H. OSBORNE H. McL. MORRISON }	Barristers-at-Law
King's Bench Division ..	{ F. A. AMIES, B.A. (LEEDS) M.D. CHORLTON, M.A. (OXON.) F. GUTTMAN GWYNEDD LEWIS H. McL. MORRISON CONRAD OLDHAM G. M. SMAILES }	Barristers-at-Law
Revenue Cases	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Probate, Divorce and Admiralty	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. The Rt. Hon. Lord Jowitt

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY

The Rt. Hon. Lord Porter	The Rt. Hon. Lord Normand
The Rt. Hon. Lord Simonds	The Rt. Hon. Lord Oaksey
The Rt. Hon. Lord Uthwatt (died Apr. 24, 1949)	The Rt. Hon. Lord Morton of Henryton
The Rt. Hon. Lord du Parcq (died Apr. 27, 1949)	The Rt. Hon. Lord MacDermott
	The Rt. Hon. Lord Reid of Drem

COURT OF APPEAL

MASTER OF THE ROLLS: The Rt. Hon. Lord Greene

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Tucker	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Asquith
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Bucknill	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Evershed
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Somervell	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Singleton
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Cohen	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Denning

CHANCERY DIVISION

The Hon. Mr. Justice Vaisey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Wynn-Parry
The Hon. Mr. Justice Romer	The Hon. Mr. Justice Jenkins
The Hon. Mr. Justice Roxburgh	The Hon. Mr. Justice Harman

KING'S BENCH DIVISION

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. The Rt. Hon. Lord Goddard

The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Humphreys	The Hon. Mr. Justice Jones
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hilbery	The Hon. Mr. Justice Byrne
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lewis	The Hon. Mr. Justice Morris
The Hon. Mr. Justice Oliver	The Hon. Mr. Justice Sellers
The Hon. Mr. Justice Croom-Johnson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stable	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pritchard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels	The Hon. Mr. Justice Streatfeild
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hallett	The Hon. Mr. Justice Slade
The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Birkett	The Hon. Mr. Justice Devlin
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lyskey

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

PRESIDENT. The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hodson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Willmer
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pilcher	The Hon. Mr. Justice Ormerod
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wallington	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pearce
The Hon. Mr. Justice Barnard

These reports are cited thus:
[1949] 1 All E. R.

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME I

	PAGE		PAGE
A.B. (AN INFANT), Re [Ch.D.]	709	CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. [C.A.]	874
A.R.T.S., LTD., BEAMAN v. [C.A.]	465	CANNON v. HARTLEY [Ch.D.]	50
ACTON CORPN. v. WEST MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	409	CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY v. GUEST KEEN
AKTIEBOLAGET MANUS v. FULLWOOD (R. J.) & BLAND, LTD. [C.A.]	205	BALDWIN'S IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD. [C.A.]	27
ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER [C.A.]	312	CARTER v. PICKERING [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	340
AMERIS (W. J.) CAR SALES (THIRD PARTY). WARMAN v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES CAR FINANCE CORPN., LTD. [K.B.D.]	711	CASEY, COW v. [C.A.]	197
ANDERSON v. THE GUINNESS TRUST [K.B.D.]	530	CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND HENDON RATING AUTHORITY, BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v. [C.A.]	21
ARGONAUT NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. MINISTRY OF FOOD [C.A.]	160	CHATTERLEY-WHITEFIELD COLLIERIES CO., LTD., PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	1094
ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME, TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. THE BRABO [H.L.]	294	CITY OF LONDON REAL PROPERTY CO., LTD., Re [Ch.D.]	763
ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HUNTER [K.B.D.]	1006	CLARKE, BAREFOOT v. [C.A.]	1039
BAKER, TURNER v. [C.A.]	560	CLARKE v. GRANT [C.A.]	768
BALL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	1056	COATS, GILMOUR v. [H.L.]	848
BANK OF ENGLAND, DOLLFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A., v. [Ch.D.]	946	COLLINS v. HOWARD [K.B.D.]	507
BARCOCK v. BRIGHTON CORPN. [K.B.D.]	251	COLQUHOUN (Inspector of Taxes), VESTEY'S (LORD) EXECUTORS v. [H.L.]	1108
BARDEN, DEMY HAMILTON & Co., LTD. v. ENDEAVOUR WINES, LTD. (THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.]	435	COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA [H.L.]	269
BAREFOOT v. CLARKE [C.A.]	1039	COOK v. COOK [Div.]	384
BARKER v. BARKER [Div.]	247	CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD., NAGY v. [C.A.]	1019
BARNATO (decd.), Re [C.A.]	515	COTESLOE, MIDLETON (EARL), v. [H.L.]	841
BARNES, McQUADE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	154	COULSON & Co., LTD. (THIRD PARTY). VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. [C.A.]	997
BARRETT (B. E.), LTD., Ex parte . R. v. LICENSING AUTHORITY FOR GOODS VEHICLES FOR THE METROPOLITAN TRAFFIC AREA [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	656	COW v. CASEY [C.A.]	197
BEAMAN v. A.R.T.S., LTD. [C.A.]	465	CRANSTOWN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	871
BECKENHAM CORPN., HALL v. [K.B.D.]	423	CROCKER HORLOCK, LTD. v. B. LANG & Co., LTD. [K.B.D.]	526
BEER, PESQUERIAS Y SECADEROS DE BACALAO DE ESPANA S.A. v. [H.L.]	845	CROSBY'S CONTRACT, Re [Ch.D.]	830
BEESTON AND STAPLEFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SMITH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	394	CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. INGRAM [C.A.]	896
BELL LONDON AND PROPERTIES, LTD., Ex parte . R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	720	CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS., SEBEL PRODUCTS, LTD. v. [Ch.D.]	729
BELLEROUGE PROPERTIES, LTD., JONES v. [K.B.D.]	498	CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION) [H.L.]	544
BENSON v. HOME OFFICE [K.B.D.]	48	DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD., MCCARTHY v. [C.A.]	801
BENTINCK WEST HARTLEY COLLIERIES (OWNERS), LTD., HOGAN v. [H.L.]	588	DAVIES v. SWAN MOTOR CO (SWANSEA), LTD. (SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES, (THIRD PARTIES) [C.A.]	620
BERNBAUM v. BERNBAUM [C.A.]	344	DAY v. HILL (WILLIAM) (PARK LANE), LTD. [C.A.]	219
BERRY (FREDERICK), LTD. v. ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND [K.B.D.]	706	DE BEAUTEUR, Re [Ch.D.]	439
BETTS (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	588	DEBTOR (No. 400 of 1940), Re A. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. DODWELL (THE TRUSTEE) [Ch.D.]	510
BILLINGHAM v. HUGHES [C.A.]	684	DEBTOR (No. 452 of 1948), Re A. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. M. R. LE MEE-POWER [C.A.]	652
BIRKIN (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	1045	DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD., HOSKING v. [K.B.D.]	540
BISHOPSGATE MOTOR FINANCE CORPN., LTD. v. TRANSPORT BRAKES, LTD. [C.A.]	37	DEMY HAMILTON & Co., LTD. v. BARDEN ENDEAVOUR WINES, LTD. (THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.]	435
BLACK, Ex parte . R. v. KINGSTON-UPON-HULL RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	260	DENNIS & Co., LTD. v. MUNN [C.A.]	616
BOISSEVIN v. WEIL [C.A.]	146	DENSCOMBE, LYONS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	977
BOLTON, STONE v. [MANCHESTER MICHAELMAS ASSIZES]	237	DE RIDDER (LUIS), LIMITADA, COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A., v. [H.L.]	269
BORTHWICK (decd.), Re [Ch.D.]	472	DIAMANTS, LTD., LAVENDER v. [C.A.]	532
BRABO, THE. TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME [H.L.]	294	DODWELL (THE TRUSTEE), Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. Re A DEBTOR (No. 400 of 1940) [Ch.D.]	510
BRADFIELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, HOLMES v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	381	DOLLFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A. v. BANK OF ENGLAND [Ch.D.]	946
BRIGHTON CORPN., BARCOCK v. [K.B.D.]	251	DOLMAN, R. v. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	813
BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD. v. NOVIMEX, LTD. [C.A.]	155	DONCASTER CORPN., PYRAH v. [C.A.]	883
BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v. CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND HENDON RATING AUTHORITY [C.A.]	21	DOWIE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	968
BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION v. SALVADORI [Ch.D.]	208	DRIERS (M. R.), LTD., NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. MEYRICK REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD., SAME v. [C.A.]	329
BRITISH PHOSPHATE COMRS., STEAMSHIP "INDUNA" CO., LTD. v. THE LOCH DEE [K.B.D.]	522	DUCK v. PEACOCK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	318
BROCK, MONK v. [C.A.]	786	DUDLEY AND DISTRICT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. EMERSON [Ch.D.]	691
BROCK v. WOLLAMS [C.A.]	715	DUFFIELD v. DUFFIELD [Div.]	1105
BROOK, R. v. [C.C.A.]	787	DUFFY, R. v. [C.C.A.]	932
		DUNN, MALLET v. [K.B.D.]	973

	PAGE
DYE, KENNELL v. [Ch.D.]	881
ECLES v. KIRKE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	428
EDWARDS v. HALL [K.B.D.]	352
EDWARDS v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [C.A.]	743
EGERTON v. EGERTON [DIVL.]	670
ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	120
ELLIOTT, Ex parte , R. v. R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER (O.C. DEPOT BATTALIONS) [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	373
EMERSON, DUDLEY AND DISTRICT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. [Ch.D.]	691
ENDEAVOUR WINES, LTD. (THIRD PARTY), DENBY HAMILTON & CO., LTD. v. BARDEN [K.B.D.]	435
ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD [C.A.]	980
ERITH CORPN. v. HOLDER [C.A.]	389
EVERITT v. EVERITT [C.A.]	908
FAIRE BROS. & CO., LTD., RUBENS (E. & S.), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	215
FAIRMAN v. FAIRMAN [DIV.]	938
FINCH v. TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	452
FLETCHER, (decd.) Re [Ch.D.]	732
FORD v. LANGFORD [C.A.]	433
FORTON, SWANSON v. [C.A.]	135
FREDERICK BERRY, LTD. v. ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND [K.B.D.]	706
FULLWOOD (R. J.) & BLAND, LTD., ARTIEBOLAGET MAXUS v. [C.A.]	205
GATE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	459
GALLAGHER v. SHILCOCK [K.B.D.]	921
GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD. v. O'DONNELL (OR MILLAR) [H.L.]	319
GARTH, R. v. [C.A.]	773
GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD., STUBBERY & SON v. [C.A.]	1026
GEORGE v. TOMPSON'S TRUSTEE [Ch.D.]	554
GEORGIUS v. OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS (DELEGATES) [C.A.]	342
GILMOUR v. COATS [H.L.]	848
GNAPP (ERIC), LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD [C.A.]	980
GOLDRICH, LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	402
GRANT CLARKE v. [C.A.]	768
GREEK GOVERNMENT v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, THE LISSOS [C.A.]	171
GREENE (decd.) Re [Ch.D.]	167
GREENLY v. LAWRENCE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	241
GUEST, KEEN BALDWIN IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD., CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY v. [C.A.]	27
GUINNESS TRUST, THE, ANDERSON v. [K.B.D.]	530
GUINNESS'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	680
HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD [C.A.]	444
HALL v. BECKENHAM CORPN. [K.B.D.]	423
HALL, EDWARDS v. [K.B.D.]	352
HAM RIVER GRIT CO., LTD. v. RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	286
HARLEY'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	430
HARTLEY, CANNON v. [Ch.D.]	50
HATH'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	199
HELMAN v. HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	776
HENDON RATING AUTHORITY AND CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v. [C.A.]	21
HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD., RIPPINGTON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
HILL (WILLIAM) (PARK LANE), LTD., DAY v. [C.A.]	219
HOGAN v. BENTINCK WEST HARTLEY COLLIERIES (OWNERS), LTD. [H.L.]	588
HOGAN, WOLFE v. [C.A.]	570
HOLDER, ERTH CORPN. v. [C.A.]	389
HOLMES v. BRADFELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	381
HOLT, LITTLECHILD v. [C.A.]	933
HOLT v. RHODES (W. H.) & SON, LTD. [C.A.]	478
HOME OFFICE, BENSON v. [K.B.D.]	48
HOPKINSON (decd.) Re [Ch.D.]	346
HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, HELMAN v. [C.A.]	776
HOSKING v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	540
HOWARD, COLLINS v. [K.B.D.]	507
HOWELLS, JENKINS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	942
HUGHES, BILLINGHAM v. [C.A.]	684
HUNTER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. [K.B.D.]	1006
HUNTINGTON'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	674
LISSOS, THE, GREEK GOVERNMENT v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT [C.A.]	171
INGRAM, COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. [C.A.]	896

	PAGE
INGRAM, TOWER CABINET CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1033
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. [C.A.]	120
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. REID'S TRUSTEES [H.L.]	354
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., TOOTAL BROADBURNST LEE CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	261
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., VESTRY'S (LORD) EXECUTORS v. [H.L.]	1108
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. WOLFSON [H.L.]	865
INSULCHIDE ACTIVATED PRODUCTS, LTD. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte , RE RICKETT	737
JACKSON KNOWLAND & CO., ROUYER GUILLET v. ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	244
JACOBS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	790
JAMES AND SWANSEA CORPN. (THIRD PARTIES), DAVIES v. SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD. [C.A.]	620
JAMES STOTT, LTD., WHITEHEAD v. [C.A.]	245
JENKINS v. HOWELLS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	942
JOHN v. WATKINS AND ROSEVEAKE (MOTORS), LTD. [K.B.D.]	47
JOFFE, STEPNY BOROUGH COUNCIL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	256
JOHN LAING & SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	224
JONES v. BELLEGROVE PROPERTIES, LTD. [K.B.D.]	498
KAIN v. NORFOLK [Ch.D.]	176
KARLSHAMNS (A/B) OLSEFABRIKER, MONARCH STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	1
KELLY v. STOCKPORT CORPN. [C.A.]	893
KENNELL v. DYE [Ch.D.]	881
KINGSTON-UPON-HULL RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte BLACK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	260
KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN., WILSON v. [C.A.]	679
KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, LAING (JOHN) & SON, LTD. v. [C.A.]	224
KIRKE, ECLES v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	428
KNOWLAND (JACKSON) & CO., ROUYER GUILLET v. ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	244
KOENIGSBERG (decd.) Re [C.A.]	804
KREMEZ v. RIDGWAY [K.B.D.]	662
L. v. L. [DIV.]	141
LAING (JOHN) & SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	224
LAMBIN, PHILLIPS v. [K.B.D.]	770
LANG (B.) & CO., LTD., CROCKER HORLOCK, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	526
LANGFORD, FORD v. [C.A.]	483
LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH [C.A.]	402
LARNER v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	964
LATA'S SETTLEMENT, Re [Ch.D.]	665
LAUDER v. LAUDER [C.A.]	76
LAVENDER v. DIAMANTS, LTD. [C.A.]	532
LAWRENCE, GREENLY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	241
LAWRENCE v. SINCLAIR [C.A.]	418
LEACH v. UNITED DAIRIES, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1023
LEGAL CHARGE DATED NOV. 26, 1937, Re [Ch.D.]	477
LE MEE-POWER (M. R.), Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. Re A DEBTOR (No. 452 of 1948) [C.A.]	652
LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. ROBERTS [C.A.]	815
LICENSING AUTHORITY FOR GOODS VEHICLES FOR THE METROPOLITAN TRAFFIC AREA, R. v. Ex parte B. E. BARRETT, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	656
LINDOP v. QUAIPE [C.A.]	456
LITTLECHILD v. HOLT [C.A.]	923
LLEWELIN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	487
LOCH DEE, THE, STEAMSHIP "INDUNA" CO., LTD. v. BRITISH PHOSPHATE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	522
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, BALL v. [C.A.]	1056
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, JACOBS v. [C.A.]	790
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, LARNER v. [C.A.]	964
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD v. URSON [H.L.]	60
LONG EATON CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. SMITH [C.A.]	633
LOWTHER v. SMITH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	943
LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA, COMPTOR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A., v. [H.L.]	269
LYONS v. DENSCOMBE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	977
MCCARTHY v. DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. [C.A.]	801
MACKEY v. NUTTING [C.A.]	413
MCQUADE v. BARNES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	154
MACRAE v. MACRAE [DIV.]	290

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2026

	PAGE
DYE, KENNEWELL v. [CH.D.]	881
ECOLLES v. KIRKE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	428
EDWARDS v. HALL [K.B.D.]	352
EDWARDS v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [C.A.]	743
EGERTON v. EGERTON [DIV.]	670
ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	120
ELLIOTT, Ex parte , R. v. R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER (O./C. DEPOT BATTALION) [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	373
EMERSON, DUDLEY AND DISTRICT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. [CH.D.]	691
ENDEAUOUR WINES, LTD. (THIRD PARTY), DEMBY HAMILTON & CO., LTD. v. BARDEN [K.B.D.]	435
ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD [C.A.]	980
ERITH CORPN. v. HOLDER [C.A.]	389
EVERITT v. EVERITT [C.A.]	908
FAIRE BROS. & CO., LTD., RUBENS (E. & S.), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	215
FAIRMAN v. FAIRMAN [DIV.]	938
FITCH v. TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	452
FLETCHER, (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	732
FORD v. LANGFORD [C.A.]	483
FORTON, SWANSON v. [C.A.]	135
FREDERICK BERRY, LTD. v. ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND [K.B.D.]	706
FULLWOOD (R. J.) & BLAND, LTD., AKTIEBOLAGET MANUS v. [C.A.]	205
GAITE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	459
GALLAGHER v. SHILCOCK [K.B.D.]	921
GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD. v. O'DONNELL (OR MILLAR) [H.L.]	319
GUTH, R. v. [C.C.A.]	773
GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD., STUGHERY & SON v. [C.A.]	1026
GEORGE v. TOMPSON'S TRUSTEE [CH.D.]	554
GEORGIUS v. OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS (DELEGATES) [C.A.]	342
GILMOUR v. COATS [H.L.]	848
GNAPP (ERIC), LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD [C.A.]	980
GOLDRICH, LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	402
GRANT, CLARKE v. [C.A.]	768
GREEK GOVERNMENT v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT. THE ILISSOS [C.A.]	171
GREENE (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	167
GREENLY v. LAWRENCE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	241
GUEST KEEN BALDWIN IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD., CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY v. [C.A.]	27
GUINNESS TRUST, THE, ANDERSON v. [K.B.D.]	530
GUNTER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	680
HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD [C.A.]	444
HALL v. BECKENHAM CORPN. [K.B.D.]	423
HALL, EDWARDS v. [K.B.D.]	352
HAM RIVER GRIT CO., LTD. v. RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	286
HARARI'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	430
HARTLEY, CANNON v. [CH.D.]	50
HEATH'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	199
HELMAN v. HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	776
HENDON RATING AUTHORITY AND CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v. [C.A.]	21
HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD., RIPPINGTON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
HILL (WILLIAM) (PARK LANE), LTD., DAY v. [C.A.]	219
HOGAN v. BENTINCK WEST HARTLEY COLLIERIES (OWNERS), LTD. [H.L.]	588
HOGAN, WOLFE v. [C.A.]	570
HOLDER, ERITH CORPN. v. [C.A.]	389
HOLMES v. BRADFELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	381
HOLT, LITTLECHILD v. [C.A.]	933
HOLT v. RHODES (W. H.) & SON, LTD. [C.A.]	478
HOME OFFICE, BENSON v. [K.B.D.]	48
HOPKINSON (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	346
HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, HELMAN v. [C.A.]	776
HOSKING v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	540
HOWARD, COLLINS v. [K.B.D.]	507
HOWELLS, JENKINS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	942
HUGHES, BILLINGHAM v. [C.A.]	684
HUNTER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. [K.B.D.]	1006
HUNTINGTON'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	674
ILISSOS, THE. GREEK GOVERNMENT v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT [C.A.]	171
INGRAM, COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. [C.A.]	896

	PAGE
INGRAM, TOWNE CABINET CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	408
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	120
MUSGRAVE & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	20
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	34
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	36
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	138
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [C.A.]	865
INSECTICIDE ACTING AGENTS v. [C.A.]	97
OFFICIAL RECEIVER v. [C.A.]	97
JACKSON KNOWLTON & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	244
ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	244
JACOBS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL	139
JAMES AND SON, LTD. v. [C.A.]	629
DAVIES v. SWAN	245
JAMES STOTT, LTD. v. [C.A.]	245
JENKINS v. HOWELLS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	942
JOBLIN v. WATKINS [C.A.]	139
LTD. [K.B.D.]	139
JOFFE, STEPHEN BOROUGH COUNCIL	139
DIVL. CT.]	139
JOHN LAING & SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD	139
MENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	139
JONES v. BELLEGROVE PROPERTIES, LTD.	139
KAIN v. NORFOLK [CH.D.]	139
KARLSHAMNS (A/B) OLJEFABRIKER, M	139
STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	139
KELLY v. STOCKPORT CORPN. [C.A.]	139
KENNEWELL v. DYE [CH.D.]	139
KINGSTON-UPON-HULL RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BLACK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	139
KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN., WILSON	139
[C.A.]	139
KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, LAING	139
(JOHN) & SON, LTD. v. [C.A.]	139
KIRKE, ECOLLES v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	139
KNOWLAND (JACKSON) & CO., ROUYER GUILLET	139
v. ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE ROUYER	139
GUILLET & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	139
KOENIGSBERG (decd.), Re [C.A.]	139
KREMEZI v. RIDGWAY [K.B.D.]	139
L. v. L. [DIV.]	139
LAING (JOHN) & SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD	139
ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.]	139
LAMDIS, PHILLIPS v. [K.B.D.]	139
LANG (B.) & CO., LTD., CROCKER HORLOCK, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	526
LANGFORD, FORD v. [C.A.]	483
LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH [C.A.]	402
LARNER v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	964
LATTA'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	865
LAUDER v. LAUDER [C.A.]	73
LAVENDER v. DIAMINTS, LTD. [C.A.]	732
LAWRENCE, GREENLY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	241
LAWRENCE v. SINCLAIR [C.A.]	1026
LEACH v. UNITED DAIRIES, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1026
LEGAL CHARGE DATED NOV. 26, 1937, Re [CH.D.]	7
LE MEE-POWER (M. R.), Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. [C.A.]	682
RE A DEBTOR (No. 452 of 1948) [C.A.]	682
LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. ROBERTS [C.A.]	814
LICENSING AUTHORITY FOR GOODS VEHICLES FOR THE METROPOLITAN TRAFFIC AREA, R. v. [C.A.]	656
Ex parte B. E. BARRETT, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	656
LINDOP v. QUARF [C.A.]	456
LITTLECHILD v. HOLT [C.A.]	933
LITTLEWILL'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	487
LOCH DRE, THE. STEAMSHIP "INDUNA" CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	522
BRITISH PHOSPHATE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	522
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, BAIL v. [C.A.]	1056
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, JACOBS v. [C.A.]	790
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, LARNER v. [C.A.]	964
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD v. UPSON [H.L.]	60
LONG EATON CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	633
SMITH [C.A.]	943
LOWTHER v. SMITH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	943
LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA, COMPTON D'ACHAT	269
ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A., v. [H.L.]	269
LYONS v. DENScombe [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	977
MCCARTHY v. DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. [C.A.]	801
MACKLEY v. NUTTING [C.A.]	413
MCQUADE v. BARNES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	154
MACRAE v. MACRAE [DIV.]	290

MALLETT v. DUNN [K.B.D.]	973	R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR. Ex parte	242
MARLBOROUGH COURT, LTD., OLLEY v. [C.A.]	127	MARTYN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	233
MARTYN, Ex parte . R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE	242	R. v. SEMINI [C.C.A.]	233
FOR WAR [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	242	R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER (O./C. DEPOT BATTALION),	373
METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER,	337	R. v. Ex parte ELLIOTT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	373
MUNDAY v. [K.B.D.]	337	RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. YORKSHIRE (WEST RID-	836
MEYRICK REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD., NATIONAL		ING) COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	836
PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. M. R. DRIERS, LTD.,	329	RANSOM & LUCK, LTD. v. SURBITON BOROUGH	185
SAME v. [C.A.]	329	COUNCIL [C.A.]	398
MIDDLETON (EARL) v. COTTESLOE [H.L.]	841	READ, RUSE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1102
MILLAR (OR O'DONNELL), GALASHIELS GAS CO.,	319	REAY v. YOUNG [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	609
LTD. v. [H.L.]	319	REES' WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	354
MINISTER OF FOOD, HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v.	444	REID'S TRUSTEES, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v.	478
[C.A.]	444	[H.L.]	286
MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, GREEK GOVERNMENT v.	171	RHODES (W. H.) & SON, LTD., HOLT v. [C.A.]	737
THE ILISSOS [C.A.]	171	RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY, HAM RIVER	662
MINISTRY OF FOOD, ARGONAUT NAVIGATION CO.,	160	GRIT CO. LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
LTD. v. [C.A.]	160	RICKETT, Re . Ex parte INSECTICIDE ACTIVATED	815
McNAB v. [C.A.]	1	PRODUCTS, LTD. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER [CH.D.]	891
MONK v. [C.A.]	786	RIDGWAY, KREMEZ v. [K.B.D.]	1042
MONK v. [C.A.]	786	RIPPINGTON v. HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD.	215
MONK v. [C.A.]	495	[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	398
MONK v. [C.A.]	460	ROBERTS, LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	109
MONK v. [C.A.]	337	ROBERTS v. PENRHYN (LORD) [C.A.]	749
MONK v. [C.A.]	616	ROBERTSON (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	285
MONK v. [C.A.]	786	ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER	990
MONK v. [C.A.]	1019	GUILLET & CO., LTD. ROUYER GUILLET v.	208
MONK v. [C.A.]	743	KNOWLAND (JACKSON) & CO. [C.A.]	1051
MONK v. [C.A.]	329	ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND, BERRY (FREDERICK),	490
MONK v. [C.A.]	997	LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	92
MONK v. [C.A.]	613	ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO., LTD. v.	729
MONK v. [C.A.]	365	RUSSELL [C.A.]	256
MONK v. [C.A.]	176	RUBEN (E. & S.), LTD. v. FAIRE BROS. & CO.,	893
MONK v. [C.A.]	109	LTD. [K.B.D.]	237
MONK v. [C.A.]	442	RUSE v. READ [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	245
MONK v. [C.A.]	874	RUSSELL v. DUKE OF NORFOLK [C.A.]	1026
MONK v. [C.A.]	925	RUSSELL v. ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO.,	256
MONK v. [C.A.]	1051	LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	893
MONK v. [C.A.]	155	S. v. S. [DIV.]	701
MONK v. [C.A.]	413	ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA, Re [C.A.]	620
MONK v. [C.A.]	319	SALVADORI, BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION	135
MONK v. [C.A.]	737	v. [CH.D.]	452
MONK v. [C.A.]	127	SAMPSON'S EXECUTORS v. NOTTINGHAM COUNTY	1048
MONK v. [C.A.]	901	COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	554
MONK v. [C.A.]	342	SCHOLFIELD (decd.), Re [CH.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	720	SCOTTISH INSURANCE CORPN., LTD. v. WILSONS
MONK v. [C.A.]	318	AND CLYDE COAL CO. LTD. [H.L.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	891	SEALEY, YOUNG v. [CH.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	845	SEBEL PRODUCTS, LTD. v. COMRS. OF CUSTOMS
MONK v. [C.A.]	980	AND EXCISE [CH.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	770	SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR, R. v. Ex parte
MONK v. [C.A.]	340	MARTYN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	646	SEMINI, R. v. [C.C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	1013	SHAFFER, ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v.
MONK v. [C.A.]	1094	[C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	883	SHILCOCK, GALLAGHER v. [K.B.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	456	SILVERSTON (decd.), Re [CH.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	787	SINCLAIR, LAWRENCE v. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	813	SMITH, BEESTON AND STAPLEFORD URBAN DIS-
MONK v. [C.A.]	932	TRICT COUNCIL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	773	SMITH, LONG EATON CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.
MONK v. [C.A.]	260	v. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	656	SMITH, LOWTHER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	365	SOBIESKI, THE [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]	720	SOUTHERN COUNTIES CAR FINANCE CORPN., LTD.,
MONK v. [C.A.]	646	WARMAN v. W. J. AMERIS CAR SALES, THIRD
MONK v. [C.A.]	373	PARTY [K.B.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STEAMSHIP "INDUNA" CO., LTD. v. BRITISH
MONK v. [C.A.]		PHOSPHATE COMRS. THE LOCH DEE [K.B.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL v. JOFFE [K.B.D.
MONK v. [C.A.]		DIVL. CT.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STOCKPORT CORPN., KELLY v. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STONE v. BOLTON [MANCHESTER MICHAELMAS
MONK v. [C.A.]		ASSIZES]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STOTT (JAMES), LTD., WHITEHEAD v. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		STUCHBURY & SON v. GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE
MONK v. [C.A.]		AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		SURBITON BOROUGH COUNCIL, RANSOM & LUCK,
MONK v. [C.A.]		LTD. v. [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD., DAVIES v.
MONK v. [C.A.]		[SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES, THIRD PARTIES]
MONK v. [C.A.]		SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES (THIRD PARTIES),
MONK v. [C.A.]		DAVIES v. SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD.
MONK v. [C.A.]		[C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		SWANSON v. FORTON [C.A.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE
MONK v. [C.A.]		CO., LTD., FINCH v. [K.B.D.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		THOMAS (decd.), Re [PROB.]
MONK v. [C.A.]		TOMPSON'S TRUSTEE, GEORGE v. [CH.D.]

	PAGE
MALLET v. DUNN [K.B.D.]	973
MARLBOROUGH COURT, LTD., OLLEY v. [C.A.]	127
MARTYN, Ex parte . R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	242
METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER, MUNDAY v. [K.B.D.]	337
MEYRICK REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD., NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. M. R. DRIERS, LTD., SAME v. [C.A.]	329
MIDDLETON (EARL) v. COTTESLOE [H.L.]	841
MILLAR (OR O'DONNELL), GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	319
MINISTER OF FOOD, HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	444
MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, GREEK GOVERNMENT v. THE LISSOS [C.A.]	171
MINISTRY OF FOOD, ARGONAUT NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	160
MONARCH STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. A/B KARLS-HAMNS OLEFABRIKER [H.L.]	1
MONK v. BROCK [C.A.]	788
MONK v. MURPHY [C.A.]	786
MOSS (dead.), Re [Ch.D.]	495
MULHOLLAND'S WILD TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	460
MUNDAY v. METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER [K.B.D.]	337
MUNN, DENNIS & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	616
MURPHY, MONK v. [C.A.]	786
NAGY v. CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD. [C.A.]	1019
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, EDWARDS v. [C.A.]	743
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. MEYRICK REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD. SAME v. M. R. DRIERS, LTD. [C.A.]	329
NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD., VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. COULSON & CO., LTD. (THIRD PARTY) [C.A.]	997
NEW ROCK COLLIERY (Co., LTD., Re [Ch.D.]	613
NOOR MOHAMED v. R. [P.C.]	365
NORFOLK, KAIN v. [Ch.D.]	176
NORFOLK (DUKE), RUSSELL v. [C.A.]	109
NORTH-OKE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	442
NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD., CAMNER v. [C.A.]	874
NORTON v. WHITE [C.A.]	925
NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COUNCIL, SAMPSON'S EXECUTORS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1051
NOVIMEX, LTD., BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD. v. [C.A.]	155
NUTTING, MACKLEY v. [C.A.]	413
O'DONNELL (OR MILLAR), GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	319
OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte INSECTICIDE ACTIVATED PRODUCTS, LTD. n. Re RICKETT [Ch.D.]	737
OLLEY v. MARLBOROUGH COURT, LTD. [C.A.]	127
ORR-LEWIS v. ORR-LEWIS [Div.]	504
OWEN (dead.), Re [Ch.D.]	901
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS (DELEGATES), GEORGIUS v. [C.A.]	342
PADDINGTON AND ST. MARVLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BELL LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PROPERTIES, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	720
PIACOCK, DUCK v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	318
PENRYN (LORD), ROBERTS v. [C.A.]	891
PEQUERIAS Y SECADEROS DE BACALAO DE ESPANA S.A. v. BEER [H.L.]	845
PETROLEUM BOARD, ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. [C.A.]	980
PHILLIPS v. LAMBIN [K.B.D.]	770
PICKERING, CARTER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	340
PORTER, R. v. [C.A.]	646
PRESS CARS, LTD., Re [C.A.]	1013
PRESIDENTIAL ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. CHATTERLEY-WHITFIELD COLLIERIES CO., LTD. [H.L.]	1094
PYRAH v. DONCASTER CORPN. [C.A.]	883
QUAIFE, LINDOP v. [C.A.]	456
R. v. BROOK [C.A.]	787
R. v. DOLMAN [LEEDS ASSIZES]	813
R. v. DUFFY [C.A.]	932
R. v. GARTH [C.A.]	773
R. v. KINGSTON-UPON-HULL RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BLACK [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	260
R. v. LICENSING AUTHORITY FOR GOODS VEHICLES FOR THE METROPOLITAN TRAFFIC AREA, Ex parte B. E. BARRETT, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	656
R., NOOR MOHAMED v. [P.C.]	365
R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARVLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte BELL LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PROPERTIES, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	720
R. v. PORTER [C.A.]	646
R. v. R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER (O/C DEPOT BATTALION), Ex parte ELLIOTT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	373

	PAGE
R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR, Ex parte MARTYN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	242
R. v. SEMINI [C.A.]	233
R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER (O/C DEPOT BATTALION), R. v. Ex parte ELLIOTT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	373
RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. YORKSHIRE (WEST RIDING) COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	836
RANSOM & LUCK, LTD. v. SURBITON BOROUGH COUNCIL [C.A.]	185
READ, RUSE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	398
REAY v. YOUNG [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1102
REES' WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	609
REID'S TRUSTEES, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.]	354
RHODES (W. H.) & SON, LTD., HOLT v. [C.A.]	478
RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY, HAM RIVER GRIT CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	286
RICKETT, Re . Ex parte INSECTICIDE ACTIVATED PRODUCTS, LTD. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER [Ch.D.]	737
RIDGWAY, KREMEZI v. [K.B.D.]	662
RIPPINGTON v. HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	239
ROBERTS, LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. [C.A.]	815
ROBERTS v. PENRYN (LORD) [C.A.]	891
ROBERTSON (dead.), Re [Ch.D.]	1042
ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. ROUYER GUILLET v. KNOWLAND (JACKSON) & CO. [C.A.]	244
ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND, BERRY (FREDERICK), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	706
ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO., LTD. v. RUSSELL [C.A.]	749
RUBEN (E. & S.), LTD. v. FAIRE BROS. & CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	215
RUSE v. READ [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	398
RUSSELL v. DUKE OF NORFOLK [C.A.]	109
RUSSELL, ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	749
S. v. S. [Div.]	255
ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA, Re [C.A.]	990
SALVADORI, BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION v. [Ch.D.]	208
SAMPSON'S EXECUTORS v. NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1051
SCHOLFIELD (dead.), Re [Ch.D.]	490
SCOTTISH INSURANCE CORPN., LTD. v. WILSONS AND CLYDE COAL CO., LTD. [H.L.]	1068
SEALEY, YOUNG v. [Ch.D.]	92
SEBEL PRODUCTS, LTD. v. COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE [Ch.D.]	729
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR, R. v. Ex parte MARTYN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	242
SEMINI, R. v. [C.A.]	233
SHAFFER, ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	312
SHILCOCK, GALLAGHER v. [K.B.D.]	921
SILVERSTON (dead.), Re [Ch.D.]	641
SINGLART, LAWRENCE v. [C.A.]	418
SMITH, BESTON AND STAFFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	394
SMITH, LONG EATON CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	633
SMITH, LONWHER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	943
SOBIESKI, THE [C.A.]	701
SOUTHERN COUNTIES CAR FINANCE CORPN., LTD., WARMAN v. W. J. AMERUS CAR SALES, THIRD PARTY [K.B.D.]	711
STRAMSHIP "INDUNA" CO., LTD. v. BRITISH PHOSPHATE COMRS. THE LOCH DEE [K.B.D.]	522
STEINER BOROUGH COUNCIL v. JOFFE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	256
STOCKPORT CORPN., KELLY v. [C.A.]	893
STONE v. BOLTON [MANCHESTER MICHAELMAS ASSIZES]	237
STOTT (JAMES), LTD., WHITEHEAD v. [C.A.]	245
STUCHBURY & SON v. GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD. [C.A.]	1026
SURBITON BOROUGH COUNCIL, RANSOM & LUCK, LTD. v. [C.A.]	185
SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD., DAVIES v. (SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES, THIRD PARTIES) [C.A.]	620
SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES (THIRD PARTIES), DAVIES v. SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD. [C.A.]	620
SWANSON v. FORTON [C.A.]	135
TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD., FINCH v. [K.B.D.]	452
THOMAS (dead.), Re [Prob.]	1048
TOMPSON'S TRUSTEE, GEORGE v. [Ch.D.]	554

	PAGE		PAGE
TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE Co., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.] ..	261	WATKINS (decd.), Re [CH.D.] ..	695
TOWER CABINET Co., LTD. v. INGRAM [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	1033	WATKINS AND ROSEVEARE (MOTORS), LTD., JOBLIN v. [K.B.D.] ..	47
TRANSPORT BRAKES, LTD., BISHOPSGATE MOTOR FINANCE CORPN., LTD. v. [C.A.] ..	37	WEIL, BOISSEvain v. [C.A.] ..	146
TURNER v. BAKER [C.A.] ..	560	WELLSTED'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [C.A.] ..	577
TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME. THE BRABO [H.L.] ..	294	WEST MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, ACTON CORPN. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	409
UNITED DAIRIES, LTD., LEACH v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	1023	WHITEHEAD v. STOTT (JAMES), LTD. [C.A.] ..	245
UPSON, LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD v. [H.L.] ..	60	WHITE, NORTON v. [C.A.] ..	925
VESTHEY'S (LORD) EXECUTORS v. COLQUHOUN (Inspector of Taxes) [H.L.] ..	1108	WHITESIDE v. WHITESIDE [CH.D.] ..	755
VESTHEY'S (LORD) EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.] ..	1108	WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD., DAY v. [C.A.] ..	219
VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. (COULSON & Co., LTD. (THIRD PARTY)) [C.A.] ..	997	WILSON v. KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN. [C.A.] ..	679
WALSHAM v. WALSHAM [DIV.] ..	774	WILSONS AND CLYDE COAL Co., LTD., SCOTTISH INSURANCE CORPN., LTD. v. .. [H.L.] ..	1068
WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION), CUTLER v. [H.L.] ..	544	WOLFE v. HOGAN [C.A.] ..	570
WARMAN v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES CAR FINANCE CORPN., LTD. (W. J. AMERIS CAR SALES, THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.] ..	711	WOLFSON, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [H.L.] ..	865
		WOLLAMS, BROCK v. [C.A.] ..	715
		WOOD (decd.), Re [CH.D.] ..	1100
		YORKSHIRE (WEST RIDING) COUNTY COUNCIL, RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. [C.A.] ..	836
		YOUNG, REAY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	1102
		YOUNG v. SEALEY [CH.D.] ..	92

INDEX

	PAGE		PAGE
Accident. See Workmen's Compensation.		Appointment, power of. See Power of Appointment.
Accomplice, adultery, corroboration of evidence	938	Apportionment, to ascertain standard rent.
Account stated, bookmaker's weekly statement.	219	See Rent Restriction (Standard Rent).
Accruer, to funds which had not "failed or determined," fund paid absolutely to beneficiary in accordance with trusts of settlement	674	Approbation, of unconsummated marriage, artificial insemination of wife with husband's seed, birth of child	141
Acknowledgment. See Limitation of Action.		Artificial insemination, of wife with husband's seed, approbation of unconsummated marriage, estoppel in nullity suit by wife.	141
ACQUISITION OF LAND		Assessment, to rates. See Rates.
Compensation—Acquisition after passing of Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, but before appointed day—Agricultural land—No other permitted user practicable—Permanent restriction of development—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), ss. 51 (1), (2), 55 (1), (2), (3) [SAMPSON'S EXECUTORS v. NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COUNCIL]	1051	Assignment, of lease. See Lease.
ACTION		Attachment of debt, restriction of rights of creditor by bankruptcy proceedings, completion of attachment.	554
Ubi jus, ibi remedium—Breach of statutory duty—Civil action by private person—Bookmaker—Breach by occupier of dog-racing track of duty to provide space for bookmaking—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2), s. 30 (1) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION)]	544	Avoidance of tax. See Income Tax (Avoidance).
Action, limitation of. See Limitation of Action.		Bailee, negligence, residential hotel, theft of resident's clothing from room, key left on board in office during absence, no proper system of control	127
ADMINISTRATION		BANKRUPTCY
Will — Capital or income — Settled leaseholds — War damage — Value payments—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), ss. 7 (1), 10 (2) [Re SCHOLFIELD (dec'd.)]	490	Control over trustee by bankrupt—Extent—Removal of trustee—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), ss. 80, 105 (1) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 400 of 1940). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. DODWELL (The Trustee)]	510
Adopted child, inclusion of child in will	732	Effect on previous transaction—Attachment of debt—Completion—Garnishee order—Payment into court—Order for payment out—Payment delayed through administrative difficulty—Receiving order before payment received by creditor—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 40 (2) [GEORGE v. TOMPSON'S TRUSTEE]	554
ADOPTION		Meeting of creditors—Voting—"Unliquidated debt"—Stated sum claimed as damages for misfeasance and breach of trust—High Court action pending—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), sched. I, para. 9 [Re RICKETT. Ex parte INSECTICIDE ACTIVATED PRODUCTS, LTD. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER]	737
Grandchild — Illegitimate child of daughter aged sixteen—Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 1 (1) [Re A.B. (An Infant)]	709	Receiving order—Prima facie right of petitioning creditor to order—Special circumstances to justify adjournment of petition [Re A DEBTOR (No. 452 of 1945). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. M. R. LE MEE-POWER]	652
ADULTERY		Bankruptcy, of mortgagor, enforcement of remedy by mortgagee, courts emergency powers, trustee respondent to application.	477
Evidence — Accomplish — Need of corroboration [FAIRMAN v. FAIRMAN]	938	BETTING
Justices—Wife's summons for maintenance—Charge of adultery by husband—Need for particulars of charge—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 6 [DUFFIELD v. DUFFIELD]	1105	Use of room for betting—Saloon bar of public house—Need of permission of licensee—Localisation—Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 3 [R. v. PORTER]	646
AGENCY		Bigamy. See Criminal Law.
Commission—Commission on all orders and "all repeats"—Right to commission on "repeats" after termination of agency [CROCKER HORLOCK, LTD. v. B. LANG & CO., LTD.]	526	Bookmaker, dog racing, provision of space for betting, breach of statutory duty, competence of civil action at suit of injured bookmaker	544
AGRICULTURAL HOLDING		Breach of promise, conflict of laws, English and foreign law the same, difference in remedy for breach, jurisdiction of English court, performance of the contract, full relation of husband and wife.	662
Notice to quit—Sale since Sept. 3, 1939—Conveyance by tenants in common of their interest in farm to other tenant in common—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 62 (4A) [EDWARDS v. HALL]	352	BUILDING
AGRICULTURE		Control—Licence for specific work—General authority to spend £10 and £2 a month without licence—Whether additional to work covered by specific licence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 56A (1), (2) (as amended)—Control of Building Operations (No. 8) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 74), art. 2 (1), (2) [DENNIS & CO., LTD. v. MUNN]	616
Wages—Benefits or advantages reckoned as wages—Tenancy of cottage—Contract of employment and tenancy agreement separate transactions—Rent higher than value of cottage fixed by statutory order—Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Act, 1924 (c. 37), s. 7 (1) [LONG EATON CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. SMITH]	633	"Building operation," application of Factories Act, 1937, window cleaning	532
Animal, gift for benefit of, whether charitable	495	Business premises, compensation for goodwill, carrying on business for five years, continuous period covering two contracts of tenancy	418
Anticipation, restraint on. See Restraint on Anticipation.
Appeal, by case stated. See Case Stated.
—, Court of. See Court of Appeal.
—, from county court, leave, debt or damages claimed not exceeding £20, claim for less than £20 on one cause of action coupled with claims exceeding £20 on another, whether leave required in respect of smaller claim	980

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Action against Minister of Crown—Competency—Minister of Supply—Privileges and immunities inherent in Crown—Action by conservancy authority against Minister as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wrecked ship—War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20—Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)—Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877) [LYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME, THE BRABO] ..	294
---	-----

CONTEMPT OF COURT

Chambers proceedings — Ward of court—Report of order made in chambers [RE DE BEAUJEU] ..	439
--	-----

CONTRACT

Commission—Agreement to pay commission in return for introduction—Amount to be agreed—Refusal to pay commission after introduction made—Whether agreement binding—Amount of commission—Application to all subsequent transactions [BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD. v. NOVIMEX, LTD.] ..	155
Failure of consideration—Recovery of money paid—Sale of goods—Provision for payment against delivery order—Property in the goods remaining in the sellers—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery [COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA] ..	269
Implied term — Racehorse trainer — Licence to train—Condition—Discretion of Jockey Club to withdraw licence—Need to hold inquiry before withdrawal—Conduct of inquiry according to rules of natural justice — Libel — Privilege — Qualified privilege — Racehorse trainer “warned off”—Publication in “Racing Calendar” [RUSSELL v. DUKE OF NORFOLK] ..	109
Undue influence — Duress — Failure of consideration—Contract with body having monopoly—Petroleum board having sole right to supply petrol—Conditions of contract excluding liability of board for short measure—Whether contract obtained by undue influence or duress [ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD] ..	980
Warranty — Breach — Damages — Hire-purchase agreement—Seller lacking title—Right to set off against damages reasonable hiring charges [WARMAN v. SOUTHERN COUNTIES CAR FINANCE CORP., LTD. (W. J. AMERIS CAR SALES, Third Party)] ..	711
Contract, breach, damage, remoteness. See Damage.
—, procurement. See Procurement of Breach of Contract.
—, marriage. See Marriage.
—, to transfer shares, articles of association providing for automatic transmission of shares to director's widow on his death ..	167
Control of building. See Building (Control).
Conversion, limitation of action, “action based on fraud,” “right of action concealed by fraud” ..	465
Corroboration, accomplice's evidence, proof of adultery ..	938

COSTS

Taxation—Payment by trustee according to published and accepted scale—Short-hand writers' fees—Allowance on taxation [RE ROBERTSON (dec.)] ..	1042
Tort—High Court action—Damages of £10—“Sufficient reason” for awarding costs on High Court scale—Expectation based on medical evidence of recovering more than £50—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 47 (3) (a) [FINCH v. TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD.] ..	452

Costs, certiorari. See Certiorari.

Rent Restrictions Acts. See Rent Restriction.

COUNTY COURT

Appeal — Leave — Debt or damages claimed not exceeding £20—Claim for less than £20 on one cause of action coupled with claim exceeding £20 on another—Whether leave to appeal required in respect of smaller claim—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 105 [ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD] ..	980
Jurisdiction — Negligence — Damages — Apportionment—Damages assessed at sum in excess of that which court had jurisdiction to award—Reduced to amount within limits of jurisdiction—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 40 (1)—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1), (2) [KELLY v. STOCKPORT CORPN.] ..	893
County court, probate, jurisdiction, power to pronounce for validity of will ..	1048

COURT MARTIAL

Breach of procedural military law—Power of High Court—Non-compliance with rules of procedure—Certiorari—Rules of Procedure, 1926 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 959), s. 34 (c) [R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR. Ex parte MARTYN] ..	242
Court martial, deserter arrested abroad, detention in England, delay in convening court ..	373
Court of Appeal, decision of inferior court on provision in statute, repeal and re-enactment of provision, extent to which Court of Appeal bound by previous decision ..	749

COURTS EMERGENCY POWERS

Enforcement of remedy — Appointment of receiver—“Circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war”—Contract made after cessation of active hostilities — Onus of proof—Business impeded by fuel difficulties and shortage of supplies—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (iii), (4); s. 2 (3) [NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. MEYRICK REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD. SAME v. M. R. DRIERS, LTD.] ..	329
—, Mortgage—Bankruptcy of mortgagor—Trustee respondent to application—“Unable immediately” to perform obligation—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (4), s. 4 (3) [RE LEGAL CHARGE DATED NOV. 26, 1937] ..	477

CRIMINAL LAW

Bigamy — Defence — Belief of invalidity of first marriage—Belief that first wife already married at time of marriage with accused—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 57 [R. v. DOLMAN] ..	813
Evidence tending to show commission of other crimes—Murder—Evidence of previous death in similar circumstances [NOOR MOHAMED v. R.] ..	365
Murder — Manslaughter — Provocation — Chance-medley — Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 7 [R. v. SEMINI] ..	233
—, —, —, Direction by judge [R. v. DUFFY] ..	932
Receiving — Summing-up — Explanation by prisoner of possession raising doubt in minds of jury [R. v. GARTH] ..	773
Sentence—Direction that defendant to remain in custody until payment of fine—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 14 (1) (2) [R. v. BROOK] ..	787
Criminal law, larceny. See Larceny.

CROWN

Proceeding against—Cause of action statute barred before commencement of Crown Proceedings Act, 1947—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 30 (1)—Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (c. 44), s. 1 [BENSON v. HOME OFFICE] ..	48
Crown, joinder as party, hypothetical question, possible liability to estate duty ..	515

CRUELTY

- Injury to health*—Partial intercourse—Coitus interruptus [WALSHAM v. WALSHAM].. 774
- , Sulking by husband [LAUDER v. LAUDER].. 76
- Persistent cruelty*—Summary proceedings by wife—Degree of cruelty necessary to be proved—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4 [BARKER v. BARKER].. 247

CURRENCY CONTROL

- Loan in foreign currency*—Promise to repay in sterling—Parties resident in foreign country in military occupation of enemy—Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 950), reg. 2 (1) [BOISSEvain v. WEIL].. 147
- Custody, of child.* See Child.

CUSTOMS

- Smuggling*—Forfeiture of vessel—Vessel owned by foreign citizen—Vessel proceeding outside permitted limit of navigation—Vessel "having had on board prohibited spirits"—"Use in importation of prohibited goods"—Transshipment of prohibited goods outside territorial waters—Vessel found in British port—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), ss. 169, 170, 179, 202—General Regulations of Board of Customs, dated Aug. 31, 1895, reg. 3 [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HUNTER].. 1006

DAMAGE

- Remoteness*—Breach of contract—Contract by defendant to form company—Agreement by plaintiff to contribute capital—Sale of shares to provide funds—Contract repudiated by defendant—Shares repurchased at enhanced cost—Recovery of excess [COLLINS v. HOWARD].. 507
- , Loss of profit—No notice to defendant of special circumstances—Purchase of boiler for use in business—Need to extend business—Seller ignorant of need—Delay in delivery [VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. (COULSON & Co., LTD. (Third Party))].. 997

DAMAGES

- Measure of damages*—Loss of future earnings—Deduction of amount representing yearly payments of income tax [BILLINGHAM v. HUGHES].. 684
- Damages, charterparty, breach of terms.* See Charterparty.
- , county court, assessed at sum in excess of jurisdiction, reduction on apportionment of blame to amount within jurisdiction.. 893
- , reduction, action by husband and wife, husband's claim for medical and household expenses, injury to wife through defendant's negligence, wife's contributory negligence, reduction of damages awarded to husband.. 973
- , county court action, damages assessed at sum in excess of jurisdiction, reduction on apportionment of blame to amount within jurisdiction.. 893

DEBT

- Committal*—Need of evidence as to means—Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5 (2) [BAREFOOT v. CLARKE].. 1039
- Debt, attachment of.* See Attachment of Debt.
- , limitation of action, acknowledgment, balance sheets of debtor company handed to shareholder creditor, parol evidence to explain entries.. 498

DEED

- Covenant to settle "property"*—Inclusion of reversionary interest—Claim for damages for breach of covenant—Right of volunteer to sue—Volunteer a covenantee [CANNON v. HARTLEY].. 50
- Rectification*—No relief required as between the parties—Rectification to secure reduction of tax payable by party to deed—Failure of parties to appreciate legal consequences of words used [WHITESIDE v. WHITESIDE].. 755

DEMURRAGE

- Computation*—Lay days—Carriage of contemplated cargo—Option to charterer to ship other lawful merchandise—Vessel completely loaded partly with contemplated cargo and partly with optional cargo—Calculation of demurrage on cargo actually loaded and discharged [HAIN STEAMSHIP Co., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD].. 444
- , Exceptions relieving from liability—Delay due to circumstances unknown to parties—Intervention of constituted authorities—Any cause beyond control of charterers—Order prohibiting night work—Inability to discharge cargo without working at night [STEAMSHIP "INDUNA" Co., LTD. v. BRITISH PHOSPHATE COMRS. THE LOCH DEE].. 522
- , Loading—Bagging—Cargo of wheat put on board in bulk and requiring to be bagged before stowing [ARGONAUT NAVIGATION Co., LTD. v. MINISTRY OF FOOD].. 160
- Dependant, maintenance.* See Family Provision.
- Deposit, buyer's right to recover, unpaid seller, re-sale*.. 921
- Derating.* See Rating.
- Deserter.* See Habeas Corpus; Court Martial.

DESERTION

- Offer by deserting husband to resume cohabitation*—Wife's refusal—Reasonable belief in husband's adultery [EVERITT v. EVERITT].. 908
- , Parties living under same roof—Need to prove de facto separation—Interruption of period of desertion—Husband returning to matrimonial home—Parties living in three-roomed flat [EVERITT v. EVERITT].. 908
- Development, of land.* See Town and Country Planning.

DIVORCE

- Practice*—Order of registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17—Appeal to judge in chambers—R.S.C., Ord. 54, r. 12A—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), rr. 59, 82 [BERNBAUM v. BERNBAUM].. 344
- Divorce, condonation.* See Condonation.
- , custody of child. See Child (Custody).
- , restraint of foreign proceedings, burden of proof, petition by wife, injunction to restrain respondent from proceeding with suit in France.. 504
- Dog racing, track where totalisator maintained, provision of space for bookmakers, breach of statutory duty, competence of civil action at suit of injured bookmaker*.. 544
- Drink, driving motor vehicle while under influence of.* See Street Traffic.
- Dwelling-house, Rent Restrictions Acts, two separated flats let together*.. 402

EASEMENT

- Right of way*—Right "to go pass and re-pass" over way "at all times hereafter with or without horses carts and agricultural machines"—Grant made in 1919—Use of road by 3-ton motor lorries [KAIN v. NORFOLK].. 176
- Right to take water from pond*—Right of owner of pond to clean pond [KAIN v. NORFOLK].. 176

EDUCATION

- School attendance*—Duty of parents to secure regular attendance of pupils—"Unavoidable cause"—Permanent incapacity of widowed mother—Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), s. 39 (2) (a) [JENKINS v. HOWELLS].. 942
- Emergency legislation, agricultural holding.* See Agricultural Holding.
- , courts emergency powers. See Courts
- Emergency Powers.*
- , requisition. See Requisition.
- Employment, premises let in consequence of, knowledge of tenant, materiality*.. 749

	PAGE ESTATE DUTY
Gift inter vivos—Date when made—Cheques drawn more than three years, but presented less than three years, before death [RE OWEN (dec'd.)] ..	901
Settlement—Investments in England representing proceeds of sale of land in Eire—Whether investments notionally land in Eire for fiscal purposes—Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5) [MIDDLETON (EARL) v. COTTESLOE] ..	841
ESTOPPEL
Landlord's assumption of applicability of Rent Acts—Subsequent denial [LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH]	402
Estoppel, nullity suit by wife, artificial insemination with husband's seed, birth of child ..	141
—, tenancy by, passing of tenant's right to enforce estoppel to tenant's personal representative, conversion of right into tenancy ..	413
EVIDENCE
Foreign law — Foreign statute — Foreign private document—Construction [ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. ROUYER GUILLET v. JACKSON KNOWLAND & CO.]	244
Evidence, adultery. See Adultery.
—, in criminal cases. See Criminal Law.
EXCESS PROFITS TAX
"Income received from investment"—Fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public collected and distributed to members by company limited by guarantee —Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD.] ..	120
—, Royalty received from licence of patented invention—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1) [TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	261
Express carriage. See Street Traffic.
Eyes, protection of, in factory, grinding machine, provision of goggles, goggles in foreman's office 30 yards from machine ..	452
FACTORY
Accommodation for clothing—"Suitable accommodation"—Consideration of risk of theft—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 43 (1) [MC CARTHY v. DAILY MIRROR NEWS-PAPERS, LTD.] ..	801
Lift — Construction of "sound material"—Latent defect—Absolute duty of occupiers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 22 (1) [WHITEHEAD v. JAMES STOTT, LTD.] ..	245
—, "Properly maintained"—Unexplained failure of mechanism—Absolute obligation of occupier—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 22 (1), 152 (1) [GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD. v. O'DONNELL (OR MILLAR)] ..	319
Protection of eyes—Grinding machine —Obligation to provide goggles—Goggles in foreman's office 30 ft. from machine—Safe system of work—Contributory negligence—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 49 [FINCH v. TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD.] ..	452
Safe means of access—"Gangway"—Plank across a duct on factory grounds—Plank placed by contractors for use of their own and occupiers' workmen—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 25 (1), 26 (1) [HOSKING v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.] ..	540
—, Independent contractor — Work outside factory building—Cleaning windows —"Building operation"—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1), s. 107 (1), s. 152 (1) [LAVENDER v. DIAMANTS, LTD.] ..	532
FAMILY PROVISION
Reasonable provision for maintenance of dependant—Dependant incapable by reason of mental disability—Will made on footing that State would provide for dependant—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (1) [RE WATKINS (dec'd.)]	695

	PAGE
—, "Maintenance"—Conduct of dependant—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 1 (1), (6) [RE BORTHWICK (dec'd.)] ..	472
Fine, direction that defendant remain in custody until payment ..	787
FIREARMS
Certificate—Appeal to quarter sessions against refusal of police to grant or renew —Discretion of quarter sessions—Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), s. 2 (8) [GREENLY v. LAWRENCE] ..	241
Fixture, in house, removal after contract for assignment of lease, order to replace ..	770
FOOD AND DRUGS
Sale of unsound food—Prosecution—Limitation of time—Bottle of milk deposited with customer—Handed by customer to sanitary inspector—Sanitary inspectors also sampling officer—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 80 (1) (a) [LEACH v. UNITED DAIRIES, LTD.] ..	1023
Foreign law, evidence of. See Evidence.
Foreign proceedings, restraint, burden of proof, divorce petition, injunction to restrain respondent from proceeding with divorce suit in France ..	504
Freight. See Charterparty.
Furnace, rateability. See Rating (Valuation). GAMING
Dog race track where totalisator maintained—Provision of space for bookmakers —Breach of statutory duty—Competence of civil action at suit of injured bookmaker— Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2), s. 80 (1) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION)] ..	544
—, Gambling debt—Recovery—Competence of action—Account stated—Bookmakers' weekly statement—Balance in plaintiff's favour [DAY v. WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD.] ..	219
Gangway, factory, plank across duct in factory grounds, plank placed by contractors for their own and occupiers' workmen ..	540
Gift, inter vivos, liability to estate duty, date when gift made, cheque drawn more than three years, but presented less than three years, before death ..	901
—, under will. See Will.
Goggles, factory, for protection of eyes in. See Eyes.
Goodwill, compensation. See Landlord and Tenant (Goodwill).
Gravel pit and rubbish tip, rateability ..	286
HABEAS CORPUS
Court martial—Deserter arrested abroad —Detention in England—Non-compliance with rule of military procedure—Delay in convening court martial—Recall from reserve—Army Act, s. 45 (1), s. 154 (1) —Armed Forces (Conditions of Service) Act, 1939 (c. 68), s. 4 (5) [R. v. O/C DEPOT BATTALION, R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER. Ex parte ELLIOTT] ..	373
HACKNEY CARRIAGE
Sign indicating vehicle is a hackney carriage—Vehicle carrying sign "M. Mosley Wakefield 19" in compliance with bye-law—Roads Act, 1920 (c. 72), s. 11 (1) —Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1149), reg. 31, sched. V [ECCELS v. KIRKE] ..	428
HIGHWAY
Non-repair—Liability of local authority—Non-feasance — Road temporarily repaired by highway authority—Subsequently becoming out of repair [WILSON v. KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORP.] ..	679
Highway, level crossing. See Railway.
—, nuisance adjoining. See Nuisance.
Hire, of ships. See Charterparty (Time Charter).
Hire purchase, seller lacking title, right to set off against damages reasonable charge for hiring chattel ..	711

	PAGE
Hotel, negligence, residential hotel, theft of resident's clothing from room, key left on board in office during absence, no proper system of control	127
House, assignment of lease, removal of door after contract, order to replace	770
—, requisition. See Requisition.

HUSBAND AND WIFE

Action by husband and wife for injury to wife—Husband's claim for medical and household expenses—Injury to wife through defendant's negligence—Wife's contributory negligence—Reduction of damages awarded to husband—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) [MALLET v. DUNN]	973
Husband and wife, cruelty. See Cruelty.
Hypothetical question, decision of, Crown as party, possible liability to estate duty	515

INCOME TAX

Capital or income—"Income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom"—Dividend paid out of capital profits of South African company—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case V [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. RIDD'S TRUSTEES] .. .	354
Settlement—"Power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement"—Power not found in terms of settlement—Settlement of dividends from shares in company controlled by settlor—Power of settlor to prevent declaration of dividend or to wind-up company—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (1) (a) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. WOLFSON]	865
Sur-tax—Avoidance—Income payable to persons abroad by virtue of a transfer of assets—Lease of foreign assets to company—Rent payable to trustees abroad—Trust deed executed by lessors directing trustees to hold rent for benefit of widows and issue of lessors as the lessors should appoint—Lessors retaining power to direct and vary investments—Whether power to direct investments an "interest"—Whether power to determine lease rendered lessors "entitled to property comprised in the settlement"—Whether benefit to a widow a benefit to a wife—"Power to enjoy income of a person resident out of the United Kingdom"—"Property payable to the settlor"—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 18—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 18 (1), (3), (5) (a)—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (1), (2), (3), (4) [Ves-Tey's (Lord) Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs. Same v. Colquhoun (Inspector of Taxes). Same v. Inland Revenue Comrs.]	1108
Independent contractor, work outside factory building, no safe means of access, liability of occupier	532
Industrial hereditament, derating. See Rating.
Infant, adoption. See Adoption.
—, ward of court. See Ward of Court.
Insemination, artificial. See Artificial insemination.

INSURANCE

Motor insurance—Third party risks—Policy excluding "use for hire or reward other than private hire"—Supply of car "direct from garage"—Car used to take owner's fellow workmen home from work—Car taken to place of work hours before [LYONS v. DENSCOMBE]	977 Insurance, marine. See Marine Insurance.
—, motor vehicle. See Street Traffic.
Interrogatory, libel. See Libel.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR

Licence—Justices' licence—Surrender—Application for new licence—Existing licence handed to justices' clerk before hearing—New licence refused—Original licence returned to licensee—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 65 (1) [CARTER v. PICKERING]	340
---	-----

	PAGE
Investment, power to trustees under settlement, power to invest "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit"	430
Intervenor, customer at shop, defective paving of forecourt to shop, forecourt in occupation of landlord of shop	790
Jurisdiction, service of writ out of. See Writ.
Jury, trial by. See Practice (Trial).

JUSTICES

Sentence—Fine—Amount—Act under which offender prosecuted only providing penalty of imprisonment—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), ss. 4, 5—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60) s. 376 (1) (d) [LOWHER v. SMITH]	943
Justices, adultery, need of particulars, wife's summons for maintenance, charge of adultery by husband	1105
Land, compulsory purchase. See Acquisition of Land.
Landlord, negligence, liability, gratuitous installation of domestic boiler, boiler in dangerous condition, tenant's daughter injured by explosion	1056
—, Rent Restrictions Acts, landlord by purchase, widow of purchaser	933

LANDLORD AND TENANT

Covenant—Covenant against fixing nameplate without consent—Consent not to be unreasonably withheld—Construction—Reasonableness of refusal [FREDERICK BERRY, LTD. v. ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND]	706
Goodwill—Compensation—Business premises—Carrying on business for five years—Continuous period covering two contracts of tenancy—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 4 (1) [LAWRENCE v. SINGLAIR]	418
—, "Trade or business"—Solicitor—Agent for insurance companies and building societies—Relevant goodwill—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), 17 (1) [STUCHBURY & SON v. GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORP., LTD.]	1026
Notice to quit—Waiver—Acceptance of rent in respect of period after termination of tenancy [CLARKE v. GRANT]	768
Tenancy by estoppel—Passing of tenant's right to enforce estoppel to tenant's personal representative—Conversion of right into tenancy [MACKLEY v. NUTTING]	413
Landlord and tenant, negligence, liability of landlord, defect in surface of courtyard to flats, wife of tenant injured, licensee	530
—, defective paving of forecourt of shop, forecourt in occupation of landlord, shop let to tenant, injury to customer, invitee or licensee	790
Land, requisition. See Requisition.

LARCENY

Original taking a trespass—Subsequent animus furandi [RUSE v. READ]	308
"Last opportunity," doctrine of	620

LEASE

Assignment—Delay in completion—Award of damages after completion—Removal of fixture after contract—Order to replace [PHILLIPS v. LAMBIN]	770
—, Withholding of consent—Reasonableness—Prevention of creation of statutory tenancy [SWANSON v. FORTON]	135

LEGACY

Renunciation—Right to retract—Voluntary disclaimer owing to misunderstanding—Position not altered to anyone's detriment [Re CRANSTON'S WILL TRUSTS] Level crossing. See Railway.	871
---	-----

LIBEL

Interrogatory—Source of information—Annual reference book [GEORGIUS v. OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS (DELEGATES)] .. .	342
Libel, privilege, qualified privilege, racehorse trainer, licence withdrawn, publication in "Racing Calendar"	109

	PAGE		PAGE
Licence, intoxicating liquor. See Intoxicating Liquor.		Measure of damages. See Damages.
Licensed premises, use of bar for betting, "room," need of permission of licensee, localisation	646	"Measuring instrument," liquid fuel, road tank wagon and dip rod, whether separately or together a measuring instrument	980
Licensee, wife of tenant, injured through defect in surface of courtyard to flats, liability of landlords	530	Mercantile agent, document of title, motor car registration book	47
Lift, factory, construction of sound material, latent defect, absolute duty on occupiers	245 —, —, maintenance. See Factory.
LIMITATION OF ACTION
Debt — Acknowledgment — Balance sheets of debtor company handed to shareholder creditor—Parol evidence to explain entries—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), ss. 23 (4), 24 (1) (2) [JONES v. BELLEGROVE PROPERTIES, LTD.]	498	MINE
Postponement of limitation period—Conversion—"Action based on fraud"—"Right of action concealed by fraud"—Bailment of goods—Owner abroad during war—Bailee's business closing down—Goods given away as worthless—Owner not notified—Limitation Act 1939 (c. 21), s. 26 (a), (b) [BEAMAN v. A.R.T.S., LTD.]	465	Coal mine — Statutory duty — Breach — "Reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent breach"—Test—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), ss. 49, 102 (8) [EDWARDS v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD]	743
Limitation, proceeding against Crown, cause of action statute barred before commencement of Crown Proceedings Act, 1947	48	Minister of Crown, action against, competency, Minister of Supply, privileges and immunities inherent in Crown, action by conservancy authority against Minister as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wrecked ship	294
Local authority, clerk to. See Clerk to Local Authority.		Misfeasance, of highway authority. See Highway. (Non-repair).
—, employees' pay, resolution to make up difference between war service pay and civilian pay, right to recover overpayments.	964
—, nuisance, recreation ground, noise from model aircraft flown in park.	423	MISTAKE
Machinery, rateability. See Rating (Valuation).		Mistake of fact—Money overpaid under mistake—Resolution of local authority to make up to employees difference between war service pay and civilian pay—Right of authority to recover overpayments [LARNER v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL]	964
Magistrates. See Justices.		Mistake of law, money paid under, payment to Commissioners of Customs and Excise for purchase tax while liability to tax sub judice	729
MAINTENANCE
Jurisdiction—Husband ordinarily resident in Scotland—Wife resident in England—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4 [MACRAE v. MACRAE]	290	Monopoly, contract with body having monopoly, Petroleum Board having sole right to supply petrol, conditions of contract excluding liability of Board for short measure, undue influence, duress, failure of consideration	980
Maintenance, dependant. See Family Provision.		Mortgage, enforcement of remedy, courts emergency powers, bankruptcy of mortgagor, trustee respondent to application	477
Maintenance order, cruelty, degree of cruelty necessary to be proved	247	Mortgagor, lease of mortgaged property, statutory power of leasing excluded, default in payment of instalment due under mortgage, position of tenant under Rent Restrictions Acts	691
Manslaughter. See Criminal Law.		Motor insurance. See Insurance.
Market overt. See Sale of Goods.		Motor vehicle, driving while under influence of drink. See Street Traffic.
MARINE INSURANCE
War risks — Exclusion — Civil war — Liability of underwriters [PESQUERIAS Y SECADEROS DE BACALAO DE ESPANA S.A. v. BEER]	845	Murder. See Criminal Law.
Marriage, contract, conflict of laws, English and foreign law the same, difference in remedy for breach of contract, jurisdiction of English court, performance of the contract, full relation of husband and wife	662	Nameplate, covenant against fixing on premises without landlord's consent, consent not to be unreasonably withheld, construction of covenant	706
MARRIED WOMAN
Restraint on anticipation—Validity—Imposition by will dated 1932—Codicils dated 1937 confirming will—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (2) [Re HEATH'S WILL TRUSTS]	199	National Health Service, state provision of hospitals, effect on reasonableness of testator's provision for incapable dependant	695
Married women's property, order of divorce registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17, appeal to judge in chambers	344	Nationalisation, coal industry. See Coal.
MASTER AND SERVANT
Safe system of working—Delegation of duty to servant—Servant's attention drawn to statutory regulations—Contributory negligence—Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O., 1908, No. 1312), reg. 18 (d) (as amended by Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 739)) [BARCOCK v. BRIGHTON CORPN.]	251	NEGLIGENCE
—, Relationship pro hac vice —Injury to driver of crane hired to stevedores—Responsibility of stevedores in respect of particular operation [HOLT v. W. H. RHODES & SON, LTD.]	478	Bailee — Hotel — Residential hotel — Theft of resident's clothing from room—Key left on board in office during absence — No proper system of control—Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41), ss. 1, 3 [OLLEY v. MARLBOROUGH COURT, LTD.]	127
"Measure," liquid fuel, road tank wagon and dip rod, whether separately or together a measure	980	Contributory negligence—Lack of reasonable care by deceased for his own safety — "Last opportunity" — Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28), ss. 1 (1), 4 [DAVIES v. SWAN MOTOR CO. (SWANSEA), LTD. (SWANSEA CORPN. AND JAMES, Third Parties)]	620
		Defective paving of forecourt of shop—Forecourt in occupation of landlord—Shop let to tenant—Injury to customer—Invitee or licensee—Liability of landlord [JACOBS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL]	790
		Landlord — Liability — Gratuitous installation of domestic boiler—Boiler in dangerous condition—Tenant's daughter injured by explosion [BALL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL]	1056
		Landlord and tenant—Defect in surface of courtyard to flats—Wife of tenant injured—Licensee—Liability of landlord [ANDERSON v. THE GUINNESS TRUST]	530

	PAGE
Nuisance — Tree — Elm tree adjoining road—Fall on passing car—Fall due to disease—Liability of occupier of land [CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.]	874
Negligence, apportionment of blame, damages assessed at sum greater than that claimed and in excess of jurisdiction of court, reduction to amount within limits of jurisdiction	893
—, injury to wife, wife's contributory negligence, husband's claim for medical and household expenses, reduction of damages awarded to husband	973
—, sport, cricket, injury from ball hit from ground into highway	237
Non-feasance, of highway authority. See Highway. (Non-repair).
Notice to quit. See Landlord and Tenant.
Novus actus interveniens, workmen's compensation, incapacity resulting from accident, improper medical treatment, ill-advised operation on injured thumb, incapacity due to tender stump	588

NUISANCE

Defective paving of forecourt adjoining highway—Need to cross forecourt to reach shop—Injury to customer leaving highway to visit shop—Liability of occupier of forecourt. [JACOBS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL]	790
Negligence — Cricket — Injury from ball hit from ground into highway [STONE v. BOLTON]	237
Recreation ground—Liability of local authority—Park dedicated to public—Noise from model aircraft flown in park—No contravention of bye-laws—Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 164 [HALL v. BECKENHAM CORPN.]	423
Nuisance, tree, elm tree adjoining road, fall on passing car, fall due to disease, liability of occupier of land	874

NULLITY

Approbation of unconsummated marriage—Artificial insemination of wife with husband's seed—Birth of child—Estoppel —Public policy—Bastardisation of child by nullity decree [L. v. L.]	141
Nun, association of strictly cloistered and purely contemplative nuns, gift for, charitable purpose	848

OPTION

Option to purchase freehold—Implication that vacant possession be given on exercise of option—Proviso that tenant should "accept without objection the title of the landlord"—Whether reference to title at date of lease or on exercise of option [RE CROSBY'S CONTRACT]	830
—, Notice of exercise of option—Notice to grantor's personal representative [KENNEWELL v. DYE]	881
Parties. See Practice.

PARTNERSHIP

Partner — Person "holding out"—Debts incurred after dissolution—Liability of retiring partner—Unauthorised use of retiring partner's name—Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), ss. 14 (1), 56 (1), (3) [TOWER CABINET CO., LTD. v. INGRAM]	1033
Patent, royalty received from licence, excess profits tax, "income received from investment"	261
Pedestrian crossing. See Street.

PERPETUITIES

Gift to the grandchildren of named person living at testatrix's death or born within five years therefrom and attaining 21 [RE GAITE'S WILL TRUSTS]	459
Plant, rateability. See Rating (Valuation).
Pleading, striking out. See Practice.

	PAGE
POWER OF APPOINTMENT
Special power — Exercise — Expression in will of intention to exercise—"I give devise and appoint all my property"—Non-objects of power named as substitutional beneficiaries [RE LATTA'S SETTLEMENT]	665

PRACTICE

Parties — Crown — Joinder as party Hypothetical question—Possible liability to estate duty [RE BARNATO (decd.)]	515
Pleading — Striking out — Affidavit evidence—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4 [DAY v. WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD.]	219
Trial—Jury—Default in delivery of defence—Plaintiff's right to trial by jury—R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 11—R.S.C., Ord. 30, r. 1 (a) [NAGY v. CO-OPERATIVE PRESS, LTD.]	1019 Practice, divorce. See Divorce.
—, writ. See Writ.
Privilege. See Libel.

PROBATE

County court — Jurisdiction — Power to pronounce for validity of will—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), ss. 60 (1), 61 [RE THOMAS (decd.)]	1048
Procurement of breach of contract, trade protection association, covenant by purchasers not to resell at more than specified price, purchase of article at higher price, trade interest, damages, right of non-trading body to maintain action	208
Prohibited goods, importation. See Customs (Smuggling).
"Property," covenant to settle, inclusion of reversionary interest	50
Provocation, reducing killing from murder to manslaughter. See Criminal Law.
"Public officer," clerk to local authority, unqualified person preparing instruments	394
Public policy, bastardisation of child, by nullity decree, artificial insemination of mother with husband's seed	141
Purchase, compulsory, of land. See Acquisition of Land.

PURCHASE TAX

Information to be supplied by "person concerned with the purchase . . . of goods"—Information as to sales—"Purchase"—Form of order—Lapse of time since period under consideration—Finance Act, 1946 (c. 64), s. 20 (3) [COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. INGRAM]	896
Money paid under mistake of law—Payment while liability sub judice [SEBEL PRODUCTS, LTD. v. COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE]	729
Qualified privilege. See Libel.
Quarter sessions, firearms, appeal against refusal of police to grant or renew, discretion of quarter sessions	241
Quit, notice to. See Landlord and Tenant. (Notice to quit).
Racehorse trainer, "warned off," publication in "Racing Calendar," action against Jockey Club, contract (implied term), libel, qualified privilege	109

RAILWAY

Level crossing—Railway constructed under statutory authority above level of road —Inclined approaches to level of railway—Subsidence of railway and road—Railway restored to original level—Liability of railway authority to restore level of inclined planes—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 16—South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Goole Railway (Deviation and Extension of Elsecar Branch) Act, 1850 (c. xxxv), s. 3 [RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. YORKSHIRE (WEST RIDING) COUNTY COUNCIL]	836
--	-----

RATES

Assessment—Building occupied in parts—Occupation by lodger or tenant—Owner occupying rest of house—Control by owner—Assessment of parts separately—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 23 (1) [HELMAN v. HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] .. 776

RATING

Beneficial occupation—Site occupied for purpose of carrying out works contract—Temporary structures erected, and used, by contractors on site of aerodrome under construction [JOHN LAING & SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] .. 224

Derating—Industrial hereditament—Apportionment of net annual value—Site used for gravel pit and for rubbish tip—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (4)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 4 (2) HAM RIVER GRIT CO., LTD. v. RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY] .. 286

Premises used for testing aeroplane propellers and correcting minor faults—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1) [ACTON CORPN. v. WEST MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE] .. 409

Exemption—Scientific society—"Purposes of science exclusively"—Voluntary contributions—Laundries research association—Company limited by guarantee—Advice to members and courses for students—Government grant—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (c. 36), s. 1 [BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v. CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND HENDON RATING AUTHORITY] .. 21

Valuation—Plant and machinery—"Unit basis"—"Contractor's theory"—Blast and fixed melting furnaces and coke ovens—Tilting melting furnaces and gas and blast mains—"Structure"—"In nature of structure"—Movability—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 22 (1) (b)—Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O. 1927, No. 480), sched. 4 [CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY v. GUEST KEEN BALDWIN'S IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD.] .. 27

Really, sale of, application of proceeds in purchase of real property, powers of trustee for sale .. 577

Receiver, appointment, under courts emergency powers. See Courts Emergency Powers.

Receiving, stolen goods. See Criminal Law. (Receiving).

Recreation ground, nuisance, liability of local authority, noise from model aircraft flown in park .. 423

Rectification, of deed. See Deed. (Rectification).

Religion, gift for advancement. See Charitable Purpose. (Advancement of Religion).

Remoteness of damage. See Damage.

RENT CONTROL

*Furnished house—References to tribunal by local authority—Reference of 555 flats by local authority—Validity of reference—Taking into account by tribunal of matters not discussed at hearing—Powers and duties of tribunals—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (1) R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte BELL LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PROPERTIES, LTD.]* .. 720

RENT RESTRICTION

Death of tenant—"Member of the tenant's family"—Adopted daughter—De facto adoption—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 13, and Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935 (c. 13), s. 1) [BROCK v. WOLLAMS] .. 715

"Dwelling"—Contemplated user—Premises let for business purposes—Tenant living on premises—No knowledge by landlord—Costs—County Court or High Court scale—Proceedings arising out of Rent Acts—Decision that Rent Acts did not apply—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2), s. 17 (2) [WOLFE v. HOGAN] .. 570

"Dwelling-house"—Two separated flats let together—Rateable value of the dwelling-house—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16 (1)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), ss. 3 (1), 7 (1) [LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH] .. 402

Evidence—Application of Acts to dwelling-house—Burden of proof—Payment of rent—Whether tenancy or service occupation—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938 (c. 26), s. 7 (1) [FORD v. LANGFORD] .. 483

Possession—Landlord becoming such by purchase after Dec. 8, 1937—Death of landlord intestate—Widow suing as administratrix and personally—Whether widow landlord by purchase—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (h) (as amended by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938 (c. 26), sched. II) [LITTLECHILD v. HOIT] .. 933

Premises let "in consequence of employment"—Knowledge of tenant—Materiality—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I (g) [ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO., LTD. v. RUSSELL] .. 749

"Separate dwelling"—Unfurnished tenancy—Sub-letting of one room, furnished, with use, in common with tenant, of kitchen—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16 (1) [TURNER v. BAKER] .. 560

Standard rent—Apportionment—House converted into flats—Whole house outside Rent Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (3) [LINDOP v. QUAIFE] .. 456

—, —, Loss of identity of original dwelling-house—Substantial structural alterations—Alterations made to enable house to be let as two separate units—Separate gas and electricity meters fitted—Sink installed—Gas cooker substituted for gas fire—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (3) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 17 (2)) [MONK v. MURPHY. MONK v. BROCK] .. 786 —, Dwelling-house owner-occupied from 1930 until 1936—Let before 1930 at 14s. per week and after 1936 at 35s. per week—Owner's occupation not registered—Whether house controlled immediately before the Act of 1938—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 1 (2) [NORTON v. WHITE] .. 925

—, "Rent"—Lease of flat—Agreement in contemporaneous document to pay annual sums for decorative alterations and cost of management—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. I) [ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER] .. 312

Sub-tenant—Sub-tenant of part of premises—Whole premises outside Rent Acts—Surrender of lease of whole premises—Right of landlord to possession of part sub-let—Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1)—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (3) [COW v. CASEY] .. 197

Tenant — Dwelling-house subject to mortgage — Lease by mortgagor — Mortgagor's statutory power of leasing excluded — Default in payment of instalments due under mortgage — Position of tenant — Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 99 (1) — Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1) [DUDLEY AND DISTRICT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. EMERSON]	691
Rent, standard. See Rent Restriction.
Rent tribunal, certiorari, grant against tribunal, payment of costs by tribunal.	260

REQUISITION

House — Delegation of powers — Letter of authority from official of Ministry of Health to town clerk — Right of local authority to sue for possession — Requisition "necessary or expedient" — Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 51 (1), (2) (a), (5) (as amended) — Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 7 [LEWISHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL v. ROBERTS]	815
Land — Dwelling-house — Purchase of requisitioned premises — Right of purchaser to possession — Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended)), reg. 51 (1) [ERITH CORPN. v. HOLDER]	389

RES JUDICATA

Point belonging to subject of litigation though not falling for decision — Decision of Court of Appeal — Question on administration based on that decision — Decision of Court of Appeal overruled by House of Lords — Reliance by beneficiaries under will on decision of House of Lords [Re KOENIGSBERG (decd.)]	804
Reserve, army, recall from	373
Residential hotel. See Hotel.
Restraint on anticipation, validity, imposition by will dated 1932, codicils dated 1937 confirming will	199
Revenue, purchase tax. See Purchase Tax.
Right of way. See Easement.
Right to water. See Easement.

RIOT

Damage — Compensation — Invasion of private property by crowd wishing to see football match — Riot (Damage) Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2 (1) [MUNDAY v. METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER]	337
---	-----

ROAD TRANSPORT

Carriage of goods for hire — Restriction on area of operation — Application to licensing authority to specify new "operating centre" — Desire to carry goods more than 25 miles from true centre — Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), ss. 52 (1), 58 (4) [R. v. LICENSING AUTHORITY FOR GOODS VEHICLES FOR THE METROPOLITAN TRAFFIC AREA. Ex parte B. E. BARRETT, LTD.]	656
Room, use for betting. See Betting.
Royalty, received from licence of patented invention, excess profits tax, "income received from investment"	261
Rubbish tip and gravel pit, rateability.	286
Rule against perpetuities. See Perpetuities.
"Safe means of access," factory. See Factory.
—, plank across a duct on factory grounds, plank placed by contractors for use of their own and occupiers' workmen	540
Safe system of work, factory, protection of eyes, grinding machine, goggles in office 30 feet away, no notice on machine that goggles should be used, men left to ask for goggles if they wanted them	452
Safe system of working. See Master and Servant.
Sale, of realty, powers of trustee for sale, application of proceeds in purchase of real property	577 —, trustee for. See Trustee.

SALE OF GOODS

Acceptance — Acts of ownership in relation to goods — Re-sale — Dispatch by seller direct to buyer's customer — Goods not in accordance with sample — Right of subsequent rejection — Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 35 [E. & S. RUBEN, LTD. v. FAIRE BROS. & CO., LTD.]	21
Market overt — Market constituted by charter or statute — Private sale — Goods offered by auction in public market — Subsequent private sale in same market — Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 22 (1) [BISHOPSGATE MOTOR FINANCE CORPN., LTD. v. TRANSPORT BRAKES, LTD.]	3
Mercantile agent — Document of title — Motor car registration book — Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 1 (4) — Road Vehicle (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1149), reg. 9 (1) [JOBLIN v. WATKINS AND ROSEVEARE (MOTORS), LTD.]	47
Sale by sample — Goods not in accordance with sample — Simple process necessary to make goods correspond with sample [E. & S. RUBEN, LTD. v. FAIRE BROS. & CO., LTD.]	215
Transfer of risk — Delivery delayed through fault of buyer — Buyer's liability for loss — Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 20 [DEMBY HAMILTON & CO., LTD. v. BARDEN (ENDEAVOUR WINES, LTD. (Third Party))]	435
Unpaid seller — Re-sale — Buyer's right to recover deposit — Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 48 (3) [GALLAGHER v. SHILCOCK]	921
Sale of goods, recovery of money paid, failure of consideration, provision for payment against delivery order, property in goods remaining in seller, delivery impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery	269
Sample, sale by. See Sale of Goods.
School, attendance. See Education.
Scientific society, exemption from rating, laundries research association.	21
"Separate dwelling," under Rent Restrictions Acts. See Rent Restriction.
Servant, legacy to, "if in my service at the time of my death," receiver in lunacy of testatrix appointed, employment of servant continued by receiver, release from performing any service for testatrix	641

SETTLEMENT

Accruer — Accruer to funds which had not "failed or determined" — Fund paid absolutely to beneficiary in accordance with trusts of the settlement [Re HUNTINGTON'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	674
"All that the share and interest of and in the residuary trust fund under the will of" A.D. — Whether an appointed share is a share under the will — Whether settlement an assignment of present interests only [Re DOWIE'S WILL TRUSTS]	968
Exclusion from participation — Exclusion on death of life tenant of "an eldest son entitled for the time being under my will to my real estates for his life" — Exclusion of deceased eldest son who had been life tenant under will [Re GUNTER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	680
Investment — Power to trustees to invest "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit" — Whether power limited to trustee securities [Re HARARI'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS]	430 Settlement, estate duty. See Estate Duty.
—, income tax, "power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement," power not found in terms of settlement, settlement of dividends from shares in company controlled by settlor, power of settlor to prevent declaration of dividend or to wind-up company	865 —, variation. See Variation of Settlement.
Shares. See Company.

SHIPPING

- Collision—Ship in convoy, escorted by naval escort, and vessel on crossing course—Escort vessels equipped with radar and linked with convoy by radio-telephone communication—Failure of senior officer to warn convoy—Liability for contributory negligence—Application of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1 (1) [THE SOBIESKI]* 701
- Shop, injury to customer, defective paving of forecourt to shop, forecourt in occupation of landlord of shop, customer invitee or licensee Smuggling. See Customs.* 790

SOLICITOR

- Unqualified practitioner preparing instruments—Clerk to local authority—Mortgage deeds for advances under Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899 (c. 44), s. 1 (1)—Right of authority to charge mortgagors—"Fee, gain or reward"—"Public officer"—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), (3) (a)—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 188 (1) [BEESTON AND STAPLEFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SMITH]* 394
- Solicitor, goodwill attaching to office premises, compensation, "trade or business," agencies for insurance companies and building societies, relevant goodwill.* 1026
- Special reasons, for not disqualifying uninsured driver of motor vehicle. See Street Traffic (Motor Vehicle).*
- Standard rent. See Rent Restriction.*

STATUTE

- Construction—Breach of statutory duty—Civil action by private person—Book-maker—Breach by occupier of dog-racing track of duty to provide space for book-making—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 11 (2), s. 30 (1) [CUTLER v. WANDSWORTH STADIUM, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION)]* 544
- Decision of the Divisional Court interpreting provision—Repeal and re-enactment of provision—Extent to which Court of Appeal bound by earlier interpretation [ROYAL CROWN DERBY PORCELAIN CO., LTD. v. RUSSELL]* 749
- Statutory duty, breach, competence of civil action at suit of injured person, book-maker, failure to provide space for betting at dog race track* 544

STREET

- Pedestrian crossing—Controlled crossing—Duty of "approaching" driver—Interrupted view of crossing—Injury to foot passenger thereon—Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 397), reg. 3 [LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD v. UPSON]* 60
- Touting—Prohibition—Touting "in any street"—Touting from forecourt of shop—Construction of bye-law—Intention of local authority [MCQUADE v. BARNES]* 154

STREET TRADING

- Licence—Revocation—Appeal—Powers of magistrate—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlv), s. 25 (1) [STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL v. JOFFE]* 256

STREET TRAFFIC

- Express carriage—Car used to take owner's fellow workmen home from work—Owner paid lump sum a week—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 61 (1) [LYONS v. DENSCOMBE]* 977
- Motor vehicle—Driving while under the influence of drink—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for not disqualifying—Driver fit when commencing journey—Stopping car on feeling effects of drink—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 15 (2) [DUCK v. PEACOCK]* 318

- Insurance against third-party risks—Using vehicle, and permitting vehicle to be used, on road without policy of insurance in force—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for refraining from disqualification—"Reasons" special to the offence—Lonely road, absence of traffic, short distance—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1), (2) [REAY v. YOUNG]* . . 1102
- Street traffic, hackney carriage. See Hackney carriage.*
- Sulking, as cruelty, injury to health* . . . 76

SUMMARY JURISDICTION

- Appeal—Case Stated—Case stated out of time—Illness of appellant's solicitor—Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O., 1915, No. 200), r. 52 [RIPPINGTON v. HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD.]* . . . 239
- Summary jurisdiction. See Justices.*
- System of working, provision of safe system. See Master and Servant.*
- Taxation, costs. See Costs (Taxation).*
- Tenant, rights under Rent Restrictions Acts. See Rent Restriction. (Tenant).*
- Wife of, injured through defect in surface of courtyard of flats, licensee, liability of landlords* 530
- Time charter. See Charterparty.*
- Tort, costs, damages of £10, "sufficient reason" for awarding costs on High Court scale, expectation based on medical evidence of recovering more than £50* 452

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

- Interim development agreement between landowners and local authority—Permission to develop land in accordance with specified method—Permission relating to period after planning scheme in force—Revocation of permission for interim development—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), ss. 10 (3), 34 (1)—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 4 (1), (2) [RANSOM & LUCK, LTD. v. SURBITON BOROUGH COUNCIL]* 185
- Revocation of permission to develop—Compensation—"Expenditure in carrying out work which is rendered abortive by the order"—Plans prepared, but no building operations carried out—Plans prepared before permission obtained for building—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 7 (2) (3) [HOLMES v. BRADFIELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL]* 381
- Trade association, non-trading body, right to maintain action for conspiracy to procure breach of contract* 208

TRADE MARK

- Removal from register—Non-user—"Special circumstances in the trade"—Foreign manufacturing company—War conditions preventing importation of goods—Trade Marks Act, 1935 (c. 22), s. 26 (1) (b), (3) [AKTIEBOLAGET MANUS v. R. J. FULLWOOD & BLAND, LTD.]* 205
- Trade union, action by, right to sue for procurement of breach of contract* 208
- Trading, street. See Street Trading.*
- Trainer, of racehorse. See Racehorse Trainer.*
- Transfer, shares in company, scheme, dissenting shareholder, fairness of scheme, Stock Exchange values of shares* 1013
- Tree, elm tree adjoining road, fall on passing car, fall due to disease, liability of occupier of land* 874
- Trial. See Practice (Trial).*

TRUST

- Resulting trust—Joint account—Money placed in names of donor and another—Investment in joint names—Gifts not to take effect until death of donor—Whether gifts of testamentary nature not conforming with the Wills Act, 1837 [YOUNG v. SEALBY]* . . . 92

	PAGE
Trust, profit from, contract entered into before creation of fiduciary relation, sale to trustee of trust property, lease to bank with option to purchase, appointment of bank as lessor's executor and trustee, option exercised by bank after lessor's death ..	460
—, duty to account to estate, commission allowed to executors under American law ..	442
—, remuneration of director of company, appointment of trustee as director permitted by will ..	487
—, shares of company, article of association providing for automatic transmission of shares to director's widow on his death ..	167

TRUSTEE

Profit from trust—Contract entered into before creation of fiduciary relation—Sale to trustee of trust property—Lease to bank with option to purchase—Appointment of bank as lessor's executor and trustee—Option exercised by bank after death of lessor [Re MULHOLLAND'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	460
—, Duty to account to estate—Commission allowed to executors under American law [Re NORTHCOOTE'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	442
—, Remuneration as director of company—Appointment of trustee as director permitted by will [Re LLEWELIN'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	487
Trustee for sale—Sale of realty—Power to apply proceeds in purchase of realty—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 28 (1) (as amended by the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926 (c. 11), s. 7 and sched.)—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1) [Re WELLSTED'S WILL TRUSTS] ..	577
Trustee, gift to, in will, as trustee, validity ..	609
—, in bankruptcy, control over, by bankrupt, extent ..	510
—, courts emergency powers, enforcement of remedy by mortgagee, trustee respondent to application ..	477
—, removal ..	510
—, power to invest, "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit" ..	430
Tuberculosis, "accident," contracted by nurse in hospital ..	883
Ubi jus, ibi remedium, breach of statutory duty, civil action by private person, breach by occupier of dog-racing track of duty to provide space for bookmaking ..	544
Value payment, under War Damage Act, 1943. See War Damage.

VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT

Income of trust fund to be paid to wife if marriage undissolved—Power to husband to appoint by will in favour of second wife—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192 [EGERTON v. EGERTON] ..	670
Volunteer, right to sue for breach of covenant, volunteer a covenantee ..	50
Wages, agricultural. See Agriculture.
War, circumstances attributable to, exercise of courts emergency powers. See Courts Emergency Powers.

WAR DAMAGE

Temporary works payment—"Works reasonably executed for temporarily meeting the circumstances created by the damage"—Provision of alternative accommodation on the hereditament but away from site of damage—Permanent structures—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) [Re ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA] ..	990
Value payment — Value after damage—Basis of valuation—Hypothetical sale—Restrictions affecting property—"Any restriction imposed .. under an enactment .. to which the hereditament was subject at the time immediately after the occurrence of the war damage"—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 10 (1), (2); sched. II, para. 1 (1) (c) (iii) [Re CITY OF LONDON REAL PROPERTY CO., LTD.] ..	763

	PAGE
War damage, leasehold property, value payments, administration of estate, capital or income ..	490
Ward of court, order made in chambers, publication, contempt of court ..	439
Warranty, breach, damages, hire-purchase agreement, seller lacking title, right to set off against damages reasonable charge for hiring chattel ..	711

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

"Measures" — "Measuring instrument"—Liquid fuel—Road tank wagon and dip rod—Whether separately or together a "measure" or "measuring instrument"—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), ss. 25, 29—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 35 [ERIC GNAPP, LTD. v. PETROLEUM BOARD] ..	980
--	-----

WILL

"All nephews and nieces of my late sister L."—Intention of gift to children of L. [Re BIRKIN (dec'd.)] ..	1045
"Children"—Inclusion of adopted children—Adoptive mother incapable of bearing children—Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 5 (2) [Re FLETCHER (dec'd.)] ..	732
Gift — Uncertainty of object—Direction to set aside fund to provide £2 per week to be paid to the cause for which appeal broadcast on Sunday [Re WOOD (dec'd.)] ..	1100
Gift to trustees as trustees—Validity [Re REES' WILL TRUSTS] ..	609
"Goodwill of my business and stock and plant"—Inclusion of freehold premises — "Debts due to me in respect of said business"—Sum standing to credit of banking account [Re BETTS (dec'd.)] ..	568
Servant—Legacy to—"If in my service at the time of my death"—Receiver in lunacy of testator appointed—Employment of servant continued by receiver—Release from performing any service for testator [Re SILVERSTON (dec'd.)] ..	641
Will, administration. See Administration.
—, exercise of power of appointment by. See Power of Appointment.
—, legacy. See Legacy.
Window cleaner, independent contractor, work outside factory building, no safe means of access, liability of occupier ..	532

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

"Accident" — Continuous process — Diseased hip caused by working pneumatic drill—Process extending over twenty years — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1) [ROBERTS v. PENRHYN (LORD)] ..	891
—, Tuberculosis — Hospital nurse subjected to repeated attacks of tuberculosis germs—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1) [PYRAH v. DONCASTER CORPN.] ..	883
Incapacity resulting from accident—Novus actus interveniens—Improper medical treatment—Ill-advised operation on injured thumb—Incapacity due to tender stump—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 9 (1) [HOGAN v. BENTINCK WEST HARTLEY COLLIERIES (OWNERS), LTD.] ..	588

WRIT

Service—Service out of the jurisdiction — Action "properly brought" against defendants within jurisdiction—Action by conservancy authority against shipowners and Ministry of Supply as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wreck—Shipowners outside jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g) [TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. ARMENTMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME. THE BRABO] ..	294
---	-----

CASES REFERRED TO

PAGE

Aberdeen Ry. Co. v. Blaikie Brothers, (1854), 1 Macqueen 461; 2 Eq. Rep. 1281; 23 L.T.O.S. 315; 10 Digest 1176, 8339	461, 462
Ackerley, Re , [1913] 1 Ch. 510; 108 L.T. 712; 37 Digest 454, 562	665, 669
Adams v. Fisher, (1914), 110 L.T. 537; 18 Digest 205, 1533	342, 343
Adamson v. Union Cold Storage Co., Ltd., (1931), 146 L.T. 172; sub nom. , Union Cold Storage Co., Ltd. v. Adamson, 16 Tax Cas. 293; Digest Supp.	1112, 1126, 1130
Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries), Ltd. v. Dumbreck, [1929] A.C. 358; 140 L.T. 650; Digest Supp.	531
Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland & Orkney & Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; sub nom. , The Boy Andrew (Owners) v. St. Rognvald (Owners), [1945] A.C. 140; 2nd Digest Supp.	621, 625, 628, 630
Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners), [1925] P. 196; affmd. , [1926] A.C. 655; 95 L.J.P. 128; 135 L.T. 456; 41 Digest 802, 6624	2, 14
Admiralty Comrs. v. Volute, S.S., [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417	621, 626, 629
Aiken v. Short, (1856), 1 H. & N. 210; 27 L.T.O.S. 188; 35 Digest 148, 461	965, 966
Akt. Reidar v. Arcos, Ltd., [1927] 1 K.B. 352; 96 L.J.K.B. 33; 136 L.T. 1; 41 Digest 341, 1922	160, 163
Alberg v. Chandler, (1948), 64 T.L.R. 394	220, 223
Alexander v. Adams, 1936 S.L.T. (Sh. Ct.) 32	570, 575
Alexander (William) & Sons v. Akt. Dampskibet Hansa, [1920] A.C. 88; 122 L.T. 1; 25 Com. Cas. 13; 41 Digest 540, 3663	522, 525
Allan v. Liverpool, Inman v. Kirkdale, (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 180; 30 L.T. 93; 38 J.P. 261; 38 Digest 443, 155	777, 780
Allchurch v. London Union Assessment Committee, [1891] 2 Q.B. 436; 65 L.T. 450; 56 J.P. 117; 38 Digest 453, 200	777, 786
Ancona v. Rogers, (1876), 1 Ex. D. 285; 35 L.T. 115; 37 Digest 158, 34	947, 949, 959, 960
Anderson v. The Guinness Trust, [1949] 1 All E.R. 530	791
Andrews v. Merton and Morden Urban District Council, (1921), 56 L. Jo. 466; 26 Digest 402, 1261	679
Angel v. Angel, [1946] 2 All E.R. 635; 176 L.T. 90; 111 J.P. 14; 2nd Digest Supp.	909, 917
Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co., Ltd. v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., [1924] A.C. 406; 131 L.T. 258; 36 Digest 115, 763	621, 625, 628, 630
Arantzazu Mendi, The, [1939] 1 All E.R. 719; [1939] A.C. 256; 160 L.T. 513; Digest Supp.	947, 949, 961
Armstrong v. Reeves, (1890), 25 L.R. Ir. 325; 8 Digest 258, 2041	435, 493
Ashburnham, Re , (1912), 107 L.T. 601; 44 Digest 648, 4875	176, 181
Askew v. Woodhead, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 27; 42 L.T. 567; 44 J.P. 570; 11 Digest 247, 1477	490, 493, 495
Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (1900), Ltd. v. Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd., (1917), 86 L.J.K.B. 1495; 118 L.T. 94; 22 Com. Cas. 279; 41 Digest 443, 2780	2, 7
Atkinson v. Newcastle Waterworks Co., (1877), 2 Ex. D. 441; 36 L.T. 761; 42 J.P. 183; 42 Digest 759, 1850	544, 548, 551
Atlantic & Pacific Fibre Importing & Manufacturing Co., Re , [1928] Ch. 836; 140 L.T. 18; Digest Supp.	499, 503
A.-G. v. Barnes Corpn. and Ranelagh Club, Ltd., [1938] 3 All E.R. 711; [1939] Ch. 110; 107 L.J.Ch. 385; 159 L.T. 305; 102 J.P. 448; Digest Supp.	186, 190, 196
A.-G. v. Delaney, (1875), 1 R. 10 C.L. 104	849, 857, 858
A.-G. v. Hall, [1897] 2 I.R. 426; 8 Digest 251, 4	849, 855
A.-G. v. Hodgson, [1922] 2 Ch. 429; 91 L.J.Ch. 426; 127 L.T. 329; 87 J.P. 121; 36 Digest 250, 30	176, 180, 182
A.-G. v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Assn., Ltd., (1876), L.R. 1 Exch. D. 469; 35 L.T. 224	403, 407
A.-G. v. Schiers, (1835), 2 Cr.M. & R. 286; 1 Gale 223	1007, 1011
A.-G. v. Tod Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560; 76 L.T. 174; 36 Digest 177, 221	424
Austin, Re, Ec p. Sheffield , (1879), 10 Ch.D. 434; 40 L.T. 15; 4 Digest 500, 4502	510, 513
Australia (Owners) v. Nautilus (Cargo Owners), The Australia, [1927] A.C. 145; 135 L.T. 576; 41 Digest 994, 8738	702
Bailey v. Geddes, [1937] 3 All E.R. 671; [1938] 1 K.B. 156; 107 L.J.K.B. 38; 157 L.T. 364; Digest Supp.	60, 65
Bain v. Fothergill, (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 158; 31 L.T. 387; 39 J.P. 228; 17 Digest 122, 304; 40 Digest 265, 2306	507, 508, 770, 772
Baker v. Lewis, [1946] 2 All E.R. 592; [1947] K.B. 186; 175 L.T. 490; 2nd Digest Supp.	934, 936, 937
Banco de Portugal v. Waterlow & Sons, Ltd., Waterlow & Sons, Ltd. v. Banco de Portugal, [1932] A.C. 452; 101 L.J.K.B. 417; 147 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.	2, 12, 14
Bank Line, Ltd. v. Capel (Arthur) & Co., [1919] A.C. 435; 88 L.J.K.B. 211; 120 L.T. 129; 41 Digest 366, 2136	3, 17
Barnes v. Hely Hutchinson, [1939] 3 All E.R. 803; [1940] A.C. 81; 161 L.T. 181; 22 Tax Cas. 655; 2nd Digest Supp.	354, 360
Barras v. Aberdeen Steam Trawling & Fishing Co., Ltd., [1933] A.C. 402; 149 L.T. 169; Digest Supp.	750, 753, 754
Barrell v. Fordree, [1932] A.C. 676; 96 J.P. 278; sub nom. , Fordree v. Barrell, 147 L.T. 206; Digest Supp.	418, 420, 423, 560, 563, 565
Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090	456, 457, 458, 570, 574
Baring v. Basing, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 516; 10 L.T. 756; 27 Digest 315, 2928	908, 911, 913, 916, 919
Bates, Re , [1928] Ch. 632; 139 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.	354, 356, 358, 362
Bates v. Donaldson, [1896] 2 Q.B. 241; 65 L.J.Q.B. 578; 74 L.T. 751; 60 J.P. 596; 31 Digest 383, 5284	135, 138, 139, 140
Beaumont, Re , [1902] 1 Ch. 589; 86 L.T. 410; 25 Digest 542, 292	902, 904, 906
Beavan, Re , [1912] 1 Ch. 196; 105 L.T. 784; 23 Digest 360, 4273	499, 501
Becher v. Major, (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 431; 6 New Rep. 370; 13 L.T. 54; 43 Digest 566, 154	93, 101
Bell Property Trust, Ltd. v. Hampstead Borough Assessment Committee, [1940] 3 All E.R. 640; [1940] 2 K.B. 543; 109 L.J.K.B. 792; 163 L.T. 292; 104 J.P. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.	313, 317
Belton v. Busby, [1899] 2 Q.B. 380; 81 L.T. 196; 63 J.P. 709; 25 Digest 445, 396	646, 648
Bennings (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijstra, [1945] 2 All E.R. 433; [1946] K.B. 58; 173 L.T. 298; 2nd Digest Supp.	750, 752, 753
Benoist, Re , [1909] 2 K.B. 784; 101 L.T. 432; 4 Digest 338, 3169	510, 512

Berkeley v. Berkeley, [1946] 2 All E.R. 154; [1946] A.C. 555; 115 L.J.Ch. 281; 175 L.T. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.	200, 202, 804, 805, 807, 808, 810
Berkeley v. Thompson, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 45; 54 L.J.M.C. 57; 52 L.T. 1; 49 J.P. 276; 3 Digest 893, 312	290, 291
Bethell v. Abraham, (1873), L.R. 17 Eq. 24; 29 L.T. 715; 43 Digest 930, 3675	430, 433
Bethune v. Bethune, [1891] P. 205; 60 L.J.P. 18; 63 L.T. 259; 27 Digest 288, 2618	76, 81
Biddle v. Bond, (1865), 6 B. & S. 225; 5 New Rep. 485; 12 L.T. 178; 29 J.P. 565; 3 Digest 101, 237	949, 963
Biddulph v. St. George's, Hanover Square, (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 493; 2 New Rep. 212; 8 L.T. 558; 27 J.P. 579; 38 Digest 46, 270	721, 725, 728
Bilbee v. Hasse & Co., (1889), 5 T.L.R. 677; 1 Digest 522, 1820	526, 528
Birch v. Cropper, Re Bridgewater Navigation Co., Ltd., (1889), 14 App. Cas. 525; 61 L.T. 621; 10 Digest 1003, 6965	1070, 1073, 1078, 1079, 1086, 1088
Bird v. Philpott, [1900] 1 Ch. 822; 82 L.T. 110; 4 Digest 500, 4504	510, 512, 513
Bishop & Baxter, Ltd. v. Anglo-Eastern Trading & Industrial Co., Ltd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 598; [1944] 1 K.B. 12; 113 L.J.K.B. 26; 169 L.T. 351; 2nd Digest Supp.	156
Black v. Fife Coal Co., Ltd., [1912] A.C. 149; 106 L.T. 161; 5 B.W.C.C. 217; 34 Digest 740, 1166	744
Blackpool Corpn. v. Locker, [1948] 1 All E.R. 85; [1948] 1 K.B. 349; 112 J.P. 130	389, 392, 393, 817, 824, 829
Blackwell v. Blackwell, [1929] A.C. 313; 140 L.T. 444; Digest Supp.	609
Blackwood v. Andre, 1947 S.C. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.	684, 687, 688, 690
Bladon, Re, [1912] 1 Ch. 45; 105 L.T. 729; 40 Digest 656, 1954	490, 494
Blake v. Lanyon, (1795), 6 Term Rep. 221; 84 Digest 170, 1331	209, 210, 211
Blake v. Shaw, (1860), John. 732; 2 L.T. 84; 44 Digest 693, 5346	568, 569
Blake's Case, (1814), 2 M. & S. 428; 105 E.R. 440; 39 Digest 343, 288	374, 379
Bloomfield v. Serenyi, [1945] 2 All E.R. 646; 173 L.T. 391; 2nd Digest Supp.	295, 298
Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 42 Digest 614, 141	720, 721, 728
Bolivia Republic v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assurance Co., Ltd., [1909] 1 K.B. 785; 100 L.T. 503; 29 Digest 219, 1759	846, 847
Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corpn., [1947] A.C. 55; [1947] L.J.R. 380; 2nd Digest Supp.	295, 300, 303
Bomford v. South Worcestershire Assessment Committee, [1947] 1 All E.R. 299; [1947] K.B. 575; 111 J.P. 202; 2nd Digest Supp.	634, 639, 640
Bonar Law Memorial Trust v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.	347, 351
Borries v. Hutchinson, (1865), 15 C.B.N.S. 445; 5 New Rep. 281; 11 L.T. 771; 39 Digest 673, 2590	998, 1001
Bottomley v. Bannister, [1932] 1 K.B. 451; 146 L.T. 63; Digest Supp.	1057, 1064
Bourne v. Keane, [1919] A.C. 815; 121 L.T. 426; 8 Digest 250, 106	849, 852, 853
Bowden Wire, Ltd. v. Bowden Brake Co., Ltd. (No. 1), Re Bowden Wire, Ltd.'s Trade Marks, (1913), 30 R.P.C. 580; on appeal, 31 R.P.C. 385; 43 Digest 195, 429	206
Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270	347, 350
Bowring-Hanbury's Trustee v. Bowring-Hanbury, [1942] 1 All E.R. 516; [1942] Ch. 276; 167 L.T. 188; affmd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 48; [1943] Ch. 104; 168 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	499, 501
Braby (Frederick) & Co. v. Bedwell, [1926] 1 K.B. 456; 134 L.T. 320; 31 Digest 583, 7320	749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755
Braecgirdle v. Oxley, Braecgirdle v. Cobley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 126; [1947] K.B. 349; [1947] L.J.R. 815; 176 L.T. 187; 111 J.P. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.	22, 26
Bracey v. Pales, [1927] 1 K.B. 818; 136 L.T. 282; Digest Supp.	483, 484, 485
Bradbury v. English Sewing Cotton Co., [1923] A.C. 744; 129 L.T. 546; 8 Tax Cas. 481; 28 Digest 81, 445	354, 357
Bradley v. Baylis, Morfee v. Novis, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 195; Colt. 188; 46 L.T. 253; 45 J.P. 847; 20 Digest 21, 123	777, 780, 785, 786
Braithwaite, Re, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 121; 48 L.T. 857; 43 Digest 837, 2834	430, 432
Braithwaite & Co., Ltd. v. Elliott, [1946] 2 All E.R. 537; [1947] K.B. 177; 176 L.T. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.	750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755
Branca v. Cobarro, [1947] 2 All E.R. 101; [1947] K.B. 854; 177 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.	156
Brandt's (William) Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co., [1905] A.C. 454; 93 L.T. 495; 8 Digest 445, 205	902, 903
Bridgewater Navigation Co., Re, [1891] 2 Ch. 317; 64 L.T. 576; 10 Digest 1005, 6977	1069, 1070, 1073, 1074, 1078, 1088, 1089
Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey, [1905] A.C. 230; 92 L.T. 578; 34 Digest 464, 3799	883, 885, 886, 889, 890, 891, 892
British and American Trustee and Finance Corpn. v. Couper, [1894] A.C. 399; 70 L.T. 882; 9 Digest 149, 840	1070, 1077, 1085
British Bank for Foreign Trade, Ltd. v. Novimex, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 155	526, 529
British Columbia, etc., Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, (1868), L.R. 3 C.P. 499; 37 L.J.C.P. 235; 18 L.T. 604; 8 Digest 138, 905	2, 8, 15, 997, 998, 1000, 1001, 1005
British Faine (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners), The Macgregor, [1943] 1 All E.R. 33; [1943] A.C. 197; 112 L.J.P. 6; 168 L.T. 193; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 66
British Launderers' Research Association v. Central Middlesex Assessment Committee and Hendon Rating Authority, [1949] 1 All E.R. 21	28, 29
British Non-Ferrous Metals Research Association v. Borough of St. Pancras, (1932), 16 Rating & Income Tax 149	21, 22, 25, 26
British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Ry. Co. of London, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 673; 81 L.J.K.B. 1132; 107 L.T. 325; 17 Digest 126, 343	2, 13
Broadbent v. Broadbent, (1927), 43 T.L.R. 186; Digest Supp.	1105, 1106
Bromley v. Brunton, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 275; 18 L.T. 628; 25 Digest 533, 227	902, 904, 905, 906, 907
Bromley v. Mercer, [1922] 2 K.B. 126; 127 L.T. 282; 36 Digest 69, 436	791, 797, 798
Brooks v. Brimcome, [1937] 2 All E.R. 637; [1937] 2 K.B. 675; 157 L.T. 417; Digest Supp.	926, 929
Brown v. Harrison, (1947), 177 L.T. 281; 2nd Digest Supp.	874, 876, 878
Bryanston Property Co., Ltd. v. Edwards, [1943] 2 All E.R. 646; [1944] K.B. 32; 113 L.J.K.B. 161; 169 L.T. 362; 2nd Digest Supp.	313, 317
Bryant v. Flight, (1839), 5 M. & W. 114; 2 Horn. & H. 84; 12 Digest 410, 3311	156
Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp.	76, 85, 91
Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne, [1889] A.C. 351; 80 L.T. 430; 32 Digest 524, 1798	465, 468, 470, 471
Burghley v. Burghley, (1947), unreported	671, 673

Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvaige, (1921) 126 L.T. 49; 14 B.W.C.C. 158; affy. S.C. sub nom. , Selvaige v. Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd., [1921] 1 K.B. 355; 34 Digest 326, 2666	883, 885, 886, 887, 889, 890, 891, 893
Burroughes v. Abbott, [1922] 1 Ch. 86; 126 L.T. 354; 35 Digest 92, 17	756, 760, 761
Burton v. English, (1883), 12 Q.B.D. 218; 53 L.J.Q.B. 133; 49 L.T. 768; 41 Digest 596, 4218	171, 175
Bushby v. Munday, (1821), 5 Madd. 297; 11 Digest 482, 1344	504, 506
Butler v. Wearing, (1885), 17 Q.B.D. 182; 3 Morr. 5; 5 Digest 813, 6924	555, 558
Butler (or Black) v. Eife Coal Co., Ltd., [1912] A.C. 149; 106 L.T. 161; 5 B.W.C.C. 217; 34 Digest 218, 1809	544, 548, 551
Butterfield v. Forrester, (1809), 11 East. 60; 1 Man. & G. 571, n; 36 Digest 112, 745	621, 630
Bywell Castle, The, (1879), 4 P.D. 219; 41 L.T. 747; 36 Digest 118, 791	621, 626
Cairnbahn, The, [1914] P. 25; 110 L.T. 230; 41 Digest 799, 6597	702, 704
Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone), Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 389; [1947] K.B. 641; 177 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.	252, 253, 621, 630
Callaghan v. Fred Kidd & Son (Engineers), Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 525; [1944] K.B. 560; 170 L.T. 368; 2nd Digest Supp.	540, 542
Campbell, Ex p. , Re Cathcart, (1870), 5 Ch. App. 703; 23 L.T. 289; 42 Digest 669, 795	750, 753
Canadian Eagle Oil Co., Ltd. v. R., Selection Trust, Ltd. v. Devitt, [1945] 2 All E.R. 499; [1946] A.C. 199; 173 L.T. 234; 27 Tax Cas. 206; 2nd Digest Supp.	354, 356, 360, 364
Cannon v. Villars, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 415; 47 L.J.Ch. 597; 38 L.T. 939; 42 J.P. 516; 19 Digest 108, 635	177, 181
Carlsh v. East Ham Corpn., [1948] 2 All E.R. 550; [1948] 2 K.B. 380	817, 821, 828
Carltona, Ltd. v. Works Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 560; 2nd Digest Supp.	816, 817, 821, 824, 826, 827, 828
Carroll v. Barclay (Andrew) & Sons, [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490	320, 322
Cartwright, Re , [1938] 4 All E.R. 209; [1939] Ch. 90; 159 L.T. 538; Digest Supp.	842, 844, 845
Castle v. Playford, (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 98; 41 L.J.Ex. 44; 26 L.T. 315; 39 Digest 528, 1116	270, 276
Castle v. St. Augustine's Links, Ltd., (1922), 38 T.L.R. 615; 36 Digest 186, 300	237, 238
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 874; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 67, 320, 323, 328, 620, 621, 624, 627, 629, 631
Caus, Re , [1934] Ch. 162; 150 L.T. 131; Digest Supp.	849, 855, 859, 863
Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A.C. 428; 95 L.T. 65; 31 Digest 348, 4900	791, 794
Celia, S.S., v. S.S. Valtorno, [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 126 L.T. 1; 17 Digest 159, 602	738, 743
Central London Property Trust, Ltd. v. High Trees House, Ltd., [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.	156
Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 200; 25 Tax Cas. 317; 2nd Digest Supp.	866, 868, 1110, 1112, 1113, 1119, 1133, 1143, 1144
Chamberlain's Settlement, Re , [1921] 2 Ch. 533; 11 Digest 308, 12	515, 518, 519
Chapelton v. Barry Urban District Council, [1940] 1 All E.R. 356; [1940] 1 K.B. 532; 109 L.J.K.B. 213; 162 L.T. 169; 104 J.P. 165; 2nd Digest Supp.	128, 134
Chapman v. Ellesmere (Lord), [1932] 2 K.B. 431; 101 L.J.K.B. 376; 146 L.T. 538; Digest Supp.	110, 115, 116, 119
Charities Comrs. v. McCarlan, [1917] 1 I.R. 388; 8 Digest 276, a	849, 863
Chatterley-Whitfield Collieries, Ltd., Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 593, affd. , H.L., [1949] 1 All E.R. 1070, 1074, 1084, 1092	1070, 1074, 1084, 1092
China Mutual Steam Navigation Co. v. MacLay, [1918] 1 K.B. 33; 117 L.T. 821; 11 Digest 549, 521	817, 826
Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1938] 4 All E.R. 850; [1939] 1 K.B. 426; 108 L.J.K.B. 239; 160 L.T. 79; Digest Supp.	60, 64, 65, 69, 70, 73, 74
Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 173 L.T. 108; 2nd Digest Supp.	385, 387, 938, 940
Clampa v. British India Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1915] 2 K.B. 774; 20 Com. Cas. 247; 41 Digest 413, 2569	522, 524, 525
Clanricarde (Marquess) v. Congested Districts Board for Ireland, (1914), 79 J.P. 481; 11 Digest 118, 116	817, 826
Clarke v. Ramuz, [1891] 2 Q.B. 456; 65 L.T. 657; 56 J.P. 5; 40 Digest 344, 2921	770, 771
Clarke (otherwise Talbott) v. Clarke, [1943] 2 All E.R. 540; 112 L.J.P. 41; 168 L.T. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.	142, 144
Clarkson v. Musgrave, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 386; 13 Digest 527, 788	414, 416
Clay, Re , [1919] 1 Ch. 66; 119 L.T. 754; 30 Digest 144, 2071	515, 516, 520
Clayton v. Le Roy, [1911] 2 K.B. 1031; 81 L.J.K.B. 49; 104 L.T. 419; 75 J.P. 229; reversd. on other grounds , [1911] 2 K.B. 1046; 33 Digest 562, 461	38, 45
Cleveland Bridge & Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Darlington Union Assessment Committee, (1923), 21 L.G.R. 511; 38 Digest 443, 138	225, 232
Cliff v. Cliff, [1948] 2 All E.R. 760; [1948] W.N. 380	285
Cliff v. Taylor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 113; [1948] 2 K.B. 394	418, 420
Cocks v. Manners, (1871), L.R. 12 Eq. 574; 24 L.T. 869; 36 J.P. 244; 8 Digest 248, 75	849, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 862, 863, 864
Cohen v. Rothfield, [1919] 1 K.B. 410; 120 L.T. 434; 11 Digest 478, 1315	504, 505, 506
Cole, Re , [1919] 1 Ch. 218; 120 L.T. 374; 44 Digest 472, 2912	642, 643
Cole v. Blackstone & Co., Ltd., [1943] K.B. 615; 112 L.J.K.B. 510; 107 J.P. 209; 2nd Digest Supp.	320, 322, 327
Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.	456, 458, 560, 564, 777, 786
Colfar v. Coggins & Griffith (Liverpool), Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 326; [1945] A.C. 197; 172 L.T. 205; 2nd Digest Supp.	479, 481
Collisum (Barrow), Ltd., Re , [1930] 2 Ch. 44; 143 L.T. 423; Digest Supp.	499, 502
Colloroy Co., Ltd. v. Giffard, [1928] Ch. 144; 138 L.T. 321; Digest Supp.	1070, 1078, 1084, 1089
Collingwood v. Stanhope, (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 43; 40 Digest 607, 1429	680, 682, 683
Coltness Iron Co., Ltd. v. Sharp, [1937] 3 All E.R. 593; [1938] A.C. 90; 157 L.T. 394; Digest Supp.	744, 746, 747, 748
Columbia Graphophone Co., Ltd., Re , (1932), 49 R.P.C. 621; Digest Supp.	206, 207
Colyear v. Muirgrave (Countess), (1836), 2 Keen, 81; 5 L.J.Ch. 335; 12 Digest 46, 245	51, 54
Compania Naviera Vascongada v. Cristina S.S., [1938] 1 All E.R. 719; [1938] A.C. 485; 159 L.T. 394; Digest Supp.	949, 956, 957
Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S.A. v. Luis de Ridder, Limitada, [1949] 1 All E.R. 269	435, 438

	PAGE
Comyns v. Boyer, (1596), Cro. Eliz. 485; 33 Digest 531, 79.	38, 46
Connal, Cotton & Co. v. Fisher, Renwick & Co., (1883), 10 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 824; 19 Sc. L.R. 698; 41 Digest 451, 2827 i	2, 9, 15
Conqueror Property Trust, Ltd. v. Barnes Corp., [1944] 1 All E.R. 34; [1944] K.B. 96; 113 L.J.K.B. 30; 170 L.T. 54; 108 J.P. 28; 2nd Digest Supp.	313, 317
Cook v. Taylor, [1942] 2 All E.R. 85; 167 L.T. 87; [1942] Ch. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.	830, 831, 833
Cooper, Re [1939] 3 All E.R. 586; [1939] Ch. 811; 161 L.T. 127; Digest Supp.	610
Cooper v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corp., Ltd., (1923), 128 L.T. 481; 29 Digest 418, 3266	846, 848
Cornall v. Cornall, (1910), 74 J.P. 379; 27 Digest 557, 6123	247, 249, 250
Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; sub nom., The Eurymedon, [1938] P. 41; 158 L.T. 445; Digest Supp.	621, 625, 630
Cory v. Bristol, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 262; 46 L.J.M.C. 273; 36 L.T. 594; 41 J.P. 709; 38 Digest 451, 1778	225, 231
Cory v. Thames Ironworks Co., (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 181; 37 L.J.Q.B. 68; 17 L.T. 495; 17 Digest 96, 115	3, 19, 998, 1002, 1004
Cottingham's Executors v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1938] 4 All E.R. 663, n; [1939] 1 K.B. 250; 160 L.T. 7; 22 Tax Cas. 344; Digest Supp.	1112, 1118, 1139
Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, [1892] A.C. 345; 67 L.T. 486; 56 J.P. 805; 26 Digest 400, 1251	544, 548, 551
Cox v. S. Cutler & Sons, Ltd. and Hampton Court Gas Co., [1948] 2 All E.R. 665	286, 287, 289, 540, 542 526, 528
Cramb v. Goodwin, (1919), 35 T.L.R. 477; Digest Supp.
Crane v. London Dock Co., (1864), 5 B. & S. 313; 4 New Rep. 94; 33 L.J.Q.B. 224; 10 L.T. 372; 23 J.P. 565; 33 Digest 561, 444	38, 42
Cranston, Re, [1898] 1 I.R. 431; 8 Digest 259, 214 i	495, 498, 849, 860
Crean (James) & Son, Ltd.'s Trade Mark, Re, (1921), 38 R.P.C. 155; 43 Digest 204, 499	206, 207
Crimdon, The, (1918), 35 T.L.R. 81; 41 Digest 815, 6762	949, 962
Croft v. Lumley, (1856), 5 E. & B. 682; affmd., (1858), 6 H.L. Cas. 672; 31 L.T.O.S. 382; 22 J.P. 639; 31 Digest 461, 6085	768, 769
Croome v. Croome, (1889), 61 L.T. 814; affmd., (1888), 59 L.T. 582; 43 Digest 718, 1565	609, 611, 612
Cull v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1939] 3 All E.R. 761; [1940] A.C. 51; 161 L.T. 173; sub nom., Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Cull, 22 Tax Cas. 603; 2nd Digest Supp.	354, 360
Cunliffe v. Banks, [1945] 1 All E.R. 459; 2nd Digest Supp.	874, 876
Curtis & Sons v. Mathews, [1918] 2 K.B. 825; 119 L.T. 78; affmd., [1919] 1 K.B. 425; 120 L.T. 154; 29 Digest 815, 2597	846, 847
Customs and Excise Comrs. v. Ingram, [1948] 1 All E.R. 927	896, 897, 900
Cutcliffe's Will Trusts, Re, [1940] 2 All E.R. 297; [1940] Ch. 565; 163 L.T. 284; 2nd Digest Supp.	842, 844, 845
Danby v. Hunter, (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 20; 49 L.J.M.C. 15; 41 L.T. 622; 44 J.P. 283; 26 Digest 438, 1554	176, 180
D'Angiban, Re, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 228; 49 L.J.Ch. 756; 43 L.T. 135; 40 Digest 527, 717	50, 54, 56, 58, 59
Davies, Re, [1892] 3 Ch. 63; 61 L.J.Ch. 595; 67 L.T. 548; 25 Digest 312, 170	168, 170
Davies v. Bristol, Penrhos College v. Butler, [1920] 3 K.B. 428; 123 L.T. 655; 31 Digest 459, 6065	768, 769
Davies v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 7 J.P. 53; 36 Digest 113, 751	621, 625, 626, 628, 630, 631
Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 39; 88 L.J.K.B. 887; 121 L.T. 156; 83 J.P. 193; 24 Digest 908, 68	245, 246
Davis, The, (1869), 10 Wallace, 15	949, 961
Davis v. Foots, [1939] 4 All E.R. 4; [1940] 1 K.B. 116; 2nd Digest Supp.	1057, 1065
Dawkins v. Antrobus, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 615; 44 L.T. 557; 8 Digest 507, 18	110, 119
De Francesco v. Barnum, (1890), 63 L.T. 514; 34 Digest 170, 1332	209, 211
De La Bere's Marriage Settlement Trusts, Re, [1941] 2 All E.R. 533; [1941] Ch. 443; 165 L.T. 393; 2nd Digest Supp.	969, 970
Delaney v. Wallis & Sons, (1884), 15 Cox C.C. 525; 33 Digest, f. 563	38, 41, 44
Derham v. Strickland, (1911), 104 L.T. 820; sub nom., Derham v. Strickland, 75 J.P. 300; 42 Digest 862, 144	154, 155
Deyong v. Shenburn, [1946] 1 All E.R. 226; [1946] K.B. 227; 174 L.T. 129; 2nd Digest Supp.	801, 802
Dickinson's Settlements, Re, [1939] Ch. 27; 159 L.T. 614; Digest Supp.	968, 970
Di Ferdinando v. Simon, Smits & Co., [1920] 3 K.B. 409; 124 L.T. 117; 17 Digest 159, 604	738, 743
Diver v. McCrea, [1908] 42 I.L.T. 249	93, 105, 106
Dixon v. Bell, (1816), 5 M. & S. 198; 1 Stark. 287; 36 Digest 57, 354	1057, 1062
Doe d. Biddulph v. Hole, (1850), 15 Q.B. 848; 20 L.J.Q.B. 57; 15 L.T.O.S. 392; 44 Digest 376, 2106	200, 204
Doe d. Cheney v. Baiteu, (1775), 1 Cowp. 243; 31 Digest 457, 6042	768, 769
Doe d. Rochester (Bp.) v. Bridges, (1831), 1 B. & Ad. 847; 42 Digest 750, 1737	544, 548, 549, 550
Doe d. Smyth v. Smyth, (1826), 6 B. & C. 112; 9 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 136; 44 Digest 403, 2348	871, 783
Dollman v. Hillman, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 355; 2nd Digest Supp.	237, 238
Dominion Natural Gas Co., Ltd. v. Collins and Perkins, [1909] A.C. 640; 101 L.T. 359; 36 Digest 28, 142	1057, 1061, 1062, 1066
Donegal Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Stephenson, (1929), 141 L.T. 262; Digest Supp.	418
Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	620, 621, 622, 1059, 1063
Doolan v. Hope (Henry) & Sons, Ltd., (1918), 119 L.T. 14; 11 B.W.C.C. 93; 34 Digest 345, 2782	589, 604, 605
Dorner v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corp., [1940] 2 All E.R. 521; [1940] 2 K.B. 204; 163 L.T. 266; 104 J.P. 316; 2nd Digest Supp.	721, 725
Doughty, Re, [1947] 1 All E.R. 207; [1947] Ch. 263; 176 L.T. 173; 2nd Digest Supp.	354, 356, 359, 362, 364
Douglas, Re, (1887), 35 Ch.D. 472; 56 L.T. 786; 8 Digest 258, 205	495, 498
Dredge v. Dredge (otherwise Harrison), [1947] 1 All E.R. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.	142, 146
Dreeman v. Harris, (1854), 9 Exch. 485; 18 J.P. 330; sub nom., Harris and Taylor v. Dreeman, 22 L.T.O.S. 246; 18 J.P. 453; 13 Digest 525, 751	981, 983
Duke v. Doidge, (1746), 2 Ves. Sen. 203 n.; 28 E.R. 131; 40 Digest 603, 1397	680, 682
Dumpro's Case, (1603), 4 Co. Rep. 1190; sub nom., Dumper v. Synis, Cro. Eliz. 815; 31 Digest 393, 5392	570, 575
Dunham v. Clare, [1902] 2 K.B. 292; 86 L.T. 751; 66 J.P. 612; 34 Digest 341, 2759	588, 589, 592, 593, 596, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. New Garage & Motor Co., Ltd., [1915] A.C. 79; 83 L.J.K.B. 1574; 111 L.T. 862; 17 Digest 138, 426	209, 214

Dunn v. Bucknall Brothers, Dunn v. Currie (Donald) & Co., [1902] 2 K.B. 614; 71 L.J.K.B. 963; 87 L.T. 497; 41 Digest 410, 2552	3, 17
Dunn v. Dunn, (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 521; 2 L.T. 24	1048, 1049
Dunne v. Byrne, [1912] A.C. 407; 106 L.T. 394; 8 Digest 294, 778	849, 854
Dynamit Act. v. Rio Tinto Co., [1918] A.C. 292; 87 L.J.K.B. 549; 118 L.T. 191; 11 Digest 405, 749	147, 151
Dyson v. A.-G., [1911] 1 K.B. 410; 105 L.T. 753; 11 Digest 524, 292	515, 518, 519
Edwards v. Edwards, [1948] 1 All E.R. 157; [1948] P. 268; 112 J.P. 109	909, 916
Elcom, Re, [1894] 1 Ch. 303; 63 L.J.Ch. 392; 70 L.T. 54; 44 Digest 380, 2144	200, 203
Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co., Frankfurter Bank A.-G., and Metall Gesellschaft A.-G., [1939] 4 All E.R. 16; Digest Supp.	295, 299, 305, 307, 310
Ellison v. Thomas, (1862), 1 De G.J. & Sm. 18; 1 New Rep. 37; 7 L.T. 342; 40 Digest 606, 1425	680, 682
Ellis's Settlement, Re, [1909] 1 Ch. 618; 78 L.J.Ch. 375; 100 L.T. 511; 40 Digest 499, 469	51, 55
Elphinstone (Lord) v. Monkland Iron & Coal Co., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 332; 17 Digest 146, 483	209, 215
Engell v. Fitch, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 659; 10 B. & S. 738; 40 Digest 263, 2284	771, 772
Epps v. Rothnie, [1946] 1 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 562; 173 L.T. 353; 2nd Digest Supp.	934, 937
Epsom Grand Stand Assocn., Ltd. v. Clarke, [1919] W.N. 170; 31 Digest 581, 7296	570, 574
Erith Corpn. v. Holder, [1949] 1 All E.R. 389; 113 J.P. 154	817, 825
Espeula Land & Cattle Co., Re, [1909] 2 Ch. 187; 101 L.T. 13; 10 Digest 1006, 6984	1070, 1089
Esquimalt & Nanaimo Ry. Co. v. Wilson, [1920] A.C. 358; 122 L.T. 563; 11 Digest 527, 317	515, 518, 519
Europa, The, [1903] P. 84; 77 L.J.P. 26; 98 L.T. 246; 41 Digest 480, 3129	2, 5
Evans (Joseph) & Co. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest 289, 2375	220, 223
Everitt Locknuts, Ltd., Re, [1945] 1 All E.R. 401; [1945] Ch. 220; 172 L.T. 378; 2nd Digest Supp.	1013, 1015
Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co., [1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 65 L.J.Q.B. 262; 74 L.T. 83; 60 J.P. 52; 42 Digest 988, 178	209, 212
Fairley, Re, [1922] 2 Ch. 791; 21 Digest 521, 961	555, 556, 558, 559
Fairholme v. Firth & Brown, Ltd., (1933), 149 L.T. 332; Digest Supp.	684, 686, 687, 689
Fairman v. Perpetual Investment Building Society, [1923] A.C. 74; 128 L.T. 386; 87 J.P. 21; 36 Digest 37, 213	530, 531, 791, 793, 794, 795, 796, 799
Fardon v. Harcourt Rivington, (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp.	60, 72
Farrar v. Delfinne, (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 580; subsequent proceedings, (1844), 2 L.T.O.S. 401; 36 Digest 382, 579	1034, 1037, 1038
Faulkner v. Cooper & Co., Ltd., (1899), 4 Com. Cas. 213; 1 Digest 545, 1978	526, 528
Fenton v. Thorley & Co., Ltd., [1903] A.C. 443; 89 L.T. 314; 34 Digest 266, 2264	853, 885
Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; 2nd Digest Supp.	147, 151, 270, 278, 282
Field v. Metropolitan Police Receiver, [1907] 2 K.B. 853; 97 L.T. 639; 71 J.P. 494; 37 Digest 190, 111	337, 338
Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young, [1940] 2 All E.R. 85; [1940] A.C. 479; 162 L.T. 344; sub nom. Young v. Fife Coal Co., 33 B.W.C.C. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.	883, 886, 888, 892
Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 694; 19 L.T. 575; subsequent proceedings, (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 136; 27 Digest 307, 2845	909, 915
Fitzgerald's Settled Estates, Re, [1891] 3 Ch. 394; 65 L.T. 242; 40 Digest 607, 1427	680, 683
Fitzsimons v. Ford Motor Co., Ltd. (Acro Engines), [1946] 1 All E.R. 420; 174 L.T. 233; 39 B.W.C.C. 26; 2nd Digest Supp.	883, 884, 885, 887, 888, 889, 891, 893
Flavell, Re, (1833), 25 Ch.D. 89; 53 L.J.Ch. 185; 49 L.T. 690; 43 Digest 837, 2835	168, 170
Fletcher v. Fletcher, (1844), 4 Harc 67; 14 L.J.Ch. 66; 43 Digest 799, 2364	51, 56
Fletcher v. Tayleur, (1855), 17 C.B. 21; 26 L.T.O.S. 60; 17 Digest 132, 393	998, 1000
Flower v. Rose, (1891), 7 T.L.R. 280; Digest Practice 361, 731	295, 298
Flureau v. Thornhill, (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1078; 17 Digest 121, 303	507, 508
Foley v. Classicque Coaches, Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 1; 103 L.J.K.B. 550; 151 L.T. 242; Digest Supp.	156
Foord, Re, [1922] 2 Ch. 519; 128 L.T. 501; 43 Digest 718, 1566	609, 612
Ford, Re, Ex parte Official Receiver, [1900] 1 Q.B. 264; 81 L.T. 648; 5 Digest 812, 6918	555, 557, 558, 559
Ford v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver, [1921] 2 K.B. 344; 125 L.T. 18; 37 Digest 190, 109	337, 338
Forgie's Trustees v. Forgie, 1941 S.C. 188; 2nd Digest Supp.	354, 356, 359, 364
Forsey and Hollebhone's Contract, Re, [1927] 2 Ch. 379; 91 J.P. 182; 40 Digest 82, 634	763, 767
Forsyth v. Forsyth, [1947] 2 All E.R. 623; [1948] P. 125; [1948] L.J.R. 487; 177 L.T. 617; rearg., [1947] 1 All E.R. 406; 176 L.T. 507; 2nd Digest Supp.	290, 291, 292, 293
Fortlage, Re, (1916), 60 Sol. Jo. 527; 44 Digest 735, 5900	176, 181
Fowkes v. Pascoe, (1875), 10 Ch. App. 343; 44 L.J.Ch. 367; 32 L.T. 545; 20 Digest 462, 1878	93, 100
Fowie v. Bell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 668; [1947] K.B. 242; 2nd Digest Supp.	934, 936, 937
Fowler v. Yorkshire Electric Power Co., Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 407; 160 L.T. 208; Digest Supp.	532, 535, 537
France, Fenwick & Co., Ltd. v. Spackman (Philip) & Sons, (1912), 108 L.T. 371; 18 Com. Cas. 52; 41 Digest 452, 2836	522, 524, 525
Fraser, Re, [1904] 1 Ch. 726; 73 L.J.Ch. 481; 91 L.T. 48; 44 Digest 376, 2102	200, 202
Fraser and Chalmers, Ltd., Re, [1919] 2 Ch. 114; 121 L.T. 232; 10 Digest 1008, 6989	1070, 1078, 1084, 1087
Fredensén v. Rothschild, [1941] 1 All E.R. 430; 2nd Digest Supp.	756, 761
Fulham Borough Council v. Santilli, [1938] 2 K.B. 357; 102 L.J.K.B. 728; 149 L.T. 452; 97 J.P. 174; Digest Supp.	256, 258, 259
G. v. M., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339	142, 144, 146
Ganly v. Ledwidge, (1876), I.R. 10 C.L. 33; 33 Digest 560, 4341	38, 41, 44
Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1923] A.C. 723; 92 L.J.K.B. 665; sub nom. Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd., 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.	121, 261, 264, 265, 268
Gaunt v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1941] 2 All E.R. 82, 662; 165 L.T. 168; sub nom. Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gaunt, [1941] 1 K.B. 706; 24 Tax Cas. 69; 2nd Digest Supp.	1111, 1112, 1117, 1121, 1134, 1139, 1141
Gee, Re, [1948] 1 All E.R. 498; [1948] Ch. 284	442, 443, 487, 48

Gee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., (1860), 6 H. & N. 211; 30 L.J.Ex. 11; 3 L.T. 328; 17 Digest 96, 118	3, 19, 998, 1001
Generous, The, (1868), L.R. 2 A. & E. 57; 37 L.J. Adm. 37; 17 L.T. 552; 41 Digest 859, 7257	60, 70
Gibbs & Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd.'s Lease. Re , [1925] Ch. 575; 94 L.J.Ch. 312; 133 L.T. 322; affgm. , [1925] Ch. 198; 31 Digest 383, 5236	135, 139, 141
Gidden v. Mills, [1925] 2 K.B. 713; 134 L.T. 21; 31 Digest 559, 7063	570, 573, 574
Gilbertson v. Fergusson, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 562; 46 L.T. 10; 1 Tax Cas. 501; 28 Digest 79, 431	354, 356
Ginesi v. Ginesi, [1948] 1 All E.R. 373; [1948] P. 179; 412 J.P. 194	938, 940, 941
Gladstone v. Musurus Bey, (1862), 1 Hem. & M. 495; 1 New Rep. 178; 7 L.T. 477; 11 Digest 537, 392	949, 957, 961
Glasgow Corp'n. v. Muir, [1943] 2 All E.R. 44; [1943] A.C. 448; 169 L.T. 53; 107 J.P. 140; 2nd Digest Supp.	1057, 1063
Glaucus and City of Florence, The, [1948] P. 95	702, 705
Gledhill (G. H.) & Sons, Ltd. v. British Perfected Toilet Paper Co., (1911), 28 R.F.C. 714; affgm. , 23 R.P.C. 429; Digest Supp.	206
Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 172 L.T. 250; 2nd Digest Supp.	908, 912
Goodson v. Grierson, [1903] 1 K.B. 761; 77 L.J.K.B. 507; 98 L.T. 740; 25 Digest 402, 68	220, 223
Goonewardene v. Goonewardene, [1931] A.C. 647; 100 L.J.P.C. 145; 145 L.T. 7; Digest Supp.	200, 202, 204
Gordon, Dadds & Co. v. Morris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 616; sub nom. , Gordon, Dadds & Co. v. Minister of Health, 174 L.T. 136; 110 J.P. 119; 2nd Digest Supp.	389, 394, 817, 824
Gover v. Field, [1944] 1 All E.R. 151, 417, n.; 170 L.T. 73; sub nom. , Field v. Gover, [1944] K.B. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.	456, 457, 458
Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Stephen Cawardine & Co., [1934] Ch. 450; 103 L.J.Ch. 248; 150 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.	121, 122
Grant v. Sun Shipping Co., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 238; [1948] A.C. 549	60, 72, 621, 630
Grayson (H. & C.) v. Ellerman Line, Ltd., [1920] A.C. 466; 123 L.T. 65; affgm. , sub nom. , Ellerman Lines, Ltd. v. Grayson (H. & G.), Ltd., [1919] 2 K.B. 514; 36 Digest 116, 780	621, 624, 631
Grealey v. Sampson, [1917] 1 I.R. 286; 44 Digest 375, 2091 i	200, 202
Green v. Blake and Others, [1948] I.R. 242	110, 115, 116
Green v. Humphreys, (1884), 26 Ch.D. 474; 51 L.T. 42; 32 Digest 361, 449	499, 501, 502
Griffiths v. St. Clement's School, Liverpool (Managers) and Liverpool Church of England Schools Society, [1938] 3 All E.R. 537; on appeal , [1939] 2 All E.R. 76; sub nom. , Griffiths v. Smith, 103 J.P. 163; Digest Supp.	791
Grove (Dudley Revenue Officer) v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd., [1931] A.C. 450; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; Digest Supp.	409, 410, 411, 412, 413
Grove-Grady, Re , [1929] 1 Ch. 557; 140 L.T. 659; Digest Supp.	495, 497, 498
Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 79 L.T. 284; 42 Digest 759, 1858	545, 548, 549
Gugenheim v. Ladbrooke & Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 202; 177 L.T. 74; 2nd Digest Supp.	220, 223
Hadden v. Hadden, The Times , Dec. 5, 1919	76, 85
Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 8 Digest 138, 910; 17 Digest 93, 121	2, 8, 12, 19, 507, 509, 997, 999, 1000, 1001, 1002, 1004, 1005
Hagen, The, [1908] P. 189; 77 L.J.P. 124; 98 L.T. 891; Digest Practice 340, 579	295, 298, 302, 309
Haile Sclavie v. Cable & Wireless, Ltd., [1938] 3 All E.R. 384; [1938] Ch. 839; 159 L.T. 385; Digest Supp.	949, 957, 959
Hall, Re , (1912), 107 L.T. 196; 44 Digest 536, 5905	176, 181
Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A.C. 202; 71 L.T. 1; 58 J.P. 540; 11 Digest 389, 643	663
Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co., [1891] 2 Q.B. 488; 60 L.J.K.B. 734; 65 L.T. 286; 12 Digest 610, 5042	110, 115
Hampton v. United States, (1928), 276 U.S. 394	817, 824
Hansen v. Craig & Rose, (1859), 21 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 432; 31 Sc. Jur. 236; 39 Digest 391, 263vi	270, 280
Hansen v. Dixon, (1906), 96 L.T. 32; 11 Digest 392, 661	662, 663, 664
Hardy (E.) & Co. (London) v. Hilliers & Fowler, [1923] 2 K.B. 490; 92 L.J.K.B. 930; 129 L.T. 674; affgm. , [1923] 1 K.B. 658; 39 Digest 456, 831	216, 218
Hardyman, Re , [1925] Ch. 287; 94 L.J.Ch. 204; 133 L.T. 175; 44 Digest 385, 2196	200, 204
Harris v. Best, Ryley & Co., (1892), 68 L.T. 76; 41 Digest 564, 3886	160, 163, 164
Harrison, Re , (1920), 90 L.J.Ch. 186; 27 Digest 165, 1338	93, 108
Harrod v. Watney, [1898] 2 Q.B. 320; 78 L.T. 788; 36 Digest 60, 443	791, 797, 798
Hartell v. Blackler, [1920] 2 K.B. 161; 123 L.T. 171; 31 Digest 456, 6040	763, 769
Hartley v. Wharton, (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 934; 3 Per. & Dav. 529; 32 Digest 377, 613	499, 502
Hartley's Trusts, Re , (1878), 47 L.J.Ch. 610; 44 Digest 902, 7628	642, 643
Hartopp v. Hartopp & Akhurst, [1899] P. 65; 80 L.T. 297; 27 Digest 523, 5650	671, 672
Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 158; 108 L.T. 283; 6 B.W.C.C. 225; 34 Digest 348, 2803	589, 604
Harwood & Bincks v. Hilliard, (1677), 2 Mod. Rep. 268; 3 Keb. 848; Freem. K.B. 247; 24 Digest 619, 6493	881, 882
Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 165 L.T. 185; 2nd Digest Supp.	791, 794, 796, 799, 800
Haskins v. Lewis, [1931] 2 K.B. 1; 144 L.T. 378; 95 J.P. 57; Digest Supp.	560, 565
Hawke v. Dunn, [1897] 1 Q.B. 579; 76 L.T. 355; 61 J.P. 292; 25 Digest 437, 339	646, 651
Hearle v. Greenbank, (1749), 3 Atk. 695; 1 Ves. Sen. 298; 27 Digest 138, 1134	50, 54
Henderson v. Henderson, (1843), 3 Hare, 100; 1 L.T.O.S. 410; 21 Digest 174, 276	805, 809, 811
Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin, [1944] 1 All E.R. 44; [1944] A.C. 49; 170 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp.	385, 386
Henley v. Cameron, (1948), 65 T.L.R. 17	621, 626, 630
Henly v. Evening Standard, (1942), Annual Practice, 1948, 639 n.	1020, 1023
Hewitt v. Kaye, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 193; 32 J.P. 776; 25 Digest 547, 327	902, 905
Hill v. Crook, (1873), L.R. 6 H.L. 265; 4 Digest 808, 6614	733, 735, 736
Hill v. Hill, (1904), 5 O.W.R. 2; 25 C.L.T. 41; 8 O.L.R. 710; 44 Digest 237, d	93, 106, 107
Hill (R. A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 720; 144 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.	354, 356, 358, 362
Hillas & Co., Ltd. v. Arcos, Ltd., (1932), 147 L.T. 503; Digest Supp.	156
Hoare v. Hoare, (1886), 56 L.T. 147; 3 Digest 264, 262	849, 862
Hoare & Co., Ltd., Re , (1933), 150 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.	1013, 1014, 1018
Hodge & Sons v. Anglo-American Oil Co., (1922), 12 Ll. L. Rep. 183; Digest Supp.	1057, 1063
Hogan v. Sterrett, (1886), 20 L.R.Ir. 344	776, 780

Holford's Settlement, Re , [1944] 2 All E.R. 462; [1945] Ch. 21; 171 L.T. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.	665, 668, 669
Holmes v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1946] 2 All E.R. 124; [1946] A.C. 588; 115 L.J.K.B. 417; 175 L.T. 327; 2nd Digest Supp.	233, 236
Holt v. Markham, [1923] 1 K.B. 504; 128 L.T. 719; 35 Digest 157, 533	965, 967
Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co., [1895] A.C. 117; 64 L.J.M.C. 113; 71 L.T. 818; 59 J.P. 566; 33 Digest 424, 7	225, 231, 232
Hontestroom, S.S. v. S.S. Sagaporack, S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Durham Castle, [1927] A.C. 37; 95 L.J.P. 153; 136 L.T. 33; 41 Digest 765, 6176; Digest Supp.	76, 77, 247, 249, 938, 940
Hood, Re , [1931] 1 Ch. 240; 143 L.T. 691; Digest Supp.	347, 351
Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; 113 J.P. 10	908, 909, 917, 918
Hopwood v. Hopwood, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 728; 29 L.J.Ch. 747; 34 L.T.O.S. 56; 44 Digest 375, 2099	200, 204
Hordern v. Hordern, [1910] A.C. 465; 102 L.T. 867; 43 Digest 90, 946	461, 463
Horne v. Midland Ry. Co., (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 131; 42 L.J.C.P. 59; 28 L.T. 312; 8 Digest 140, 918	2, 8, 15
Hornsey School of Art v. Edmonton Union, (1905), 94 L.T. 203; 70 J.P. 121; 38 Digest 498, 524	22, 26
Hornsey Urban Council v. Hennell, [1902] 2 K.B. 73; 71 L.J.K.B. 479; 86 L.T. 423; 66 J.P. 613; 42 Digest 690, 1051	295, 303
Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 187; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314; 2nd Digest Supp.	76, 84
Houston v. Burns, [1918] A.C. 337; 118 L.T. 462; 44 Digest 542, 3593	1100, 1101
Howard v. Walker & Lake (Trustees) and Crisp, [1947] 2 All E.R. 197; [1947] K.B. 860; 177 L.T. 326; 2nd Digest Supp.	791, 798, 800
Howe v. Smith, (1884), 27 Ch.D. 89; 50 L.T. 573; 48 J.P. 773; 40 Digest 226, 1959	921, 922, 924
Hoystead v. Taxation Commr., [1926] A.C. 155; 134 L.T. 354; Digest Supp.	804, 805, 808, 809, 810
Hughes v. Chatham Overseers, Burton's Case, (1843), 5 Man. & G. 54, 77; Bar. and Arm. 61; Cox & Atk. 14; 1 Lut. Reg. Cas. 51; Pig. & R. 35; 7 Scott, N.R. 581; 2 L.T.O.S. 149, 189; 8 J.P. 89; 30 Digest 521, 1757	483, 486
Hughes v. Lancaster Steam Coal Collieries, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 556; 177 L.T. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.	883, 887, 888, 893
Hughes' Settlement, Re , [1924] 2 Ch. 356; 94 L.J.Ch. 57; 133 L.T. 470; 40 Digest 518, 631	50, 53
Humber Towing Co., Ltd. v. Barclay, (1911), 5 B.W.C.C. 142; 34 Digest 351, 2824	588, 589, 592, 593, 596, 598, 599, 602, 603, 605, 606, 608
Hummeltnberg, Re , [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.	347, 350, 849, 856, 860
Humphrey, Re , [1917] 2 K.B. 72; 117 L.T. 7; 27 Digest 260, 2299	844
Hunt v. Bliss, [1919] W.N. 331; 31 Digest 456, 6032	768, 769
Huth v. Clarke, (1890), 25 O.R.D. 391; 63 L.T. 348; 55 J.P. 86; 33 Digest 17, 68	817, 824
Hyams v. Stuart King, [1908] 2 K.B. 696; 77 L.J.K.B. 794; 99 L.T. 424; 25 Digest 401, 58	220, 223
Hyde v. Scysson, (1619), Cro. Jac. 538; 27 Digest 80, 633	973, 974
Ideal Film Renting Co. v. Nielson, [1921] 1 Ch. 575; 124 L.T. 749; 31 Digest 380, 5263	706, 708
Indermair v. Dames, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; Har. & Ruth. 243; 14 L.T. 484; affmd. , (1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 208	581, 791, 792
Inglis v. Stock, (1885), 10 App. Cas. 263; 52 L.T. 821; 39 Digest 530, 1433	270, 276, 436, 438
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ballantine, (1924), 8 Tax Cas. 595; 28 Digest 63, t.	684, 688
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Barnato, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1176; 155 L.T. 211; 20 Tax Cas. 455; Digest Supp.	684, 688
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car. Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 609; 2nd Digest Supp.	261, 262, 265
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162; 2nd Digest Supp.	261, 264, 265, 266, 267
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), 15 A.C. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36; 54 J.P. 772; 38 Digest 496, 503	21, 22, 23, 24
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Morton, 1941 S.C. 467; 24 Tax Cas. 259; 2nd Digest Supp.	1111, 1112, 1118, 1119, 1133, 1143
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. National Anti-Vivisection Society, [1947] 2 All E.R. 217; 177 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp.	495, 497
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Payne, (1941), 23 Tax Cas. 610; 2nd Digest Supp.	865, 868, 870
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Rolls-Royce, Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 340; 171 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.	261, 265
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales, (1926), 136 L.T. 27; 10 Tax Cas. 748; Digest Supp.	347, 351
Innes (or Grant) v. Kynoch, [1919] A.C. 765; 121 L.T. 39; 12 B.W.C.C. 78; 34 Digest 272, 2308	883, 886, 889, 890, 891, 892
Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 100 L.J.K.B. 705; 145 L.T. 553; 16 Tax Cas. 158; Digest Supp.	21, 22, 24, 25
Iron Trades Employers Insurance Assn., Ltd. v. Union Land and House Investors, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 481; [1937] Ch. 313; 156 L.T. 322; Digest Supp.	691, 693
Irvine v. Sullivan, (1869), L.R. 8 Eq. 673; 43 Digest 572, 203	609, 611, 612
Jackson v. Jackson, [1924] P. 19; 27 Digest 308, 2852	76, 81
Jackson v. Stopford, [1923] 2 I.R. 1; 35 Digest 93, 2711	756, 762
Jackson Stansfield & Sons v. Butterworth, [1948] 2 All E.R. 558	616, 619
James, Re , [1935] Ch. 449; 104 L.J.Ch. 247; 153 L.T. 277; Digest Supp.	167, 170
James Macara, Ltd. v. Barclay, [1944] 2 All E.R. 589; [1945] K.B. 148; 172 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.	817, 823, 825, 830
Jaques v. Millar, (1877), 6 Ch.D. 153; 37 L.T. 151; sub nom. , Jacques v. Millar, 42 J.P. 20; 42 Digest 567, 1327	771, 772
Jarrett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., Nash v. Jarrett, [1947] 1 All E.R. 72; [1947] Ch. 187; 176 L.T. 119; 2nd Digest Supp.	510, 513
Jenkes's Case, (1676), 6 State Tr. 1190; 2 Swan. 12, 43; 36 E.R. 518, 524; 16 Digest 256, 577	374, 379
Jenkins Productions, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 1 All E.R. 610; 170 L.T. 292; varying , [1943] 2 All E.R. 786; 2nd Digest Supp.	613, 614, 615
Jenner Institute of Preventive Medicine v. St. George's Hanover Square Assessment Committee and Surveyor of Taxes, (1900), 69 L.J.Q.B. 814; 83 L.T. 344; 38 Digest 497, 513	22, 24
Jervis v. Howle & Talke Colliery Co., Ltd., [1936] 3 All E.R. 193; [1937] Ch. 67; 155 L.T. 572; Digest Supp.	756, 761
Joblin v. Watkins & Roseveare (Motors), Ltd., (1948), 64 T.L.R. 464	38, 39

Jobling (James A.) & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee, [1944] 1 All E.R. 500; 2nd Digest Supp.	409, 412
Johnson v. Taylor Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1920] A.C. 144; 89 L.J.K.B. 227; 122 L.T. 130; Digest Practice 340, 581	295, 299
Jones v. Gardiner, [1902] 1 Ch. 191; 86 L.T. 74; 40 Digest 267, 2343	770, 772
Jones (R. E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd., [1926] A.C. 670; 135 L.T. 548; Digest Supp.	965, 967
Jordan v. Jordan, [1930] 2 All E.R. 29; [1939] P. 239; 160 L.T. 368; Digest Supp.	909, 915
Jordan v. Linnmer & Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 527; [1946] K.B. 356; 175 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.	684, 686, 687, 688, 690
Joselyne, Ex parte , Re Watt, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 327; 38 L.T. 661; 4 Digest 356, 3336	555, 558
Joseph Eva, Ltd. v. Reeves, [1938] 2 All E.R. 115; [1938] 2 K.B. 393; 159 L.T. 1; 102 J.P. 261; Digest Supp.	621, 631
Judgment Debtor, Re , (1935), 51 T.L.R. 524; Digest Supp.	1039, 1040
Karflex, Ltd. v. Poole, [1933] 2 K.B. 251; 149 L.T. 140; Digest Supp.	711, 713
Kay's Settlement, Re , [1939] 1 All E.R. 245; [1939] Ch. 329; 108 L.J.Ch. 156; 160 L.T. 172; Digest Supp.	50, 51, 56, 58
Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 32 L.T.O.S. 321; 27 Digest 336, 3166	385, 386, 387
Keen, Re , [1937] 1 All E.R. 452; [1937] Ch. 236; 156 L.T. 207; Digest Supp.	610
Kelly, Re , [1932] I.R. 255	1100, 1102
Kent v. Pittall, [1906] 1 K.B. 60; 94 L.T. 76; 69 J.P. 428; 20 Digest 21, 121	776, 780, 782, 784, 785
Kent v. Pittall, [1911] 2 K.B. 1102; 105 L.T. 422; 75 J.P. 378; 20 Digest 22, 126	777, 784, 785
Kenyon v. Walker, Stevenson v. Kenyon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 595; 2nd Digest Supp.	560, 564, 566, 567
Keogh, Re , [1945] I.R. 13	849, 855, 863
King, Re , [1917] 2 Ch. 420; 117 L.T. 529; 44 Digest 903, 7629	642, 644
King-Empress v. Benoari Lal Sarma, [1945] 1 All E.R. 210; [1945] A.C. 14; 2nd Digest Supp.	817, 824
Kish v. Taylor, [1912] A.C. 604; 81 L.J.K.B. 1027; 106 L.T. 900; 41 Digest 485, 3170	2, 5
Knight v. Sampson, [1938] 3 All E.R. 309; 159 L.T. 257; Digest Supp.	60, 65
Lake v. Dean, (1860), 28 Beav. 607; 42 Digest 506, 724	831, 833
Lakey v. Blair & Co., Ltd., (1916), 10 B.W.C.C. 58; 34 Digest 351, 2828	589, 592, 596, 598, 602, 605, 606, 608
Lambert v. Woolworth & Co., Ltd. (No. 2), [1938] 2 All E.R. 664; [1938] Ch. 883; 159 L.T. 317; Digest Supp.	706, 708
Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A.C. 625; 76 L.T. 795; sub nom. , St. Mary, Lambeth (Churchwardens and Overseers) v. London County Council, 61 J.P. 580; 36 Digest 247, 12	423, 424, 425, 426
Laverick v. Gray (William) & Co., Ltd., (1919), 121 L.T. 289; 12 B.W.C.C. 177; 34 Digest 345, 2783	589, 604
Law & Bonar, Ltd. v. British American Tobacco Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 K.B. 605; 85 L.J.K.B. 1714; 115 L.T. 612; 39 Digest 582, 1348	270, 276
Law Union & Crown Insurance Co. v. Hill, [1902] A.C. 263; 86 L.T. 773; 44 Digest 1117, 9677	680, 682
Lawson, Re , [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 110 L.T. 573; 44 Digest 900, 7593	642, 644, 645
Lawson v. Odhams Press, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 717; [1949] 1 K.B. 129	342, 343
Leadbitter, Re , (1878), 10 Ch.D. 388; 39 L.T. 286; 4 Digest 580, 5324	510, 513
Ledingham v. Bermejo Estancia Co., Ltd., Agar v. Bermejo Estancia Co., Ltd. , [1947] 1 All E.R. 749; 2nd Digest Supp.	499, 502
Lee v. Bayes, (1856), 18 C.B. 599; 25 L.J.C.P. 249; 27 L.T.O.S. 157; 20 J.P. 694; 33 Digest 560, 431	38, 41, 44
Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 690	135, 139, 140, 141
Lee v. Gansel, (1774), 1 Cowp. 1; Loft 374; 21 Digest 478, 581	777, 782, 785
Lee v. Thomas, (1946), unreported	242, 243
Leck's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1937] 2 All E.R. 563; [1937] Ch. 600; 157 L.T. 481; Digest Supp.	680, 682, 683
Leslie & Co. v. Cumming, [1926] 2 K.B. 417; 135 L.T. 443; 31 Digest 557, 7041	500, 563, 566
Levy v. Goldhill & Co., [1917] 2 Ch. 297; 117 L.T. 442; 1 Digest 523, 1829	156, 159, 526, 528, 529
Lewis, Re , (1910), 103 L.T. 495; 43 Digest 774, 2142	461, 463
Lewis v. Denye, [1940] 3 All E.R. 299; [1940] A.C. 921; 109 L.J.K.B. 817; 163 L.T. 249; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 67, 320, 323
Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd., (1904), 91 L.T. 377; 68 J.P. 323; 24 Digest 898, 4	286, 287, 289
Lewisham Borough Council v. Maloney, [1947] 2 All E.R. 36; [1948] 1 K.B. 50; 177 L.T. 175; 2nd Digest Supp.	816, 817, 823, 825
Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, [1918] A.C. 350; 87 L.J.K.B. 395; 118 L.T. 120; 29 Digest 229, 1858	2, 16
Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S., [1933] A.C. 449; 102 L.J.P. 73; sub nom. , The Edison, 149 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.	2, 14
Lincoln Waggon & Engine Co. v. Mumford, (1879), 41 L.T. 655; 7 Digest 117, 632	949, 960
Liverpool Corp. v. West Derby Union, (1905), 92 L.T. 467; 69 J.P. 277; 38 Digest 494, 494	22, 26
Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co., (1880), 5 App. Cas. 25; 42 L.T. 334; 44 J.P. 392; 17 Digest 83, 29	2, 12
Llewellyn v. Hinson, [1948] 2 All E.R. 95; [1948] 2 K.B. 385	580, 564, 565, 566
Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. McMullan, [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; Digest Supp.	320, 328
Lock v. Abercester, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 562; [1939] Ch. 861; 108 L.J.Ch. 328; 161 L.T. 264; Digest Supp.	176, 181
Lodge v. Lodge, (1890), 15 P.D. 159; 63 L.T. 467; 27 Digest 315, 2924	908, 909, 913, 914, 916, 917, 919, 920
London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Bolands, Ltd., [1924] A.C. 836; 131 L.T. 354; 29 Digest 419, 3268	846, 848
London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 46 L.T. 449; 11 Digest 286, 2141	461, 464
London (City) Case, Wansey v. Perkins, Hill's Case, (1845), 7 Man. & G. 151; sub nom. , Wansley v. Perkins, 4 L.T.O.S. 337	777, 785
Long v. The Tampico, (1833), 16 Federal Reports 491	949, 961
Lovett v. Lovett, [1895] 1 Ch. 82; 77 L.T. 650; 37 Digest 478, 760	968, 969, 971
Lowery v. Walker, [1910] 1 K.B. 173; 101 L.T. 878; reversd. on other grounds , [1911] A.C. 10; 36 Digest 42, 256	791, 793
Lumley v. Gye, (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L.J.Q.B. 463; 42 Digest 987, 169	209, 210, 211

Lyme Regis Corp'n. v. Henley, (1834), 1 Bing. N.C. 222; 8 Bl. N.S. 690; 2 Cl. & Fin. 331; 1 Scott, 29; 44 Digest 83, 642	395, 397
Macadam, Re , [1945] 2 All E.R. 664; [1946] Ch. 73; 173 L.T. 395; 2nd Digest Supp. 461, 463, 487, 488
MacAndrew v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1943), 25 Tax Cas. 500; 2nd Digest Supp. .. .	865, 867, 870
Macaura v. Northern Assurance Co., [1925] A.C. 619; 133 L.T. 152; 29 Digest 43, 63 .. .	354, 363
McCallum, Re , [1901] 1 Ch. 143; 83 L.T. 717; 32 Digest 521, 1777	465, 470, 471
M'Daid v. Clyde Navigation Trustees, 1946 S.C. 462; 2nd Digest Supp.	684, 687, 688, 690
McEacharn's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1939] Ch. 558; 161 L.T. 263; Digest Supp.	430, 434
Mackenzie, Re , [1940] 4 All E.R. 310; [1941] Ch. 69; 164 L.T. 375; 2nd Digest Supp.	842, 844
McKnight v. Titus, (1933), 6 M.P.R. 282; Digest Supp.	93, 106
McLean v. Workers' Union, [1929] 1 Ch. 602; 43 Digest 101, 1046	110, 119
M'Queen v. M'Queen, [1920] 2 S.C.L.T. 405	290, 292
Maquire v. A.-G., [1943] 1 R. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.	849, 855, 863
Makin v. A.-G. for New South Wales, [1894] A.C. 57; 69 L.T. 778; 58 J.P. 148; 14 Digest 371, 3924	365, 366, 369, 370, 372
Malcolm Baxter, Jr., The , (1928), 31 Ll. L.Rep. 200	2, 6, 7, 8, 17
Malone v. Laskey, [1907] 2 K.B. 141; 97 L.T. 324; 31 Digest 347, 4894	1056, 1060, 1061, 1064, 1065
Manchester Corp'n. v. Lyons, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 287; 47 L.T. 677; 33 Digest 551, 342	38, 40
Mancini v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1941] 3 All E.R. 272; [1942] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.K.B. 84; 165 L.T. 353; 2nd Digest Supp.	233, 236
March v. March & Palumbo, (1867), L.R. 1 P. & D. 440; 16 L.T. 366; 27 Digest 517, 5576	671, 673
Marchbank v. Campbell, [1923] 1 K.B. 245; 128 L.T. 283; 31 Digest 571, 7192	787
Margaret, The , (1881), 6 P.D. 76; 44 L.T. 291; 41 Digest 697, 5287	621, 632
Maritime National Fish, Ltd. v. Ocean Trawlers, Ltd., [1935] A.C. 524; 104 L.J.P.C. 88; 153 L.T. 425; Digest Supp.	3, 17
Market-Overr Case, (1596), 5 Co. Rep. 83 b; sub nom. , Worcester's (Bp.) Case, Moore, K.B. 360; sub nom. , Palmer v. Wolley, Cro. Eliz. 454; sub nom. , Anon., Poph. 84; 33 Digest 561, 458	38, 41
Marlbrough (Duke) v. A.-G. (No. 2), [1945] Ch. 145; 2nd Digest Supp.	842, 845
Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 61; 37 Digest 112, 447	969, 970
Marsh v. Estcourt, (1889), 24 Q.B.D. 147; 54 J.P. 294; 30 Digest 521, 1763	483, 485
Marsh v. Means, (1857), 30 L.T.O.S. 89; 21 J.P. 725; 8 Digest 312, 933	496, 498
Marshall v. Crutwell, (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 328; 44 L.J.Ch. 504; 39 J.P. 775; 3 Digest 190, 391	93, 102, 103, 105, 108
Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., Gorley v. Backworth Collieries, (1905), 93 L.T. 360; 34 Digest 271, 2302	883, 886, 893
Martin v. Watson & Egan, [1919] 2 I.R. 332; 35 Digest 698, a	691, 695
Martindale, Re , [1894] 3 Ch. 193; 71 L.T. 468; 16 Digest 32, 302	439, 440
Martindale v. Smith, (1841), 1 Q.B. 389; 1 Gal. & Dav. 1; 39 Digest 608, 2053	921, 922
Martineau v. Kitching, (1872), L.R. 7 Q.B. 436; 26 L.T. 836; 39 Digest 528, 4417	435, 436
Maryon-Wilson's Estate, Re , [1912] 1 Ch. 55; 105 L.T. 692; 43 Digest 935, 3729	430, 432
Masses v. Heynes, (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 330; 57 L.J.Q.B. 468; 59 L.T. 470; Digest Practice 356, 701	295, 298, 299, 307
Maxwell v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 309; 151 L.T. 477; 98 J.P. 387; Digest Supp.	366, 369
May & Butcher v. R., [1934] 2 K.B. 17, n.; 103 L.J.K.B. 556, n.; 151 L.T. 246, n.; Digest Supp.	156
Mayhew, Re , [1901] 1 Ch. 677; 84 L.T. 761; 37 Digest 452, 542	665, 668, 669
Mayson v. Clouet, [1924] A.C. 980; 131 L.T. 645; 40 Digest 242, 2123	921, 922
Mazarakis (A. & C.) v. Bunge V. Born, Ltd., (1926), 24 Lloyd L.R. 244, C.A.; 26 Lloyd L.R. 169, H.L.	444, 446, 447, 448
Mend & Co. v. Ropner & Co., [1913] 1 K.B. 27; 82 L.J.K.B. 75; sub nom. , Meral & Co. v. Ropner & Co., 107 L.T. 699; 41 Digest 431, 2708	171, 173
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee, [1901] A.C. 175; 70 L.J.K.B. 584; 84 L.T. 542; 65 J.P. 579; 38 Digest 526, 735	28, 30
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Cogging & Griffith (Liverpool), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 345; [1947] A.C. 1; 175 L.T. 270; 2nd Digest Supp.	479
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Proctor, [1923] A.C. 253; 129 L.T. 34; 36 Digest 15, 59	791, 795, 799
Metcalfe (William) & Sons, Ltd., Re , [1933] Ch. 142; 143 L.T. 82; affirmed , [1933] Ch. 153; 143 L.T. 85; Digest Supp.	1069, 1070, 1074, 1078, 1079, 1084, 1088, 1089
Miller v. Hancock, [1893] 2 Q.B. 177; 69 L.T. 214; 57 J.P. 758; 31 Digest 99, 2330	791, 794, 795
Milne v. Comr. of Police for City of London, [1939] 3 All E.R. 399; [1940] A.C. 1; 161 L.T. 65; 103 J.P. 299; Digest Supp.	646, 648, 649, 650, 651
Milner, Re , [1899] 1 Ch. 563; 80 L.T. 151; 37 Digest 453, 551	665, 669
Minister of Health v. Bellotti, [1944] 1 All E.R. 238; [1944] K.B. 298; 170 L.T. 146; 2nd Digest Supp.	817, 824
Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 615; [1943] K.B. 478; 112 L.J.K.B. 520; 168 L.T. 389; 2nd Digest Supp.	294, 295, 303
Miramars, Re , [1891] 1 Q.B. 594; 5 Digest 725, 6297	395, 397
Monarch Steamship Co., Ltd. v. A/B Karlshamn Oljefabrikker, [1949] 1 All E.R. 1	998, 1003
Monk v. Murphy, [1949] 1 All E.R. 786	777, 786
Monk v. Warbey, [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 152 L.T. 194; Digest Supp.	545, 548
Monks v. Dykes, (1839), 4 M. & W. 567; 1 Horn & H. 418; 3 J.P. 179; 43 Digest 397, 194	777, 782, 785
Moore, Re , [1907] 1 I.R. 315; 41 I.L.T. 150; 8 Digest 285, d	200, 203, 204
Moore v. Hewitt, [1947] 2 All E.R. 270; [1947] K.B. 831; [1947] L.J.R. 1276; 177 L.T. 576; 111 J.P. 483; 2nd Digest Supp.	239, 240
Morgan v. Ashcroft, [1937] 3 All E.R. 92; [1938] 1 K.B. 49; 157 L.T. 87; Digest Supp.	965, 966
Morgan v. G.N.'s Friendly Society (Incorporated Central Council), [1936] 1 All E.R. 404; Digest Supp.	791
Morgan v. Lariviere, (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 423; 32 L.T. 41; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Lariviere v. Morgan, (1872), 7 Ch. App. 550	949, 957, 961
Morse v. Frost, [1927] 1 K.B. 231; 136 L.T. 299; Digest, Practice 547, 2079	1019, 1020, 1021, 1022
Moss v. Moss, [1916] P. 155; 85 L.J.P. 182; 114 L.T. 1147; 27 Digest 345, 3261	76, 81, 82, 92
Motor Union Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Boggan, (1923), 130 L.T. 588; 29 Digest 418, 3267	846, 848
Mountcashell (Earl) v. Smyth, [1895] L.R. 346; 44 Digest 375	200, 204
Moyce v. Newtoning, (1878), 4 Q.B.D. 32; 48 L.J.Q.B. 125; 39 L.T. 635; 43 J.P. 191; 33 Digest 560, 434	38, 41
Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali, [1947] A.C. 414; 2nd Digest Supp.	2, 14
Muir v. Muir, [1943] A.C. 468	968, 969, 970

Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.	385, 387, 388
Munster and Leinster Bank v. A.-G., [1940] I.R. 19; 2nd Digest Supp.	849, 855, 863, 864
Mytton v. Mytton, (1886), 11 P.D. 141; 57 L.T. 92; 50 J.P. 488; 27 Digest 285, 2561	76, 81, 82
National Anti-Vivisection Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 2 All E.R. 217; [1948] A.C. 31; 177 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp.	849, 853, 861
National Assn. of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corp'n., [1942] 2 All E.R. 425; [1943] A.C. 166; 167 L.T. 312; 106 J.P. 255; 2nd Digest Supp.	965, 966
National Pari-Mutuel Assn., Ltd. v. R., (1930), 47 T.L.R. 110; Digest Supp.	730, 731
National Telephone Co., Re, [1914] 1 Ch. 755; 109 L.T. 389; 9 Digest 598, 3992	1070, 1084
National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian, [1945] 2 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 81; 115 L.J.K.B. 43; 174 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.	209, 212
Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	560, 563, 564, 565
Neumann v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1934] A.C. 215; 150 L.T. 481; 18 Tax Cas. 332; Digest Supp.	354, 360
New Brunswick Ry. Co. v. British & French Trust Corp'n., Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 747; [1939] A.C. 1; 160 L.T. 137; Digest Supp.	1020, 1023
Noble v. Harrison, [1926] 2 K.B. 332; 135 L.T. 325; 90 J.P. 189; Digest Supp.	874, 876, 878
Noble v. Southern Ry. Co., [1940] 2 All E.R. 383; [1940] A.C. 583; 164 L.T. 1; 33 B.W.C.C. 176; 2nd Digest Supp.	646, 649
Norman v. Simpson, [1946] 1 All E.R. 74; [1946] K.B. 158; 174 L.T. 279; 2nd Digest Supp.	571, 576, 691, 694
Norris v. Allen, (1862), 2 Sw. & Tr. 601; 1 New Rep. 34; 7 L.T. 338; 27 J.P. 9; 23 Digest 121, 1183	1048, 1050
North v. Loomes, [1919] 1 Ch. 378; 120 L.T. 533; 42 Digest 460, 290	831, 833
North Riding of Yorkshire County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corp'n., [1942] 2 All E.R. 589; [1943] 1 K.B. 114; 168 L.T. 81; 106 J.P. 11; 2nd Digest Supp.	424, 425, 426
Nott & Cardiff Corp'n., Re, [1918] 2 K.B. 146; 118 L.T. 487; 82 J.P. 181; 12 Digest 612, 5053	109, 115
Nye v. Davis, [1922] 2 K.B. 56; 91 L.J.K.B. 545; 126 L.T. 537; 31 Digest 560, 7072	313, 314
Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 1; [1947] K.B. 886; 177 L.T. 364; 2nd Digest Supp.	571, 576
Ockenden v. Henly, (1858), E.B. & E. 485; 31 L.T.O.S. 179; 40 Digest 261, 2268	921, 925
O'Hanlon v. Logue, [1906] 1 I.R. 247; 8 Digest 251, a.	849, 855, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 863
Olympic, The, [1913] P. 92; 108 L.T. 592; 41 Digest 229, 650	750, 753
Ousey v. Ousey & Atkinson, (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 223; 30 L.T. 911; subsequent proceedings, (1875), 1 P. & D. 56; 27 Digest 322, 3004	908, 912
Owens v. Green, [1932] I.R. 225; Digest Supp.	93, 104, 108
Owens v. Scott & Sons (Bakers), Ltd., and Wastall, [1939] 3 All E.R. 663; Digest Supp.	791, 798
Parchim, The, [1918] A.C. 157; 87 L.J.P. 18; 117 L.T. 738; 39 Digest 517, 1344	270, 275
Pardy v. Pardy, [1939] 3 All E.R. 779; [1939] P. 288; 161 L.T. 210; Digest Supp.	909, 915
Parlement Belge, The, (1880), 5 P.D. 197; 42 L.T. 273; 11 Digest 537, 394	943, 956, 958
Parry v. Smith, (1879), 4 C.P.D. 325; 41 L.T. 93; 43 J.P. 801; 36 Digest 57, 356	1057, 1061, 1062, 1065, 1066
Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council, [1898] A.C. 387; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 42 Digest 752, 1758	544, 548, 550
Paterson Steamships, Ltd. v. Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers, Ltd., [1934] A.C. 538; 103 L.J.P.C. 166; 151 L.T. 549; Digest Supp.	2, 17
Pawlett v. A.-G., (1667), Hard. 465; 11 Digest 523, 287	515, 519, 520
Pearce, Ex parte. Re Grieves, (1879), 13 Ch.D. 262; 41 L.T. 742; 5 Digest 1062, 8652	738, 742
Peduzzi v. Peduzzi, (1948) (unreported)	344, 346
Peele's (Sir Robert) Settled Estates, Re, [1910] 1 Ch. 389; 102 L.T. 67; 40 Digest 679, 2151	1112, 1132
Perks v. Perks, [1945] 2 All E.R. 491; 109 J.P. 276; reversal on other grounds , [1945] 2 All E.R. 580; [1946] P. 1; 115 L.J.P. 7; 173 L.T. 349; 110 J.P. 94; 2nd Digest Supp.	247, 248, 250
Perrin v. Morgan, [1943] 1 All E.R. 187; [1943] A.C. 399; 168 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.	1046
Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co., [1923] 2 K.B. 832; 129 L.T. 777; 42 Digest 870, 197	545, 549, 550
Phillips v. Henson, (1877), 3 C.P.D. 26; 37 L.T. 432; 42 J.P. 137; 18 Digest 305, 419	777, 782, 785
Pillers, Ex parte. Re Curtoys, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 653; 44 L.T. 691; 5 Digest 827, 7019	555, 558, 559
Pink, Re, [1912] 2 Ch. 528; 81 L.J.Ch. 753; 107 L.T. 241; 25 Digest 539, 270	167, 170
Place v. Searle, [1932] 2 K.B. 497; 147 L.T. 188; Digest Supp.	973, 976
Plumtree's Marriage Settlement, Re, [1910] 1 Ch. 609; 79 L.J.Ch. 340; 102 L.T. 315; 40 Digest 490, 470	51, 55
Portman v. Middleton, (1858), 4 C.B.N.S. 322; sub nom. Portman v. Nichol, 31 L.T.O.S. 152; 17 Digest 112, 230	997, 1000, 1004, 1005
Potts (or Riddell) v. Reid, [1942] 2 All E.R. 161; [1943] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.P.C. 65; 167 L.T. 801; 2nd Digest Supp.	320, 322, 323, 327, 328
Powell v. Cleland, [1947] 2 All E.R. 672; [1948] 1 K.B. 262; 2nd Digest Supp.	934, 937
Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., [1899] A.C. 143; 80 L.T. 538; 63 J.P. 260; affmg. , [1897] 2 Q.B. 242; 25 Digest 441, 358	646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651
Prankerd v. Prankerd, (1820), 1 Sim. & St. 1; 25 Digest 515, 107	93, 102
Price, Re, [1928] Ch. 579; 97 L.J.Ch. 423; 139 L.T. 339; Digest Supp.	352, 353
Price v. Gould, (1930), 143 L.T. 333; 94 J.P. 210; Digest Supp.	715, 717, 718
Progress Building, Ltd. v. Westminster City Corp'n., [1947] 1 All E.R. 684; 111 J.P. 300; 2nd Digest Supp.	389, 394, 817, 824
Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark, [1948] 1 All E.R. 165; [1948] 1 K.B. 630; [1948] L.J.R. 1066	312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317
Prout v. Hunter, [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest 557, 7040	560, 561, 563, 565
Pryce, Re, [1917] 1 Ch. 234; 86 L.J.Ch. 383; 116 L.T. 149; 40 Digest 527, 719	50, 51, 56, 57, 58, 59
Public Prosecutions Director v. Beard, [1920] A.C. 479; sub nom. , R. v. Beard, 122 L.T. 625; 84 J.P. 129; 14 Digest 65, 306	398, 400
Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2346	385, 387
Pullan v. Koc, [1913] 1 Ch. 9; 82 L.J.Ch. 37; 107 L.T. 811; 43 Digest 1019, 4602	51, 58
Purvis v. Trail, (1849), 3 Exch. 344; 3 New Mag. Cas. 88; 3 New Sess. Cas. 459; 18 L.J.M.C. 67; 12 L.T.O.S. 379; 13 J.P. 219; 38 Digest 497, 509	22, 25

Queen's Club Gardens Estates, Ltd. v. Bignell, [1924] 1 K.B. 117; 31 Digest 583, 7319	750, 751, 752, 753
Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A.C. 495; 70 L.J.P.C. 76; 85 L.T. 289; 65 J.P. 708; 42 Digest 971, 30	208, 209, 210
R. v. Ashwell, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190; 53 L.T. 773; 50 J.P. 181; 15 Digest 877, 9627	398, 401
R. v. Baskerville, [1916] 2 K.B. 658; 115 L.T. 453; 80 J.P. 446; 14 Digest 463, 4934	938, 939, 940
R. v. Board of Education, [1910] 2 K.B. 165; affmd. sub nom. , Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 19 Digest 602, 290	657, 661
R. v. Bond, [1906] 2 K.B. 389; 95 L.T. 296; 70 J.P. 424; 14 Digest 371, 3921	366, 372
R. v. Brompton County Court Judge, (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 213; 51 J.P. 547; sub nom. , Reeves v. Fowle, 55 L.T. 663; reversd. on other grounds, sub nom. , Stonor v. Fowle, (1887), 13 App. Cas. 20; 5 Digest 1038, 8484	1039, 1040, 1041
R. v. Burah, (1878), 3 App. Cas. 889; 17 Digest 450, 197	817, 824
R. v. Cockburn, (1852), 16 Q.B. 480; 18 L.T.O.S. 302; sub nom. , R. v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields (Churchwardens and Overseers), 21 L.J.M.C. 53; 16 J.P. 195; 38 Digest 495, 495	22, 25
R. v. Crossan, [1939] N.I. 106	1103, 1104
R. v. Deaville, [1903] 1 K.B. 468; 88 L.T. 32; 67 J.P. 82; 25 Digest 446, 392	646, 647, 649, 650, 651, 652
R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal. Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12; [1947] K.B. 973; 176 L.T. 560; 111 J.P. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.	721, 728
R. v. Hartington Middle Quarter (Inhabitants) (1855), 4 E. & B. 780; 3 C.L.R. 554; 24 L.T.O.S. 327; 19 J.P. 150; 21 Digest 140, 49	805, 809, 813
R. v. Hudson, [1943] 1 All E.R. 642; [1943] K.B. 458; 169 L.T. 46; 107 J.P. 134; 2nd Digest Supp.	398, 402
R. v. Institution of Civil Engineers, (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 48; 49 L.J.M.C. 34; 42 L.T. 145; 44 J.P. 265; 38 Digest 497, 508	21, 22, 24
R. v. Paddington and St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal. Ex p. Bedrock Investments, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 15; [1947] K.B. 984; 176 L.T. 562; 111 J.P. 367; 2nd Digest Supp.	721, 722, 728
R. v. Port of London Authority, Ex p. Kynoch, Ltd., [1919] 1 K.B. 176; 120 L.T. 177; 83 J.P. 41; 16 Digest 287, 1003	657, 661
R. v. Riley, (1853), Dears. C.C. 149; 20 L.T.O.S. 228; 17 J.P. 69; 15 Digest 878, 9634	398, 401, 402
R. v. Rogers, (1772), 1 Leach, 89; 15 Digest 956, 10,662	777, 782, 785
R. v. St. Mary the Less, Durham (Inhabitants), (1791), 4 Term Rep. 477; Nolan, 171; 1 Bott. 120, 200; 38 Digest 453, 192	777, 782, 786
R. v. Schama, R. v. Abramovitch, (1914), 112 L.T. 480; 79 J.P. 184; 15 Digest 972, 10,865	773, 774
R. v. Secretary of State for War, Ex p. Martyn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 242	373, 374, 379
R. v. Sims, [1946] 1 All E.R. 697; [1946] K.B. 531; 175 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	366, 371, 372
R. v. Smith, (1837), 8 C. & P. 160; 15 Digest 783, 8408	233, 235
R. v. Snow, (1776), 1 Leach, 151; 1 East, P.C. 244; 15 Digest 783, 8426	233, 235
R. v. Tate, [1908] 2 K.B. 680; 99 L.T. 620; 72 J.P. 391; 14 Digest 464, 4942	938, 940
R. v. Taylor, (1771), 5 Burr. 2793; 98 E.R. 466; 15 Digest 779, 8345	233, 235
R. v. Taylor, R. v. Amendt, [1915] 2 K.B. 593; 113 L.T. 167; sub nom. , R. v. Taylor, Ex p. A.-G., R. v. Amendt, Ex p. same, 79 J.P. 332; 30 Digest 35, 272	340, 341
R. v. Thomson, (1905), 70 J.P. 6; 15 Digest 743, 8027	813
R. v. Tolson, (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 168; 60 L.T. 899; 54 J.P. 4, 20; 15 Digest 743, 8026	813
R. v. Weigow, (1945), Notts. Summer Assizes, MACNAGHTEN, J. (unreported)	814
R. v. Wheat, R. v. Stocks, [1921] 2 K.B. 119; 124 L.T. 830; 85 J.P. 203; 15 Digest 743, 8038	813
R. & P. Properties, Ltd. v. Baldwin, [1938] 4 All E.R. 845; [1939] 1 K.B. 461; 160 L.T. 445; Digest Supp.	926, 929
Radcliffe & Co. v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, (1918), 24 Com. Cas. 40; 41 Digest 361, 2096	171, 173
Ralli Brothers v. Compania Naviera Sota y Aznar, [1920] 2 K.B. 287; 123 L.T. 375; 25 Com. Cas. 227; 11 Digest 397, 699	522, 525
Ramsbottom v. Snelson, [1948] 1 All E.R. 201; [1948] 1 K.B. 473; 112 J.P. 160	483, 485
Read v. Gordon, [1941] 1 All E.R. 222; [1941] 1 K.B. 495; 165 L.T. 113; 2nd Digest Supp.	750, 752
Read v. Price, [1909] 2 K.B. 724; 101 L.T. 60; 32 Digest 377, 610	499, 503
Red "R" S.S. Co. v. Allatini Brothers, (1910), 103 L.T. 86; 15 Com. Cas. 290; 41 Digest 656, 4382	444, 446, 447, 448
Reed v. Cattermole, [1937] 1 All E.R. 541; [1937] 1 K.B. 613; 156 L.T. 389; 21 Tax Cas. 35; Digest Supp.	483, 486
Reeves, Re , [1928] Ch. 351; 97 L.J.Ch. 211; 139 L.T. 66; 44 Digest 382, 2165	200, 204
Reid, Re , (1921), 64 D.L.R. 598; 50 O.L.R. 595; 25 Digest 517, 1244	93, 106
Reilly v. Beardmore & Co., [1947] S.C. 275; 2nd Digest Supp.	320, 323
Rennison v. Knowler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 302; [1947] L.J.R. 555; 111 J.P. 171; sub nom. , Knowler v. Rennison, [1947] K.B. 488; 176 L.T. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.	318, 319
Rhodes v. Liverpool Commercial Investment Co., (1879), 4 C.P.D. 425; 13 Digest 538, 901	414, 416
Roberts v. Dorothea Slate Quarries Co., Ltd. (No. 1), (1947), 176 L.T. 541; 40 B.W.C.C. 24; affd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 201; 2nd Digest Supp.	883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 891, 893
Roberts v. Penrhyn (Lord), [1949] 1 All E.R. 891	883, 891
Robinson v. Golding, (1910), 74 J.P. 335; 103 L.T. 248; 44 Digest 133, 22	981, 987
Robinson v. Harnan, (1848), 1 Exch. 850; 13 L.T.O.S. 141; 17 Digest 83, 30	507, 509
Robinson v. Pett, (1734), 3 P. Wms. 249; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 454; sub nom. , Robinson v. Lorikin, 2 Barn. K.B. 435; 43 Digest 75, 2151	442, 443
Rocca v. Stanley Jones & Co., Ltd., (1914), 7 B.W.C.C. 101; 34 Digest 351, 2325	589, 592, 596, 598, 602, 605, 608
Rockabill, The, King Orry Owners v. Rockabill Owners & Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, Rockabill Owners v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, [1937] 1 All E.R. 191; sub nom. , The Rockabill, [1937] P. 93; 156 L.T. 296; Digest Supp.	702, 705
Rolfe v. Perry, (1863), 3 De G.J. & Sm. 481; 32 L.J.Ch. 471; 8 L.T. 441; 44 Digest 377, 2109	200, 203
Ross's Trustees v. Nicoll, (1902), 5 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 146	354, 355
Rothwell v. Caverswall Stone Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 350; 171 L.T. 289; 37 B.W.C.C. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	589, 592, 593, 594, 596, 598, 602, 603, 606, 607
Rowland v. Divall, [1923] 2 K.B. 500; 92 L.J.K.B. 1041; 129 L.T. 757; 39 Digest 431, 603	270, 283
Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash, (1887), 35 Ch.D. 390; 57 L.T. 179; 40 Digest 187, 1562	771, 772
Royal College of Music v. Westminster Vestry, [1898] 1 Q.B. 809; 67 L.J.Q.B. 540; 78 L.T. 441; 62 J.P. 357; 38 Digest 499, 540	22, 24, 26
Ruffle, Ex parte . Re Dummelow, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 997; 29 L.T. 384; 5 Digest 1062, 8681	738, 741
Rush, Re , [1922] 1 Ch. 302; reversd. , [1923] 1 Ch. 56; 127 L.T. 713; 27 Digest 113, 906	969, 970, 971

Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661	76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 84, 247, 248, 250
Russell (John) & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 298; 85 L.J.K.B. 1152; 115 L.T. 86; Digest Practice 362, 739	295, 298, 304, 310
Rusoff v. Lipovitch, [1925] 1 K.B. 628; 132 L.T. 789; 31 Digest 585, 7343	571, 576
Rutter v. Palmer, [1922] 2 K.B. 87; 91 L.J.K.B. 657; 127 L.T. 419; Digest Supp.	128, 132
Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311	237, 238
Saint Line, Ltd. v. Richardsons, Westgarth & Co., Ltd., [1940] 2 K.B. 99; 163 L.T. 175; 2nd Digest Supp.	998, 1001
Salter v. Lask, Lask v. Cohen, [1925] 1 K.B. 584; 132 L.T. 830; 31 Digest 563, 7107	715, 717
Santos v. Illidge, (1860), 3 C.B.N.S. 861; 29 L.J.C.P. 348; 3 L.T. 155; 11 Digest 404, 744	147, 151
Savoy Overseers v. Art Union of London, [1896] A.C. 296; 65 L.J.M.C. 161; 74 L.T. 497; 60 J.P. 660; 38 Digest 498, 525	21, 22, 26
Scammell (G.) & Nephew, Ltd. v. Ouston, [1941] 1 All E.R. 14; [1941] A.C. 251; 110 L.J.K.B. 197; 164 L.T. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.	156
Scarborough v. Cosgrove, [1906] 2 K.B. 805; 74 L.J.K.B. 892; 93 L.T. 530; 3 Digest 83, 137	127, 131, 132, 133
Schaffer v. Ross, [1939] 4 All E.R. 363; [1940] 1 K.B. 418; 162 L.T. 37; 2nd Digest Supp.	926, 929
School of Oriental and African Studies v. Westminster City Rating Authority, [1940] 2 All E.R. 537; Digest Supp.	22, 24
Scott, Ex p., (1829), 9 B. & C. 446; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 361; 2 Man. & Ry. M.C. 308; 14 Digest 188, 1634	373, 374, 376
Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; 109 L.T. 1; 16 Digest 31, 301	439, 441
Scottish Insurance Corp., Ltd. v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 1068	1094, 1096, 1098, 1099
Scowcroft, Re, [1898] 2 Ch. 638; 79 L.T. 342; 8 Digest 247, 68	347, 351
Searle v. Wallbank, [1947] 1 All E.R. 12; [1947] A.C. 341; 176 L.T. 104; 2nd Digest Supp.	621, 630
Sebag-Montefiore, Re, [1941] 1 All E.R. 672; [1944] Ch. 331; 113 L.J.Ch. 280; 170 L.T. 395; 2nd Digest Supp.	200, 202
Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan, [1940] 3 All E.R. 349; [1940] A.C. 880; 164 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	424
Selwyn v. Hamill, [1948] 1 All E.R. 70	403, 405
Seymour v. Coulson, (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 359; 13 Digest 538, 902	414, 416
Shanly v. Ward, (1913), 29 T.L.R. 714; 31 Digest 382, 5276	706, 708
Sharpe v. Nicholls, [1945] 2 All E.R. 55; [1945] K.B. 382; 172 L.T. 363; 2nd Digest Supp.	560, 564
Sharpness New Docks and Gloucester and Birmingham Navigation Co. v. A.-G., [1915] A.C. 654; 112 L.T. 826; 79 J.P. 305; 26 Digest 581, 2716	837, 839
Sheehan v. Cutler, [1946] K.B. 339; 174 L.T. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.	403, 404, 405
Shorthill v. Grannen, (1920), 47 N.B.R. 463; 55 D.L.R. 416; 25 Digest 536, q	93, 106
Sinclair v. H.M. Advocate, (1890), 17 R. (Ct. Sess.) 38	373, 374, 377
Sinclair v. Powell, [1922] 1 K.B. 393; 126 L.T. 210; 31 Digest 565, 7129	787
Siqueira v. Noronha, [1934] A.C. 352; 103 L.J.P.C. 63; 151 L.T. 6; Digest Supp.	220, 222
Skyring v. Greenwood, (1825), 4 B. & C. 281; 6 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 401; 35 Digest 157, 537	965, 967
Smith, Re, [1896] 1 Ch. 71; 73 L.T. 604; 43 Digest 936, 3749	430, 433, 434
Smith, Re, [1947] 2 All E.R. 705; [1948] Ch. 49	1045, 1047, 1048
Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 13 Digest 527, 789	414, 416
Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; 2nd Digest Supp.	251, 253, 254
Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 381; [1940] A.C. 242; 109 L.J.K.B. 134; 163 L.T. 9; 104 J.P. 51; 2nd Digest Supp.	320, 322, 328
Smith v. Harwich Corp., (1857), 2 C.B.N.S. 651; 22 J.P. 55; 7 Digest 339, 35	706, 708
Smith v. Kaye, (1904), 20 T.L.R. 261; 27 Digest 81, 643	973, 976
Smith v. Lambeth Assessment Committee, (1882), 10 Q.B.D. 327; 52 L.J.M.C. 1; 48 L.T. 57; 47 J.P. 244; 38 Digest 446, 167	225, 232
Smith v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co., (1868), L.R. 3 C.P. 326; 18 L.T. 403; 36 Digest 37, 215	791, 799
Smith v. Mather, [1948] 1 All E.R. 704; [1948] 2 K.B. 212	414, 415
Smith v. St. Michael, Cambridge, Overseers, (1860), 3 E. & E. 388; 3 L.T. 687; 25 J.P. 133; 38 Digest 444, 150	776, 779, 782, 786
Smith v. Smith, [1939] 4 All E.R. 533; [1940] P. 49; 162 L.T. 333; Digest Supp.	909, 917
Smith, Hogg & Co., Ltd. v. Black Sea and Baltic General Insurance Co., Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 405; [1940] A.C. 997; 109 L.J.K.B. 848; 163 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.	2, 6, 15, 17
Snow v. Teed, (1870), L.R. 9 Eq. 622; sub nom. Sum v. Teed, 23 L.T. 303; 44 Digest 888, 7455	715, 717
Sociedad Anónima Comercial de Exportación y Importación (Louis Dreyfus y Cia), Limitada v. National Steamship Co., Ltd. (1932) 49 T.L.R. 50; revsq. S.C. sub nom., National Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Sociedad Anónima Comercial de Exportación y Importación (Louis Dreyfus y Cia), Limitada, 48 T.L.R. 325	160, 163
Societe Generale de Paris v. Dreyfus Bros., (1887), 37 Ch.D. 215; 57 L.J.Ch. 276; 58 L.T. 573; Digest Practice 339, 374; revsq., (1885) 29 Ch.D. 239	295, 298, 304, 305
South Wales Aluminium Co., Ltd. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee, [1943] 2 All E.R. 587; 108 J.P. 45; 2nd Digest Supp.	28, 31
Southgate Borough Council v. Watson, [1944] 1 All E.R. 603; [1944] K.B. 541; 171 L.T. 26; 108 J.P. 207; 2nd Digest Supp.	817, 824
Sparks v. Edward Ash, Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 1; [1943] K.B. 223; 112 L.J.K.B. 289; 168 L.T. 118; 107 J.P. 44; 2nd Digest Supp.	60, 66, 67
Speed v. Swift (Thomas) & Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 539; [1943] K.B. 557; 169 L.T. 67; 2nd Digest Supp.	479, 481
Spencer v. Hemmerde, [1922] 2 A.C. 507; 128 L.T. 83; 32 Digest 364, 484	499, 500, 501
Spickernell v. Hothan, (1854), Kay 669; 2 Eq. Rep. 1103; 32 Digest 360, 435	51, 55
Spring v. Spring and Jiggins, [1947] 1 All E.R. 886; 2nd Digest Supp.	938, 941
Squire v. Squire, [1945] 2 All E.R. 51; [1945] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319	76, 84, 91
Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Clan Line Steamers, Ltd., [1924] A.C. 100; 93 L.J.P.C. 49; 130 L.T. 481; 41 Digest 920, 8103	2, 16
Standing v. Bowring, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 282; 55 L.J.Ch. 218; 54 L.T. 191; 25 Digest 519, 133	93, 106, 107
Stansbie v. Troman, [1948] 1 All E.R. 599; [1948] 2 K.B. 48	801, 802
Statham v. Statham, [1929] P. 131; 140 L.T. 292; Digest Supp.	938, 939, 940
Steele v. Robert George & Co., (1937), Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 447; [1942] A.C. 497; 167 L.T. 1; 35 B.W.C.C. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.	589, 594, 595, 600, 606

Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 78; 128 L.T. 402; 39 Digest 529, 1421 ..	270, 276, 436, 438
Stockham v. Easton, [1924] 1 K.B. 52; 129 L.T. 762; 31 Digest 571, 7193 ..	787
Stone v. Godfrey, (1854), 5 De G.M. & G. 76; 2 Eq. Rep. 866; 23 L.T.O.S. 289; 35 Digest 92, 21 ..	756, 760, 761
Stoughton, Re, [1941] I.R. 166; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	842, 844, 845
Strakosch, Re, [1947] 2 All E.R. 607; [1948] Ch. 37; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	347, 351
Strong v. Bird, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 315; 43 L.J.Ch. 814; 30 L.T. 745; 25 Digest 538, 268 ..	167, 170
Svenssons (C. Wih.) Travaruaktiebolag v. Cliffe S.S. Co., [1932] 1 K.B. 490; 101 L.J.K.B. 521; 147 L.T. 12; Digest Supp. ..	160, 161, 164
Swadling v. Cooper, [1931] A.C. 1; sub nom. Cooper v. Swadling, 143 L.T. 732; Digest Supp. ..	621, 629
Swanson's Agreement, Re, [1946] 2 All E.R. 628; [1947] L.J.R. 169; 176 L.T. 25; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	135, 137, 139, 140, 141
Sweeting v. Pridcaux, (1876), 2 Ch.D. 413; 34 L.T. 240; 44 Digest 1258, 10864 ..	665, 668, 669
Swinburne, Re, (1884), 27 Ch.D. 696; 37 Digest 453, 550 ..	902, 904, 905, 907
Swinburne, Re, [1926] Ch. 38; 134 L.T. 121; Digest Supp. ..	817, 826
Sydney Municipal Council v. Campbell, [1925] A.C. 338; 133 L.T. 63; 42 Digest 723, 1422 ..
Syngé v. Syngé, [1901] P. 317; 85 L.T. 83; affmg. , [1900] P. 180; 83 L.T. 224; 64 J.P. 454; 27 Digest 375, 3631 ..	909, 912
Tate v. Leithead, (1854), Kay 658; 2 Eq. Rep. 1105; 23 L.T.O.S. 252; 25 Digest 533, 226 ..	902, 904
Taylor v. Goodwin, (1879), 4 Q.B.D. 228; 48 L.J.M.C. 104; 40 L.T. 458; 43 J.P. 653; 26 Digest 438, 1553 ..	176, 180
Teape's Trusts, Re, (1873), L.R. 16 Eq. 442; 28 L.T. 799; 37 Digest 451, 541 ..	665, 668
Tedman v. Whicker, [1944] 1 All E.R. 226; [1944] K.B. 112; 113 L.J.K.B. 166; 170 L.T. 51; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	313, 317
Tetley, Re, [1923] 1 Ch. 258; affmd. , A.-G. v. National Provincial & Union Bank of England, [1924] A.C. 262; sub nom. Re Tetley, 131 L.T. 34; Digest Supp. ..	347, 350
Thomas v. Thomas, [1924] P. 194; 130 L.T. 716; 27 Digest 315, 2925 ..	908, 909, 915, 916
Thomas v. Thomas, [1945] 1 All E.R. 170; 110 J.P. 203; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	909, 910
Thomas v. Winchester, (1852), 6 N.Y.R. 397 ..	1057, 1062
Thompson, Re, [1948] 2 All E.R. 223; [1949] Ch. 1 ..	490, 494
Thompson v. R., [1918] A.C. 221; 118 L.T. 418; 82 J.P. 145; 14 Digest 360, 3310 ..	365, 366, 367, 369, 370, 372
Thompsons (Funeral Furnishers), Ltd. v. Phillips, [1945] 2 All E.R. 49; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	483, 485, 486
Thomson v. Clanmorris (Lord), [1900] 1 Ch. 718; 82 L.T. 277; 32 Digest 320, 57 ..	721, 725
Thorne v. Motor Trade Assoc., [1937] 3 All E.R. 157; [1937] A.C. 797; 106 L.J.K.B. 495; 157 L.T. 399; Digest Supp. ..	209, 213
Thynne v. Salmon, [1948] 1 All E.R. 49; [1948] 1 K.B. 482 ..	414, 415, 715, 718, 719
Tilley v. Tilley, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1113 ..	385, 387
Tracy v. Talbot, (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 214; Holt, K.B. 581; 2 Salk. 532; 38 Digest 452, 191 ..	777, 786
Tredgar v. Harwood, [1929] A.C. 72; 97 L.J.Ch. 392; 139 L.T. 642; Digest Supp. ..	135, 139
Tredgold, Re, [1943] 1 All E.R. 120; [1943] Ch. 69; 112 L.J.Ch. 68; 168 L.T. 135; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	200, 201
Treharne, Re. Ex parte Ealing Local Board, (1890), 63 L.T. 798; 4 Digest 357, 3341 ..	555, 559
Treloar v. Bigge, (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 151; 31 Digest 379, 5259 ..	706, 708
Trent and Humber Co., Re. Ex p. Cambrian Steam Packet Co., (1868), 4 Ch. App. 112; 19 L.T. 465; varying , L.R. 6 Eq. 396; 17 Digest 158, 595 ..	998, 1000
Tribune Press, Lahore (Trustees) v. Income Tax Comr., Punjab, Lahore, [1939] 3 All E.R. 469; Digest Supp. ..	347, 351
Trim Joint District School Board of Management v. Kelly, [1914] A.C. 667; 111 L.T. 305; 7 B.W.C.C. 274; 34 Digest 270, 2300 ..	883, 885
Twycross v. Pterylus, (1877), 5 Ch.D. 605; 36 L.T. 752; 1 Digest 49, 398 ..	948, 949, 957, 964
Tyler, Re. Ex p. Official Receiver, [1907] 1 K.B. 865; 97 L.T. 30; 29 Digest 385, 3083 ..	730, 732
Tynte, Ex parte . Re Tynte, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 125; 42 L.T. 598; 4 Digest 114, 1028 ..	653, 654
Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne, [1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 175 L.T. 350; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	456, 457, 458
Vallance v. Falle, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 109; 51 L.T. 158; 48 J.P. 519; 41 Digest 253, 943 ..	545, 550
Van der Linde v. Van der Linde, [1947] Ch. 306; 176 L.T. 297; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	756, 759
Vaughan v. Shaw, [1945] 2 All E.R. 52; [1945] K.B. 400; 173 L.T. 6; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	403, 407
Vavasseur v. Krupp, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 351; 39 L.T. 437; 1 Digest 49, 392 ..	949, 957
Vernon City, The, [1942] P. 61; 167 L.T. 393; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	702
Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co., [1927] A.C. 430; 96 L.J.K.B. 597; 136 L.T. 513; Digest Supp. ..	251, 253
Volp v. Volp, (1940), unreported ..	909, 914, 917, 919, 920
Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, (1885), 30 Ch.D. 172; 53 L.T. 263; 37 Digest 480, 771 ..	665, 669
Vyse v. Foster, (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 318; affmg. , (1872), 8 Ch. App. 309; 27 L.T. 774; 43 Digest 916, 3571 ..	461, 463, 464
Wakeman, Re, [1945] 1 All E.R. 421; [1945] Ch. 177; 172 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	577, 587, 588
Wales v. Thomas, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 340; 50 J.P. 516; sub nom. , Walls v. Thomas, 55 L.T. 400 ..	744
Walker v. Hockney Brothers, (1909), 2 B.W.C.C. 20; 34 Digest 273, 2311 ..	883, 886
Ward v. Stephens, (1886), 12 V.L.R. 378; 33 Digest 560, 4284 ..	38, 41
Ware & De Freville, Ltd. v. Motor Trade Assoc., [1921] 3 K.B. 40; 90 L.J.K.B. 949; 125 L.T. 265; 42 Digest 984, 141 ..	209, 213
Waring, Re, No. 1, [1942] 2 All E.R. 250; [1942] Ch. 426; 111 L.J.Ch. 284; 167 L.T. 145; reversg. , [1942] 1 All E.R. 556; [1942] Ch. 309; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	200, 201, 804, 805, 806, 807, 809, 810, 812, 813
Waring, Re, No. 2, [1948] 1 All E.R. 257; [1948] Ch. 221 ..	805, 807
Watson v. Saunders-Roe, Ltd., [1947] K.B. 437; 176 L.T. 521; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	571, 576
Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; 176 L.T. 498; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	76, 77, 90, 247, 249, 938, 940
Weare v. Brimsdown Lead Co., (1910), 103 L.T. 429; 1 Digest 522, 1828 ..	526, 528
Webb v. Austin, (1844), 7 Man. & G. 701; 8 Scott, N.R. 419; 3 L.T.O.S. 282; 21 Digest 284, 998 ..	414, 417
Webb v. Hughes, (1870), L.R. 10 Eq. 281; 40 Digest 111, 893 ..	770, 771
Webb v. Outtrim, [1907] A.C. 81; 95 L.T. 850; 17 Digest 495, 606 ..	750, 753
Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2), [1919] A.C. 606; affmg. , [1918] 1 Ch. 517; 87 L.J.Ch. 345; 118 L.T. 769; 8 Digest 506, 11 ..	110, 119
Welton v. Saffery, [1897] A.C. 299; 66 L.J.Ch. 362; 76 L.T. 505; 10 Digest 958, 6565 ..	167, 170

	PAGE
Wertheim v. Chicoutimi Pulp Co., [1911] A.C. 301; 104 L.T. 226; 17 Digest 84, 33	998, 1002
West Lancashire Rural Council v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. Co., [1903] 2 K.B. 394; 89 L.T. 139; 67 J.P. 410; 38 Digest 280, 178	837, 839
Westminster City Council v. Royal United Service Institution, [1938] 2 All E.R. 545; Digest Supp.	22, 26
Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority and Smith & Son, Ltd., Westminster Corpn. & Kent Valuation Committee v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority & Pullman Car Co., Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 322; [1936] A.C. 511; 105 L.J.K.B. 537; sub nom. , Re Southern Ry. Co.'s Appeals, 155 L.T. 33; 100 J.P. 327; Digest Supp.	225, 228, 230, 232, 776, 777, 781, 783, 786, 787
Westminster (Duke) v. Swinton, [1948] 1 All E.R. 248; [1948] 1 K.B. 524	339, 393
Whelan v. Henning, [1926] A.C. 293; 134 L.T. 513; 28 Digest 81, 450	805, 808
Whitby v. Burt, Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; 177 L.T. 556; 111 J.P. 481; 2nd Digest Supp.	532, 535, 537, 540, 543
White, Re , (1893), 2 Ch. 41; 68 L.T. 187; 8 Digest 249, 89	849, 853
White, Re , [1916] 1 Ch. 172; 85 L.J.Ch. 368; 114 L.T. 353; 44 Digest 714, 5625	176, 181
White v. Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, Ltd., [1913] 1 Ch. 113; affd. , (1913), 84 L.J.Ch. 938; 110 L.T. 209; 19 Digest 114, 738	176, 180
White v. Richmond Court, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 689; [1944] K.B. 576; 113 L.J.K.B. 497; 171 L.T. 41; 2nd Digest Supp.	312, 313, 316, 317
Whitley, Re. Ex parte Mirfield Commercial Co., Ltd., (1891), 65 L.T. 351; 8 Morr. 149; 4 Digest 156, 1466	653, 654, 655
Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552; [1947] K.B. 194; 175 L.T. 449; 111 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	1102, 1103, 1104
Wilhelm, The, (1865), 14 L.T. 636; 41 Digest 490, 3196	2, 7
Wilkes v. Goodwin, [1923] 2 K.B. 86; 92 L.J.K.B. 580; 129 L.T. 44; 31 Digest 560, 7080	313, 314
Wilkins (Fred) & Brothers, Ltd. v. Weaver, [1915] 2 Ch. 322; 84 L.J.Ch. 929; 34 Digest 1329	209, 211
Will v. United Lankat Plantations Co., Ltd., [1914] A.C. 11; 109 L.T. 754; affmg. , [1912] 2 Ch. 571; 107 L.T. 360; 9 Digest 597, 3991	1069, 1070, 1074, 1078, 1079, 1083, 1084, 1089
William Whiteley, Ltd. v. R., (1909), 101 L.T. 741; 35 Digest 159, 556	729, 731
Williams v. Graigola Merthyr Co., Ltd., (1924), 132 L.T. 227; 17 B.W.C.C. 202; 34 Digest 848, 2804	589, 592
Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, [1926] 1 K.B. 497; 134 L.T. 459; 18 B.W.C.C. 535; 34 Digest 272, 2310	883, 888
Williams v. Secretary of State for War, (1947), unreported	374, 378
Williams v. Smith, [1934] 2 K.B. 158; 151 L.T. 112; 98 J.P. 231; Digest Supp.	634, 639, 640, 641
Williamson-Buchanan Steamers, Ltd. (Liquidators of), 1936 S.L.T. 106	1070, 1088
Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin, [1948] 2 All E.R. 123	385, 387
Wilson v. General Iron Screw Colliery Co., Ltd., (1877), 37 L.T. 789; 17 Digest 98, 132	993, 1001
Wilson v. Harper, Son & Co., [1908] 2 Ch. 370; 77 L.J.Ch. 607; 1 Digest 523, 1830	156
Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.	320, 322, 327
Winsmore v. Greenbank, (1745), Willes. 577; 27 Digest 81, 640	973, 976
Witted v. Galbraith, [1893] 1 Q.B. 577; 62 L.J.Q.B. 248; sub nom. , Witted v. Pembroke Galbraith & Co., 68 L.T. 421; Digest Practice 357, 705; revers. , [1893] 1 Q.B. 431	294, 295, 298, 304
Wohlgenuth, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 882; [1949] Ch. 12	733, 735
Wood v. Wood, (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 190; 43 L.J.Ex. 153; 30 L.T. 815; 8 Digest 510, 29	110, 119
Wood v. Wood, [1947] 2 All E.R. 95; [1947] P. 103; 111 J.P. 428; 2nd Digest Supp.	909, 913
Woodhead v. Putnam, [1923] 1 K.B. 252; 128 L.T. 281; 31 Digest 572, 7196	456, 457
Woodfield v. Bond (No. 1), (1921), 127 L.T. 204; 31 Digest 557, 7045	926, 929
Wragg, Re , [1919] 2 Ch. 58; 121 L.T. 78; 43 Digest 928, 3662	430, 434
Wray v. Essex County Council, [1936] 3 All E.R. 97; 155 L.T. 494; Digest Supp.	1057, 1063
Wright v. Arnold, [1946] 2 All E.R. 616; [1947] K.B. 280; 176 L.T. 45; 2nd Digest Supp.	197, 199, 483, 486, 560, 562
Wright v. Morgan, [1926] A.C. 788; 135 L.T. 713; 43 Digest 781, 2218	461, 463
Wringe v. Cohen, [1939] 4 All E.R. 241; [1940] 1 K.B. 229; 161 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.	791, 796
Wroe, Re , (1896), 74 L.T. 302; 44 Digest 597, 4227	1046
Yeatman, Ex parte. Re Yeatman, (1880), 16 Ch.D. 283; 44 L.T. 260; 4 Digest 145, 1348	653, 655
Young, Re , [1913] 1 Ch. 272; 108 L.T. 292; 44 Digest 403, 2349	871, 873
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 171 L.T. 113; 37 B.W.C.C. 51; affmd. , [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 174 L.T. 39; 38 B.W.C.C. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.	750, 753, 754
Young v. Darrah, [1929] S.C. (J.) 17; Digest Supp.	646, 651
Young and Young v. Otto, [1947] 2 W.W.R. 950	973, 976
Ystradowen Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Griffiths, [1909] 2 K.B. 533; 100 L.T. 869; 2 B.W.C.C. 357; 34 Digest 342, 2760	589, 592
Zealley v. Veryard, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 195; 14 L.T. 769; 30 J.P. 663; 23 Digest 81, 698	1048, 1050

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES.

	PAGE
Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29)—
s. 1 (1)	709
s. 5 (2)	732
Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Act, 1924 (c. 37), s. 7 (11)	633
Armed Forces (Conditions of Service) Act, 1939 (c. 68), s. 4 (5)	373
Army Act, ss. 45 (1); 154 (1)	373
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59)—
s. 40 (2)	554
ss. 80, 105 (1)	510
sched. 1, para. 9	737
Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 3	646
Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), ss. 11 (2), 30 (1)	544
Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59)—
s. 22 (3) (c)	613
s. 25	1068
(1)	1094
Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), ss. 49, 102 (8)	743
Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23)—
s. 55 (1) (c)	1068
s. 63 (now Companies Act, 1948, s. 75)	167
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 209 (1) (6)	1013
County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53)—
s. 40 (1)	893
s. 47 (3) (a)	452
ss. 60 (1), 61	1048
s. 105	980
Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19)—
s. 1 (2)	477
(a) (iii)	329
(4)	329, 477
s. 2 (3)	329
s. 4 (3)	477
Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 14 (1) (2)	787
Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (c. 44), s. 1	48
Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), ss. 169, 170, 179, 202	1006
Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 5 (2)	1039
Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), s. 39 (2) (a)	942
Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 7	815
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67)—
s. 22 (1)	245, 319
s. 25 (1)	540
s. 26 (1)	532, 540
s. 43 (1)	801
s. 49	452
s. 107 (1)	532
s. 152 (1)	319, 532
Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 1 (4)	47
Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22)—
s. 149 (1)	409
(4)	286
Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 18 (1), (3), (5), (a)	1108
Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46)—
s. 38 (1)	1108
(1) (a)	865
(2) (3) (4)	1108
Finance Act, 1946 (c. 64), s. 20 (3)	896
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. 1, para. 6 (1)	120, 261
Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), s. 2 (8)	241
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 80 (1) (a)	1023
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (1)	720
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 7	285
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 4 (1) (2)	285
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40)—
sched. D, case V	354
All Schedules Rules, r. 18	1108
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17)—
s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. 1)	312
(1) (g) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 13, and Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935 (c. 13), s. 1)	715
(2)	570
(3)	456
(3) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 17 (2))	786
s. 15 (3)	197
s. 17 (2)	570
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938 (c. 26), s. 7 (1)	483 Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45)—
s. 1 (1)	472, 695
(6)	472
Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41), ss. 1, 3	127
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36)—
s. 4 (1)	418, 1026
s. 17 (1)	1026
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20)—
s. 28 (1) (as amended by the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926 (c. 11), s. 7 and sched.)	577
s. 99 (1)	691

Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (c. 28)—

s. 1 (1)	620, 893, 973
(2)	893
s. 4	620
Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (2)	199
Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 65 (1)	340
Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21)—
ss. 23 (4), 24 (1) (2)	498
s. 26 (a) (b)	465
s. 30 (1)	48
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 188 (1)	394
Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 1 (1)	701
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17	344
Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 376 (1) (d)	994
Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)	243
Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100)—
s. 7	233
s. 57	813
Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), ss. 14 (1), 36 (1), (3)	1033
Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 164	423
Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 16	836
Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90)—
s. 22 (1) (b)	27
s. 23 (1)	776
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44)—
s. 3 (1)	409
s. 4 (2)	286
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), ss. 3 (1), 7 (1)	402
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32)—
s. 1 (2)	925
s. 3 (1)	197, 691
s. 16 (1)	402, 560
sched. I (g)	749
sched. I (h) (as amended by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938 (c. 26), sched. II)	933
Riot (Damages) Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2 (1)	337
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43)—
s. 15 (2)	318
s. 35 (1), (2)	1102
s. 61 (1)	977
Roads Act, 1920 (c. 72), s. 11 (1)	428
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71)—
s. 20	435
s. 22 (1)	37
s. 35	215
s. 48 (3)	921
Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (c. 36), s. 1	21
Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5)	841
Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1)	577
Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899 (c. 44), s. 1 (1)	394
Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), (3) (a)	394
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), ss. 4, 5	943
Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39)—
s. 4	247, 290
s. 6	1105
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192	670
Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), ss. 10 (3), 34 (1)	185
Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), ss. 51 (1), (2), 55 (1), (2), (3)	1051
Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29)—
s. 4 (1) (2)	185
s. 7 (2) (3)	381
Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 26 (1) (6), (3)	205
Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), ss. 52 (1), 58 (4)	656
War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21)—
s. 6 (2)	990
s. 7 (1)	490
s. 10 (1)	763
(2)	490, 763
sched. II, para. 1 (1) (c) (iii)	763
War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20	294
Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), ss. 25, 29	980
Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 35	980
Wills Act, 1837	92
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84)—
s. 1 (1)	883, 891
s. 9 (1)	588

LOCAL AND PRIVATE STATUTES.

London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlv), s. 25 (1)	256
South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Goole Railway (Deviation and Extension of Elsecar Branch) Act, 1850 (c. xxxv), s. 3	836

RULES.

Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), rr. 59, 82	344
R.S.C.—
Ord. 11, r. 1 (g)	294
Ord. 25, r. 4	219
Ord. 27, r. 11	1019
Ord. 30, r. 1 (a)	1019
Ord. 54, r. 12A	344
Rules of Procedure, 1926 (S.B. & O., 1926, No. 989), r. 34 (c)	242
Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O., 1915, No. 200), r. 52	239

REGULATIONS.

Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 950), reg. 2 (1)	146
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended))—
reg. 51 (1)	389, 815
(2) (a), (5)	815
reg. 56A (1) (2)	616
reg. 62 (4A)	352
Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O., 1908, No. 1312), reg. 18 (d) (as amended by Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 739))	251
General Regulations of Board of Customs, dated Aug. 31, 1895, reg. 3	1006
Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 397), reg. 3	60
Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1149)—
reg. 9 (1)	47
reg. 31, sched. V	428

ORDERS.

Control of Building Operations (No. 8) Order, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 74), art 2 (1), (2)	616
Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877)	294
Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), sched. , class (4)	27

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Accept without objection the title of the landlord	830
Accident	883
Action based on fraud	405
All nephews and nieces of my late sister L.	1045
All repeats	526
All that the share and interest of and in the residuary trust fund under the will of	968
An eldest son entitled for the time being under my will to my real estates for his life	680
Any restriction imposed under an enactment to which the hereditament was subject at the time immediately after the occurrence of the war damage	763
Approaching	60
At all times hereafter with or without horses carts and agricultural machines	176
Building operation	532
Children	732
Circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war	329
Contractor's theory	27
Debts due to me in respect of said business	568
Deficiency of men or other accident	171
Direct from garage	977
Dwelling	570
Dwelling-house	402
"Entitled to property comprised in the settlement"	1108
Expenditure in carrying out work which is rendered abortive by the order	381
Failed or determined	674
Fee, gain or reward	394
Gangway	540
Goodwill of my business and stock and plant	563
Having had on board prohibited spirits	1006
Holding out	1033
I give devise and appoint all my property	665
If in my service at the time of my death	641
In any street	154
In consequence of employment	749
In nature of structure	27
In or upon such investments as to them may seem fit	430
Income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom	354
Income received from investment	120
Income received from investments	261
Interest	1108
Last complete accounting period	613
Last opportunity	620
M. Mosley Wakefield 19	428
Maintenance	472
Measures	980
Measuring instrument	980
Member of the tenant's family	715
Necessary or expedient	815
Operating centre	656
Person concerned with the purchase of goods	896
Power to enjoy income of a person resident out of the United Kingdom	1108
Power to revoke or otherwise determine settlement	865
Properly brought	294
Properly maintained	319
Property	50
Property payable to the settlor	1108
Public officer	394
Purchase	896
Purposes of science exclusively	21
Racing Calendar	109
Reasonable provision for maintenance	472
Reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent breach	743

	PAGE
Reasons	1102
Rent	312
Repeats	526
Right of action concealed by fraud	465
Safe means of access	540
Separate dwelling	560
Sound material	245
Special circumstances in the trade	205
Special reasons	318, 1102
Structure	27
Sufficient reason	452
Suitable accommodation	801
To go pass and re-pass	176
To use at her discretion for her work for the welfare of cats and kittens needing care and attention	495
Trade or business	1026
Unable immediately	477
Unavoidable cause	942
Unit basis	27
Unliquidated debt	737
Use for hire or reward other than private hire	977
Use in importation of prohibited goods	1006
Voluntary contributions	21
Warned off	109
Works reasonably executed for temporarily meeting the circumstances created by the damage	990

CORRIGENDA

- [1948] 2
- P. 59. SQUIRE v. SQUIRE. Line D.6: for "(though not even able to sleep by day)" read "(though not infrequently able to sleep by day)."
- P. 933. Re SHEPHERD. Counsel: for "J. A Wolfe," read "Jackson Wolfe."
- P. 1108. WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD. v. ROSE. Counsel: for "Salmon, K.C., and Gallop, K.C." read "Gallop, K.C., and S. W. Magnus."
- [1949] 1
- P. 37. CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY v. GUEST KEEN BALDWIN'S IRON & STEEL CO., LTD. Solicitors: for "Church, Rendell & Co." read "Simmonds, Church Rackham & Co."
- P. 456. LINDOP v. QUAIFF. Line C.3: for "rateable value" read "rent." P. 457, line 7: for "rateable value" read "rent."
- P. 596. HOGAN v. BENTINCK WEST HARTLEY COLLIERIES, LTD. Line E: for "LORD MACDERMOTT" read "LORD NORMAND."
- P. 801. MCCARTHY v. DAILY MIRROR NEWSPAPERS, LTD. Counsel: for "Edgar Bradley" read "J. G. K. Sheldon," and for "J. G. K. Sheldon" read "Edgar Bradley."
- P. 1046. Re BIRKIN (deceased). Counsel: for "Duffy" read "Duthie."

THE
ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS
INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS

C MONARCH STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LTD. v.
A/B KARLSHAMNS OLJEFABRIKER AND OTHERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Wright, Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parc and Lord Morton of Henryton), May 31, June 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, December 9, 1948.]

D Charterparty—Bill of lading—Delay on voyage due to unseaworthiness—Outbreak of war—Diversion of ship by Admiralty—Transshipment of cargo to neutral ships for completion of voyage—Damages—Cost of transshipment.

E On Apr. 4, 1939, the M. company chartered a steamship, belonging to the S. company, a British company, which sailed to Rashin in fulfilment of the charter and there loaded a cargo of soya beans, purchased from the M. company by the K. company of Sweden. On May 6, 1939, sixteen bills of lading were issued and on May 12 the ship sailed from Rashin. Under the terms of the charterparty the S. company contracted to supply a seaworthy ship; but, owing to bad bunker coal having been used in her and to other causes, the ship was unseaworthy on sailing from Rashin and considerable delay was caused owing to deviations from route for repairs. F On June 7, in conformity with the charterparty and bills of lading, the M. company nominated Karlshamn as the port of discharge, but the S. company was not told until the middle of August that delivery was intended to be made to the K. company. On the outbreak of war on Sept. 3, 1939, the voyage, which would have taken only 63 days but for the ship's unseaworthiness, was still not completed, and the ship was ordered by the Admiralty to proceed to Glasgow which she reached on Oct. 21. On her arrival the M. company paid the freight and took delivery of the cargo, and on Oct. 23 transferred the bills of lading to the K. company, who had chartered three neutral ships to carry on the cargo to Karlshamn. G The cost of transshipment was £21,634 7s. 4d. which the K. company now claimed from the S. company as damages for breach of contract. It was found as a fact that the S. company was unaware of the unseaworthiness of the ship. The charterparty contained a war risks clause, relied on by the S. company, under which the ship was to have liberty to comply with orders of (inter alia) the British government and delivery under such orders was to be fulfilment of the contract. H

HELD : (i) the diversion to Glasgow, brought about through the delay in carrying out the contract of carriage, was attributable to the default of the S. company, because in the conditions existing in April, 1939, it ought to have foreseen that war might shortly break out and that any prolongation of the voyage might cause the loss of or diversion of the ship.

The Malcolm Baxter, Jr., (1928) (31 Ll. L.Rep. 200), distinguished.

The Wilhelm (1865) (14 L.T. 636) and Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (1900), Ltd. v. Houlder Bros. & Co., Ltd. (1917) (118 L.T. 94), explained.

(ii) the cost of transhipment was due to the S. company's failure to carry out its bargain and was damage arising as a direct and natural consequence of the breach of contract, for which the S. company was liable.

[AS TO REMOTENESS OF DAMAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 103-109, paras. 130-136; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 93-99, Nos. 108-141.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) The Europa, [1908] P. 84; 77 L.J.P. 26; 98 L.T. 246; 41 Digest 480, 3129.
- (2) Kish v. Taylor, [1912] A.C. 604; 81 L.J.K.B. 1027; 106 L.T. 900; 41 Digest 485, 3170.
- (3) The Malcolm Baxter, Jr., (1928), 31 Ll. L.Rep. 200.
- (4) Smith, Hogg & Co., Ltd. v. Black Sea and Baltic General Insurance Co., Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 405; [1940] A.C. 997; 109 L.J.K.B. 848; 163 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) The Wilhelm, (1865), 14 L.T. 636; 41 Digest 490, 3196.
- (6) Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (1900), Ltd. v. Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd., (1917), 86 L.J.K.B. 1495; 118 L.T. 94; 22 Com. Cas. 279; 41 Digest 443, 2780.
- (7) Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 8 Digest 138, 910.
- (8) Horne v. Midland Ry. Co., (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 131; 42 L.J.C.P. 59; 28 L.T. 312; 8 Digest 140, 918.
- (9) British Columbia, etc., Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, (1868), L.R. 3 C.P. 499; 37 L.J.C.P. 235; 18 L.T. 604; 8 Digest 138, 905.
- (10) Connal, Cotton & Co. v. Fisher, Renwick & Co., (1883), 10 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 824; 19 Sc. L.R. 698; 41 Digest 451, 2827 i.
- (11) Banco de Portugal v. Waterlow & Sons, Ltd., Waterlow & Sons, Ltd. v. Banco de Portugal, [1932] A.C. 452; 101 L.J.K.B. 417; 147 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.
- (12) Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co., (1880), 5 App. Cas. 25; 42 L.T. 334; 44 J.P. 392; 17 Digest 83, 29.
- (13) British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Rys. Co. of London, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 673; 81 L.J.K.B. 1132; 107 L.T. 325; 17 Digest 126, 343.
- (14) Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners), The Susquehanna, [1925] P. 196; affmd., [1926] A.C. 655; 95 L.J.P. 128; 135 L.T. 456; 41 Digest 802, 6624.
- (15) Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S., [1933] A.C. 449; 102 L.J.P. 73; sub nom. The Edison, 149 L.T. 49; Digest Supp.
- (16) Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali, [1947] A.C. 414; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (17) Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Clan Line Steamers, Ltd., [1924] A.C. 100; 93 L.J.P.C. 49; 130 L.T. 481; 41 Digest 920, 8103.
- (18) Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, [1918] A.C. 350; 87 L.J.K.B. 395; 118 L.T. 120; 29 Digest 229, 1858.
- (19) Paterson Steamships, Ltd. v. Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers, Ltd., [1934] A.C. 538; 103 L.J.P.C. 166; 151 L.T. 549; Digest Supp.

- (20) Dunn v. Bucknall Brothers, Dunn v. Currie (Donald) & Co., [1902] 2 K.B. 614; 71 L.J.K.B. 963; 87 L.T. 497; 41 Digest 410, 2552.
- (21) Bank Line, Ltd. v. Capel (Arthur) & Co., [1919] A.C. 435; 88 L.J.K.B. 211; 120 L.T. 129; 41 Digest 366, 2136.
- (22) Maritime National Fish, Ltd. v. Ocean Trawlers, Ltd., [1935] A.C. 524; 104 L.J.P.C. 88; 153 L.T. 425; Digest Supp.
- (23) Gee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., (1860), 6 H. & N. 211; 30 L.J.Ex. 11; 3 L.T. 328; 17 Digest 96, 118.
- (24) Cory v. Thames Ironworks Co., (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 181; 37 L.J.Q.B. 68; 17 L.T. 495; 17 Digest 96, 115.

APPEAL by shipowners from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session, pronounced on Dec. 6, 1946, affirming two interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary, dated respectively May 6 and 14, 1946, whereby he decerned against the shipowners for payment of £21,634 7s. 4d. for breach of contract contained in certain bills of lading issued by the shipowners of which the respondent company was indorsee. The House of Lords dismissed the appeal. The facts are set out in the opinions of LORD PORTER and LORD WRIGHT.

Sir William McNair, K.C., and E. W. Roskill for the appellant shipowning company.

L. Hill Watson, K.C., and George S. Reid (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondent company.

The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 9. The following opinions were read.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, this is an appeal from an interlocutor pronounced by the First Division of the Court of Session on Dec. 6, 1946, affirming two interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary dated respectively May 6 and 14, 1946, whereby he decerned against the appellant for payment of £21,634 7s. 4d. for breach of a contract contained in 16 bills of lading issued by the appellant of which the respondent was indorsee and for expenses.

The pursuer is a Swedish manufacturing firm which, on Apr. 21, 1939, purchased through their London agents a cargo of Manchurian soya beans from the Japanese firm, Mitsui and Co. The amount purchased was 8,200 tons at the price of £8 6s. 3d. a ton or something over £68,000 in all, and the goods were to be shipped on board the appellant's vessel, the British Monarch. Presumably in anticipation of this contract Mitsui and Co., on Apr. 4, had chartered that vessel which sailed to Rashin in fulfilment of the charter, there loaded the beans, and issued 16 bills of lading on May 6. After loading her cargo she sailed from that port on May 12. Before proceeding to Rashin the vessel had been on time charter to Yamashita Kisen Kaisha of Kobe under a charterparty dated Oct. 11, 1938. By the terms of this document the charterers had to supply the bunker coal required and that which they furnished appears to have been of bad quality and to have affected the tubes of the vessel's boilers. Moreover, the coal supplied for the voyage from Rashin was itself of poor quality, though it may be that nothing better was procurable. However this may be, undoubtedly the combination of these two factors caused great delay in the homeward voyage. Furthermore, though the appellant did not know it, the evaporator and main condenser were out of order.

Under the terms of the charterparty the appellant was under contract to supply a seaworthy ship and this by reason of the defects stated above it failed to do. According to the finding of the Lord Ordinary she was unseaworthy on sailing from Rashin and the appellant has accepted this finding and argued its case on that footing. It was suggested to your Lordships that not only was the vessel unseaworthy on sailing, but that the owners knew of that unseaworthiness. I doubt whether this contention was open to the pursuer on the pleadings, and there is no sign of its consideration in the opinion of the Lord Ordinary or the Inner House, but, even if it were open, I do not think it has been established. It is true that the appellant knew that there had been trouble with the boiler tubes and that its time charterers had been using bad coal, but it had been informed that the vessel had been surveyed and nothing found wrong, and it always hoped that a fresh supply of coal would prove efficient, or, anyhow, efficient enough. Moreover, actual knowledge of unseaworthiness must be shown, and mere imprudence or carelessness is not knowledge. The owners must, therefore, be absolved from the guilt of sending their ship to sea in an unseaworthy state with knowledge of that unseaworthiness. Nevertheless, the defects were there and entailed a considerable prolongation of the voyage. Her speed was slow and boiler trouble occurred more than once, so that for the ship's safety she had to be diverted to Colombo and repaired there, with the result that she did not reach Port Said until Aug. 31 and then spent twenty-three days at that port effecting further repairs. She ought, as the appellant admits, to have completed the voyage to Karlshamn in about 60 days, which would have brought her to her destination before the end of July, whereas she was still at Aden when war broke out on Sept. 3.

Under the charterparty and bills of lading, Messrs. Mitsui had a range of ports in the North Sea and Baltic to which they were entitled to direct the vessel and on June 7 they nominated Karlshamn as the port of discharge. The owners, however, did not know at that time for whom the cargo was intended. Their contract was still with Mitsui and with them alone, and it so remained until Oct. 23. They were not even informed that Mitsui intended to deliver to the pursuers until the middle of August. As a result of the outbreak of war the British Monarch was, by Admiralty orders, diverted to Glasgow. On this last lap of the voyage her speed was not unreasonably slow and she reached Glasgow on Oct. 21. On her arrival, Mitsui paid the freight and took delivery of the cargo. Two days later they transferred the bills of lading to the respondent, who meantime had chartered three ships to carry on the beans to Karlshamn, where the respondent intended to use them directly or indirectly for the purposes of its factory. It had expected the beans to arrive at Karlshamn before the end of July, and, being short of supplies owing to their late arrival, had for lack of them to borrow some soya beans from the Swedish government under promise to replace them on the arrival of the vessel and needed the rest to keep its factory at work. The cost of transhipment was £21,634 7s. 4d., the sum sued for in the action, and, whatever the rights of the parties may be, it is not contended that this sum was an unreasonable amount to pay for the carriage on to Sweden at that time and in war conditions. This sum the pursuer says it was entitled to recover as damages for the appellant's breach of contract.

The argument runs as follows. The undertaking was to carry the beans to one of a range of ports at the option of Mitsui or of those to whom they transferred the bills of lading; the option was exercised in favour of Karlshamn; the appellant failed to carry out its obligation, and, accordingly, the respondent had the right to fulfil the contract itself, and to charge the appellant with the cost of doing so; the appellant should have delivered the beans at Karlshamn within a reasonable time; it failed to do so because of its breach of contract to provide a seaworthy ship; and the additional expense of carrying out the contract must, therefore, fall on it. If it had not taken so unduly long a time, the British Monarch would have arrived at Karlshamn long before the outbreak of war and the hire of the three additional ships would have been unnecessary. In opposition to this argument the appellant maintains that the respondent is not entitled to recover this or any sum. It relies, in the first place, on the provisions of the charterparty and bills of lading which incorporate its terms, and, in particular, on the war clause attached to it, which is in the following terms :

" War Risks Clause. (1) No bills of lading to be signed for any blockaded port and if the port of discharge be declared blockaded after bills of lading have been signed, or if the port to which the ship has been ordered to discharge either on signing bills of lading or thereafter be one to which the ship is or shall be prohibited from going by the government of the nation under whose flag the ship sails or by any other government, the owner shall discharge the cargo at any other port covered by this charterparty as ordered by the charterers (provided such other port is not a blockaded or prohibited port as above mentioned) and shall be entitled to freight as if the ship had discharged at the port or ports of discharge to which she was originally ordered. (2) The ship shall have liberty to comply with any orders or directions as to departure, arrival, routes, ports of call, stoppages, destination, delivery or otherwise howsoever given by the government of the nation under whose flag the vessel sails or any department thereof, or any person acting or purporting to act with the authority of such government or of any department thereof, or by any committee or person having, under the terms of the war risks insurance on the ship, the right to give such orders or directions and if by reason of and in compliance with any such orders or directions anything is done or is not done, the same shall not be deemed a deviation, and delivery in accordance with such orders or directions shall be a fulfilment of the contract voyage and the freight shall be payable accordingly."

Indeed, without the war clause the owners contend that they fulfilled their obligations since after the outbreak of war the ship was under a duty to obey the orders of the British Admiralty and it became illegal for the owners to proceed to or to discharge at any port other than Glasgow. They accept the finding that the vessel was unseaworthy and deviated to Colombo, but say that the reason for the deviation was the initial unseaworthiness and that deviation to remedy unseaworthiness is not unjustifiable unless the state of the vessel was known to her owners before she sailed. Such knowledge, they contend, has not been established, and the mere existence of unseaworthiness does not prevent a shipowner from relying on the terms of the charterparty or bill of lading unless physical loss is caused by the unseaworthiness itself. It is claimed that in the present case loss was not so occasioned, and, consequently, the terms and exceptions contained in the documents remained in force until the termination of the voyage at Glasgow which, in the events which happened and in accordance with the terms of the war clause, became her contractual port of discharge, and, indeed, the only port to which she could legally go. For this proposition reliance is placed on The Europa (1) and Kish v. Taylor (2)

Undoubtedly, deviation necessarily made to remedy unseaworthiness does not amount to unjustifiable deviation or destroy the right to rely on the terms of the contract of carriage unless it is established that the owners knew of the vessel's state on sailing. As indicated above, no such knowledge has been brought home to the appellant, and, therefore, it continues to be entitled to rely on the war clause. Nevertheless, it has to be considered whether the delay due to initial unseaworthiness was not the factor which brought that clause into operation and so caused the diversion of the ship to Glasgow and her failure to reach Karlshamn. On behalf of the appellant it is said that the unseaworthiness was not the cause of the change of destination. The immediate cause was the order of the British Admiralty. After repairs had been effected at Port Said there was nothing in the physical condition of the ship to prevent her from proceeding to or reaching Karlshamn. Admiralty orders, on this argument, were an independent executive act applying to all ships whether seaworthy or not, and this vessel was never under an absolute obligation to go to Karlshamn. She need only go there provided the British government permitted. As they did not, she must obey and go to Glasgow.

It cannot, of course, be denied that those orders were binding on her, but that concession does not end the matter. It has still to be determined whether the effective cause which necessitated those orders and made obedience compulsory was not the delay in the voyage which was brought about by her unseaworthiness on sailing from Rashin. The appellant says that this was only an indirect cause, and, therefore, historically true but causally irrelevant, and in support of this part of its argument relies on the principles enunciated in the American case, The Malcolm Baxter (3). The unseaworthiness, they say, had come to an end, or, at any rate, was not, after Port Said, an active element in preventing the ship reaching Karlshamn. The case was not like Smith, Hogg & Co., Ltd. v. Black Sea and Baltic General Insurance Co., Ltd. (4), where there were two concurrent physical causes of the loss. Here the unseaworthiness had ceased to operate and the sole reason preventing the continuance of the voyage to Sweden was the control of the British government. Speaking for myself, I am unable to distinguish the principles adopted in the American case from those which must be applied in this, save, on one matter, viz., whether before the ship sailed her diversion by government orders could reasonably have been foreseen. If the American case is applicable and rightly decided the appellant should, I think, succeed. It is, therefore, necessary to analyse that decision and consider whether it is right and whether it correctly represents the law of England.

The facts are, indeed, very much like those existing in the present case. The Malcolm Baxter, which was a sailing vessel, was unseaworthy on sailing but not unseaworthy to the knowledge of her owners. The result of her unseaworthiness was, however, that she had to deviate in order to effect repairs at Havana and while those repairs were being effected the United States government levied an embargo which prevented any sailing vessel from clearing for a voyage to Bordeaux, which was her port of destination, or for any port within the war zone. The vessel thereupon sailed for New York and delivered her cargo there, relying on the exception of the "restraint of princes, rulers, and people" contained in the bills of lading and also on the illegality of proceeding on her original voyage. It was argued in that, as in this, case that the unseaworthiness was known to the owners, or, at any rate, that they were negligent in failing to discover it before she sailed. Knowledge by the owners was negatived by the court, and negligence without knowledge was held, as it would be held in this country, not to be material as an element in depriving the owners of the protection of the terms of the bills of lading. As to the delay caused by the embargo, it was held that the bills of lading holders could not recover because the change of destination was within the exceptions of the bills of lading and because, exception or no exception, while the embargo continued it would have been illegal to proceed with the voyage. It was urged, however, that it was the delay caused by her unseaworthiness which brought the vessel within the excepted peril. This argument was rejected on the ground that the delay was the occasion and not the cause of the operation of the embargo. It was, so the court held, no more its cause than delay which caused goods to be brought within the path of a flood would be the cause of their destruction. To one other circumstance existing in that case attention must be called, viz., the statement in the judgment of STONE, J., where he says (31 Ll. L.R. 202):

"There is no finding, nor is it suggested, that at the time when the contract of affreightment was entered into, or when the vessel broke ground, the embargo could reasonably have been foreseen, or that there were any special circumstances charging petitioners with the knowledge or expectation that the unseaworthiness or consequent delay would bring the vessel within its operation."

My Lords, in my view, the overriding fact which led to the decision in that case is to be found in the words just quoted. Whether the same result would have been arrived at if there had been reason for the owners to apprehend a state of affairs in which delay would bring the war clause into operation is left undetermined.

It was on this differentiation of fact that the Lord President founded his decision in the present case. In his view, the appellant should reasonably have foreseen the likelihood of the imposition of an embargo. In forming this opinion he relied on the insertion of the war clause in the charterparty coupled with the evidence of Mr. George Sheriff, assistant manager to the appellant's chartering agents, who stated that, at the date of the charter, the international situation was considerably overclouded and the possibility of war was in the minds of his company. My Lords, both these facts are true, but it still has to be determined whether they are enough to establish that at that time the embargo could reasonably have been foreseen. It is true that when the bills of lading were issued Czechoslovakia had been seized and an undertaking given to protect Poland, but no treaty had yet been made between Germany and Russia. These circumstances have to be balanced one against the other and I am not sure that, without the advantage of your Lordships' opinions, I should have come to the conclusion that a shipowner ought to have foreseen that within the course of the contemplated voyage, even if protracted, a war would be likely to occur, or, if it did, that the carriage of goods to the stipulated range of ports, and, in particular, to Karlshamn, would be prohibited. But your Lordships think that such an event should have been anticipated and I am not prepared to differ.

On this finding, while, in my opinion, The Malcolm Baxter (3) was rightly decided according to the law of this country, it can be distinguished and its principles do not govern the case which your Lordships are considering. In reaching this conclusion I take into account the distinction drawn by the Lord President between such a case and that of a vessel struck by lightning or running into a typhoon which she would have avoided had she sailed with reasonable despatch. Either may happen as much at one place or time as another whereas delay at a time when war is likely to occur gives more opportunity for its incidence than a speedy and proper despatch would give. Where, however, the basis of liability is delay, it is, as I think, the reasonable anticipation which matters, and but for the finding that the appellant ought to have foreseen the likelihood of war breaking out I should have thought your Lordships' decision would rightly have been given in favour of the appellant.

It was contended, indeed, on behalf of the respondent that the delay was the result of the appellant's breach of contract in providing an unseaworthy ship, and that for the consequences of that breach of contract it is liable whether it could have anticipated them or not, and in support of this argument The Wilhelm (5) was cited. In that case a ship was chartered to proceed to Archangel and there load a part cargo of tar. After she was loaded and ought to have had her provisions on board she had an opportunity of sailing, but, owing to the negligence of the master in not having provisions on board, she missed that opportunity and then was frozen in. In these circumstances DR. LUSHINGTON, sitting in the Court of Admiralty, held the shipowners liable for their breach of contract in failing to convey the cargo to its port of delivery with all expedition and to make good to the owners of the cargo the damage which accrued. If this decision is to be given its fullest significance, the respondent's contention would be established, but I think it must be qualified to some extent and is only justified on the ground that the shipowner ought reasonably to have contemplated that at the relevant time, viz., Oct. 8, the vessel was in danger of being frozen in unless she sailed promptly. On the other hand, in Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (1900), Ltd. v. Houlder Brothers (6), where a ship was to be at Northfleet on May 25, but was still on a voyage from Hull on May 26 and on that date was torpedoed, ATKIN, J., held the charterers entitled to recover any expenses resulting from her non-arrival on May 25 and 26, but that thereafter the loss of the ship rendered performance of the contract impossible and the shipowners liable for no further loss. These two cases can, I think, only be made consistent on the ground that in the first the shipowners ought reasonably to have foreseen the likelihood of the ship being frozen in if she delayed, whereas in the second there was no more reason to anticipate her loss by torpedo at one moment rather than at another, and the same principle seems to me to lie at the back of that class of decision which says that delay does not expose goods to any greater risk of being carried away by a flood or struck by lightning than if they had been carried with despatch. I conclude, therefore, that the diversion to Glasgow, brought about through the delay in carrying out the contract of carriage in the present case is attributable to the default of the owners of the ship because, in the conditions existing in April, 1939, they ought to have foreseen that war might shortly break out and that any prolongation of the voyage might cause the loss or diversion of the ship.

Even, however, if the present case is distinguishable on its facts from The Malcolm Baxter (3) and the appellant is liable for such loss as is legally recoverable, it yet has to be determined whether the respondent is entitled to recover the damages claimed, or, indeed, any damages as a result of the appellant's breach of contract. In other words, did the transshipment costs naturally and directly flow from the initial unseaworthiness? The appellant contends that those costs were neither directly nor naturally caused by the unseaworthiness of the vessel, but were the result of circumstances peculiar to the pursuers and not communicated to the appellant who never undertook the contract on the terms that it should be liable for damages of that kind. If the claim had been for loss of profit in the respondent's business, I should think the appellant's contention sound. Hadley v. Baxendale (7), Horne v. Midland Railway (8), and British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship (9), would apply, and the damages would be too remote, but the claim is not for such damages but for transshipment costs, and the argument turned on the right of a shipper to recover such costs in a case where he was left to complete the contract of carriage at his own expense.

On behalf of the appellant it was said that the contract was made with Mitsui and continued to be with them, on the terms of the contract contained in the charterparty, until the bills of lading were transferred to the pursuers two days after the ship's arrival at Glasgow. The appellant, when it entered into the contract of carriage, knew only Mitsui who were Japanese merchants buying for re-sale and delivery at one of a range of ports. If the carrying ship failed to deliver at the nominated port, the only damages sustained by the merchants were such sum as they lost which would normally be measured by the difference between the price obtainable for the goods at the named port and that receivable at the place where they were actually delivered. In the present case there was no loss since the price at which the British government would have requisitioned at Glasgow was £8 17s. 6d. a ton, i.e., 11s. 3d. more than the sale price, and it had not been proved that more could have been obtained in the open market at Karlshamn. Mitsui, it was said, could not increase those damages by transferring the bills of lading to the pursuer after the ship's arrival at Glasgow. It was pointed out further that before the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, Mitsui could have transferred the property in the goods but not the benefit of the contract of carriage. After the passing of that Act, it was said, they could transfer any right which they themselves possessed under it but nothing more, and, as they could recover no damages, no more could their assignees. Moreover, the assignees themselves could not even obtain damages against Mitsui who had fulfilled their c.i.f. contract by furnishing valid bills of lading, the contractual insurance policies, and the appropriate invoices.

For the purpose of testing this argument it must, of course, be assumed that the appellant had broken its contract by failing to deliver the goods at Karlshamn, and it must then be asked whether Mitsui or the respondent was obliged to accept the beans in some other quarter of the globe, where it did not want them, without any right to recover damages provided it could sell them there at a price as high as it could obtain at the contractual port. I cannot think that it was obliged to accept any such substituted performance. It appears to me to have had the right to require the goods to be delivered at the place stipulated, and, if the shipowner failed to carry out his bargain to deliver there, the direct and natural consequence is that the merchant should arrange for the carriage forward and charge the shipowner with the reasonable cost of doing so. Nor do I think it improves the appellant's position to say that it is the respondent's duty to minimize or nullify his damages by selling elsewhere. He is entitled to have his contract fulfilled in the manner stipulated and is under no obligation to accept some undesired method of performance. Some support is given to this view by the decision in Connal, Cotton & Co. v. Fisher, Renwick (10), though in that case the extra cost of purchasing at the port of delivery in fact exceeded the expense of transshipment. If this view be right, the respondent was entitled to recover the expense of forwarding the goods in fulfilment of his contract, whether that contract was contained in the charterparty or in the bills of lading, and, under the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, could transfer that right to the assignee of the latter documents.

Having regard to this view, it is unnecessary to discuss the other consideration put forward in the course of argument that, whatever the exact legal position between Mitsui and the pursuer, the latter was under no obligation to stand on its exact legal rights, but as an honourable merchant was entitled to fulfil its contract and to be indemnified by shipowners who had not fulfilled theirs. It will be observed that in this conclusion I am accepting the position maintained by the appellant that the indorser of a bill of lading cannot give his indorsee more rights than he himself possesses, and treating the matter as if Mitsui, by assigning the bills of lading to the respondent, had only transferred such rights as they themselves possessed to the Swedish company. To some extent this attitude involves acceptance of the view that the taking of a bill of lading by the charterer of a ship confers no immediate rights on him under the bill of lading, but gives him an inchoate right by endorsing the bill of lading to a third party to make it an effective document from the beginning of the voyage so as to enable the indorser to sue on it for any breaches of contract committed during the voyage but before its transfer to him: "As if," it was put in the course of argument, "a contract in the terms of the bill of lading had at the time of shipment been made with himself." If this be the true view, it does not matter that at the time the bill of lading was transferred to the respondent carriage to and delivery at Karlshamn by the chartered ship had become illegal. If it took over the contract of carriage as from the date of shipment it had a right to have the goods shipped to Karlshamn and it was immaterial that at a later date delivery there became impossible, provided, of course, that that inability was caused by the appellant's breach of contract.

But, it is said, to give such damages either to Mitsui or to the respondent is to give damages for delay in delivery—a remedy which is not given in the case of carriage of goods by sea. No doubt, expressions of opinion to that effect are to be found, perhaps more frequently in the days of sailing ships when prolonged delay was to be expected, but it never was a rule of law—merely a working practice answering to the circumstances of the time and subject to the consideration that the contract must be reasonably performed. In the present case the result of the delay was to deprive the shipper and his indorsee of the goods at Karlshamn. Of course, if they could replace them by buying other goods there, it was their duty to diminish the damages by doing so, but they could not do so since no soya beans were procurable at Karlshamn and, in default, the only way of placing themselves in the same position as if the contract had been performed was to engage transport to carry the beans to that port. Accepting, then, the view that the appellant ought to have foreseen the likelihood of war occurring and of an embargo being imposed, I should find it liable to pay the damages claimed and would dismiss the appeal.

LORD WRIGHT : My Lords, the appellant is a limited company having its registered office at Glasgow, and is the owner of the British steamship, British Monarch, herein called "the vessel". The respondent is a Swedish company carrying on a manufacturing business at Norrköping, Sweden. The respondent has been awarded the sum of £21,634 as damages due from the appellant to the respondent as indorsee of bills of lading to which the property had passed by the indorsement, in respect of a cargo of soya beans shipped at Rashin, Manchuria, for Karlshamn. The award was for damages caused by the unseaworthiness of the vessel resulting in such delay on the voyage that the vessel did not deliver the cargo as she ought to have done before the outbreak of war in September, 1939, but, being still on the voyage when war broke out, was diverted to Glasgow under the war clause. The amount claimed was the cost which was incurred by the respondent in transhipping the cargo from Glasgow to the port of destination contracted for. The appellant now admits, as it did before the Inner House, that the vessel was unseaworthy, but claims that only nominal damages are recoverable. Both the Lord Ordinary and the Inner House have decided against the appellant.

The contract of carriage founded on was contained in the bills of lading dated at Rashin, May 6, 1939, and was for a total quantity in the aggregate under the bills of lading of about 8,200 tons of Manchurian soya beans to one of a range of ports in Europe, including Karlshamn, which was in due course nominated as the port of discharge. The shippers were the Japanese company, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha. The beans were to be delivered unto order, freight and all other conditions to be as per charterparty dated London, Apr. 4, 1939. The bills of lading contained the usual exceptions with a full negligence clause. In particular, the bills provided that all the exceptions were conditional on the ship being seaworthy when she sailed on the voyage, but any latent defects in the hull and/or machinery were not to be considered unseaworthiness provided the same did not result from want of due diligence of the owners or any of them or of the ship's husband or manager. The charterparty under which the bills of lading were issued was between the appellant as owner and Mitsui as charterer, and provided that the British Monarch should proceed to Rashin, and, being tight, staunch and strong and in every way fitted for the voyage, should load a full and complete cargo not exceeding 8,610 tons and proceed with all possible speed under steam via Suez Canal to one or two ports at charterers' option as ordered and there deliver the cargo. The charterparty contained an exception clause to the same effect as that contained in the bills of lading. The only one of the other clauses which it is here necessary to refer to is the war risks clause of which para. (1) is not here material, but para. (2) is in the following terms :

"The ship shall have liberty to comply with any orders or directions as to departure, arrival, routes, ports of call, stoppages, destination, delivery or otherwise howsoever given by the government of the nation under whose flag the vessel sails or any department thereof, or any person acting or purporting to act with the authority of such government . . . and if by reason of or in compliance with any such orders or directions anything is done or is not done, the same shall not be deemed a deviation and delivery in accordance with such orders or directions shall be a fulfilment of the contract voyage and the freight shall be payable accordingly."

I have quoted the clause practically in full because it became important in the events which ensued.

The cargo shipped at Rashin consisted of 8,200 tons. The shippers, Mitsui, sold these beans under a c.i.f. contract dated London, Apr. 21, 1939, the buyer being the Scandinavian Co-operative Wholesale Society who acted as agent for the respondent. The bills of lading were not indorsed to it until Oct. 23, 1939, when it took up the bills of lading and paid the price. Thereupon the respondent acquired the property in the goods and the rights under the contract contained in the bills of lading in virtue of the Bills of Lading Act, 1855. It brings this action accordingly.

The voyage was extraordinarily protracted owing to the unseaworthiness of the vessel. This fact of unseaworthiness was established after an elaborate and prolonged trial before LORD SORN, the Lord Ordinary, and was, as already stated, admitted before the Inner House and is now admitted before your Lordships. It was not suggested that the unseaworthiness was latent or excused by any term of the contract. LORD SORN found (79 Ll. L.Rep. 388) that "Considering the whole evidence, it is impossible to my mind to resist the inference that by the time the British Monarch had got to Rashin her boiler tubes were so worn and deteriorated that she was in no fit state to enter on the contemplated voyage."

Later in his judgment he said (ibid., 390):

"... I am satisfied that by the time the vessel reached Rashin her tubes as a whole were in a defective condition and that, in addition, the flaw which permitted sea water to find its way into the boilers was then in existence and that, in consequence of these defects, the ship was unseaworthy."

There were also questions about the Japanese coal with which the vessel was mainly bunkered when she left Rashin. The appellant was fully aware of the risk connected with the boilers because there had been a great deal of trouble under the previous charter. No doubt, the risk was appreciated, but it was hoped by the appellant that it would not materialise.

The result of the unseaworthiness was that the vessel did not reach Glasgow until Oct. 21, 1939. The appellant accepts that the vessel would normally have taken about 60 days so that she should have reached European waters about the middle of July, 1939, by which date she had only reached Colombo. She had so much trouble that she was forced to put in to Colombo for repairs, in particular to the choked and leaking tubes. This detained her there from June 30 to July 15, 1939. On her next stage, which was to Suez, she had to put in to Aden. At Port Said she was again detained for repairs from Aug. 31 until Sept. 23. On arrival at Glasgow the boilers were surveyed, and renewal throughout was found necessary, and was, in fact, carried out. The deviations were necessitated by the unseaworthiness and are not separately founded on. War broke out between Great Britain and Germany on Sept. 3, 1939. But for the delay on the voyage, the vessel should, therefore, have reached Karlshamn some weeks before it commenced. In consequence of the war, the Admiralty prohibited the vessel from proceeding to Karlshamn and ordered her to proceed to and discharge at Glasgow, where she arrived on Oct. 21, 1939 and discharged her cargo. The respondent wanted the soya beans for its business, and was relying on the cargo in question. The Swedish government, in order to help it, gave it some soya beans on loan on the terms of being repaid by an equivalent quantity when these beans arrived. The respondent succeeded in chartering three smaller neutral vessels to proceed with the beans to Karlshamn, where they were eventually delivered. The cost of transhipment was £21,634 7s. 4d. The appellant admits that the transshipment could not have been arranged more economically. The beans could have been sold at Glasgow for not less than £8 6s. 3d. per ton, the purchase price under the contract with Mitsui.

At the conclusion of the arguments, counsel for the appellant admitted that the appellant had broken its contract, but claimed that the damages were only nominal. I agree, however, with the unanimous decision of all the judges below that the claim for the damages is justified. It, in truth, gives effect to the broad general rule of the law of damages that a party injured by the other party's breach of contract is entitled to such money compensation as will put him in the position in which he would have been but for the breach. In that respect this case is singularly clear, because the contract entitled the respondent to have the beans delivered at Karlshamn and the damages claimed and awarded represent simply the sum necessary to effect that result, namely, the cost of transshipment from Glasgow to Karlshamn. The respondent was fortunate in being a neutral and in being able to charter neutral tonnage and obtaining from the British government permits to carry the beans from this country to Sweden. What the respondent wanted was the consignment of beans. Their value either in Glasgow or Sweden, where no beans were on the market, would have been a poor consolation, but, as transshipment could be effected, the extra cost incurred for transshipment was the proper subject of monetary compensation. The respondent has made no claim for interference with its business. The damages awarded are not special or remote, but are the damages naturally and directly resulting from the appellant's breach of contract within the rules of Hadley v. Baxendale (7) where ALDERSON, B., giving the judgment of the court said (9 Exch. 354):

"... we think the proper rule in such a case as the present is this: Where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally—i.e., according to the usual course of things, for such breach of contract itself—or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it."

ALDERSON, B., then points out that, if the special circumstances of the particular case were wholly unknown to the other party, he could at most be only supposed to contemplate the amount of injury which would arise generally and in the great number of cases not affected by any special circumstances. This passage is quoted in full by LORD SANKEY, L.C., in Banco de Portugal v. Waterlow (11) ([1932] A.C. 474). LORD SANKEY adds a clear and useful statement by LORD BLACKBURN in Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co. (12) (5 App. Cas. 39):

"Where any injury is to be compensated by damages, in settling the sum of money to be given for reparation of damages you should as nearly as possible get at that sum of money which will put the party who has been injured, or who has suffered, in the same position as he would have been in if he had not sustained the wrong for which he is now getting his compensation or reparation."

The ruling of ALDERSON, B., has consistently been followed. The only difficulty, as LORD SANKEY observes, has been in applying it. The distinction there drawn is between damages arising naturally (which means in the normal course of things) and cases where there were special and extraordinary circumstances beyond the reasonable prevision of the parties. In the latter event it is laid down that the special facts must be communicated by and between the parties. The distinction between these types is usually described in English law as

A that between general and special damages. The latter are such that, if they are not communicated, it would not be fair or reasonable to hold the defendant responsible for losses which he could not be taken to contemplate as likely to result from his breach of contract. I am not here concerned to examine the differences or similarities between this rule and the corresponding rules which are adopted in claims in tort. To apply this rule to the facts of the present case, it appears that, if the respondent had been claiming special and peculiar loss due to interference with its business, such damages might prima facie be too remote and not proper to be recovered in the absence of notice when the contract was entered into. The court will, however, assume that the parties, as business men, have all reasonable acquaintance with the ordinary course of business. As, however, the respondent is claiming only for its loss directly due to the failure of the appellant to fulfil his promise to deliver the beans at Karls-
B hamn, its claim is not based on any extraordinary or peculiar matter, but is only what might be claimed by any party which suffered a similar injury in the general circumstances of that business and at that time and place. There was, indeed, in 1939 the general fear that there might be war. Munich, the Sudetenland, the invasion by Germany of Czechoslovakia, the difficulty
C about the Polish Corridor were matters of common knowledge. Indeed, Mr. Sheriff, the appellant's responsible assistant manager concerned with chartering, in his evidence said that in April, 1939 (that is, when the charter was negotiated) the possibility of war was in the mind of the appellant, and he adds that there was a special war risks clause added to the charter in a slip attached. If the possibility of war was in the thoughts of the appellant, as it must have been
D because shipowners have to keep in mind the international situation, the same must be true of the respondent, a concern dealing in large international purchases of raw material. The possibility must have been in the minds of both parties even apart from the war clause, which is a printed form in frequent use during unsettled times. There was no need for one party to say to the other: "Be
E careful to hurry on the voyage as much as possible because, if war breaks out before the vessel gets to Karlshamn, the British government will almost certainly direct her under the war clause. The Channel, the North Sea, or the Baltic will, of course, not be healthy places for a British vessel." Business is not conducted in that way. Experienced business men would know what the contract provided and what the actual risks were. It was not likely that the appellant's representatives would say: "We have been having trouble
F with her boilers, but we will hope for the best and in any case there is an ample margin of time."

But all I am at the moment emphasising is that risks consequent on the prolongation of the voyage must have been in contemplation both by the shipowners and the shippers. The question whether damage is remote or "circumstances of each special case. Remoteness of damage is, in truth, a question
G of fact, as LORD HALDANE, L.C., describes it in the British Westinghouse case (13). He said ([1912] A.C. 688) with reference to questions as to damages:

"In some of the cases there are expressions as to the principles governing the measure of general damages which at first sight seem difficult to harmonise. The apparent discrepancies are, however, mainly due to the H varying nature of the particular questions submitted for decision. The quantum of damage is a question of fact, and the only guidance the law can give is to lay down general principles which afford at times but scanty assistance in dealing with particular cases. The judges who give guidance to juries in these cases have necessarily to look at their special character, and to mould, for the purposes of different kinds of claim, the expression of the general principles which apply to them, and this is apt to give rise to an appearance of ambiguity."

He then states the broad principle of compensation to which I have already referred and adds a reference to the ancillary duty of minimising damage. It is, I imagine, with language like that of LORD HALDANE, L.C., in his view that ATKIN, L.J., in The Susquehanna (14) said ([1925] P. 210):

"This is one of those cases dealing with damages which in my experience I have found to be a branch of the law on which one is less guided by authority laying down definite principles than on almost any other matter that one can consider."

LORD HALDANE, in the passage just cited, had to deal with a case where, as he said, it was necessary to balance loss and gain and no simple solution was possible. Again, in Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S. (15) this House made some observations on the measure of damages, which are of general import. The case was one of tort. The question there was what was the proper sum to award by way of compensation for the loss of a dredger. LORD WRIGHT said ([1933] A.C. 464):

"Many, varied and complex are the types of vessels and the modes of employment in which their owners may use them. Hence the difficulties constantly felt in defining rules as to the measure of damages. I think it impossible to lay down any universal formula."

Earlier in his speech LORD WRIGHT said (ibid., 463):

"... the dominant rule of law is the principle of restitutio in integrum, and subsidiary rules can only be justified if they give effect to that rule."

In the Liesbosch (15) it was held that loss due to the party's impecuniosity was too remote, and, therefore, to be neglected in the calculation of damages. It was special loss due to his financial position. A different conclusion was arrived at in Muhammad Issa el Sheikh Ahmad v. Ali (16) where damages consequent on impecuniosity were held not too remote, because, as I understand, the loss was such as might reasonably be expected to be in the contemplation of the parties as likely to flow from breach of the obligation undertaken: see the judgment of the Judicial Committee delivered by LORD UTHWATT ([1947] A.C. 427). The difference in result did not depend on the differences (if any) between contract and tort in this connection. The "reasonable contemplation" as to damages is what the court attributes to the parties. The breach itself is, of course, objective. The constant necessity of picking out from a plurality of items that which is material is also remarked on in the judgment in Liesbosch, Dredger v. Edison S.S. (15).

These general statements could be multiplied, but the question in a case like the present must always be what reasonable business men must be taken to have contemplated as the natural or probable result if the contract was broken. As reasonable business men each must be taken to understand the ordinary practices and exigencies of the other's trade or business. That need not generally be the subject of special discussion or communication. The future possibility of a breach must be both contingent and hypothetical and may take unexpected forms. Thus, in the Banco de Portugal case (11) the breach of contract was of a type not reasonably to be anticipated and the consequences were complex and indirect at least in the sense that they naturally involved action by other parties, but they were unanimously held by the House to be subjects of monetary compensation to make good the loss. I cannot find that any point was raised as to the necessity of communicating any special circumstances. Both parties were tacitly taken to be acquainted sufficiently with the general business position. The same is true in many cases of complicated consequences flowing from an unanticipated breach of contract, but the damages are not treated either as special or remote if they flow from the normal business position of the parties which the court assumes must be reasonably known to them. It would not be helpful to cite the familiar authorities which are numerous but

A depend primarily on the facts of each case. Even in the very simple case of breach by a buyer of his contract to accept and pay for goods, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 30 (2), is content to enact that the measure of damages is the estimated loss resulting in the ordinary course of events on the buyer's breach of contract. When in sub-s. (3) it gives a more specific rule, it qualifies it by the words prima facie. But in the present case the compensation claimed is what is the most obvious and natural. The cost of transshipment is the most natural form of reparation. It cannot be said to involve extraordinary or un contemplated hardship as the damages claimed were said to do in cases like British Columbia Saw Mills Co. v. Nettleship (9) and Horne v. Midland Railway Co. (8) which were relied on by counsel for the appellant. I may refer to the authority of the Scottish case of Connal, Cotton & Co. v. Fisher, Renwick & Co. (10) where the cost of transshipment was allowed as the proper measure of damages for failure to deliver under a contract of sea carriage at the agreed destination.

B But a question of remoteness in another connection and in another sense has been raised. That is in reference to remoteness in the sense of causal connection. The claim here is for damages for unseaworthiness, which, it is said, caused delay on the voyage and the delay exposed the vessel to being diverted by order of the Admiralty. This, it was said, may properly be regarded
C as coming within the exception of restraints of princes, though, indeed, it was for the benefit of the appellant because, if it could be invoked by the appellant, it gave it a right to the bill of lading freight in full as on performance of the contract by a delivery short of the bill of lading destination. In my opinion, this objection, which would treat restraints of princes as the immediate or dominant cause of the delay, fails. The Lord President relied on the decision
D of this House in Smith, Hogg & Co. v. Black Sea, etc., Insurance Co. (4) in which case the loss of a vessel which occurred through the negligence of the master operating on conditions of unseaworthiness existing since the commencement of the voyage was held to be caused by breach of the warranty of seaworthiness and recoverable accordingly. There was an exception of negligence. Negligence could be regarded as a co-operating cause, no different
E in principle from any physical and tangible cause. As this House, however, said ([1940] A.C. 1005) no distinction can be drawn between cases where the negligent conduct of the master is a cause and cases where any other cause, such as perils of the sea, is a co-operating cause. "A negligent act is as much a co-operating cause, if it is a cause at all, as an act which is not negligent." What was being there emphasised was that a voluntary act
F (negligent or not) of a human agent is not generally an independent or new cause for this purpose which breaks the chain of causation, as it is called, so as to exclude from consideration the causal effect of the unseaworthiness. It is well established that unseaworthiness, if it is to be a relevant factor of liability, must be "a cause" of the damage or loss. That is necessary because
G unseaworthiness might take many different forms in the same vessel, so that before any one form can be relied on, it must be a cause of damage—for instance, the failure to carry a proper medical chest, if it is a breach of the warranty, might have no relevance to the loss of a vessel by perils of the seas. But a different result follows if the breach is a cause of the loss. Thus, in Smith, Hogg & Co.'s case (4) the unseaworthiness created in the vessel instability which, combined with negligence of the master, caused the loss. There was H no new law laid down in that case. From one point of view unseaworthiness must generally, perhaps always in a sense, be a "remote" cause. To satisfy the definition of unseaworthiness it must exist at the commencement of the voyage. It must, however, still be in effective operation at the time of the casualty if it is to be a cause of the casualty, and from its very nature it must always, or almost always, operate by means of and along with the specific immediate peril. That is because the essence of unseaworthiness as a cause of loss or damage is that the unseaworthy ship is unfit to meet the peril.

In other words, the vessel would not have suffered the loss or injury if she had been seaworthy. A ship may be lost, not simply by a peril of the sea, but also by and because of the failure to fulfil the warranty. Thus, for instance, in the Standard Oil Company of New York v. The Clan Line (17) the vessel capsized because the master, not being instructed by his owners as to the peculiarities of a turret ship, so handled her that she capsized. That loss was immediately due to perils of the sea which overwhelmed her when she capsized, liability for which was excepted, but the dominant cause was her unseaworthiness in that her master, though otherwise efficient, was inefficient in not being aware of the special danger. In general, all the authorities are in agreement in this respect and embody the same rule. The shipowner, of course, under the familiar general rule is debarred by his breach of duty from relying on the specific exception. Though he would not be liable for the consequences caused by the specific excepted peril or the accident alone if he were not in default, and though the unseaworthiness existing at the commencement of the voyage might not be operative or known until the time when the accident occurs, yet then the breach of the warranty operates directly as a cause, and, indeed, a dominant cause. Causation in law does not depend on remoteness or immediacy in time. So it was held in Leyland v. Norwich Union (18), but unseaworthiness as a cause operates immediately whenever it comes into effect. It has until then only been dormant. The maxim causa proxima non remota spectatur is either meaningless or misleading until "remota" and "proxima" are defined. Thus, unseaworthiness as a cause cannot from its very nature operate by itself. It needs the "peril" in order to evince that the vessel or some part or quality of it is less fit than it should have been and would have been if it had been seaworthy, and hence the casualty ensues. A fitter ship would have passed through the peril unscathed. In this way unseaworthiness is a decisive cause, or, as it is called, a dominant cause. If it is not expressly excepted, the shipowner cannot excuse himself by any specific exception for a loss for which he is himself responsible because he is responsible for unseaworthiness.

There is, however, in this case a contention of a more general nature, which is that the delay which resulted from the defective boilers did not in any legal sense cause the diversion of the vessel. It is said that the relation of cause and effect cannot be postulated here between the unseaworthiness and the restraints of princes or the delay. As to such a contention it may be said at once that all the judges below have rejected it. As I have pointed out, if the vessel had arrived at Karlshamn in July she could not have been exposed to the risk of the restraint of princes, but she did not arrive until October, and thereby (in the historic phrase) "missed the bus." If a man is too late to catch a train because his car broke down on the way to the station, we should all naturally say that he lost the train because of the car breaking down. We recognise that the two things or events are causally connected. Causation is a mental concept, generally based on inference or induction from uniformity of sequence as between two events that there is a causal connection between them. This is the customary result of an education which starts with our earliest experience. The burnt child dreads the fire. I am not entering on or discussing any theory of causation. Those interested in philosophy will find modern philosophic views on causation explained in RUSSELL'S HISTORY OF WESTERN PHILOSOPHY in the chapter on Hume, Book 3, c. XVII. The common law, however, is not concerned with philosophic speculation, but is only concerned with ordinary everyday life and thoughts and expressions and would not hesitate to think and say that because it caused the delay unseaworthiness caused the Admiralty order diverting the vessel. I think the common law would be right in picking out unseaworthiness from the whole complex of circumstances as the dominant cause. I have assumed that the bills of lading and charterparty exceptions which are expressed to be conditional on the vessel being seaworthy use "seaworthy" in the sense that the breach of warranty was a breach which caused the loss. This is assumed in Paterson v. Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers (19) in respect of a similar provision in the Water-Carriage of Goods Act (R.S. Can., 1927, c. 207), and in other cases.

Before I leave the various problems or difficulties argued or suggested in the appeal, I should notice some others. (i) It is suggested that the Smith, Hogg case (4) only refers to physical causes and physical defects and physical damage. I can see no ground for this in principle or authority or in the facts of this case. The bad state of the boilers was a physical cause which reduced the vessel's speed from 9 to 5 knots and necessitated the deviations, and I think as a matter of law that a vessel may be unseaworthy in particular circumstances without any structural or mechanical defect, for instance, if she is carrying contraband or false papers without the consent of the shippers and may, quoad hoc, be subject to delay or even condemnation without any physical interference except such as the restraint implies. The principle of Smith, Hogg & Co. (4) is wide enough to cover such a case. Dunn v. Bucknall Bros. (20) was an illustration of that character and in principle supports this view. (ii) It is said that the respondent, when it became assignee of the bills of lading, got only such rights as were then alive, and the only rights then alive were for delivery at Glasgow. I think it enough to refer to the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, and the long established practice of dealing with the bills of lading of seaborne cargoes. The rights transferred under the bills of lading were all such as might flow from the contract ab initio and the various supervening events. (iii) There is also the contention that the action must fail because the contract was frustrated and that the claim for damages must, therefore, fail. There are, in my judgment, many fatal objections to this contention. I think it is enough to point out that the Admiralty order (which is the frustrating event) is a restraint of princes expressly dealt with by the contractual exception which sufficiently provides for the peril, and, further, does not help the appellant because it is excluded by the breach of warranty which brings it into operation. Thus, the frustration was caused by matters for which the appellant was responsible. In Bank Line v. Capel (21) LORD SUMNER stated the principle thus ([1919] A.C. 452): "... the principle of frustration of an adventure assumes that the frustration arises without blame or fault on either side. Reliance cannot be placed on a self-induced frustration." The principle was applied in Maritime National Fish Co. v. Ocean Trawlers (22). I think it is enough to say that it applies here. (iv) I think a similar course of reasoning disposes of the contention that the appellant can escape the consequences of its breach of contract by saying that it would have been illegal for it to proceed to Karlshamn after the Admiralty order. It would certainly not have been possible, and it would certainly not have been allowed by the Admiralty. The appellant would rather have welcomed than resisted the order, but I think the same answer applies here according to English law as in regard to the contention of frustration. I mean, that the illegality was due to the appellant's own act and is not available as a defence to the injured party's claim. (v) I agree with the court below that nothing done at Glasgow by the respondent constituted a waiver of his right for breaking the contract.

I might, however, notice before I conclude the arguments based on the authority in the United States Supreme Court cited by the appellant, The Malcolm Baxter (3), entitled in the Supreme Court the Republic of France v. French Overseas Corporation. The Lord President, in his outstanding judgment, has put his finger on one decisive difference from the present case, namely, that there the law forbidding United States sailing ships from sailing across the Atlantic was something new, unprecedented, and not capable of prevision as a possible consequence of the delay consequent on the breach of warranty. That is certainly a sufficient distinction, but the complex of facts in that case was so completely dissimilar from those in the present case as to prevent the authority from being any guide to me. The United States case is noted by WILLISTON in his encyclopaedic work on CONTRACTS, revised ed., ss. 1096, 1938 and 1951, but the learned author does not comment on it in any detail. He cites it in his sections on illegality and also in connection with the liabilities of carriers by land where their delay has brought the goods into the scope of an Act of God, such as floods, tempests and the like, which could not be foreseen as likely to operate on the adventure, as a consequence of delay. The Lord President has dealt with this aspect and I do not wish to add to what he has said. The other peculiarity of the decision is that, as I understand, the court held that when eventually at Havana the vessel was made seaworthy and the general law prohibited her from crossing the Atlantic the whole position could be considered without reference to what happened before that stage and it could be said that the only cause why she could not then proceed was the United States law and not the unseaworthiness. I can only regard that as a particular conclusion based on all the special facts of the case. I cannot, therefore, find any guidance for the decision in this appeal. Decisions of the United States Courts, even the Supreme Court, are not of coercive, but only of persuasive, force on the courts of this country. It is certainly desirable that, so far as possible, there should be uniformity between the law merchant as administered in the United States and in Britain. The origin and foundation of the law in both countries are the same, but as time goes on and cases arise individual differences emerge and accumulate. Even the general principles of the law of carriage by sea do not receive identical expression or development in the courts of the two countries. That same phenomenon may be observed even in comparing the laws of the different states and the federal courts. Instances must be familiar to lawyers. There is a further difficulty in that the British lawyer cannot be familiar with the American decisions. He has not access to the reports, and, indeed, the American reports have reached such dimensions that they are quite beyond the capacity of a British lawyer. Even the American lawyer has to avail himself of the extraordinarily efficient and comprehensive system of indexing and reference which has been developed. This is quite beyond the reach of the British lawyer. It is the great development of case law on the other side of the Atlantic, coupled with a similar though lesser development on this side, which has discouraged the practice, at best rare, followed up to the middle decades of last century by British judges to cite American cases. I am not disparaging or discouraging the fullest possible interchange and reciprocity between American and British lawyers, but I cannot help recognising how difficult, and, perhaps, dangerous, it may be to ask a British judge to rely on a particular United States decision torn from its setting in the totality of United States case law and statutes, simply because of some partial similarity in the facts. I should dismiss the appeal.

LORD UTHWATT: My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in print and considering the opinions of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack and of my noble and learned friend, LORD WRIGHT. I agree with their conclusion, and I intervene only to say that I do not share the doubt expressed by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack on the question whether the appellants, on Apr. 4, 1939, should reasonably have foreseen the likelihood of the imposition of an embargo affecting the carriage of goods to the range of ports specified in the charterparty. To my mind, the situation in Europe at that date was such that a reasonable shipowner contemplating a voyage from Rashin to that range of ports would regard the chance of war, not as a possibility of academic interest to the venture, but as furnishing matter which commercially ought to be taken into account. If war happened, the embargo to which I have referred would, in his view, be an almost inevitable consequence. I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD DU PARCQ: My Lords, it is unnecessary for me to address your Lordships on all the points which were argued at the Bar, and I will confine myself to the question of damages. I may be taken to concur in the opinion of my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack on all those matters with which I do not specifically deal.

I do not doubt the wisdom of the judges who, in Hadley v. Baxendale (7) and the many later cases which interpreted or explained that classic decision, have laid down rules or principles for the guidance of those whose duty it is, as judges or jurymen, to assess damages. When those rules or principles are applied, however, it is essential to remember what my noble and learned friend, LORD WRIGHT, and LORD HALDANE in the passage cited by him have emphasised—that in the end what has to be decided is a question of fact, and, therefore, a question proper for a jury. Circumstances are so infinitely various that, however carefully general rules are framed, they must be construed with some liberality and not too rigidly applied. It was necessary to lay down principles lest juries should be persuaded to do injustice by imposing an undue, or, perhaps, an inadequate, liability on a defendant. The court must be careful, however, to see that the principles laid down are never so narrowly interpreted as to prevent a jury, or judge of fact, from doing justice between the parties. So to use them would be to misuse them. It is interesting to find a judge of the experience of WILDE, B., six years after Hadley v. Baxendale (7) was decided, expressing a doubt which may well have been widely shared. He said in Gee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. (23) (6 H. & N. 221) :

“For my own part I think that, although an excellent attempt was made in Hadley v. Baxendale (7) to lay down a rule on the subject, it will be found that the rule is not capable of meeting all cases ; and when the matter comes to be further considered, it will probably turn out that there is no such thing as a rule, as to the legal measure of damages, applicable to all cases.”

The observations of LORD HALDANE to which reference has been made show the wisdom of this forecast.

My Lords, what I have said is not, I think, without relevance to the matter in hand. If the argument of counsel for the appellant were right, a judge would have had to direct a jury in the present case that they must award no more than nominal damages. Any jury of business men would, I believe, have received such a direction with dismay, and acted on it with reluctance. It would, indeed, as it seems to me, result in manifest injustice. I may express my own opinion by saying that, if a jury, directed in the terms in which the Lord President's opinion shows us that he would have directed them, had awarded the respondent the sum of £21,634 as damages, there would have been no ground for setting aside or varying the verdict. It was pointed out by BLACKBURN, J., in Cory v. Thames Ironworks Co. (24) (L.R. 3 Q.B. 188) that the rule which ALDERSON, B., stated to be “the proper rule in such a case as the present” in Hadley v. Baxendale (7) (9 Ex. 354), consists of two alternatives. In my opinion, the damages which have been awarded to the respondent come within the former of these alternatives inasmuch as they are “such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising . . . according to the usual course of things, from the breach of the contract itself.” Damage arises “according to the usual course of things” if, in the circumstances existing at the date of the contract, both parties to it, supposing them to have considered the probable effects of a breach of the contract with due regard to events which might reasonably be expected to occur, must be assumed as reasonable men to have foreseen such damage as at least a serious possibility. Unseaworthiness in itself may, if fortune is kind, occasion no damage to anybody, but, apart from other obvious dangers, it is very likely to cause delay. Delay may produce damage of many kinds, some of it predictable. If it be once granted that there was a real, and known, danger of war at the date of the contract, I understand that all your Lordships who heard the argument are agreed that the diversion of the ship which caused such grave loss to the respondent followed in the usual course of things from the delay and the unseaworthiness which caused it.

In order that the respondent might succeed in establishing its case, it was not necessary, in my opinion, that the parties to the contract should be shown to have contemplated the outbreak of war as something certain and unavoidable. They are not to be supposed to have had the gift of prophecy. It is enough if they may reasonably be assumed to have contemplated a war, and the likelihood that it would lead to such an embargo as was, in fact, imposed, as a real danger which must be taken into account. I agree with my noble and learned friend, LORD WRIGHT, that Mr. Sheriff's evidence and the addition to the charter of the war risks clause support the view that this assumption may fairly be made. I also agree that there was at the material date a general fear of war. Your Lordships are entitled, as were the Scottish courts, to take judicial notice of the facts of history, whether past or contemporaneous with ourselves. The Prime Minister's announcement on Mar. 31, 1939, of the guarantee given to Poland was a definite landmark in the history of the world. It had been preceded on Mar. 17 by the speech at Birmingham in which the Prime Minister had asked rhetorically whether the attack on Czechoslovakia was to be followed by another. It was natural to see in this question a reference to Poland, and the assurance which so swiftly followed that His Majesty's government would "lend the Polish government all support in their power" in the event of any action which clearly threatened Polish independence justified, and, I think, aroused, a general apprehension of war. Certainly men engaged in commerce, who are rightly sensitive even to hints of danger when their business interests are affected, can hardly have failed to be alive to the risk of war. Speaking of the guarantee to Poland, MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL has written: "No one who understood the situation could doubt that it meant in all human probability a major war in which we should be involved": THE SECOND WORLD WAR, vol. I, p. 270. I am not entitled to ask your Lordships to rely on this statement for its evidential value. I quote it as a comment which, speaking for myself, I would endorse, though with the qualification that those who had to rely for their information on sources available to the general public at least had reasonable grounds for the belief that such a war was a serious possibility. In my opinion, the Lord Ordinary and the Inner House arrived at a proper conclusion, and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, I agree with the reasoning of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack, and I only desire to say a few words on the matter as to which he expressed some doubt. Before the date of the charterparty, Apr. 4, 1939, Germany had overrun Czechoslovakia. It was apparent then, if not before, that Hitler's pledged word was worthless and that he did not shrink from violence to achieve his ends. I think that any shipowner who was then contemplating a voyage from Rashin to one of a range of ports in Europe would feel that there was a grave risk of war breaking out in Europe and an embargo being imposed before the vessel reached her destination. In my view, the damage which was, in fact, suffered by the respondents was within the reasonable contemplation of the parties, and the appellant is liable to pay the damages claimed. I should dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed. Appellant to pay the costs of this appeal other than the costs of the inclusion of oral evidence, or documents relating solely to unseaworthiness or knowledge thereof. Respondent to pay to the appellant the costs so excepted.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche, agents for Montgomerie, Flemings, Fyfe, Maclean & Co., Glasgow, and Beveridge, Sutherland & Smith, Leith (for the appellant); Thomas Cooper & Co., agents for Boyd, Jameson & Young, Leith (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION v.
CENTRAL MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND HENDON RATING AUTHORITY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), November 16, 17, December 3, 1948.]

A Rating—Exemption—Scientific society—“Purposes of science exclusively”— “Voluntary contributions”—Laundries research association—Company limited by guarantee—Advice to members and courses for students—Government grant—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (c. 36), s. 1.

The Scientific Societies Act, 1843, s. 1, provides: “No person or persons shall be assessed or rated, or liable to be assessed or rated, or liable to pay, to any county, borough, parochial, or other local rates or cesses, in respect of any land, houses, or buildings, or parts of houses or buildings, belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, either as tenant or as owner, and occupied by it for the transaction of its business, and for carrying into effect its purposes, provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions, and shall not, and by its laws may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or between any of its members, and provided also that such society shall obtain the certificate of the barrister-at-law or lord advocate, as hereinafter mentioned.”

An association, according to its memorandum and articles, was instituted inter alia for the purposes of encouraging and improving the education of persons who were engaged in the laundry industry, of disseminating information by the giving of advice, and of making known the nature and merits of processes. It carried on research into matters connected with the laundry industry and to that end was in receipt of a government grant. The association was a company limited by guarantee, and its members, who paid subscriptions according to the size of their businesses, were entitled to, and did, put the results of the association's researches to practical advantage in their business. Lectures and demonstrations to students intending to enter the laundry industry were given, and on request experts were sent to advise launderers in their businesses in return for fees. The association claimed to be exempt from the payment of rates by virtue of s. 1 of the Act of 1843.

HELD: (i) according to its memorandum and articles, which was the best evidence of its purposes, the association was instituted for purposes other than those incidental to the purposes of science; even if there were any doubt as to the construction of the stated objects, the purposes which it, in fact, pursued, in particular, the purposes of its members, were not so incidental; and, therefore, it was not a “society instituted for the purposes of science exclusively” within s. 1.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), (15 A.C. 334; 63 L.T. 36), applied.

R. v. Institution of Civil Engineers, (1879), (5 Q.B.D. 48; 42 L.T. 145), explained.

Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., ([1932] 1 K.B. 149; 145 L.T. 553), considered.

R. v. British Non-Ferrous Metals Association, (1932), (16 Rating and Income Tax Cas. 149), overruled.

(ii) “voluntary contributions” were payments made by private citizens without compulsion and without any view to recompense save the gratitude of one's fellow men, and did not include a government grant.

Dicta of LORD HALSBURY, L.C., in Savoy Overseers v. Art Union of London ([1896] A.C. 305; 74 L.T. 498), applied.

Liverpool Corpn. v. West Derby Union, (1905) (92 L.T. 467), approved.
Hornsey School of Art v. Edmonton Union, (1905) (94 L.T. 203), R. v. British Non-Ferrous Metals Association (1932) (16 Rating and Income Tax Cas. 136), Westminster City Council v. Royal United Service Institution, ([1938] 2 All E.R. 545), overruled.

Decision of the DIVISIONAL COURT OF THE KING'S BENCH DIVISION
 ([1948] 1 All E.R. 277), affirmed.

[AS TO THE EXEMPTION OF SCIENTIFIC SOCIETIES FROM RATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 11-15, paras. 25-30; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 493-499, Nos. 485-540.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), 15 A.C. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36; 54 J.P. 772; 38 Digest 496, 503. B
- (2) Royal College of Music v. Westminster Vestry, [1898] 1 Q.B. 809; 67 L.J.Q.B. 540; 78 L.T. 441; 62 J.P. 357; 38 Digest 499, 540.
- (3) Jenner Institute of Preventive Medicine v. St. George's Hanover Square Assessment Committee and Surveyor of Taxes, (1900), 69 L.J.Q.B. 814; 83 L.T. 344; 38 Digest 497, 513.
- (4) School of Oriental and African Studies v. Westminster City Rating Authority, [1940] 2 All E.R. 537; Digest Supp. C
- (5) R. v. Institution of Civil Engineers, (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 48; 49 L.J.M.C. 34; 42 L.T. 145; 44 J.P. 265; 38 Digest 497, 508.
- (6) Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 100 L.J.K.B. 705; 145 L.T. 553; 16 Tax Cas. 158; Digest Supp. D
- (7) R. v. British Non-Ferrous Metals Association, (1932), 16 Rating and Income Tax Cases 136.
- (8) R. v. Cockburn, (1852), 16 Q.B. 480; 18 L.T.O.S. 302; sub nom. R. v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields (Churchwardens and Overseers), 21 L.J.M.C. 53; 16 J.P. 198; 38 Digest 495, 495.
- (9) Purvis v. Traill, (1849), 3 Exch. 344; 3 New Mag. Cas. 88; 3 New Sess. Cas. 459; 18 L.J.M.C. 57; 12 L.T.O.S. 379; 13 J.P. 219; 38 Digest 497, 509. E
- (10) Bracegirdle v. Oxley, Bracegirdle v. Cobley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 126; [1947] K.B. 349; [1947] L.J.R. 815; 176 L.T. 187; 111 J.P. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (11) Savoy Overseers v. Art Union of London, [1896] A.C. 296; 65 L.J.M.C. 161; 74 L.T. 497; 60 J.P. 660; 38 Digest 498, 525. F
- (12) Hornsey School of Art v. Edmonton Union, (1905), 94 L.T. 203; 70 J.P. 121; 38 Digest 498, 524.
- (13) Westminster City Council v. Royal United Service Institution, [1938] 2 All E.R. 545; Digest Supp.
- (14) Liverpool Corpn. v. West Derby Union, (1905), 92 L.T. 467; 69 J.P. 277; 38 Digest 494, 494. G

APPEAL of the British Launderers' Research Association from an order of the Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division, dated Jan. 29, 1948, reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 277, on a Case stated by the Middlesex Quarter Sessions.

The association was the owner and occupier of certain laundry premises which were entered in the valuation list with no figure for gross value and a rateable value of £360. Despite this entry, the association had for 20 years before 1946 been treated as exempt from rates in respect of the premises, but, in November, 1946, the rating authority served on it a demand for rates for the year 1946-47. The association, as a result of this demand, made a proposal for the amendment of the list on the ground that it was an association entitled to the benefit of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, as certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies in August, 1923, and was exempt from the payment of H rates. The rating authority objected to this proposal. The laundry premises comprised a laboratory block containing analytical chemical, textile, bacteriological, and two physical chemical laboratories, an instrument laboratory, and a micro-photograph and ultra-violet light laboratory. There were also an engineer's drawing office, machine shop, library and various offices. In a separate block there was an experimental laundry, and the remaining buildings were used for demonstrations and lectures. The association was registered in 1920 as a company limited by guarantee, and received a grant from the Committee of the Privy Council for Scientific and Industrial Research, which, in 1946, was £8,500. The members of the association were persons and companies engaged in the laundry business, and they paid annual subscriptions according to the size of their businesses. In return for their subscriptions the members were enabled to apply the results of the researches of the association to practical advantage in their businesses. Special visits to give advice in return for fees were made to laundries by experts employed by the association. The association also conducted courses of instruction for students. The whole of the activities of the association were directed towards increasing scientific knowledge in relation to laundering. The association had not paid, and was not able to pay, any dividend, gift, division, or bonus money to its members. Middlesex Quarter Sessions was of the opinion that the association was instituted for the purposes of science exclusively, and that it was supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions, but stated a Case for the opinion of the Divisional Court. The Divisional Court reversed the decision of quarter sessions, and the Court of Appeal now affirmed the decision of the Divisional Court. Only the rating authority appeared as a respondent to the appeal at quarter sessions, and the assessment committee were not thereafter a party.

Rowe, K.C., and W. L. Roots for the association.

Fitzgerald, K.C., and Ramsay Willis for the Hendon Rating Authority.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 3. BUCKNILL, L.J.: I will ask DENNING, L.J., to give the first judgment.

DENNING, L.J., read the following judgment. The first question is what is the true interpretation of the words "for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively." There is one thing which is clear both on the wording of the statute and on the cases. The word "exclusively" must be given its full effect. It is not sufficient that the society should be instituted "mainly" or "primarily" or "chiefly" for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts. It must be instituted "exclusively" for those purposes. The only qualification—which, indeed, is not really a qualification at all—is that other purposes which are merely incidental to the purposes of science or literature or the fine arts, that is, merely a means to the fulfilment of those purposes, do not deprive a society of the exemption. Once, however, the other purposes cease to be merely incidental but become collateral—that is, cease to be a means to an end but become an end in themselves; that is, become additional purposes of the society—then, whether they be main or subsidiary, whether they exist jointly with or separately from the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts, the society cannot claim the exemption. That is, I think, made clear by the opinions of LORD WATSON and LORD MACNAGHTEN in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest (1). More difficulty arises, however, in saying what are "the purposes of science." Science includes, of course, not only pure or abstract science, such as pure mathematics, but also the applied sciences, such as electricity or engineering, and the purposes of science include not only the advancement of knowledge by research work, but also the dissemination of it by lectures or teaching or writing. Take the department of engineering at Cambridge. It is, undoubtedly, instituted for the purposes of science exclusively, and, although it undertakes the training of students, that is merely incidental to the purposes of science : see Royal College of Music v. Westminster Vestry (2). The purposes of science, however, do not include the purposes of the firms or persons who make use of science. Many of our great industrial concerns make use of science and, indeed, institute research laboratories for the purposes of science, but only as incidental to their industrial purposes. So, also, our technical schools make use of science and institute laboratories for the purposes of science, but only as incidental to the training of craftsmen. In such cases the laboratories are instituted for the purposes of individuals, not for the purposes of science except as incidental to the purposes of individuals. Trade research associations stand mid-way. They are instituted for the purposes of science and also for the purposes of the members who make use of science. Neither purpose is merely incidental to the other. Each is collateral to the other. The associations are instituted for the two purposes jointly, and are, therefore, not instituted for the purposes of science exclusively : see Jenner Institute v. St. George's Assessment Committee (3) and School of Oriental and African Studies v. Westminster City Rating Authority (4).

There are two cases, however, to which I must specifically refer. The first is R. v. Institution of Civil Engineers (5). In that case the Institution of Civil Engineers was held not to be exempted by the Act of 1843 from being rated. The decision was clearly right, but the court took the wrong test. The court there asked itself : What was the main and substantial object of the association ? Was it the purposes of science, or was it the purposes of its members ? That would have been a proper test under the Inland Revenue Acts, but it was a wrong test under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, because it gave no effect to the word "exclusively." Applying that wrong test, the court thought that the main and substantial object of the institution was for the purposes of its members. That finding was, in effect, overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest (1). The House of Lords found that the main object of the institution was the promotion of science and it was on that account exempt from duty under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, s. 11, but the House of Lords evidently thought that the institution had, as a subsidiary object, the purposes of its members, and that, therefore, the actual conclusion of the court in the rating case was right because the association was not instituted for the purposes of science exclusively, but also for the purposes of its members. This is, I think, what both LORD WATSON and LORD MACNAGHTEN had in mind in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest (1) (15 A.C. 348, 353, 354).

In a yet later revenue case—Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (6) in the Court of Appeal—the judges thought that the actual conclusion in the rating case was virtually overruled by the House of Lords in the revenue case and that the rating case could only be supported on the ground that the institution was not supported by voluntary contributions. There is nothing in the report of the rating case, however, to suggest that the institution was not supported by voluntary contributions. It was assumed by everybody that it was, and it is obvious that, even if the members' subscriptions were not voluntary contributions, there may have been other contributions which were voluntary contributions. When LORD MACNAGHTEN said that he entirely agreed in the conclusion of that case, he meant that he agreed with the actual conclusion that the Institution of Civil Engineers was not instituted for the purposes of science exclusively. I cannot agree, therefore, with what was said about the rating case in Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (6). The decision in the latter case was that the Institution of Civil Engineers was established for charitable purposes only. That decision has no bearing here. It is obvious that an association may be established for charitable purposes only and yet not be instituted for the purposes of science exclusively. The other case to which I must particularly refer is R. v. British Non-Ferrous Metals Association (7). The Divisional Court there seems to have been much influenced by the Civil Engineers case (6) about "charitable purposes only." If they had put it on one side, as they might have done, because it was a decision on a different statute, they might, I think, have come to a different conclusion. Applying the principles I have stated, I think the decision in the Non-Ferrous case (7) was wrong.

The second question is : What is the proper way of seeing whether a society is "instituted" for those purposes. Does the exemption depend on the purposes of the society as defined in the memorandum or on the purposes which the society in fact pursues ? In my opinion, in cases where there is a memorandum of association, it should be regarded as the best evidence of the purposes for which the society was instituted. If it appears clearly from the memorandum that some of the purposes for which the society is instituted are not the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts, or incidental thereto, then the society cannot claim the benefit of the exemption, even though it does not for the time being in fact pursue those alien purposes : R. v. Cockburn (8). If, however, there is no memorandum of association or if the memorandum is not clear on the point, as, for instance, if some of the purposes may or may not be incidental to the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts, then regard may properly be had to the purposes which the society has, in fact, pursued, for, if it, in fact, pursues alien purposes, it cannot claim the exemption : Purvis v. Traill (9) (3 Exch. 350, per PARKE, B.) A society cannot get exemption from rates by saying that what it is doing is ultra vires. The court will assume that the purposes which it pursues are purposes for which it was instituted.

Applying these rules to the British Launderers' Research Association, the first task is to interpret the memorandum, articles and bye-laws of that association and see what are the purposes for which it was instituted. The members are firms in the laundry and cleaning industries who pay an annual subscription varying with the size of their businesses. Viewing the nature and objects of the association as a whole, I think it plain that the association is instituted, not only for the purposes of science, but also for the purposes of the members of the association and others engaged in the industry. It is instituted for the purposes (inter alia) of encouraging and improving the education of persons who are engaged in the said industry, of disseminating information by the giving of advice and making known the nature and merits of processes, and so forth. These purposes are not merely incidental to the purposes of science. The association cannot, therefore, be said to be instituted for the purposes of science exclusively. Even if I had any doubt on the interpretation of the articles, however, it is removed by the purposes which the association, in fact, pursues. The brochures about its activities (such as courses for students, development visits, and technical advice at members' laundries, and so forth) show that it pursues the purposes of its members with as much zeal as it pursues the purposes of science.

Counsel for the association says, however, that quarter sessions came to a conclusion of fact in his favour with which the Divisional Court should not have interfered. On this point it is important to distinguish between primary facts and the conclusions from them. Primary facts are facts which are observed by witnesses and proved by oral testimony, or facts proved by the production of a thing itself, such as an original document. Their determination is essentially a question of fact for the tribunal of fact, and the only question of law that can arise on them is whether there was any evidence to support the finding. The conclusions from primary facts are, however, inferences deduced by a process of reasoning from them. If and in so far as those conclusions can as well be drawn by a layman (properly instructed on the law) as by a lawyer, they are conclusions of fact for the tribunal of fact and the only questions of law which can arise on them are whether there was a proper direction in point of law and whether the conclusion is one which could reasonably be drawn from the primary facts: see Bracegirdle v. Oxley (10). If and in so far, however, as the correct conclusion to be drawn from primary facts requires, for its correctness, determination by a trained lawyer—as, for instance, because it involves the interpretation of documents, or because the law and the facts cannot be separated, or because the law on the point cannot properly be understood or applied except by a trained lawyer—the conclusion is a conclusion of law on which an appellate tribunal is as competent to form an opinion as the tribunal of first instance.

Applying these principles to the Case Stated, the primary facts are stated in para. 2 (a) to (j). Paragraph 2 (k) contains a conclusion of fact, but it is not a conclusion on the question at issue. The question is whether the association was instituted for the purposes of science exclusively. That is a conclusion of law to be drawn from the primary facts, particularly, but not exclusively, from the memorandum and articles of association, and involves questions of interpretation of those documents and of the Act. The Divisional Court were able, and, indeed, bound to form their own opinion as to the proper conclusion to be drawn from those primary facts, and I find myself in entire agreement with them.

The final question is whether a society which is supported in part by a government grant can be said on that account to be “supported in part by voluntary contributions.” In my opinion, “voluntary contributions” are payments made without compulsion and without any view to recompense save the gratitude of one’s fellow men. They are payments made by private citizens for the public benefit, and out of a sense of public duty, thus relieving the State of an expenditure which otherwise it might have had to bear. They do not include government grants. No ordinary person would regard an institution which was supported only by government grants as being supported by voluntary contributions. This view is borne out by the words of LORD HALSBURY in Savoy Overseers v. Art Union of London (11) ([1896] A.C. 305). It is interesting to trace, however, how a different decision has been reached in some cases in the Divisional Court. When the Royal College of Music case (2) was in the Divisional Court there was evidence of voluntary contributions of £1,132, and a government grant of £500. The court, in its judgment, said that the voluntary contributions amounted to £1,632. That may well have been a slip. It was quite immaterial whether they were £1,132 or £1,632, but that casual statement has been treated in subsequent cases in the Divisional Court as a decision that a government grant is a voluntary contribution: see Hornsey School of Art v. Edmonton Union (12), the Non-Ferrous Metal case (7) and Westminster City Council v. Royal United Service Institution (13). None of these cases gives any reasons in support of that view. Counsel for the association argued that we should not upset those decisions after 50 years, but they were not uniform. All the time there was a decision of the Divisional Court the other way, for in Liverpool v. West Derby Union (14), one of the grounds of the decision was that a grant by an education authority was not a voluntary contribution. KENNEDY, J., said (92 L.T. 470) emphatically that to call it “a voluntary contribution is to do violence to the ordinary meaning of language.” Moreover, on the question whether annual subscriptions were voluntary contributions the House of Lords in the Art Union case (11) overruled a course of decisions going back for 50 years. So we should overrule those on this point. In my opinion, therefore, a government grant is not a voluntary contribution.

It follows that the association here is not entitled to exemption from rates. It is not instituted for the purposes of science exclusively, and it is not supported in whole or in part by voluntary contributions. In my opinion, this appeal should be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree that the appeal should be dismissed for the reasons given by DENNING, L.J., in his judgment, to which I have nothing to add.

JENKINS, J. : I also agree.

A

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Callingham, Griffith & Bate (for the association) ; L. Worden, Town Clerk, Hendon (for the Hendon Rating Authority).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

B CARDIFF RATING AUTHORITY AND ANOTHER v. GUEST KEEN BALDWIN'S IRON & STEEL CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.J.J., and Jenkins, J.), November 24, 25, December 3, 13, 1948.]

C Rating — Valuation — Plant and machinery — “ Unit basis ” — “ Contractor’s theory ” — Blast and fixed melting furnaces and coke ovens — Tilting melting furnaces and gas and blast mains — “ Structure ” — “ In nature of structure ” — Movability — Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 22 (1) (b) — Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), sched., class (4).

D

A rating authority made a proposal to raise the assessment of the respondent's iron and steel works to £80,327 net annual value and £20,082 rateable value, and the proposal was confirmed by the assessment committee. On appeal to quarter sessions the assessment was reduced to £58,000 net annual value and £14,500 rateable value. The rating authority and the assessment committee appealed against the substituted assessment on the grounds that the recorder was wrong (i) in reducing the assessment by £6,090 net annual value in respect of 4 blast furnaces, 2 fixed steel melting furnaces, and 69 coke ovens, and (ii) in holding that 5 tilting melting furnaces, certain gas mains, and hot and cold blast mains were not rateable. The tilting furnaces each resembled a large bath 30ft. long and 18ft. wide weighing over 300 tons. They were made of steel plates and joists, bolted, riveted and welded together on site, and were lined with brickwork to a considerable thickness. They rested by their own weight on steel rollers placed on curved roller paths which were themselves supported on concrete piers. The gas and blast mains consisted of 13,000 ft. of steel piping made up of 20 ft. lengths, bolted together on site and resting on, but not attached to, steel vertical supports or metal bridge structures at a height of from 10 ft. to 35 ft. from the ground.

E

F

G

The external diameter of the mains varied from 20 ins. to 96 ins. and the hot blast mains were lined with brickwork. It appeared from the Case that the recorder accepted in their entirety the capital values contained in the valuation made on behalf of the rating authority, and he also accepted the percentages by which, adopting the “ contractor’s theory ” of valuation, the net annual value proposed for the hereditament had been reached. The recorder, however, did not adhere to that theory of valuation when determining the value of the blast furnaces, melting furnaces, and coke ovens because they were “ short lived,” but he adopted instead the “ unit basis ” of valuation whereby he assumed a net annual value in respect of each unit. The rating authority argued that the works ought to have been valued as one entire hereditament, and to treat any particular plant as a separate hereditament was to err in law :—

H

HELD : (i) there was no reason why the contractor's theory should not be adopted for part of the works and the unit basis for the blast and fixed melting furnaces and coke ovens if for any reason that course seemed desirable, and it was not the law that the contractor's theory should be adhered to unless there was good reason for departing from it.

(ii) the tilting melting furnaces and gas and blast mains were "in the nature of a structure" within the meaning of class 4 of the schedule to the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, and the furnaces were none the less so because they were movable, and, therefore, both were rateable.

South Wales Aluminium Co., Ltd. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee ([1943] 2 All E.R. 587), criticised.

Decision of the DIVISIONAL COURT OF THE KING'S BENCH DIVISION ([1948] 1 All E.R. 830), affirmed in principle, but appeal allowed in part.

[AS TO BASIS OF ASSESSMENT OF PLANT AND MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 392-394, paras. 826, 827; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 531-534, Nos. 772-795.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) British Launderers' Research Association v. Central Middlesex Assessment Committee and Hendon Rating Authority, (ante p. 21);
- (2) Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee, [1901] A.C. 175; 70 L.J.K.B. 584; 84 L.T. 542; 65 J.P. 579; 38 Digest 526, 735.
- (3) South Wales Aluminium Co., Ltd. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee, [1943] 2 All E.R. 587; 108 J.P. 45; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the ratepayers (a company) and CROSS-APPEAL by the rating authority and the assessment committee from an order of the Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division, dated Apr. 20, 1948 ([1948] 1 All E.R. 830), on a Case stated by the recorder of Cardiff.

Cardiff Rating Authority made a proposal to increase the assessment of the iron and steel works, occupied by the company at East Moors, Cardiff, and known as the Dowlais Works, to £80,327 net annual value and £20,082 rateable value. On Aug. 4, 1943, the Cardiff Assessment Committee, having heard the proposal and the company's objections thereto, confirmed the proposal. The company appealed to quarter sessions, who heard the appeal on Sept. 26, 27 and 28, 1944, and on May 23, 1945, in a reserved judgment, allowed the appeal and reduced the assessment to £58,000 net annual value and £14,500 rateable value. The rating authority and the assessment committee appealed to the Divisional Court on the ground that (i) the "contractor's theory" of valuation should be applied to the valuation of certain blast furnaces, melting furnaces, and coke ovens comprised in the hereditament, and (ii) certain overhead gas mains, cold blast mains and hot blast mains, and certain melting furnaces known as tilting furnaces comprised in the hereditament were rateable plant and machinery. The company formally raised the question of the rateability of certain electrical equipment which the court was precluded from deciding in their favour by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Richard Thomas & Co., Ltd. v. Monmouth County Valuation Committee and Assessment Committee ([1944] 1 All E.R. 417). The Divisional Court held that the recorder was not wrong in law in adopting a "unit basis" of valuation in certain instances, but that he erred in deciding on the basis of movability that the tilting furnaces and gas and blast mains were not rateable. The Court of Appeal affirmed the findings of the Divisional Court, but allowed the appeal in respect of the adoption of certain figures by the Divisional Court.

Comyns Carr, K.C., and R. Gwyn Rees for the company.

Rowe, K.C., and Roskin for the rating authority.

Roskin for the assessment committee.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 3. BUCKNILL, L.J. : I will ask DENNING, L.J., and JENKINS, J., to give their judgments.

The following judgments were read.

DENNING, L.J. : The learned recorder adopted the contractor's basis for the steel works as a whole, but reduced the figure by reason of the short life of the furnaces and coke ovens. It is said that he made an error of law in so doing.

I have had occasion in British Launderers' Research Association v. Central Middlesex Assessment Committee (1) to distinguish between a question of fact and a question of law, and I need not repeat what I there said. Applied to cases such as the present, I have no doubt that the "net annual value" of a hereditament is a conclusion of fact. The proper figure can be as well ascertained by a layman, properly directed on the law, as by a lawyer. It is the rent which a hypothetical tenant from year to year might reasonably be expected to pay. Once the net annual value has been found by the tribunal of fact, the only questions of law which can arise are whether the tribunal of fact properly directed itself, and whether its conclusion was one to which it could reasonably come. If it came to its conclusion of fact by a process of reasoning which was demonstrably incorrect, as, for instance, if it had regard to a consideration which was entirely irrelevant, that would be an error in point of law. That is what counsel for the rating authority says has happened here. He says that the contractor's basis should be taken without any deduction for the short life of the furnaces and coke ovens. In applying the contractor's basis, the tribunal of fact assumes that a hypothetical tenant would pay a rent equal to reasonable interest on the effective capital value. Counsel says that a hypothetical landlord who built a furnace and agreed to repair it would reasonably expect a rent equal to the interest on the capital outlay, together with an amount sufficient to create a sinking fund to meet the cost of rebuilding after five years. If the landlord was not bound to repair, but the hypothetical tenant was, the rent would be the interest on the capital outlay, leaving the tenant to provide his own sinking fund. Counsel, however, admitted that that test would not be exhaustive. A hypothetical tenant would have regard to the amount he could earn by the use of the furnace. That might depend on uncertain factors, such as the state of the market, or black-out conditions in war time. Counsel says that, if the assessment had been reduced for such reasons as those, he could not have complained, but that it was reduced because of the short life, which was a wrong reason. Counsel also admitted that the initial capital outlay would not be the right figure to work on. It should be the effective capital value at the time of assessment, which might be a very different figure, but he said that the effective capital value would take into account the short life of the furnace, and that, therefore, once the effective capital value was ascertained, as it was here, no further deduction should be taken on account of the short life. If the contractor's basis was a test prescribed by law, I think that the argument of council for the rating authority would be correct, but it is nothing of the kind. It is only one of the ways in which the tribunal of fact can form some idea of what a hypothetical tenant would pay. No one ever lets or rents a steel works. Even when the contractor's basis is taken, the assessment on that basis is open to great variations up and down, as, for instance, in assessing the effective capital value and in deciding what percentage to take on it. Take a furnace. The effective capital value at the beginning of its life of five years would be very different from that at the end of it. What is the figure to be taken? The possible variations may become so great that the contractor's basis ceases to be a significant factor in the assessment. In such a situation the tribunal of fact may prefer to take some other basis, such as the "unit basis." That is a basis which is often applied when there is a composite plant consisting of a number of units, such as a battery of furnaces. Any one unit will obviously have a different value from any other, according to its age. As one becomes useless, a new one takes its place, and so on. In the case of such a battery, a convenient method is to assess it at so much a unit and multiply by the number of units. In applying the unit basis the tribunal has before it the evidence of experts, giving their opinion of the value based on their experience and on comparison with the assessments made on similar hereditaments in other parts of the country, as, for instance, the assessment of a battery of furnaces in Durham taken at so much per unit, that is, per furnace. Then, using those figures as a guide and making allowance for individual factors, the tribunal makes its own assessment. No one can say that that is not a proper basis of assessment, especially as it helps to secure uniformity of treatment over the industry. The truth is that in these cases the tribunal of fact can approach their task from several possible bases. The basis which they take for one part of the hereditament may be different from that for another. They may work out figures on two different bases and arrive at an assessment in between the two. The selection of the basis or bases and the application of them, singly or in combination, are only methods of arriving at the final figure of assessment. The parties can urge before quarter sessions all their arguments on this basis or that, but, once quarter sessions have fixed the figure, that, as a rule, is final. An appellate court will not interfere unless the method is demonstrably incorrect or the figure is so obviously wrong that it must have been reached by an incorrect method: see Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee (2).

In the present case I do not think that the learned recorder was demonstrably incorrect. He took the contractor's basis for part of the works and the unit basis for the furnaces and coke ovens. He was entitled to do that. The reason which he gave for not applying the contractor's basis to the furnaces and coke ovens (the shortness of their life) may or may not be a good reason, but that does not matter. It was not necessary for him to give any reasons for rejecting the contractor's basis. If, for any reason, he thought that it was better to take the unit basis, he was entitled to take it. The argument of the rating authority comes to this, that, because there was no good reason for departing from the contractor's basis, therefore, the learned recorder should have adopted it. If we were to accede to that view, it would mean that as a matter of law the learned recorder ought to adopt the contractor's basis, but that is not the law.

The learned recorder held that the tilting furnaces and the mains were not rateable at all. They are, of course, parts of the plant, and are only rateable if they come within the categories specified in class 4 of the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927. The tilting furnaces come within "furnaces" and the mains come within "flues" and "flumes and conduits," but, nevertheless, in order to be rateable each must be "a building or structure" or "in the nature of a building or structure." The learned recorder has held that these are not structures, or in the nature of structures, and counsel for the company says that his finding is a finding of fact with which an appellate court should not interfere. That is, however, an over-simplification. The primary facts, that is, the real facts relating to the physical state of the tilting furnaces and mains, are not in dispute. The question is what is the proper conclusion from those primary facts. In so far as that involves the proper interpretation of the words of the Order, it is a question of law. Once, however, those words have received a clear interpretation, which can be applied by laymen as well as by lawyers, then, so long as there is a proper direction as to their meaning, the conclusion of fact is one for a tribunal of fact, with which an appellate court will not interfere unless the conclusion is one which could not reasonably be drawn from the primary facts.

In the present case the learned recorder seems to have thought that these were not structures or in the nature of structures because they were moveable. In my opinion, that was a misdirection. A structure is something which is constructed, but not everything which is constructed is a structure. A ship, for instance, is constructed, but it is not a structure. A structure is something of substantial size which is built up from component parts and intended to remain permanently on a permanent foundation, but it is still a structure even though some of its parts may be moveable, as, for instance, about a pivot. Thus, a windmill or a turntable is a structure. A thing which is not permanently in one place is not a structure, but it may be "in the nature of a structure" if it has a permanent site and has all the qualities of a structure, save that it is on occasion moved on or from its site. Thus, a floating pontoon, which is permanently in position as a landing stage beside a pier, is "in the nature of a structure," even though it moves up and down with the tide and is occasionally removed for repairs or cleaning. It has, in substance, all the qualities of a landing stage built on piles. So, also, a transporter gantry is "in the nature of a structure," even though it is moved along its site. It has the same qualities as a fixed gantry, save that it moves on its site. Applying this interpretation to the facts of this case, I think that a tilting furnace is "in the nature of a structure." It has a permanent site and has the same qualities as any other furnace, save that it moves. The only difference is that, in order to run off the molten ore, it is tipped up instead of being tapped. Again, the mains are "in the nature of a structure." They have a permanent site and have the same qualities as any fixed mains, save that they are moved occasionally for cleaning or repairs.

I must say a word as to South Wales Aluminium Co., Ltd. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee (3). If that decision turned on the question whether the cell was in the nature of a building, I cannot agree with it. The Order requires the thing in question to be "in the nature of a structure," and a structure is often not a building. A crane gantry or a turntable is a structure, but not a building. Again, if the decision turns on the fact that the cell was a receptacle, I cannot agree with it. A vat is a receptacle, but it may also be a structure.

On the primary facts in the present case there was only one conclusion to which a tribunal could reasonably come, namely, that the tilting furnaces and mains were "in the nature of" structures, and were, therefore, rateable. I find myself in full agreement with the Divisional Court on this point. The Divisional Court, however, assessed the tilting furnaces on the contractor's basis—not on the unit basis. I cannot understand why they did so. The learned recorder had made it clear that if they were rateable he would have assessed them on the same basis as the other furnaces, namely, the unit basis. The Divisional Court held that they could not interfere with his assessment in regard to the other furnaces, and I do not see how they could interfere in regard to the tilting furnaces. The figure of £5,937 found by the Divisional Court should, therefore, be reduced to £2,437. I say nothing as to the electrical plant. The point was not argued before us, as it is covered by a previous decision of this court. The result is that the Divisional Court were right in dismissing the appeal by the rating authority in respect of the assessment of the furnaces and coke ovens and right in allowing the appeal by the rating authority in respect of the rateability of the tilting furnaces and mains, but wrong in their assessment of them. That means that the appeal of the occupiers should be allowed and the assessment varied accordingly, and the appeal of the rating authority should be dismissed.

JENKINS, J.: This case concerns the net annual value and rateable value of Guest Keen Baldwins Iron and Steel Co., Ltd.'s Iron and Steel Works at East Moors in the city of Cardiff, known as the Dowlais Works. The company appealed to Cardiff Quarter Sessions against an increased assessment of £80,327 net annual value and £20,082 rateable value in respect of the hereditament in question which had been proposed by the Cardiff Rating Authority, and, on objection by the company, confirmed by the Cardiff Assessment Committee. At quarter sessions the learned recorder allowed the company's appeal, substituted for the above-mentioned assessment an assessment of £58,000 net annual value and £14,500 rateable value, and ordered that the company's costs should be paid as to two-thirds by the rating authority and as to one-third by the assessment committee. From that decision the rating authority and assessment committee appealed by way of Case Stated to the King's Bench Division on (in effect) three questions. They claimed (1) that the learned recorder was wrong in reducing the assessment by £6,090 (net annual value) in respect of four blast furnaces, two fixed steel melting furnaces and sixty-nine coke ovens; (2) that he was wrong in holding that five tilting furnaces were not rateable; and (3) that he was wrong in holding that certain gas mains and hot and cold blast mains were not rateable. The Divisional Court, in a considered judgment dated Apr. 20, 1948, held that the learned recorder's decision should be upheld on question (1), but that the appeal should be allowed on questions (2) and (3), with consequential additions to the assessment of £58,000 (net annual value) arrived at by him of £5,937 (net annual value) on question (2) and £1,234 (net annual value) on question (3), making a total increase of £7,171; that the order as to costs made by the learned recorder should be revoked; and that the rating authority and the assessment committee, as appellants, should have their costs of the appeal. A discussion as to costs, following the delivery of the judgment, resulted in a decision to the effect that the company should pay half the costs of the rating authority and the assessment committee in the court of quarter sessions in addition to their costs of the appeal. The order of the Divisional Court, accordingly, increased the assessment from £58,000 to £65,171, with the directions as to costs which I have mentioned. The company now appeals from that order, contending (in effect) (a) that the Divisional Court was wrong in reversing the learned recorder's decision on questions (2) and (3); (b) that, even if the Divisional Court's decision on question (2) was right, the consequential increase on that account should have been £2,437 only and not £5,937; and (c) that in any event the learned recorder's decision as to the costs of the hearing before him should not have been disturbed. There is a cross-appeal by the rating authority and the assessment committee against the Divisional Court's refusal of their appeal on question (1). At the hearing before the Divisional Court reference was, by consent, made to the learned recorder's judgment to amplify or explain his decisions on the three questions in issue, and a similar course was adopted before this court.

Question (1), the subject of the cross-appeal, which, as I have already mentioned, concerns the learned recorder's reduction of the assessment by £6,090 in respect of four blast furnaces, two fixed steel melting furnaces, and sixty-nine coke ovens, arises in this way. The learned recorder accepted in the main the method of valuation propounded by the rating authority and assessment committee, which was the method known as "the contractor's theory" of valuation. This method, as I understand it, consists of estimating, by reference to its condition, efficiency, and so forth, the effective capital value of a given subject of assessment, and taking as its net annual value a percentage estimated as representing the return which a contractor providing the subject of assessment for letting or hire to an occupier would expect to receive on his outlay represented by the effective capital value. The learned recorder made certain adjustments in favour of the company in the valuation arrived at on the "contractor's theory," against which the rating authority and assessment committee did not seek to appeal, but as regards the four blast furnaces, two fixed steel melting furnaces, and sixty-nine coke ovens he rejected this method altogether in favour of an alternative method propounded on behalf of the company known as the "unit method" of valuation. This method, as I understand it, involves a direct estimate of the net annual value of the given subject of assessment by reference to comparative evidence of the net annual values assessed on similar subjects elsewhere. It seems to be called the "unit" system because it is commonly applied to multiple installations, such, for instance, as coke ovens. If, for example, the subject in question is a battery of five coke ovens, evidence may be adduced of the annual values placed on batteries of varying numbers of similar coke ovens elsewhere to support a figure of so much per oven as the "unit" in the calculation, and the "unit" figure so arrived at multiplied by five will, according to this method, represent the annual value of the battery in question. The learned recorder found that the blast furnaces and melting furnaces have in part to be renewed or rebuilt every five years at a cost not far below their original cost of construction and that the coke ovens had an overhaul, at proportionately similar expenditure, once in every fifteen years. On these facts he held (in effect) that, having regard to the "short-lived" character of the plant in question, "it would be very forced and anomalous from the tenant's point of view" to base the rent on the capital value, and that such parts of the blast furnaces, melting furnaces, and coke ovens as had a shorter life than twenty years should be valued, not on that basis, but on a unit valuation. He then proceeded to fix figures of net annual value for each of the four blast furnaces, two fixed steel melting furnaces, and sixty-nine coke ovens, the resulting aggregate figure being less by £6,090 than the figure representing the net annual value of the same items arrived at on the "contractor's theory."

Counsel for the rating authority and assessment committee strove in the Divisional Court, and again before us, to show that, in arriving at this conclusion, the learned recorder had erred in law. I entirely agree with the Divisional Court that no error in law has been made out. The adoption of the "unit" method for these particular items was, I think clearly, as the Divisional Court held, no more than a step in the calculation of the net annual value of the hereditament as a whole and did not involve the error of treating those items as a separate hereditament. The question whether the "contractor's theory" of valuation, in relation to assets such as these, makes adequate allowance for the hypothetical tenant's liability under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 22 (1) (b) to the estimated rent, is, I think, clearly a question of fact. Counsel for the rating authority and assessment committee contended that full allowance was made for this liability by the "contractor's theory," based, as it is, on the "effective capital value" of the item in question and not simply on capital cost without any allowance for obsolescence and so forth. Counsel for the company contended the contrary. I fail to see how any conclusion in favour of either contention could be reached without hearing all the evidence on both sides. The learned recorder, having heard the evidence, decided (in effect) that the "contractor's theory" did not make adequate allowance for the hypothetical tenant's liability to repair and maintain these "short-lived" assets. That is simply a finding of fact, and I can see no justification for reopening it on appeal. Counsel for the company further argued (as I understood him) that, although under s. 22 (1) (b) of the Act of 1925 the rent which the hypothetical tenant would be prepared to pay is estimated on the footing that he is to be liable for the cost of repairs and maintenance, the life of the asset in question is irrelevant when the "contractor's theory" is followed because the hypothetical contractor would expect, in addition to the maintenance of the capital value of the asset, precisely the same return on his outlay in providing it, whether its life was 5 or 50 years. I can derive no assistance from this line of argument. So far as I can see, it can be contended with at least equal plausibility that a tenant who would be prepared to pay, say, 5 per cent. on a capital value of, say, £100,000, in addition to providing a yearly contribution to a sinking fund at a rate sufficient to replace the £100,000 in 50 years, would only be prepared to pay a substantially lower percentage if his yearly sinking fund contribution had to be at a rate sufficient to replace the £100,000 in only 5 years, for, if it is assumed that the hypothetical tenant would be equally prepared to pay 5 per cent. in both cases, one gets the result (ignoring interest on sinking fund contributions) that each year's enjoyment of the assets would cost the hypothetical tenant in the former case only £7,000 and in the latter case as much as £25,000. Trade conditions might, of course, be such that the hypothetical tenant could see his way to earning by his use of the wasting asset upwards of a quarter of its capital value each year. If so, the hypothetical contractor would, no doubt, get his 5 per cent. If not, he would have to abate his demands, or else go without a tenant. Considered in vacuo, that is to say, apart from the facts and circumstances of a particular case, this argument seems to me to carry the matter no further one way or the other, and I fail to see how it can in any way advance the contention that the learned recorder erred in law in refusing to apply the "contractor's theory" with respect to the items in question. For these reasons I am of opinion that the Divisional Court was clearly right in affirming the learned recorder's decision on question (1).

" . . . bear the cost of the repairs and insurance and the other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the hereditament in a state to command "

Questions (2), as to the rateability of the five tilting furnaces, and (3), as to the rateability of certain gas mains and hot and cold blast mains, can be taken together, as, so far as these questions involve any question of law, both turn on the true construction of the criterion of rateability provided with respect to things of these kinds provided by the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 24, and the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, made thereunder. Section 24 (putting it shortly) provides by sub-s. (1) that (with an exception not material for the present purpose) in the valuation of any hereditament for rating purposes :

"(a) All such plant or machinery in or on the hereditament as belongs to any of the classes specified in sched. III to this Act shall be deemed to be a part of the hereditament : (b) Subject as aforesaid, no account shall be taken of the value of any plant or machinery in or on the hereditament."

Sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) contain machinery under which the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, has been made and takes effect as if it were substituted for sched. III to the Act. The Order sets out in a schedule the various "classes of machinery and plant to be deemed to be part of the hereditament." The relevant class for the present purpose is class 4. That class contains an enumeration of particular items of machinery and plant introduced by these words :

"The following parts of a plant or a combination of plant and machinery whenever and only to such extent as any such part is, or is in the nature of, a building or structure."

The enumeration of particular items includes (among a great many other things) "furnaces," "flues," and "flumes and conduits." It also includes "elevators and hoists," "floating docks and pontoons with any bridges or gangways not of a temporary nature used in connection therewith," "foundations, settings, gantries, supports, platforms and stagings for plant and machinery," "tanks," "vats," and "windmills."

The facts found by the learned recorder with respect to the five tilting furnaces are stated in the Case Stated as follows :

A "Each of these tilting furnaces is a furnace resembling a very large bath, in which metal is melted, and which is capable of being tilted and is in fact tilted in operation by means of an electric motor for the purpose of pouring molten metal and slag from it into other receptacles. Each tilting furnace is made of steel plates and joists, bolted, riveted and welded together on site, and is lined internally with special brick lining of considerable thickness. The approximate size, weight and capacity of a tilting furnace are as follows : Length, 30 ft. ; width, 18 ft. ; superficial area (of molten metal when full), 685/715 sq. ft. ; weight, over 300 tons ; capacity, 200/250 tons of steel. Each tilting furnace rests by its own weight on steel rollers resting on curved roller paths, which are themselves supported on concrete piers. For the purpose of renewing the rollers and roller paths when necessary it is possible by the use of suitable appliances to lift each tilting furnace off its supporting piers."

B The facts found by the learned recorder with respect to the gas mains and hot and cold blast mains are stated in para. 16 of the Case Stated as follows :

C "Upon the said hereditament are 13,000 ft. run of overhead gas mains, cold blast mains and hot blast mains, made up of 20 ft. lengths, bolted together on site, and carried from one point to another throughout the steelworks and resting on, but not attached to, steel vertical supports or metal bridge structures at a height of from 10 ft. to 35 ft. above ground. D The external diameter of these mains varies from 20 ins. to 96 ins. About one-third is 60 ins. or over : one-third is between 36 ins. and 60 ins. The hot blast mains are lined with brickwork so as to conserve the heat, and outside the brickwork is the outer casing of steel."

I should add that there was no dispute as to the rateability of the supporting structures as distinct from the mains themselves.

E The learned recorder's reasons for holding that the items in question were not rateable are not stated in the Case. After stating the facts as above, he disposes of the matter in the following two short paragraphs : "Contentions. (18). It was contended before me by the [company] that the plant and machinery referred to . . . was not rateable plant and machinery, while the [rating authority] contended that the said plant and machinery was rateable in law. Decision. (19). I accept the contentions of the [company] and held that all the aforesaid plant and machinery was not rateable in law or in fact and excluded the same when arriving at the aforesaid net annual value of £58,000." The Divisional Court, however, on reference to the relevant passages in the learned recorder's judgment, came to the conclusion that the learned recorder's reason for his decision was that these items, being moveable, and the tilting furnaces being, moreover, moved when in use, could not be "buildings or structures or in the nature of buildings or structures" within the meaning of the opening words of class 4 in the schedule to the Order of 1927. I agree with the Divisional Court that the judgment does show quite clearly that the learned recorder's decision did proceed on this ground. In other words, I think he construed the requirement to the effect that items of the types described in class 4 must, in order to be rateable, be "buildings or structures or in the nature of buildings or structures" as making physical attachment to the soil an essential condition of rateability in these cases. The Divisional Court further held (in effect) that this was a misconstruction of the criterion of liability prescribed in the Order of 1927 with respect to class 4, and, therefore, involved an error in law. With this conclusion I also agree.

H Counsel for the company contended that the learned recorder, in deciding that these particular items were not rateable, was simply deciding questions of fact on which his conclusion should not have been disturbed by the Divisional Court. I quite agree that in general the question whether a particular item of one of the types listed in class 4 is or is not a building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure is a question of fact, but the learned recorder here has placed a special (and, as I have said, in my view, erroneous) construction on the expression "building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure" and has held that the particular items in question do not fall within the expression as so interpreted. That is clearly a decision involving a question of law, namely, the true construction of the relevant part of the Order of 1927. It would be undesirable to attempt, and, indeed, I think impossible to achieve, any exhaustive definition of what is meant by the words "a building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure." They do, however, indicate certain main characteristics. The general range of things in view consists of things built or constructed. I think, in addition to coming within this general range, the things in question must, in relation to the hereditament, answer the description of buildings or structures, or, at all events, be in the nature of buildings or structures. That suggests built or constructed things of substantial size—I think of such size that they either have been in fact, or would normally be, built or constructed on the hereditament as opposed to being brought on to the hereditament ready made. It further suggests some degree of permanence in relation to the hereditament, i.e., things which, once installed on the hereditament, would normally remain in situ and only be removed by a process amounting to pulling down or taking to pieces. I do not, however, mean to suggest that size is necessarily a conclusive test in all cases or that a thing is necessarily removed from the category of buildings or structures or things in the nature of buildings or structures because by some feat of engineering or navigation it is brought to the hereditament in one piece. For instance, floating docks or pontoons, items specifically mentioned in class 4, would not, I think, be excluded merely on account of having been towed complete to the hereditament instead of having been built or constructed there. The question whether a thing is or is not physically attached to the hereditament is, I think, certainly a relevant consideration, but I cannot regard the fact that it is not so attached as being in any way conclusive against its being a building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure. This is, I think, clearly shown by some of the items specifically mentioned in class 4, e.g., floating docks and pontoons would necessarily not be so attached. Nor can I regard the fact that a thing has a limited degree of motion in use, either in relation to the hereditament or as between different parts of itself, necessarily prevents it from being a structure or in the nature of a structure if it otherwise possesses the characteristics of such. The list in class 4 includes such things as elevators and hoists, transporter gantries, transversers and turntables, and weighbridges. It is true that things in class 4 are rateable only "to such extent" as they are buildings or structures or in the nature of buildings or structures, but I cannot regard this as necessarily excluding from rateability the moveable parts of things which from their inclusion in the list are clearly regarded as capable of being in the nature of buildings or structures and from their very descriptions must clearly possess some degree of mobility in relation to the hereditament or as between the different parts of themselves.

On the facts found by the learned recorder, it is, in my view, clear that, once the false criterion of moveability or physical attachment to the hereditament is discarded, the tilting furnaces and mains, to which questions (2) and (3) relate, are structures or in the nature of structures within the meaning of the Order of 1927. I think, so far as the tilting furnaces are concerned, the true view is that the entire installation in each case from the concrete supports upwards constitutes a single structure or thing in the nature of a structure for this purpose, but I would be prepared, if necessary, to hold that the actual body of the furnace in each case is in itself a structure or in the nature of a structure, in which case the supports would still be rateable under the special item of foundations, etc., included in class 4. I do not, however, think that the separate mention in the class of foundations, etc. (which would include the foundations, etc., of non-rateable things) precludes the supporting members of a given piece of plant from being treated as forming part of and constituting one entire structure with the piece of plant in question where, as I think is the case as regards any one of the tilting furnaces here, the whole, from supports upwards, constitutes a single functional entity.

For these reasons, I agree with the Divisional Court that the learned recorder's decision on questions (2) and (3) cannot stand, and that the items in question should be held to be rateable. With respect, however, it seems to me to be clear that the proper addition to the net annual value on account of the five tilting furnaces should be £2,437 only, being the figure arrived at by the learned recorder on the "unit" basis of valuation, which he held (with the approval of the Divisional Court) to be the method by which "short-lived" assets should be valued. Accordingly (apart from the question of costs, which is reserved for further argument), I would only allow the appeal to the extent of substituting £2,437 for £5,937 as the increase in the net annual value to be made in respect of the five tilting furnaces, and would dismiss the cross-appeal.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree with the judgments which have been delivered by my brethren, and have nothing to add.

Dec. 13. BUCKNILL, L.J.: As regards the costs, we think that the order of the learned recorder should be restored as regards the costs before him. As regards the costs in the Divisional Court and the costs here, we think that the proper order is that each party should pay their own costs.

Appeal allowed. Assessment reduced to £61,671. Recorder's order as to costs restored, and no costs in the Divisional Court or in the Court of Appeal.

Solicitors: Church, Rendell & Co., agents for Llewellyn & Hann, Cardiff (for the company); Theodore Goddard & Co., agents for S. Tapper Jones, town clerk, Cardiff, and for W. J. Thomas, clerk to Cardiff Assessment Committee (for the rating authority and the assessment committee).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BISHOPSGATE MOTOR FINANCE CORPORATION, LTD. v. TRANSPORT BRAKES, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Singleton and Denning, L.JJ.), November 29, 1948.]

Sale of Goods—Market overt—Market constituted by charter or statute—Private sale—Goods offered by auction in public market—Subsequent private sale in same market—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 22 (1).

A let a motor car on hire purchase to B who put it up for auction at a public market. The bidding did not reach the reserve price and the motor car was withdrawn, but, in the course of the same market, B sold it privately to C, who had been present at the auction, but had made no bid, and who bought it in good faith and without knowledge of any defect in B's title. C subsequently sold the car to D. The right to hold the market had been granted by a charter in 1747 which had been amended by the Maidstone Markets Act, 1824, and the Ministry of Health Provisional Orders Confirmation (Maidstone and Stockton-on-Tees)

Act, 1933. Cars were sold in the market by private sale as well as by public auction, a dealer or owner often selling a car himself after an auctioneer had failed to sell it. In an action by A against D for the return of the car or damages, it was contended by A that the sale was not in a market overt because (a) the effect of the statutes was to extinguish the charter, and a market overt could rest only on a grant and not on a statute; (b) the protection of a sale in market overt applied only where the goods were put up for sale by a trader in the market; and (c) the sale, being by private treaty, was not "according to the usage of the market," within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22 (1).

HELD: on construction the Acts of 1824 and 1933 did not extinguish the charter of 1747, but, assuming that they did, a market overt can be established under statutory powers.

Moyce v. Newington (1878) (4 Q.B.D. 32; 39 L.T. 535), not followed.

Ganly v. Ledwidge (1876) (I.R. 10 C.L. 33) and Delaney v. Wallis and Sons (1884) (15 Cox C.C. 525), applied.

(ii) there was no authority for the proposition that, to obtain the protection of market overt, goods must be sold by a trader in the market; if goods were exposed for sale and sold in the market in the day time, a sale was equally good if made by their owner as if made, for example, by an auctioneer.

The Market-Overt Case (1596) (5 Co. Rep. 83 b), distinguished.

(iii) since cars were sold in the market by private sale as well as by public auction, the car was sold to C "in market overt, according to the usage of the market," within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22 (1), and, therefore, C was able to give a good title to D, with the result that A could not recover.

Observations by BUCKNILL, L.J., and DENNING, L.J., on the effect of the registration book of a motor car.

Decision of HUMPHREYS, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 408), affirmed.

[AS TO SALE IN MARKET OVERT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 99-102, paras. 179-184; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 560-563, Nos. 428-487.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Joblin v. Watkins & Roseveare (Motors), Ltd., (1948), 64 T.L.R. 464.
- (2) Manchester Corpn. v. Lyons, (1882), 22 Ch.D. 287; 47 L.T. 677; 33 Digest 551, 342.
- (3) Moyce v. Newington, (1878), 4 Q.B.D. 32; 48 L.J.Q.B. 125; 39 L.T. 535; 43 J.P. 191; 33 Digest 560, 434.
- (4) Ganly v. Ledwidge, (1876), I.R. 10 C.L. 33; 33 Digest 560, 434i.
- (5) Delaney v. Wallis & Sons, (1884), 15 Cox C.C. 525; 33 Digest, f. 563.
- (6) Lee v. Bayes, (1856), 18 C.B. 599; 25 L.J.C.P. 249; 27 L.T.O.S. 157; 20 J.P. 694; 33 Digest 560, 431.
- (7) Ward v. Stephens, (1886), 12 V.L.R. 378; 33 Digest 560, 428i.
- (8) Market-Overt Case, (1596), 5 Co. Rep. 83 b; sub nom., Worcester's (Bp.) Case, Moore, K.B. 360; sub nom., Palmer v. Wolley, Cro. Eliz. 454; sub nom. Anon., Poph. 84; 33 Digest 561, 458.
- (9) Crane v. London Dock Co., (1864), 5 B. & S. 313; 4 New Rep. 94; 33 L.J.Q.B. 224; 10 L.T. 372; 28 J.P. 565; 33 Digest 561, 444.
- (10) Clayton v. Le Roy, [1911] 2 K.B. 1031; 81 L.J.K.B. 49; 104 L.T. 419; 75 J.P. 229; reversd. on other grounds, [1911] 2 K.B. 1046; 33 Digest 562, 461.
- (11) Comyns v. Boyer, (1596), Cro. Eliz. 485; 33 Digest 531, 79.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from a judgment of HUMPHREYS, J., dated Feb. 25, 1948, and reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 408, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for the return of a motor car or for damages for its detention.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the car which they let under a hire-purchase agreement to one Bronstein. Bronstein sold it in a public market to a third party, who subsequently sold it to the defendants. HUMPHREYS, J., held that the plaintiffs could not recover as the property had passed by sale in market overt to the third party and through him to the defendants. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of

A BUCKNILL, L.J.

I. H. Jacob for the plaintiffs.

Skelhorn for the defendants.

Bernard Lewis for the third party.

B BUCKNILL, L.J. : In my opinion, this appeal must be dismissed. The action was brought by the plaintiffs for the return of a motor car or for £340—its value—but in the notice of appeal the sum of only £183 15s. 4d. is claimed, having regard to the fact that some further payments have been made by the hirer in respect of the contract of hire purchase. The defence raised was that the car was sold in market overt and that the defendants are entitled to take advantage of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22 (1), which is in the following terms :

C “Where goods are sold in market overt, according to the usage of the market, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller.”

D In this case there is no question about the buyer buying in good faith, and, so far as any notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller is concerned, I will deal with that point when I speak about the registration book of the car.

E On Oct. 7, 1946, the plaintiffs handed over the possession of the car under a hire purchase agreement to one Mark Bronstein. In the agreement Mr. Bronstein is described as a married man and a householder, living at 28, Albert Gardens, Stepney, E.1., a cabinet maker, with a banking account. In para. 6 of the hire purchase agreement it is stated that :

“ . . . the vehicle shall remain the absolute property of the owners and the hirer shall not have any right or interest in the same other than that of hirer under this agreement.”

F The price of the car was to be £340. Bronstein made the first payment of £115, and the balance was to be paid by eighteen monthly instalments of £13 18s. 10d. on the seventh day of each month commencing in November, 1946. On Tuesday, Oct. 29, 1946, before the first monthly instalment was paid, Bronstein took the car to Maidstone and asked some auctioneers, who had a place in Maidstone market, to sell it by auction. G He was in possession of the registration book which contained his name and address—“Mark Bronstein, 28, Albert Gardens, Commercial Road, E.1.” Counsel for the plaintiffs has referred us to Joblin v. Watkins & Roseveare (Motors), Ltd. (1) in which CROOM-JOHNSON, J., held that the registration book of a car was not a document of title within the Factors Act, 1889, s. 1 (4). It has to be pointed out that the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941, reg. 9 (1), provides :

H “On the sale or other change of ownership of a vehicle the then owner of the vehicle shall deliver the registration book to the transferee or other new owner and forthwith notify in writing the change of ownership to the council whose name appears in the registration book . . .”

CROOM-JOHNSON, J., in the course of his judgment, said (64 T.L.R. 464) :

“Though one reason for the book is to make known who is the owner of the vehicle to which it refers, its primary purpose is to show who is the person liable to pay the road fund licence tax in respect of the vehicle. I do not think it is anything more than that."

Mr. Bronstein having spoken to the auctioneers, the car was placed in the car park allotted to cars which were to be sold by auction in the Maidstone market. Tuesday was market day. The market opens at 7.30 a.m. The car arrived at about 10.30 a.m., and at about 11.45 a.m. the auctioneer put it up for auction. The car did not reach the reserve price, but, later, Bronstein approached the auctioneer and asked him to put it up for auction again with a lower reserve price. This the auctioneer did, but, again, the reserve was not reached. After that, a Mr. Bourgein, who carries on business at the Winsor Garage, West Malling, approached Bronstein and asked him if he could buy the car. They eventually came to terms and Bronstein sold the car to Bourgein on that day in the market for £295. The car had not been moved from the car park during the whole of that day and it was there when Bourgein took it away. Bourgein subsequently sold the car to the defendants and handed over the registration book which he had received from Bronstein.

The question is whether this was a sale in market overt and counsel for the plaintiffs has taken several points on this aspect of the case. Speaking generally, the position of the market at Maidstone is this. There has been a market there certainly since the reign of Queen Elizabeth and probably before. From time to time the charter seems to have been extinguished because of the conduct of the citizens of Maidstone, but in 1747 a charter to hold a market on Thursday of every week was drawn up and bestowed on the mayor and citizens of the city. It is not specified what kind of articles or merchandise are to be sold there, but it says that the "mayor, jurats and commonalty" of the town may "take reasonable picage money for the showing of goods and merchandises there to be sold or exposed for sale." In 1824, the Maidstone Markets Act was passed which in some respects extended the powers of sale by moving the market to a more commodious place and gave powers to set up various stalls, slaughterhouses, and so on.

The first point counsel for the plaintiffs made was that the Act of 1824 extinguished the charter of 1747. The second point was that a market overt can rest only on a grant and not on a statute. In my view, counsel for the plaintiffs failed to establish either of those points. On the point whether the statute of 1824 extinguished the charter of 1747, the evidence—so far as it is a question of fact—is all one way. Mr. Moys, the deputy town clerk of Maidstone, said :

"The original charter was granted in 1549, and I believe there were two further charters, but the first three were withdrawn owing to some misbehaviour in the town at that time, and the charter of 1747 is at present in force, and, so far as the market is concerned, has been amended by the Act of 1824 and the Ministry of Health Provisional Orders Confirmation (Maidstone and Stockton-on-Tees) Act, 1933."

This is a very definite statement by the deputy town clerk that the charter was in force, and, when HUMPHREYS, J., came to give his judgment—there being no other evidence about it—he said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 408): "The Maidstone Markets Act, 1824, made certain alterations not material for the purpose of this judgment . . ." The court has been somewhat hampered in investigating what precisely was contained in the private Act of 1824 as it has only had one copy of the Act to share between three members of the court, but, so far as I can see, there is nothing in that Act to show that there was any intention on the part of the legislature to extinguish the charter and to substitute the statute for it. On that point I would refer to Manchester Corpn. v. Lyons (2), and especially to the judgment of COTTON, L.J., when considering the question of the effect of a statute on an earlier market grant. COTTON, L.J., said (22 Ch.D. 307):

“In every such case it is a question to be determined by a consideration of the whole of the Act whether the rights given by the Act are intended to supersede the rights which previously existed.”

A As far as I can see, there is no intention here to that effect, but, even if that point were established by counsel for the plaintiffs, I think that he fails to establish his second limb of the argument, namely, that a market overt must rest on a grant and cannot rest on a statute. His authority for that proposition was, first, Moyce v. Newington (3), where was considered the question of the conversion of certain sheep which had been sold at Maidstone market. COCKBURN, C.J., in his judgment, said (4 Q.B.D. 34) :

B “It is to be observed that, though the sale from Wale to the plaintiff took place in open market, it was admitted before us that the market, having been recently established by the corporation of Maidstone under a local Act, was not one in respect of which the protection arising from a sale in market overt would attach.”

C Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that this was a blessing—rather a lukewarm blessing—bestowed by COCKBURN, C.J., on the point that a market established by an Act is not a market overt, but, having regard to the complexity of the subject and the fact that there was no argument on the point, I myself think it probable that the Chief Justice on that admission did not intend to give any decision on the point. As against that, there are two cases in Ireland, Garly v. Ledwidge (4) and Delaney v. Wallis and Sons (5)—the latter in the Court of Appeal—which clearly lay down that markets established under statutory powers are markets overt. I may also refer to BENJAMIN ON SALE, 7th ed., D p. 19, where it is said :

E “As to modern markets established under statutory powers, in the case of the Dublin cattle market the Queen’s Bench Division in Ireland had ‘no hesitation in holding that this great public market, established by the corporation under Parliamentary powers, is a market overt.’ And such a market would certainly seem to fall within the definition of a market overt given by JERVIS, C.J. [in Lee v. Bayes (6)] . . . as ‘an open, public, and legally constituted market’.”

F It is interesting to see that that view has been adopted in Ward v. Stephens (7), decided in Australia. In my view, therefore, the second limb of the argument also fails.

G The next point which counsel for the plaintiffs argued was that, in a market where a toll is payable, the sale is only protected if the toll is paid by the person who effects the sale. There is no evidence in this case other than that which was given at the trial, namely, that the toll of a shilling was paid by the auctioneer who put the motor car up for auction. He collected the shilling from the vendor and that seems to me to be in accord with the charter of 1749, which entitles the authorities at Maidstone to charge a toll for the showing of the article for the purposes of sale. It seems to me a sensible and reasonable method of dealing with the matter that the man who brings an article into the market to sell it has to pay a shilling. He has to pay it himself if he sells personally ; even if he does not sell, he has to pay the toll. If an attempt is made to sell it by H auction, he also has to pay the toll.

The next point which counsel for the plaintiffs made was that to get the protection of a sale in market overt the goods must be put up for sale by a trader in the market. There is, however, no authority for that proposition. The Market-Overt Case (8), a very old case, to which counsel for the plaintiffs referred, was based on entirely different facts. In that case some plate which had been stolen was sold in a scrivener’s shop in London on market day, and the court held that that was not a sale in market overt. The court consisted of the Chief Justice of England (POPHAM, C.J.), the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (ANDERSON), the Master of the Rolls (SIR THOMAS EGERTON, M.R.), and the Attorney-General. The court held (5 Co. Rep. 83b):

" . . . if plate be stolen and sold openly in a scrivener's shop on the market day . . . that this sale should not change the property, but the party should have restitution; for a scrivener's shop is not a market overt for plate; for none would search there for such a thing . . . But if the sale had been openly in a goldsmith's shop in London, so that any one who stood or passed by the shop might see it, there it would change the property . . . So every shop in London is a market overt for such things only which by the trade of the owner are put there to sale . . .

COKE added:

" . . . and when I was recorder of London, I certified the custom of London accordingly."

If one considers the reason for, or desirability of, protecting people who buy with the honest belief that the vendor has a good title to sell, provided the necessary safeguards are taken of selling in the market in the day-time and exposing the article for sale, there does not seem to me to be any reason in principle why a sale should not be equally good if made by the owner himself as it admittedly would be, for the purpose of this point, if the motor car had been sold by auction by the auctioneers.

I come now to the last point, and, perhaps, the defendants' best point. It is that this sale by private treaty was not a sale according to the usage of the market. HUMPHREYS, J., dealt with the point and stated ([1948] 1 All E.R. 409) that, according to the evidence of Mr. Forknall, the auctioneer:

"There was no custom or usage, to his knowledge, for dealers or owners of motor-cars to sell or offer cars for sale at the market except for sale by auction through his firm or the firm of Messrs. Parker & Sons, auctioneers."

The learned judge, in dealing with the evidence of Mr. Forknall, said (ibid.):

" . . . he had nothing to do with such transactions. There was no practice in the market of motor-car dealers or owners selling direct to members of the public."

HUMPHREYS, J., then went on as follows (ibid.):

"There is, therefore, no doubt that the sale in question took place in a public market. It can, I think, hardly be disputed that the sale and purchase of the car in question, if it had been effected by auction, would have been a sale in market overt, according to the usage of the market. There would, in that event, have been present all the element of publicity and open dealing by persons of repute to whom recourse could be had if required. The only substantial point advanced by the plaintiffs, it seems to me, is that the sale between two private persons was not such a sale. On this aspect of the matter reference may be made to the judgment of BLACKBURN, J., in Crane v. London Dock Co. (9), where he said (5 B. & S. 319): 'Then comes the question which it is necessary to decide, namely, whether this was a sale in market overt. It is pretty clear that the privilege given by law to a sale in market overt, of binding property against the true owner, was originally given in consequence of its policy of encouraging markets and commerce—I agree with the plaintiff's counsel so far. But I think that, for that purpose, the vendor must buy the goods under circumstances such as would induce him to think the sale a good sale in market overt;—namely, he must buy a thing which is openly exposed in market overt under such circumstances that he might say to himself no person but the owner would dare to expose them for sale here, and therefore I have a right to assume that the shopkeeper has a right to sell them. I think this principle runs through all the cases, that the goods must be corporally present and exposed in the market.' ”

Having applied his mind to that judgment and to the facts of the case, and bearing in mind that, although there may be no custom to sell motor cars in the market except by auction, there was evidence that it was frequently done, A HUMPHREYS, J., dealt with the matter in this way ([1948] 1 All E.R. 409) :

“ On the whole, I think the defendants have established that the purchase of the car was in market overt. The third party bought in a long established market where, to his knowledge, motor-cars had been publicly sold for years. He bought a car which had been so publicly offered for sale, he paid a fair price for the car, and there was nothing in the transaction calculated to arouse his suspicion. In my view, the mere fact that his purchase was not made through an auctioneer did not operate to remove the sale from the category of sales in market overt so as to prevent his acquiring a good title to the car.” B

I agree with the conclusion of the learned judge and I do not feel that I can put it in better language than that or in as good language. If there had been clear proof that a car had never been sold in the market except by public auction and that there was a usage to that effect and no other usage, or that a sale between two private persons was an unusual transaction, there might be something to be said for the point that it did not come within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22, but that is not the evidence in this case. It is largely D a question of fact that cars were undoubtedly sold by private sale as well as by public auction. All the principles which support a sale in market overt are present in this case. For those reasons I think that the sale did take place in market overt, that the claim fails, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

SINGLETON, L.J. : The plaintiffs, Bishopsgate Motor Finance Corporation, E Ltd., are a company which finances the purchase of motor vehicles. About Oct. 7, 1946, Mr. Mark Bronstein was anxious to purchase from dealers a second-hand Hillman motor car, No. EUW.124, and it was arranged that the plaintiffs should carry through that transaction for him. The property in the motor car became theirs and they hired it out to Bronstein who paid £115 down and then had to pay eighteen monthly payments of £13 18s. 10d. The possession of the motor car by F Bronstein was, apparently, too much for him ; he only kept it for about three weeks. On Oct. 29, 1946, it was put up for sale by auction in Maidstone market. It was bought on that day by Mr. Bourgein. Bronstein went on paying his instalments for a few months, but he did not complete them and he disappeared. Some time later, it was found that the motor car was in the possession of G Transport Brakes, Ltd., the defendants. They had bought it from Bourgein. Consequently, an action was brought by the plaintiffs against Transport Brakes, Ltd., claiming the return of the motor car or damages.

The material part of the defence is in these terms :

“ The said car was bought by the Winsor Garage [i.e., Bourgein] on a day in October, 1946, in market overt according to the usage of the market at Maidstone in the county of Kent, in good faith and without notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller of the said car.” H

That, of course, brings into play the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22 (1), which provides :

“ Where goods are sold in market overt, according to the usage of the market, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller.”

It appears to me, then, that there are two things to be ascertained : (i) Was this sale in market overt ? (ii) Was it according to the usage of the market ? If so, the buyer can claim a good title and the plaintiffs' claim in this action fails. To find the answer to those two questions, the facts must be examined. As to the question whether this was a sale in market overt, there has been established in Maidstone for many centuries a market or markets. As my Lord pointed out, the deputy town clerk said in evidence that the charter of 1747 is the one at present in force so far as the market is concerned and that it has been amended by the Maidstone Markets Act, 1824, and the Ministry of Health Provisional Orders Confirmation (Maidstone and Stockton-on-Tees) Act, 1933. There had been earlier charters giving rights to the mayor and councillors to hold markets and sales at various times, but it is not necessary to consider them. Counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the effect of the Act of 1824 was to wipe out the charter of 1747 entirely. I cannot see that that is right, particularly having regard to s. 52 of the Act of 1824 [whereby the Act was not to be construed as taking away or diminishing any right or privilege belonging to the Maidstone corporation unless there was an express provision in the Act to that effect.] Furthermore, counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the only matter at which the court need look was the Act of 1933, which confirmed certain provisional Orders, one of which was the Maidstone Order, 1933. I do not think that that submission is right. For reasons given by my Lord, I think that one is entitled to look further back, but I am not sure that it matters much. Paragraph 3 (1) of the Maidstone Order, 1933 (which is set out in the schedule to the Act of 1933), says :

"Notwithstanding anything in the local Act [the Act of 1824] the council may hold a corn market on Thursday in every week and a cattle and general market (for all goods and merchandise other than goods and merchandise which are brought to the corn market) on Tuesday in every week."

Counsel contended that the general market was held under that power only and that this was not the case of a sale in market overt because a market overt must be created by a charter or grant—something of long, long ago—and cannot be created by an Act of Parliament. That submission seems to me to be completely covered by the two decisions in the Irish courts to which my Lord has referred. The first was Ganly v. Ledwidge (4), of which the head-note reads :

"The protection attendant upon a sale in market overt is not confined to ancient markets created by charter or prescription, but extends to modern markets established under powers conferred by Act of Parliament."

In that case :

"The new cattle-market was established by the corporation of Dublin under the provisions of 'The Dublin Improvement Act' (12 and 13 Vict., c. 79, ss. 79 and 80), and on every Thursday a public market for the sale of cattle is held in it . . ."

Ganly v. Ledwidge (4) was followed in Delaney v. Wallis & Sons (5), in the Irish Court of Appeal. I am bound to say I cannot see why there should be any such limit on the creation of market overt as counsel for the plaintiffs suggests. I do not see why it cannot be created by statute, and, in my view, that point fails.

What is the meaning of "market overt" ? This has been discussed more than once. In Lee v. Bayes (6) it was held that :

"A sale by public auction at a horse repository out of the city of London, is not a sale in market overt."

Counsel arguing that case made this submission :

"The horse having been stolen, no property in it of course could pass to the defendant unless he had purchased it in market overt. . . This is a place to which any of the public may resort for the purpose of buying."

CRESSWELL, J., said (18 C.B. 601) :

"So they may to any open shop ; but that does not, except by custom in London, constitute a market overt."

A During the argument JERVIS, C.J., gave the following definition of "market overt" :

"It is an open, public, and legally constituted market . . ."

So far as I know, no better definition has ever been given, and it was adopted by the editor of BENJAMIN ON SALE in the passage at p. 19 which my Lord read. On the evidence given in the court below, I regard this market as fulfilling in every way the requirements of market overt, and it seems to me beyond doubt that the sale of the motor car was a sale in market overt.

B The only remaining question is whether the sale was according to the usage of the market. I regard that as a more difficult question, but, again, when the evidence is examined, I think we ought to hold that the sale was according to the usage of the market. The evidence was this. The car was taken in the morning to the public market where sales by auction are held and where goods are sold otherwise than by auction. A toll of one shilling was paid by the auctioneers to the collectors of the corporation and was collected by the auctioneers from the vendor, Bronstein. The car was then put up for sale by auction, but it did not reach the reserve price. Later, Bronstein asked the auctioneer to put up the car again at a reserve of some £25 less. Again D the bidding did not come up to the reserve. The auctioneer then passed on to another car, but Bourgein, who had seen the plaintiffs' car earlier, looked at it further and Bronstein asked him if he would like to buy it. In the result, a sale was effected at £290 which is said to have been a reasonable price for the car. Bourgein, having done some repairs to the car or some reconditioning of it, later sold it to the defendants in this action. It is not said E that the defendants were otherwise than honest in every sense, and it is admitted that Bourgein, who bought the car at the market, acted in good faith and that he paid a reasonable price for it. The argument of counsel for the plaintiffs is that the sale was not according to the usage of the market because things which were sold at this time were usually sold by auction. The auctioneer, F Mr. Forknall, was asked about that and he said :

"Well, of course, you get a dealer who comes and puts a car into an auction sale with no intention of selling it, but merely to find out who is likely to be interested and to see how they will go, and then have a deal afterwards."

The learned judge asked :

G "It does not matter what the intention is—he puts it in auction ?
(A)—Yes, and then trades afterwards."

A little later the learned judge said :

H "Therefore, you cannot have dealers coming in and saying, 'Here is my car. Now, then, what offers for it ?' Unless they are licensed, they are not allowed to ? (A)—No, but they can by private treaty after the auction."

Thus, it appears on the evidence that there were at this market both sales by auction and also sales by private treaty. On the evidence, which was not contradicted in that regard, in my view, it was open to the learned judge to find not only that the car was sold in market overt, but also that it was sold according to the usage of the market.

We were referred to a judgment of SCRUTTON, J., in Clayton v. Le Roy (10), and, in particular, to the passage where he said ([1911] 2 K.B. 1044) :

"A custom which takes away one man's property and gives it to another must, in my view, be carefully watched, especially when it is not a universal custom, but limited to certain favoured localities."

The learned judge was dealing with a case of a sale in a shop at that time, but, assuming as I do that his words could be taken generally, I venture respectfully to agree that every such custom must be watched carefully. I think it has been in this case. HUMPHREYS, J., found in favour of the defendants ([1948] 1 All E.R. 409) that this was, indeed, "a sale in market overt according to the usage of the market," and I agree that his judgment should be upheld.

DENNING, L.J. : I agree. In the development of our law, two principles have striven for mastery. The first is the protection of property. No one can give a better title than he himself possesses. The second is the protection of commercial transactions. The person who takes in good faith and for value without notice should get a good title. The first principle has held sway for a long time, but it has been modified by common law itself and by statute so as to meet the needs of our own times. The modification here in question is one conferred by the common law itself.

It has always been held that a sale in market overt—according to the usage of the market—to one who takes in good faith and for value without notice confers a good title on the buyer. The law is fully explained in COKE'S INSTITUTES, pt. II, pp. 220 and 713. In my opinion, this beneficial rule of the common law applies not only to open markets created by grant or prescription, but also to open markets authorised by statute. When the legislature authorises the holding of a market, it must be taken to intend to attach to it all the privileges attaching to a market by grant or prescription. It follows that Maidstone market is a market overt and that, prima facie, sales in that market confer a good title. If the true owner seeks to set aside a sale on the ground that it was not in accordance with the usage of the market, the burden is on him to show it: see Comyns v. Boyer (11). The fact that the toll has not been paid to the corporation is not a ground for setting aside a sale, at all events in those cases where it is payable by the one who exposes the goods for sale: see COMYN'S DIGEST, Market E. The title of the buyer cannot depend on the chance whether the seller has done his duty and paid the toll. The fact that the goods are sold, not by an auctioneer, but by a dealer or the apparent owner is also no ground for setting aside the sale, unless, indeed, the usage of the market only allows sales to be made by auctioneers. That, however, is not the case here. It is plain on the evidence that after an auctioneer has failed to sell, the dealer—or apparent owner—often sells himself. There is, therefore, no ground for saying that the market is confined to sales by auctioneers.

The protection we have granted today to the buyer of a motor car in market overt protects him only in so far as he buys in good faith and without notice. It seems to me that the system of registration books for motor cars, if properly worked, should do a great deal to protect both the true owner and the innocent purchaser. The registration book of a car, or the "log-book" as it is called, may not itself be a document of title, but it is the best evidence of title. The transfer of the log-book does not itself transfer the property in the car. The property, as a rule, is only transferred by sale and delivery, but a transfer is open to suspicion unless the log-book is handed over. The wise buyer insists on it in order to be sure that the seller is the owner and that the car may lawfully be on the road. If the log-book is not produced or if it contains the name of a third person as the owner, or if it has been obviously tampered with, the buyer is immediately put on inquiry. If he should complete the purchase without getting the position cleared up, he does so at his own risk. So, also, a log-book may be produced which is good on the face of it, but the number on the motor car may have been obviously altered to correspond with the log-book by the use of a number-plate which is "faked." Such a fact should put the buyer on inquiry. If he makes none, he does so at his own risk. Assuming, therefore, that the true owner keeps his log-book safe in his own name and in his own hands, it is unlikely that any stranger will get a good title to the car. A thief can only dispose of the car by forging some other log-book so as to give it the same number as the car, or by altering the number-plate so as to correspond with the number of another log-book, each of which is difficult to do in a way that is not noticeable to a careful purchaser. The plaintiffs here did not keep the log-book in their own hands or in their own name. They were a finance company who allowed the hirer to have the car and take the log-book in his own name. By reason of that fact, he was able to dispose of the car to an innocent purchaser. It would be carrying the protection of property too far if we were to say that the plaintiffs can defeat the title of that purchaser. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs of the defendants and the third party against the plaintiffs.

Solicitors: M. & H. Shanson (for the plaintiffs); Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, agents for Osborne, Ward, Vassall, Abbot & Co., Bristol (for the defendants and the third party).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D JOBLIN v. WATKINS AND ROSEVEARE (MOTORS), LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Croom-Johnson, J.), June 30, 1948.]

Sale of Goods—Mercantile agent—Document of title—Motor car registration book—Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 1 (4)—Road Vehicle (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1149), reg. 9 (1).

In November, 1945, the plaintiff purported to buy a second-hand motor car for £275 from one, S., who had formerly been employed as the defendants' agent to buy cars, but whose employment had been terminated in April, 1945. S. was given the option of re-purchasing the car for £300 on or before Dec. 6, 1945, and in pursuance of this arrangement he gave the plaintiff a cheque, which was post-dated Dec. 6, 1945, and the car registration book, which showed that the last owner of the car was one A. In fact, the car was the property of the defendants, having been bought by them from A. The plaintiff did not receive delivery of the car and on presentment the post-dated cheque was dishonoured. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action against the defendants claiming the delivery of the car or damages.

CROOM-JOHNSON, J., held: (i) the transaction between the plaintiff and S. was merely a device to enable S. to obtain temporary financial accommodation and did not amount to a "sale" or a "pledge or other disposition" of the car within the meaning of the Factors Act, 1889, s. 2 (1).

(ii) the registration book was not a document of title within the definition in s. 1 (4) of the Act, or by virtue of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941, reg. 9. Although one reason for the book was to make known who was the owner of the vehicle to which it referred, its primary purpose was to show who was the person liable to pay the road fund licence tax in respect of the vehicle. "Document of title" within s. 1 (4) meant a document possession of which by the person putting it forward entitled him to dispose of the goods.

David Henderson for the plaintiff.

Foot for the defendants.

Solicitors: A. Carter & Co., agents for Hamlyn Taylor & Neck, Paignton (for the plaintiff); Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker, agents for Foot & Bowden, Plymouth (for the defendants).

BENSON v. HOME OFFICE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Tucker, L.J. (sitting as an additional judge)), December 2, 1948.]

Crown—Proceeding against—Cause of action statute barred before commencement of Crown Proceedings Act, 1947—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 30 (1)—Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (c. 44), s. 1.

By the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, s. 1: "Where any person has a claim against the Crown after the commencement of this Act, and, if this Act had not been passed, the claim might have been enforced, subject to the grant of His Majesty's fiat, by petition of right, or might have been enforced by a proceeding provided by any statutory provision repealed by this Act, then, subject to the provisions of this Act, the claim may be enforced as of right, and without the fiat of His Majesty, by proceedings taken against the Crown for that purpose in accordance with the provisions of this Act." By s. 12, this provision was deemed to have had effect as from Feb. 13, 1947.

On Jan. 15, 1948, the plaintiff, a former official in the surveyor's department of the Metropolitan Police, issued a writ in an action against the Home Office for wrongful dismissal on May 30, 1930.

HELD: the right of action was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, since, although the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, s. 1, applied to causes of action arising both before and after the coming into operation of the Act, it only applied if the plaintiff had a claim enforceable, which was subject to the grant of a fiat, by way of petition of right, or by a proceeding provided by certain statutes, and did not revive a cause of action which, against a defendant other than the Crown, would have been statute-barred.

[FOR THE CROWN PROCEEDINGS ACT, 1947, ss. 1 and 12, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, pp. 320 and 329, and BUTTERWORTH'S LEGISLATION SERVICE, Vol. 47, pp. 60 and 73-74. FOR THE LIMITATION ACT, 1939, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, pp. 223-244.]

TRIAL OF PRELIMINARY ISSUE in an action for damages for wrongful dismissal.

The dismissal took place on May 30, 1930, and the writ was issued on Jan. 15, 1948. The question was whether the action was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, or whether it was maintainable by virtue of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, ss. 1 and 12 (1). TUCKER, L.J., held that the action was statute-barred.

R. W. Vick for the plaintiff.

John Foster for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an action brought by Horace Archibald Benson against the Home Office. It is a claim for damages for breach of contract, the breach alleged being wrongful dismissal which took place on May 30, 1930, when the plaintiff was dismissed from his employment as an official in the surveyor's department of the metropolitan police with effect from May 16, 1930. For the purpose of this action, I am assuming that those allegations are correct. By the defence the dismissal as from May 16, 1930, is admitted, and, further it is pleaded: "In the further alternative, the defendants will rely on the Limitation Act, 1939." An order was made by MASTER HORRIDGE directing that:

"... the issue or issues raised by para. 6 of the defence herein be tried without pleadings alone as a separate issue or issues and be entered in the short cause list for trial at Middlesex by a judge alone and be set down within 14 days . . . And it is ordered that the residue of the application for the directions of the trial be adjourned generally with liberty to restore."

Accordingly, the matter comes before me for trial of the issue whether or not this claim is barred by the statute of limitations. On the face of it, it would appear to be so barred, the writ having been issued on Jan. 15, 1948, and the cause of action complained of having arisen in May, 1930, but it is said by counsel for the plaintiff that, on the proper construction of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, he is entitled to bring this action although he could not have sustained it before the passing of the Act. The Act came into force on Jan. 1, 1948, and is made effective as from Feb. 13, 1947, by s. 12, with certain exceptions which are not material to the present proceedings. Section 12 (1) provides :

A " . . . where by virtue of this sub-section proceedings are brought against the Crown in respect of a tort alleged to have been committed on or after the said 13th day of February and before the commencement of this Act, the Crown may rely upon the appropriate provisions of the law relating to the limitation of time for bringing proceedings as if this Act had at all material times been in force."

B So, the position with regard to tort is that, although the Act takes effect as from Feb. 13, 1947, none the less the Crown is given the right to rely on all the statutes of limitation in respect of proceedings for tort alleged to have been committed on or after Feb. 13, 1947. That is a special provision with regard to tort.

C In my view, the section, if any, which is applicable to the present issue is s. 1, which is as follows :

D "Where any person has a claim against the Crown after the commencement of this Act, and, if this Act had not been passed, the claim might have been enforced, subject to the grant of His Majesty's fiat, by petition of right, or might have been enforced by a proceeding provided by any statutory provision repealed by this Act, then, subject to the provisions of this Act, the claim may be enforced as of right, and without the fiat of His Majesty, by proceedings taken against the Crown for that purpose in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

E Counsel for the plaintiff contends that that section is effective to give him a cause of action against the Crown for damages for breach of contract which, but for that section, would, by the time this writ had been issued, have been statute-barred and unenforceable. I cannot so construe the section. It speaks of a person having "a claim against the Crown after the commencement of this Act . . ." Counsel for the defendants argues that, while those words are not confined to causes of action arising after the commencement of the Act, but apply to causes of action in respect of matters which have happened before the passing of the Act, they can only refer to cases in which the subject has an enforceable claim or one which might have been enforced, subject to the grant of a fiat, by way of petition of right, and he says that this is not such a claim because, by the date of the passing of this Act or by Feb. 13, 1947 (whichever is the relevant date) the plaintiff had not got a claim which might have been so enforced because it was barred by the statute of limitations and had been so barred for many years. I think that is the true construction of the section. It certainly would be very remarkable if it had been intended by this Act not only to confer rights on subjects whose claims would otherwise have been enforceable, but also to revive causes of action which long ago the plaintiff would have been precluded from bringing by reason of the statute of limitation if the defendant had been some person other than the Crown.

H In my view, on the clear reading of s. 1, after the commencement of this Act the plaintiff had not a claim which might have been enforced. For these reasons I think that the defence is an answer to the plaintiff's claim, and I decide the preliminary issue in favour of the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

Solicitors : J. L. Myers (for the plaintiff) ; the Treasury Solicitor (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CANNON v. HARTLEY.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), November 19, 22, 1948.]

Deed—Covenant to settle “property”—Inclusion of reversionary interest—Claim for damages for breach of covenant—Right of volunteer to sue—Volunteer a covenantee.

On Jan. 23, 1941, a deed of separation was executed by the defendant of the first part, his wife of the second part and the plaintiff, their daughter and only child, of the third part. After reciting that “unhappy differences” had arisen between husband and wife and that they had agreed to live apart in future, the deed stated that “in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the matters hereinafter appearing the husband and the wife hereby mutually covenant with each other and declare as follows and he [the husband] hereby covenants also separately with the daughter in the terms of cl. 4, 5, 6 and 7.” Clause 3 prescribed for payment of income by the husband to the wife, and, by cl. 4, it was provided that during the daughter’s life and the lives also of the husband and the wife a payment would be made by way of income to the daughter. Clause 7 prescribed: “If and whenever during the lifetime of the wife or the daughter the husband shall become entitled at one and the same time by gift inter vivos from or under the will or codicil or on the intestacy of either of his parents or any other person to any money or property exceeding in net amount or value £1,000 he will forthwith at his own expense and to the satisfaction of the wife and the daughter or the survivor of them settle one half of such money or property upon trust for himself for life and for the wife for life after his death and subject thereto in trust for the daughter absolutely but as to his life interest charged with the payment of the monthly sums hereinbefore mentioned.”

By the will of his father, who died on Dec. 3, 1944, the defendant became entitled, subject to a life interest of his mother, to a quarter share of a residuary trust fund absolutely. The defendant’s wife died on June 23. It was conceded that this interest and reversion was worth more than £1,000. The defendant having failed to settle this interest on the terms of cl. 7 of the deed, the plaintiff brought an action for damages for breach of covenant.

HELD: (i) the reversionary interest to which the defendant became entitled dependent on the death of his mother was “property” within the meaning of cl. 7 of the deed.

Re Hughes’ Settlement ([1924] 2 Ch. 356; 133 L.T. 470), distinguished.

(ii) the plaintiff was entitled to succeed since, although a volunteer, she was not only a party to the deed but also a direct covenantee under the covenant on which she sued, and did not require the assistance of the court to enforce the covenant as she had a legal right to enforce it.

Re Pryce ([1917] 1 Ch. 234; 116 L.T. 149), and Re Kay’s Settlement ([1939] 1 All E.R. 245; [1939] Ch. 329; 160 L.T. 172), distinguished.

[AS TO THE EFFECT ON REVERSIONARY INTERESTS OF A COVENANT TO SETTLE AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 575-577, para. 840; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, pp. 501-506, Nos. 484-524.]

Cases referred to:—

- (1) Re Hughes’ Settlement, [1924] 2 Ch. 356; 94 L.J.Ch. 57; 133 L.T. 470; 40 Digest 518, 631.
- (2) Re D’Angibau, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 228; 49 L.J.Ch. 756; 43 L.T. 135; 40 Digest 527, 717.
- (3) Hearle v. Greenbank, (1749), 3 Atk. 695; 1 Ves. Sen. 298; 27 Digest 138, 1134.

- (4) Colyear v. Mulgrave (Countess), (1836), 2 Keen, 81; 5 L.J.Ch. 335; 12 Digest 46, 245.
- (5) Re Plumptre's Marriage Settlement, [1910] 1 Ch. 609; 79 L.J.Ch. 340; 102 L.T. 315; 40 Digest 499, 470.
- (6) Re Ellis's Settlement, [1909] 1 Ch. 618; 78 L.J.Ch. 375; 100 L.T. 511; 40 Digest 499, 469.
- A (7) Spickernell v. Hothan, (1854), Kay 669; 2 Eq. Rep. 1103; 32 Digest 360, 435.
- (8) Fletcher v. Fletcher, (1844), 4 Hare, 67; 14 L.J.Ch. 66; 43 Digest 799, 2364.
- (9) Re Pryce, [1917] 1 Ch. 234; 86 L.J.Ch. 383; 116 L.T. 149; 40 Digest 527, 719.
- B (10) Re Kay's Settlement, [1939] 1 All E.R. 245; [1939] Ch. 329; 108 L.J.Ch. 156; 160 L.T. 172; Digest Supp.
- (11) Pullan v. Koe, [1913] 1 Ch. 9; 82 L.J.Ch. 37; 107 L.T. 811; 43 Digest 1019, 4602.

ACTION for damages for breach of covenant.

C By a deed, dated Jan. 23, 1941, and executed between the defendant, of the first part, his wife, of the second part, and the plaintiff, their daughter, of the third part, the defendant covenanted, inter alia, that, if, during the lifetime of the wife or the daughter, he should become entitled to "any money or property" exceeding £1,000 in value, he would settle one half thereof on trust for himself for life and for his wife for life after his death, and, subject thereto, in trust for the daughter absolutely, his own life interest being charged with

D payment to the daughter of certain sums previously mentioned in the deed. Under the will of his father, who died on Dec. 3, 1944, the defendant became entitled to a share in his father's residuary estate, subject to his mother's life interest therein, this reversionary interest being more than £1,000 in value. The defendant's wife died on June 23, 1946. The defendant refused to settle, on the terms of the deed of 1941, the interest to which he had become entitled

E under his father's will, on the ground that, as it was merely a reversionary interest, it was not caught by the deed. ROMER, J., now held that the reversionary interest was "property" within the meaning of the deed, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. The facts appear in the judgment.

V. M. C. Pennington for the plaintiff.

A. A. Baden Fuller for the defendant.

F ROMER, J.: This is an action in which a daughter sues her father. The circumstances in which the action arises may be shortly stated.

G On Jan. 23, 1941, the defendant, the lady who was then his wife, and the daughter (who was then sui juris) entered into a deed described as a deed of separation, the defendant being the party of the first part, the wife being the party of the second part, and the plaintiff, described as their only child and a spinster—she has since married—being the party of the third part. After reciting that "unhappy differences" had arisen between husband and wife and that they had agreed to live apart from each other in future and to make such arrangements as were thereafter contained, it was witnessed that

H " . . . in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the matters hereinafter appearing the husband and the wife hereby mutually covenant with each other and declare as follows and he" [the husband] "hereby covenants also separately with the daughter in the terms of clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7," and then there follow certain provisions about living apart and so on. Clause 3 provides for payment of income by the husband to his wife, and there is also a provision under cl. 4 that during the daughter's life, and during the life also of the husband or wife, a payment will be made by way of income to the daughter. Then comes the important clause, cl. 7, which reads as follows :

"If and whenever during the lifetime of the wife or the daughter the husband shall become entitled at one and the same time by gift inter vivos from or under the will or codicil or on the intestacy of either of his parents or any other person to any money or property exceeding in net amount or value £1,000 he will forthwith at his own expense and to the satisfaction of the wife and the daughter or the survivor of them settle one half of such money or property upon trust for himself for life and for the wife for life after his death and subject thereto in trust for the daughter absolutely but as to his life interest charged with the payment of the monthly sums hereinbefore mentioned."

There is nothing else in the settlement to which I need refer. The defendant's father, Mr. Charles Rowley Hartley, died on Dec. 3, 1944, and, having made a will under which he appointed his son, the defendant, and his solicitor to be the executors and trustees, he gave his residuary estate in common form to his trustees upon trust (for sale or conversion), and the whole of the trust funds, upon the following trusts. These were "to pay the income of the residuary trust fund to my said wife during her life," and "subject as aforesaid my trustees shall after the death of my said wife divide the residuary trust fund into four equal parts and shall stand possessed thereof upon trust," among other things, "to pay or transfer one of such parts to my said son Bernard Charles Hartley absolutely."

On June 23, 1946, the defendant's wife died. The action is brought to obtain damages for alleged breach of covenant by the defendant in refusing to settle, on the terms of cl. 7 of the deed of separation, the interest to which he had become entitled under his father's will, which is an interest in reversion of one quarter part of his father's residuary estate. Certain matters of fact have been agreed between the parties, and I need not refer to them, except to say that it is agreed on all hands that the one quarter part of the residuary estate is worth more than £1,000, as also is the value of the defendant's reversionary interest of one fourth at the present time.

The first point that is taken by the defendant is that, on the true construction of cl. 7 of the deed of separation, this interest is not caught at present because it is still an interest in reversion. It is contended that the only money or property which is caught by cl. 7 is money or property which has fallen into possession during the lifetime of the wife or the daughter. It is said, therefore, that, as up to now this interest in the father's estate has not fallen into possession, the obligation on the defendant has not yet arisen, but, subject to at least one other point which has not yet been argued, it is conceded that, if during the lifetime of the daughter the husband's mother should die, the defendant's one quarter interest in his father's estate having become an interest in possession, it would then fall within the scope of cl. 7. In support of his contention counsel for the defendant relies on the opening words of cl. 7—

"If and whenever during the lifetime of the wife or the daughter the husband shall become entitled at one and the same time . . ." as showing the point of time that was in the minds of the parties at which that entitlement should commence. He points out that there are two successive life interests in contemplation before the ultimate gift of capital, which fit in with "money or property in possession," but are difficult to fit in with "money or property in reversion." He then says that the life interest of the husband is charged with the payment of certain sums mentioned previously in the settlement, and that also tends to show that there must be an actual life interest on which the charge can operate. Finally, he says that the reference to "any money or property exceeding in net amount or value £1,000," having regard to the difficulties of valuing anything which is in reversion, again points in the direction of the view that only money or property in possession was in contemplation.

A Considering this clause merely from the point of view of the language in which it is couched, I find great difficulty in seeing how it can fairly be said that this reversionary interest is excluded. It is plain that the wording of the clause would include money or property in possession, and, in so far as such money or property is concerned, no difficulty would arise with regard to a life interest, or the valuation of or charges on a life interest. It is said that these elements suggest sufficiently strongly that interests in reversion are excluded, but a vested interest in reversion is plainly property, and, but for the words which are directed to value, I am unable to see how the reversionary interest in a valuable estate, dependent on the falling in of one life, namely, that of the defendant's mother, can be described as anything B but "property"—a description used in contrast to "money," the term by which it is immediately preceded. The difficulty, if any, may be said to arise from the reference to "valuation"—"exceeding in net amount or value £1,000." There again, if, in fact, as is the case here, there is no difficulty in valuing the reversionary interest at any given moment of time, that would not appear C to me to present any difficulty, although it might possibly give rise to some difficulty in the matter of property on the reversion of which it was difficult, or, perhaps, even impossible, to place a fair value. It seems to me, however, that this language is so clear, apart from the reference to value, that that reference, which does not, at all events so far as the present case is concerned, give rise to any difficulty, cannot cut down the clear meaning of the language used.

D I was referred to a decision of TOMLIN, J., in Re Hughes' Settlement (1) as supporting the argument addressed to me on behalf of the defendant, but on that case I merely make two observations. It is totally different from the present case. There the wife had already, at the date of the marriage settlement, a reversionary interest in a particular fund and that interest became an interest in possession during the marriage. It is not a case such as the E present where, at the date of the deed, the husband had no interest whatever in the fund and the clause in question is directed solely, as the language shows, to a future interest which had no existence at all at the time of the deed. The difficulty which arises in the way of considering those different conceptions is shown in NORTON ON DEEDS, where the various positions are discussed in the form of propositions at pp. 659, 660, 662 and 664, and the proposition F which is now before me is set out. The only other remark I propose to make on Re Hughes' Settlement (1) is that TOMLIN, J., made it plain that these questions are always questions of construction, and must be decided according to the actual language which the parties have thought proper to employ. I decide this case on the language of cl. 7 of this document, and I hold that G the reversionary interest to which the defendant has become entitled is caught by that clause.

H Nov. 22. It was argued on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff, not having given any consideration for the covenant by her father contained in cl. 7 of the deed, was not only unable to apply to a court of equity for the enforcement of the covenant by way of specific performance, but was also disqualified from suing at common law for damages for breach of the covenant.

ROMER, J. : It is, of course, well established that in such a case as this a volunteer cannot ask a court of equity to exercise relief of a nature which is peculiar to the jurisdiction of equity, but for my part I thought it was reasonably clear that, the document being under seal, the covenantee's claim for damages would be entertained, and that is still my belief. The matter has, I think, been a little confused by reference to cases where volunteers who are not parties to, for example, a marriage settlement have sought to obtain an indirect benefit through the medium of the trustee which they themselves could not legally obtain. It has, however, been recognised that the court of equity will in some cases assist persons who are not parties to a settlement and persons who by the nature of things could not have been parties to the settlement (for example, the children of a marriage) in an attempt to enforce the provisions of the settlement and the covenants therein contained. That was well established and recognised by the time of Re D'Angibau (2). The headnote of that case is :

"By a settlement made on the marriage of a lady then, and therein described as, 'an infant of the age of nineteen years and upwards,' it was agreed that, after the marriage, as soon as the case would admit, certain personal estate standing in the names of the trustees of her father's will in which the lady would take a vested interest on her marriage subject to an annuity for her mother's life, should be assigned to trustees, in trust for investment with the consent of the husband and wife, and to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, and after her death to her husband till bankruptcy or alienation ; and then to hold the capital on trusts for the issue of the marriage ; and, in default of such issue, in trust for such person or persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint. The wife appointed the fund by deed to her husband, and died without issue, being still an infant. An action having been brought by the trustee in the husband's bankruptcy, who was also the legal personal representative of the wife, against the next of kin of the wife, claiming the property :—Held, by JAMES and BRETT, L.JJ. (dissentiente COTTON, L.J.), affirming the decision of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., that the appointment by the wife, while still a minor, was valid. Hearle v. Greenbank (3) commented on. Held, also, by the whole court, that whether the appointment was valid or not, the wife's next of kin, being volunteers, could not claim under the settlement in opposition to her legal personal representative."

COTTON, L.J., expresses himself as follows (15 Ch.D. 242) :

"The first question for consideration is, whether the settlement of 1874 can be considered as a declaration of trust constituting the relation of trustee and cestui que trust as between the husband and his assignees on the one part, and the demurring defendants on the other part, because if it can be so treated effect will be given to the trusts even in favour of volunteers. But on the construction of the settlement it is clear that the husband never constituted himself or intended to be a trustee of the fund. He contracts to make a settlement by transferring the fund to trustees, who were to hold it upon trust, and the distinction between a complete voluntary trust and a voluntary contract to create a trust is clear. If it is once established that the settlement is not a declaration of trust, there is, in my opinion, an answer to the contention of the defendants that the court, at their instance, would interfere with the legal title of the plaintiff. If the court enforces a contract to create a trust, whether contained in a marriage settlement or in any other instrument, it will enforce it in its entirety. But as a rule the court will not enforce a contract as distinguished from a trust at the instance of persons not parties to the contract : Colyear v. Countess of Mulgrave (4). The court would probably enforce a contract in a marriage settlement at the instance of the children of the marriage, but this is an exception from the general rule in favour of those who are specially the objects of the settlement. The demurring defendants were not parties to the contract nor within the consideration of the marriage, and, in my opinion, they are not entitled to enforce against the legal title of the plaintiff the contract to create a trust contained in the settlement."

The principles as there stated by the learned Lord Justice are, of course, well established. Considerations of that sort arose in Re Plumptre's Marriage Settlement (5), a decision of EVE, J. The headnote of that case is :

A "By a marriage settlement made in 1878 certain funds coming from the wife's father were settled upon the usual trusts of a wife's fund, with an ultimate trust, in the events which happened, for the wife's statutory next of kin. And it was also agreed that all real and personal property to which the wife was entitled at the date of the marriage, or to which B she, or her husband in her right, at any time during the coverture, should be or become entitled, whether in possession, reversion, or otherwise, should be assured and transferred by the husband and wife respectively to the trustees to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. In August, 1884, a sum of £1,018 15s. was invested by the husband in the purchase of certain stock in the name of the wife. This was subsequently sold by C the wife and re-invested in the purchase of £1,125 Grand Trunk Railway of Canada 4 per cent. debenture stock, which remained registered in her name down to the date of her death, intestate, and without leaving any issue on Feb. 2, 1909. The stock was now standing in the name of the husband, to whom letters of administration to his wife's estate had been granted. Held, that the stock in question, which was a gift by the husband D to the wife, was caught by the agreement to settle the wife's after-acquired property. Re Ellis's Settlement (6) ([1909] 1 Ch. 186) followed. But held, on the authority of Spickernell v. Hotham (7) (1854) Kay 669 that no action could be brought by the trustees to recover damages against the husband or the estate of the wife. Held, also, that the next of kin of the wife, being volunteers and strangers to the marriage consideration, could E not enforce the contract to settle as against the administrator of the wife, and that, therefore, the trustees were not bound to take any steps to obtain a transfer of the stock."

The part of the summons that was taken out which came before the court and which is relevant for present purposes was that which asked "whether, regard being had (a) to the fact that there was no issue of the marriage of F the said wife, and (b) to the fact that in the events which had happened the persons who, on the death of the husband, would become absolutely entitled in possession to the premises subject to the trusts of the settlement, were volunteers, the trustees were bound to take any steps to enforce the transfer of the stock to them as such trustees." EVE, J., after referring to the contention of counsel for the next of kin "that they are not necessarily volunteers there-G under for the purpose of enforcing the covenant against the husband, and further that, even assuming the facts to be as stated in the question, the court is not concerned to consider whether his clients could obtain the performance of the covenant by proceedings in equity inasmuch as the applicants, parties to the contract, are trustees of the covenant for all their cestuis que trust, and can and ought to enforce it by action at law, that is to say, by an action
H to recover as damages for breach of the covenant a sum equal to the value of the property which would have been vested in them had the covenant been complied with", and, after dealing with the second point which arose on the statute of limitations affecting the trustees' right to sue, deals with the position of the next of kin as follows ([1910] 1 Ch. 618) :

"The result, therefore, is that the next of kin, if they are entitled to any relief, must resort to this court to obtain it. Now what is their position here? They are not in my opinion cestuis que trust under the settlement, for nothing therein amounts to a declaration of trust, or to anything more than an executory contract on the part of the husband and wife; it is, so far as the next of kin are concerned, what COTTON, L.J., calls a voluntary contract to create a trust as distinguished from a complete voluntary trust such as existed in the case of Fletcher v. Fletcher (8) on which Mr. Clayton so strongly relied. The collaterals are no parties to the contract; they are not within the marriage consideration and cannot be considered otherwise than as volunteers, and in these respects it makes no difference that the covenant sought to be enforced is the husband's and that the property sought to be brought within it comes from the wife. For each of the foregoing propositions authority is to be found in the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Re D'Angibau (2); and in the same judgment is to be found this further statement—that where, as in this case, the husband has acquired a legal title as administrator of his wife to property which was subject to the contract to settle, volunteers are not entitled to enforce against that legal title the contract to create a trust contained in the settlement.”

A

B

Accordingly, he answers the question which I have read by saying that the trustees were not bound to take any steps to enforce the covenant.

C

It is to be observed that in that case the next of kin were not parties to the settlement. They could not have been parties to the settlement. Secondly, they were outside the consideration of the settlement and were, therefore, volunteers. Thirdly, they were invoking the assistance of the court. That case is clearly no authority for the proposition that a direct covenantee, although a volunteer, cannot sue for damages on any covenant of this description, but the defendant relies (and so far as I can make out it is the sheet anchor of his case) on some observations made by EVE, J., in Re Pryce (9), and on the subsequent decision of SIMONDS, J., in Re Kay's Settlement (10). I think one sufficiently gets the point of the observations in Re Pryce (9) by referring to Re Kay's Settlement (10). The headnote in Re Kay's Settlement (10) is:

D

E

“A voluntary settlement executed by a spinster contained a covenant in the usual form to settle any after-acquired property, with certain exceptions. The settlor afterwards married and had three children. Having become entitled under a will to a legacy and a share of residue which fell within the covenant, and a share in an appointed fund, she was asked by the trustees of the settlement to settle this property, but refused to do so. Held, on an application by the trustees for directions, that the children, being volunteers, had no right to enforce the covenant, and, therefore, the trustees ought to be directed not to take any proceedings to enforce the covenant, by action for damages for breach, or otherwise.”

F

The case was elaborately argued. SIMONDS, J., after referring to the facts of the case, said ([1939] Ch. 338):

G

“It is in these circumstances that the trustees have issued this summons, making as parties to it, first, the settlor herself and, secondly, her infant children, who are beneficiaries under the settlement. But, be it observed, though beneficiaries, her children are, for the purpose of this settlement, to be regarded as volunteers, there being no marriage consideration, which would have entitled them to sue, though they are parties to this application. The trustees ask whether, in the event which has happened of the settlor having become entitled to certain property, they should take proceedings against her to compel performance of the covenant or to recover damages on her failure to implement it.

H

“I am bound to say that that does not seem to me to be a very happy form of proceeding, though perhaps it is difficult to see how else the trustees should act. It is to be observed that one of the persons made a party is the very person as to whom the trustees ask the question whether she should be sued. She, the settlor, has appeared by Mr. Evershed and has contended, as she was entitled to contend, that the only question before the court was whether the trustees ought to be directed to take such proceedings; that is to say, she contended that the only question before

A the court was precisely that question which EVE, J., had to deal with in Re Pryce (9). She has said that the question before me is not primarily whether, if she were sued, such an action would succeed (as to which she might have a defence, I know not what), but whether, in the circumstances as they are stated to the court, the trustees ought to be directed to take proceedings against her.

B “As to that, the argument before me has been, on behalf of the children of the marriage, beneficiaries under the settlement, that, although it is conceded that the trustees could not successfully take proceedings for specific performance of the agreements contained in the settlement, yet they could successfully, and ought to be directed to, take proceedings at law to recover damages for the non-observance of the agreements contained in the settlement, first, the covenant for further assurance of the appointed share of the first-mentioned £20,000 and, secondly, the covenant with regard to after-acquired property. In the circumstances I must say that I felt considerable sympathy for the argument which was put before me by Mr. Winterbotham on behalf of the children, that there was, at any rate, on the evidence before the court today, no reason why

D the trustees should not be directed to take proceedings to recover what damages might be recoverable at law for breach of the agreements entered into by the settlor in her settlement. But on a consideration of Re Pryce (9) it seemed to me that so far as this court was concerned the matter was concluded and that I ought not to give any directions to the trustees to take the suggested proceedings.

E “In Re Pryce (9) the circumstances appear to me to have been in no wise different from those which obtain in the case which I have to consider. In that case there was a marriage settlement made in 1887. It contained a covenant to settle the wife's after-acquired property. In 1904 there was a deed of gift under which certain interests in reversion belonging to the husband were assured by him absolutely to his wife. The husband

F was also entitled to a one-third share in certain sums appointed to him by the will of his father in exercise of a special power of appointment contained in a deed of family arrangement. The share of the £9,000 fell into possession in 1891 on the death of his father, and was paid to him, unknown to the trustees of his marriage settlement, and spent. The interests given by the husband to the wife and his share of the £4,700

G came into possession in 1916 on the death of the husband's mother, and were outstanding in the trustees of his parent's settlement and of the deed of family arrangement respectively. The husband died in 1907, and there was no issue of the marriage. Subject to his widow's life interest in both funds, the ultimate residue of the wife's fund was held in trust for her statutory next of kin, and the husband's fund was held in trust for him absolutely. The widow was also tenant for life under her husband's will. The trustees of the marriage settlement in that case took out a summons ‘to have it determined whether these interests and funds were caught by the provisions of the settlement, and, if so, whether they should take proceedings to enforce them.’ In those proceedings, apparently, the plaintiffs were the trustees of the marriage settlement, and the only defendant appears to have been the widow of the settlor; that is to say, there were no other parties to the proceedings to whose beneficial interest it was to argue in favour of the enforceability and enforcement of the covenant, but the trustees no doubt argued in favour of their interests, as it was their duty to do.

H

"EVE, J., in a considered judgment, held that although the interests to which I have referred were caught by the covenant of the wife and the agreement by the husband respectively, yet the trustees ought not to take any steps to recover any of them. In the case of the wife's fund he said that her next of kin were volunteers, who could neither maintain an action to enforce the covenant nor for damages for breach of it, and that the court would not give them by indirect means what they could not obtain by direct procedure; therefore he declined to direct the trustees to take proceedings either to have the covenant specifically enforced or to recover damages at law. The learned judge, as I have said, took time to consider his judgment. Many of the cases which have been cited to me, though not all of them apparently, were cited to him, and after deciding that no steps should be taken to enforce specific performance of the covenant he used these words: 'The position of the wife's fund is somewhat different, in that her next of kin would be entitled to it on her death; but they are volunteers, and although the court would probably compel fulfilment of the contract to settle at the instance of any persons within the marriage consideration—see per COTTON, L.J., in Re D'Angibau (2)—and in their favour will treat the outstanding property as subjected to an enforceable trust—Pullan v. Koe (11)—'volunteers have no right whatever to obtain specific performance of a mere covenant which has remained as a covenant and has never been performed': see per JAMES, L.J., in Re D'Angibau (2). Nor could damages be awarded either in this court, or, I apprehend, at law, where, since the Judicature Act, 1873, the same defences would be available to the defendant as would be raised in an action brought in this court for specific performance or damages.'

"That is the exact point which has been urged on me with great insistence by Mr. Winterbotham. Whatever sympathy I might feel for his argument, I am not justified in departing in any way from this decision, which is now twenty-one years old. The learned judge went on: 'In these circumstances, seeing that the next of kin could neither maintain an action to enforce the covenant nor for damages for breach of it, and that the settlement is not a declaration of trust constituting the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust between the defendant and the next of kin, in which case effect could be given to the trusts even in favour of volunteers, but is a mere voluntary contract to create a trust, ought the court now for the sole benefit of these volunteers to direct the trustees to take proceedings to enforce the defendant's covenant? I think it ought not; to do so would be to give the next of kin by indirect means relief they cannot obtain by any direct procedure, and would in effect be enforcing the settlement as against the defendant's legal right to payment and transfer from the trustees of the parents' marriage settlement.' It is true that in those last words the learned judge does not specifically refer to an action for damages, but it is clear that he has in his mind directions both with regard to an action for specific performance and an action to recover damages at law—or, now, in this court.

"In those circumstances it appears to me that I must follow the learned judge's decision and I must direct the trustees not to take any steps either to compel performance of the covenant or to recover damages through her failure to implement it."

It appears to me that neither Re Pryce (9) nor Re Kay's Settlement (10) is any authority for the proposition which has been submitted to me on behalf

A of the defendant. In neither case were the claimants parties to the settlement in question, nor were they within the consideration of the deed. When EVE, J., referred to the volunteers in Re Pryce (9) it seems to me that what he intended to say was that they were not within the class of non-parties, if I may use that expression, to whom COTTON, L.J., recognised in Re D'Angibau (2) the court would afford assistance. In the present case the plaintiff, although a volunteer, is not only a party to the deed of separation but is also a direct covenantee under the very covenant on which she is suing. She does not require the assistance of the court to enforce the covenant for she has a legal right herself to enforce it. She is not asking for equitable relief, but for damages at common law for breach of covenant. For my part, I am quite unable to regard Re Pryce (9) which was a totally different case dealing with totally different circumstances, or anything which EVE, J., said therein, as amounting to an authority negating the plaintiff's right to sue in the present case. I think that what EVE, J., was pointing out in Re Pryce (9) was that the next of kin who were seeking to get an indirect benefit in that case had no right to come to a court of equity because they were not parties to the deed and were not within the consideration of the deed, and, similarly, they would have no right to proceed at common law if they attempted to do so in an action for damages as the courts of common law would not entertain a suit at the instance of volunteers who were not parties to the deed which was sought to be enforced any more than the court of equity would entertain such a suit.

D It was suggested to me in argument that in such a case as the present, where the covenant is to bring in after-acquired property, an action for damages for breach of that covenant is, in effect, the same as a suit for specific performance of a covenant to settle. I myself think that the short answer to that is that the two things are not the same at all. The plaintiff here is invoking no equitable relief. She is merely asking for monetary compensation for a breach of covenant.

E It was next said that, in relation to the claim for damages, having regard to the fact that cl. 7 of the settlement contemplates that certain terms of the settlement on which after-acquired property should be settled are, in default of agreement, to be decided by arbitration, an element of uncertainty is introduced into the clause which is such that the court would not or should not entertain a claim for damages for its breach. In my judgment, that argument is unsound because the beneficial interests contemplated to arise in relation to this after-acquired property are clearly set out and the only thing which had to be agreed, and in default of agreement would have to be arbitrated, was pure machinery for carrying out the beneficial interest so defined.

F Finally, it was suggested to me that, as this action is for damages by a daughter against her father and as the quantum of damages must be related to the father's expectation of life, a conception arises which, from reasons, as I understand it, of delicacy the court would decline to entertain. I can only describe that proposition as novel and I reject it without further comment. I shall, accordingly, direct an enquiry as to the damages sustained by the plaintiff for breach by the defendant of the covenant with the plaintiff contained in cl. 7 of the deed of separation, and the plaintiff will have her costs of the action, the costs of the enquiry to be reserved.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co. (for the plaintiff); Hopwood, Mote & Leedham-Green (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD v. UPSON AND ANOTHER.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Wright, Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parc and Lord Morton of Henryton), June 17, 18, 21, 22, December 9, 1948.]

Street—Pedestrian crossing—Controlled crossing—Duty of "approaching" driver—Interrupted view of crossing—Injury to foot passenger thereon—Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 397), reg. 3.

The Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, reg. 3, provides: "The driver of every vehicle approaching a crossing shall, unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon, proceed at such a speed as to be able if necessary to stop before reaching such crossing."

A pedestrian was knocked down by an omnibus while on a pedestrian crossing controlled by traffic lights. The lights were in favour of the omnibus driver, but his view of the crossing was masked by a stationary taxi-cab which was drawn up at the kerb on the crossing. When the omnibus became stationary, its front wheels were on the crossing.

HELD: a crossing controlled by lights did not cease to be "a crossing" within the meaning of reg. 3 even when a green light was being shown to on-coming traffic, and, therefore, as the omnibus driver was prevented by the stationary taxi-cab from seeing that there was no foot passenger on the crossing, and, nevertheless, approached at such a speed that he could not stop before reaching the crossing, he was guilty of a breach of reg. 3, and the breach was a contributory cause of the accident. The pedestrian's contributory negligence did not adeem the driver's failure to obey the regulation, but, under the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, s. 1 (1), merely reduced the amount which the pedestrian was entitled to recover.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL ([1947] 2 All E.R. 509; [1947] K.B. 930; 177 L.T. 475), affirmed.

[FOR THE PEDESTRIAN CROSSING PLACES (TRAFFIC) REGULATIONS, 1941, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 34, p. 350.]

[FOR THE LAW REFORM (CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE) ACT, 1945, s. 1 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 38, p. 357.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1938] 4 All E.R. 850; [1939] 1 K.B. 426; 108 L.J.K.B. 239; 160 L.T. 79; Digest Supp.
- (2) Bailey v. Geddes, [1937] 3 All E.R. 671; [1938] 1 K.B. 156; 107 L.J.K.B. 38; 157 L.T. 364; Digest Supp.
- (3) Knight v. Sampson, [1938] 3 All E.R. 309; 159 L.T. 257; Digest Supp.
- (4) Sparks v. Edward Ash, Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 1; [1943] 1 K.B. 223; 112 L.J.K.B. 289; 168 L.T. 118; 107 J.P. 44; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) British Fame (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners), The Macgregor, [1943] 1 All E.R. 33; [1943] A.C. 197; 112 L.J.P. 6; 168 L.T. 193; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Lewis v. Denye, [1940] 3 All E.R. 299; [1940] A.C. 921; 109 L.J.K.B. 817; 163 L.T. 249; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) The Generous, (1868), L.R. 2 A. & E. 57; 37 L.J. Adm. 37; 17 L.T. 552; 41 Digest 859, 7257.
- (9) Fardon v. Harcourt Rivington, (1932), 146 L.T. 391; Digest Supp.
- (10) Grant v. Sun Shipping Co., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 238; [1948] A.C. 549.

A APPEAL by the defendants, London Passenger Transport Board, from a decision of the Court of Appeal (COHEN and ASQUITH, L.JJ., LORD GREENE, M.R., dissenting), dated July 31, 1947, and reported [1947] 2 All E.R. 509, dismissing the defendants' appeal from a judgment of HUMPHREYS, J., in an action brought by the plaintiffs, a husband and wife, claiming damages for injuries received by the female plaintiff when she was knocked down by one of the defendants' motor omnibuses. HUMPHREYS, J., apportioned the negligence equally between the driver of the omnibus and the female plaintiff, and, having assessed the damages at £500, awarded the plaintiff £250 and costs. The Court of Appeal dismissed the defendants' appeal from this order on the ground that the omnibus driver was in breach of reg. 3 of the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, and that the breach had contributed to the accident. The House of Lords now dismissed an appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and Armstrong-Jones for the appellants.

Russell Vick, K.C., I. F. Reuben and Aarvold for the respondents.

C The House took time for consideration.

Dec. 9. The following opinions were read.

D LORD PORTER: My Lords, this appeal raises certain questions as to what constitutes negligence at common law in the case of the driver of an omnibus in approaching and passing over a pedestrian crossing, and a further question on the construction of and obligations imposed by the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 397).

E The case was tried by HUMPHREYS, J., in the first instance and he found the driver of the omnibus guilty of negligence at common law. In the Court of Appeal ([1947] 2 All E.R. 509) COHEN and ASQUITH, L.JJ., reversed this finding but held the driver guilty of a breach of the regulations. LORD GREENE, M.R., dissented and attached neither blame nor liability to the driver or the appellants. The facts have been found by and are best taken from the judgment of HUMPHREYS, J. (ibid., 513). They are as follows:

F "This action arises out of an accident which took place on Nov. 23, 1945, in Baker Street, that part of Baker Street where it is crossed by Blandford Street. That crossing is controlled from one side of Baker Street to the other by traffic lights. There is also a refuge in the road at the centre line and there is a pedestrian crossing. The plaintiff was minded to cross Baker Street from the north eastern corner to the north western corner and she proposed to cross by the refuge. She did that by walking on the pedestrian crossing and, as far as I can see, in the middle of the crossing. She had to walk a distance from the kerb to the nearest point of the refuge about 17 ft. 9 ins. She safely negotiated something like 15 ft. of that 17 ft. 9 ins. and then she was knocked down and injured by one of the defendants' omnibuses which was coming south down Baker Street, and she was knocked down by the offside front wing of that omnibus. I ought to say here that there was a taxicab drawn up actually with its wheels on the pedestrian crossing. There was, in fact, blocking that pedestrian crossing, or part of it, a taxicab which was drawn up quite close to the kerb, and the evidence was that the taxi driver was off his seat, having stopped there to pick up a fare . . . The effect of that, of course, was that, as far as the plaintiff was concerned, her view of the oncoming traffic, the traffic dangerous from her point of view, i.e., the south-bound traffic in Baker Street, was masked by the width of the taxicab. I do not think it was given in evidence, but I suppose 5 ft. is a reasonable amount to assume as the width of the taxicab. In the same way the view which the omnibus driver would have of her when she was on the pedestrian crossing would also be masked 5 ft."

The learned judge accepted the evidence of the driver that he was going 15 miles an hour and held that that was a perfectly reasonable pace, found that the lights were in his favour, that he first saw the respondent after she emerged from behind the taxicab at about the middle of his part of the crossing and at about a distance of 9 ft., that he braked hard and eased off to the left a little but could not turn far, because to have done so would have been to hit the refuge in the centre of the crossing, and that he had his omnibus under perfect control. The driver also said, and HUMPHREYS, J., accepted his evidence, that the respondent did not look as if she saw him, that he doubted if an accident could have been avoided even if she had been looking, and, in reply to a question put in cross-examination, that he knew people do cross against the lights, "they will do it and it is a thing you look out for." From the evidence of the conductor, who appears to have seen the appellant hurrying across the pavement before she was hidden by the taxicab, and of a lady passenger who spoke to seeing the appellant hesitating on the pavement and then plunging across the street, the learned judge concluded that the appellant's movements across the pavement before she reached the taxicab should have been observed by the driver. I do not think it necessary to quote further the findings of the learned judge inasmuch as those already given are the salient facts in the case. In these circumstances HUMPHREYS, J., did not think it necessary to come to a definite conclusion as to the result of the regulations of 1941 but found both the lady and the driver guilty of negligence at common law, the lady because she failed to take the precaution of looking to see whether the lights were green or red, and the driver because :

" . . . he knew that, although the lights were in his favour, people might cross, and he knew and recognised that an omnibus driver . . . is not entitled to run people down on a pedestrian crossing . . . on the ground that the pedestrian is so negligent that, therefore he can run him down."

Therefore, the omnibus driver ought to have been on the look-out to see whether there was anybody approaching the taxicab who was apparently about to pass in front of it and might be expected to appear on the crossing just about the time the driver got there. The learned judge continued :

" He did not see her. Two witnesses for the defendants said they did see her, she was perfectly plain to be seen, hurrying towards the kerb obviously with the intention of crossing. I think the driver plainly exhibited that form of negligence, negative negligence, which consisted in not seeing that there was something which was going to result in danger to a pedestrian who was lawfully in the road on that crossing."

My Lords, I have quoted the learned judge's words somewhat fully because, as it seems to me, the facts as found by him and those on which the case was argued before your Lordships were not quite the same. Before your Lordships, counsel for the respondents, as I understood them, laid little emphasis on the suggestion that the lady should have been seen by the driver hurrying across the pavement before she reached the taxicab. What they did say was that the driver should have anticipated that some person who, owing to the presence of the taxicab could not be seen, might negligently try to pass over the crossing, and that the driver should have driven slowly enough to enable him to pull up before reaching the crossing in case such an eventuality occurred. In the Court of Appeal, however, reliance appears to have been placed on the facts as found by the learned judge and they were dealt with by LORD GREENE, M.R., when he said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 512) :

" . . . the fact that, if the driver had looked in that direction, he would have seen the plaintiff is no ground for saying that it was his duty to look in that direction. The fact that a driver could have seen something if he had looked is, of course, conclusive against him when he was under a duty to look. To say that he was under a duty to look because, if he had looked, he would have seen, is, with respect, entirely to misunderstand the nature and foundation of the duty to keep a proper lookout."

A My Lords, if the driver could and ought to have seen the female respondent hurrying towards the crossing before she reached the taxicab and to have anticipated that she was about to, or might, hasten across the crossing, and did not do so, undoubtedly he would be guilty of negligence at common law. With all respect to the learned judge, however, I cannot think that the evidence justified such a finding. It is true that the conductor with a free mind and an eye unconcentrated on the highway did see her at that moment, but the other independent witness spoke rather to her hovering on the kerb, undecided whether to cross or not. In any case there is no evidence of the number of pedestrians on the side-walk and both conductor and witness were at least 14 ft. behind the driver and may well have seen what was invisible to him owing to the obstruction of the taxicab.

C I think that the driver must be acquitted of any negligence in failing to see the female respondent before she disappeared from view behind the taxicab. Was he, then, negligent in not anticipating that some unseen person would suddenly emerge in front of the taxicab, in spite of the fact that the lights were in favour of the bus? I cannot take such a view. It is true that the taxicab obstructed some 5 ft. of the crossing and that it and a refuge in the middle of the road hampered the driver's freedom of movement, but he had a signal in his favour, was going at a moderate speed, and, to my mind, should no more be expected to anticipate that anyone would cross against the lights than that someone would suddenly emerge from behind a vehicle drawn up at the side of the road at a place where there was no pedestrian crossing. In neither case do I think that it matters that the manoeuvring space had been narrowed by a taxicab on one side and a refuge on the other. In my view, a foot passenger at a pedestrian crossing with the lights against her is, at least, in no better position than such a person crossing the road at any uncontrolled spot. A driver must, of course, keep a proper look-out even for negligent pedestrians, but, short of proceeding at a walking pace—and even that may not be enough—it is hardly possible to be certain of avoiding accidents where the injured party is guilty of gross negligence. Moreover, it must be remembered (i) that foot passengers, too, have a duty to perform and, in particular, that by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 45 (4):

G "A failure on the part of any person to observe any provision of the highway code . . . may in any proceedings . . . be relied upon by any party to the proceedings as tending to . . . negative any liability which is in question in those proceedings."

(ii) that para. 98 of the Highway Code, which was in force at the material time, reads:

H "At controlled crossings, i.e., wherever traffic is controlled by police or signals, cross the road only when the appropriate line of traffic is held up."

(iii) that the driver was entitled to place some reliance on these provisions. Speaking for myself, I can find no step taken by the driver which constitutes a negligent act.

There remains, however, the effect of the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941. They are ill-drafted and ill-considered, but, such as they are, effect must be given to them. The relevant regulations are regs. 3, 4 and 5, and are in the following terms:

"3. The driver of every vehicle approaching a crossing shall, unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon, proceed at such a speed as to be able if necessary to stop before reaching such crossing. 4. The driver of every vehicle at or approaching a crossing where traffic is not for the time being controlled by a police constable or by light signals shall allow free and uninterrupted passage to any foot passenger who is on the carriageway at such crossing, and every such foot passenger shall have precedence over all vehicular traffic at such crossing. 5. The driver of every vehicle at or approaching a crossing at a road intersection where traffic is for the time being controlled by a police constable or by light signals shall allow free and uninterrupted passage to every foot passenger who has started to go over the crossing before the driver receives a signal that he may proceed over the crossing."

Of these regulations, reg. 3 states the general duty of a driver when approaching a crossing, regs. 4 and 5 state the duty which he owes to foot passengers when he is at or approaching a crossing and they have stepped off the pavement. In considering its application to this case, reg. 5 is, perhaps, most material in its negative implications, i.e., it enacts that uninterrupted passage is to be allowed to everyone who has started to go over the crossing before the light turns green, and, inferentially, declares that such passage need not be given once the light has turned green. But I do not think that reg. 5 overrides reg. 3 even at a controlled crossing, and reg. 4 is not applicable to the present case. What then is the true effect of reg. 3? If it is to be taken in its most literal sense, vehicles would have to come to a dead stop at every pedestrian crossing, inasmuch as, however slowly they were going, someone might step in front of them at the last moment and so be injured. Such a construction would make nonsense of the regulation, and, therefore, it is necessary to consider whether so strict an interpretation must be put on it.

Two questions arise as to the interpretation of the wording and were argued before your Lordships, viz., (i) What is an approaching vehicle? and (ii) What is to be regarded as the moment at which the driver must be able to see that there is no foot passenger on the crossing? A vehicle, the appellants contended, must cease to be an approaching vehicle at some point, and that point must be that at which, if going at a reasonable speed, the driver could stop before reaching the crossing. If this were not so, he must decrease his speed at every crossing until he has reached a state of immobility when he arrives at the studs. My Lords, if this result necessarily followed I should hesitate unless compelled to reject the contention, but the wording is against such a construction. The word "approaching" is used in regs. 4 and 5 as well as in reg. 3, and in regs. 4 and 5 in conjunction with the word "at." In the first place, it is unlikely that "approaching" should be used in two separate senses in the three successive regulations, and, in the second, I find it difficult to accept the view that there are three states in the progress of a vehicle — "approaching," "at," and some intermediate and indeterminate stage when it is neither at nor approaching the crossing. The safeguard to the driver, in my view, comes, not from a narrowed construction of the word "approaching," but from a correct appreciation of the meaning of the phrase "unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon." When must he so see? Not, I think, up till the very moment he reaches the studs. If so late a time were taken, he would again be under the disability of having to slow down to a stop on each occasion that he intended to pass over a crossing. The regulations do not specify the distance between him and the crossing at which his ability to see must be tested, and, therefore, I think, it must be at a reasonable distance. DU PARCQ, L.J., adverted to this approach to the matter in his dissenting judgment in Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board (1) when he said ([1938] 4 All E.R. 866):

A “It is, I think, a reasonable view that, if a motorist, keeping a good look out, and going at such a speed that he can pull up in a few feet, sees a foot passenger come upon the crossing so late that it is impossible for the car to stop before reaching the crossing, the motorist will not be guilty of a breach of the regulations. It might fairly be said on his behalf that he ‘could see that there was no foot passenger on the crossing’ down to the last moment when he could reasonably expect a foot passenger to be there, and that he did all that in him lay to ‘allow free and uninterrupted passage to any foot passenger who was on the carriageway at such crossing’.”

Earlier the learned Lord Justice said (ibid.) :

B “The words ‘approaching a crossing’ in reg. 3 refer, in my view, not to a point 100 or 50 yds. from the crossing, but to the space which begins, say, 15 or 20 ft. from the crossing.”

C My Lords, I have quoted from this judgment because I find myself in general agreement with the principle that the moment at which the motorist must be able to see whether the crossing is clear or not does not continue until the crossing itself is reached, but with profound respect I am unable to accept the suggestion that the distance up to which the crossing must be observed to be empty persists up to a few feet or, for that matter, 15 or 20 ft. I think the true position is that the motorist must be able to see whether the crossing is clear or not up to the time when, going at the speed he is going, provided it is a reasonable speed, he would still be able to stop before reaching the crossing. D This view appears to me to be in accordance with that held by SCOTT and MACKINNON, L.JJ., as expressed in Chisholm’s case (1), and, if I may adopt the method of exposition of MACKINNON, L.J., if a motorist proceeding at x miles per hour, whatever that speed may be, provided it is a reasonable speed, can stop in y yards, he must see that the crossing is clear until he has approached to a stop within that distance. If he does not or cannot do so, E he has committed an offence against the regulations. But he has not broken them if someone steps on the crossing after he has reached such a spot. This construction of the regulation does, I think, make it workable, and is not inconsistent with Bailey v. Geddes (2) and Knight v. Samson (3) which deals with the effect of the regulations.

F Applying that principle to the present case, it leaves the driver of the omnibus guilty of a breach of the regulations because, in my opinion, had he had a clear view of the crossing uninterrupted by the presence of the taxicab, he could, going at the speed he was going, have pulled up in time. In other words, before he had reached the spot at which it was no longer incumbent on him to see that the crossing was clear, his vision was hindered by the taxicab, and his inability to see whether there was or was not anyone on the crossing at G that moment was, in my view, the cause of the accident. As it was, though he could not see the female respondent until after she emerged from in front of the taxicab, he almost managed to stop before reaching the crossing, and so to avoid the accident. Had he had the second or so more time which would have been afforded him by seeing her step on to the crossing, he would have been able to avoid it. I should dismiss the appeal.

H LORD WRIGHT : My Lords, the female respondent (whom I shall hereafter refer to as “the respondent”) was seriously injured when run into by a motor omnibus belonging to the appellants, on Nov. 23, 1945, in Baker Street, where it is intersected by Blandford Street. The accident took place on a pedestrian crossing controlled by lights under the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, made under the Road Traffic Act, 1934, s. 18. I shall hereafter refer to them as “the regulations.” The crossing which was from the north east side of Baker Street to the north west side was divided in the centre by an island or refuge. The distance from the eastern kerb to the side of the refuge was 17 ft. 9 ins. The collision occurred in daylight, the day being fine and clear. The respondent was knocked down by the appellants' omnibus when she had traversed the crossing to within 2 ft. of the refuge. She was struck by the offside wing of the omnibus which was coming southwards down Baker Street and was proceeding at the rate of about 15 miles an hour. The driver did not see the respondent until she was about 9 ft. from him. He actually stopped the vehicle with its front wheels still on the crossing, but was unable to avoid a collision. The driver's view of the roadway of the crossing was obscured as to part because a stationary taxicab was drawn up on the crossing, close to the eastern kerb. The cab was about 5 ft. in width. The driver could not, therefore, to the extent of that space, see whether the crossing was free of pedestrians until he saw the respondent when she stepped beyond the taxicab, and when, as already stated, she was about 9 ft. away from him. At the time the green light was showing, so that the control was in his favour. HUMPHREYS, J., the trial judge, held that the appellants' driver was to blame for not being on the look-out to see whether there was anybody who might come out in front of the taxicab after passing it. The judge did not think it necessary to discuss the regulations. He also held that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence for not looking at the lights which controlled the traffic before she emerged past the cab. He assessed the damages at £500 and apportioned the blame equally between the two parties. In the Court of Appeal, LORD GREENE, M.R., was for holding that the respondent was solely to blame. He was also prepared to hold that the appellants' driver was not in fault either for common law negligence or for breach of the regulations which I shall discuss later, but the majority of the court, while agreeing with the judge that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence, which, indeed, was not contested before this House, held the appellants liable for breach of the regulations. Before your Lordships, this latter was the issue primarily argued. Some confusion was introduced throughout because reg. 3 was not expressly pleaded, but the majority of the Court of Appeal held that, as the substance of the matter was set out, the issue was open, and the majority of the Court of Appeal were prepared to decide the case on it. I read their decision as being based on the breach of reg. 3, as a separate and independent cause of action, subject, however, to reduction of the damages :

“ . . . to such extent as the court thinks just and equitable having regard to the claimant's share in the responsibility for the damage.”

Such is now the effect of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, s. 1 (1) which takes the place of the previous rule of the common law that a person's claim would be defeated if the damage were partly due to his own fault and partly to the fault of the defendant. It was under the old rule that previous cases of this character were decided, as e.g., the latest of the series cited, Sparks v. Edward Ash, Ltd. (4). It had been recognised in that and the earlier decisions that contributory negligence of the plaintiff might be a material issue on which a defendant might rely by way of defence in cases of breach of the Traffic Regulations. But whereas in Sparks' case (4) it was, if established, a defence in toto, under the Act of 1945, it is now a defence pro tanto. The Act introduced into the common law the rule long ago adopted in the Admiralty Court where there is a finding of “both to blame.” In such Admiralty cases this House has said that, where the findings of fact in the court below are not reversed in the appellate courts and the decision that both vessels are to blame stands, the case in which an appellate tribunal will undertake to revise the distribution of blame will be rare. So it was stated by VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., ([1943] 1 All E.R. 34) in British Fame (Owners) v. Macgregor (Owners), The Macgregor (5). I apprehend that your Lordships will think that the same rule or practice which has thus been adopted for sea collisions will be applied in the case of land collisions. The trial judge is in a much better position to decide such questions of distribution than an appellate court save in exceptional cases. I think that this course should be adopted in the present case. It is true that there is a distinction where the respondent's contributory negligence falls within the class of ordinary common law negligence, and where the appellants' responsibility can be based on the breach of a statutory obligation, but both would fall within the language of s. 1 of the Act of 1945. Each

- A has reference to the same type of damage, and each party shares in the responsibility for the damage because, in the words of the section, the damage is the result partly of the respondent's own fault and partly of the appellants' fault. The words of the section are thus equally appropriate to the common law liability and to the statutory responsibility. In Sparks' case (4), GODDARD, L.J., sitting in the Court of Appeal, observed ([1943] 1 All E.R. 12) that, in view of what was held in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (6) in regard to breaches of a statutory duty, he could not see the difference between one statute and another, and compared the provisions of the Factory Acts with the regulations made under the Road Traffic Acts. He described the action in Caswell's case (6) as a common law action based on the statute intended to protect the workman, and similarly, he said, an action based on the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Provisional Regulations, 1935 [the regulations in question in Sparks' case (4)] was based on a statutory regulation intended to protect the pedestrian and (adopting the old expression) was equally an action on the case in which damage was the gist of the action. He went on to say that the question for the court was whether the damage was caused by the defendant's breach of the statutory regulations. Now, since the Act of 1945, he would say "was caused in whole or in part."

I think that the authorities such as Caswell's case (6), Lewis v. Denye (7) and Sparks' case (4) show clearly that a claim for damages for breach of a statutory duty intended to protect a person in the position of the particular plaintiff is a specific common law right which is not to be confused in essence with a claim for negligence. The statutory right has its origin in the statute, but the particular remedy of an action for damages is given by the common law in order to make effective for the benefit of the injured plaintiff his right to the performance by the defendant of the defendant's statutory duty. It is an effective sanction. It is not a claim in negligence in the strict or ordinary sense. As I said ([1939] 3 All E.R. 739) in Caswell's case (6) :

- F "I do not think that an action for breach of a statutory duty such as that in question is completely or accurately described as an action in negligence. It is a common law action based on the purpose of the statute to protect the workman, and belongs to the category often described as that of cases of strict or absolute liability. At the same time it resembles actions in negligence in that the claim is based on a breach of a duty to take care for the safety of the workman."

- G But, whatever the resemblances, it is essential to keep in mind the fundamental differences of the two classes of claim. Here I shall, perhaps, be guilty of hypercriticism if I were to quarrel with the expression of ASQUITH, L.J., in the Court of Appeal ([1947] 2 All E.R. 516) that the common law duty is enhanced by the duty contained in the regulations. One duty does not, in truth, enhance the other, though the same damage may be caused by action which might equally be characterised as ordinary negligence at common law or as breach of the statutory duty. On the other hand, the damage may be due either to negligence or to breach of the statutory duty. In the present case ASQUITH, L.J., decided, as I understand, in favour of the respondent, not on the ground of negligence, which he did not find, but specifically on the ground of breach of statutory duty. There is, I think, a logical distinction which accords with what I regard as the correct view that the causes of action are different. It follows that the correct pleading would be to allege each cause of action separately so as to avoid the confusion which seems to me to have crept in at certain points of these proceedings. I have desired before I deal specifically with the regulations to make it clear how, in my judgment, they should be approached, and also to make it clear that a claim for their breach may stand or fall independently of a claim for negligence. There is always a danger, if the claim is not sufficiently specific, that the due consideration of the claim for breach of statutory duty may be prejudiced if it is confused with the claim in negligence.

The Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, may now be considered. Of these reg. 3 is most directly relevant. It is in the following terms :

"The driver of every vehicle approaching a crossing shall, unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon, proceed at such a speed as to be able, if necessary, to stop before reaching such crossing."

Regulation 3 clearly deals with either controlled or uncontrolled crossings. Then comes reg. 4, which reads as follows :

"The driver of every vehicle at or approaching a crossing where traffic is not for the time being controlled by a police constable or by light signals shall allow free and uninterrupted passage to any foot passenger who is on the carriageway at such crossing, and every such foot passenger shall have precedence over all vehicular traffic at such crossing."

Regulation 5 deals with a controlled crossing and is in these terms :

"The driver of every vehicle at or approaching a crossing at a road intersection where traffic is for the time being controlled by a police constable or by light signals shall allow free and uninterrupted passage to every foot passenger who has started to go over the crossing before the driver receives a signal that he may proceed over the crossing."

Regulation 6 contains a general prohibition of a vehicle stopping on the crossing and reg. 7 forbids a foot passenger from delaying on the crossing.

The respondent's principal case is that there was a breach by the appellants' driver of reg. 3. It has been found that the driver did not proceed on "approaching" the crossing so as to be able to stop before reaching the crossing. The taxicab unlawfully drawn up on the crossing prevented the driver from seeing that there was no foot passenger on it. Hence he was bound to proceed at a pace which would enable him, if necessary, to stop before reaching the crossing. The driver was, indeed, proceeding at a reasonable rate apart from the regulation, but he was, in fact, unable to stop before reaching the crossing and, in consequence, he hit and injured the respondent. She was, indeed, herself negligent in coming out beyond the taxicab without sufficiently considering the green light and the approaching traffic. She made a miscalculation—it is true it was comparatively venial, because she got across to within 2 ft. of the refuge before she was struck. That was her contributory negligence. But the driver's failure to obey reg. 3 caused, or contributed to, the accident. It was not admeed by the miscalculation on the part of the respondent ; that only goes here to reduce the amount of her recovery under s. 1 of the Act of 1945. The driver's breach of the statutory duty was sufficient to impose liability pro tanto. The only word in the regulation which has made me pause is the word "approaching." The word connotes some, but an indefinite, degree of proximity. It must be reasonably applied because it may, perhaps must, involve interference with the flow of traffic, which can only be justified so far as necessary to promote the purpose of saving the lives and limbs of the public. Regulation 4 obviously distinguishes between "at" and "approaching," as does reg. 5 also. These regulations deal separately with uncontrolled and controlled crossings, whereas reg. 3 deals with both types without qualification. But they are important to some extent in considering reg. 3. They give a terminus ad quem for the word "approaching." But the point of time or place at which the duty to regulate the speed attaches is not defined. That, I think, must be left to the judgment of the court, which has to decide what a reasonable driver would do in the particular facts of the case, so far as the regulation is not specific. I find valuable guidance in some observations made by DU PARCQ, L.J., sitting in the Court of Appeal, in Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board (1) in the course of a powerful dissenting judgment, with the reasoning of which I substantially agree. He said ([1938] 4 All E.R. 866):

"The words 'approaching a crossing' in reg. 3 refer, in my view, not to a point 100 yds. or 50 yds. from the crossing, but to the space which begins, say, 15 ft. or 20 ft. from the crossing. It is when a driver enters on that final piece of roadway that, unless he can then see that there is no foot passenger on the crossing, he must be prepared to proceed at a speed which will enable him to stop before reaching the crossing . . . Nevertheless any construction of reg. 3 which was more generous to the motorist, even if the words of the regulation could bear it—as, in my view, they cannot—would encourage him to ignore reg. 4, which contains the important words 'at or approaching a crossing,' and gives precedence at the crossing, not to the motorist, but to the foot passenger."

If the driver, whether "at or approaching" the crossing, sees any foot passenger on it, he must give him precedence. If he cannot see any foot passenger when approaching, he must moderate his speed as required by the regulations. If he has complied with reg. 3 in the particular contingency which it contemplates, he is void of offence under reg. 3. It may be that cases within reg. 3 are comparatively rare, but where there are such cases reg. 3 is imperative and mandatory, though it still leaves open the issue of the contributory negligence of the foot passenger. He is not given a licence to neglect any reasonable precaution for his own safety, though the law does not forbid him to traverse a crossing with the light against him if he can do so safely. That may also be an important question on the issue whether the breach of reg. 3 can be treated in any particular case as in whole or in part causing the accident. It is only if that is found that a plaintiff's action for damages can succeed. He must show (i) breach of the regulation, (ii) damage caused by it. I agree with the reasoning of COHEN, L.J., for his decision that the driver acted in breach of reg. 3 and that such breach was a contributory cause of the accident. I think also that COHEN, L.J., dealt sufficiently and satisfactorily with the decisions cited to your Lordships, and I do not feel obliged to deal further with them in detail. I share the regrets of ASQUITH, L.J., arising from the insufficiency of the pleading. He felt, however, entitled, having regard to the course of the proceedings, to treat the pleading as having been amended. I ought to add that I agree with LORD DU PARCQ in criticising, in the opinion which he is about to deliver, the passages which he quotes from the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in the present case. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

LORD UTHWATT [read by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON]: My Lords, at the hearing of the appeal the appellants' counsel stated his willingness that the case should be dealt with as if the pleadings had specifically alleged that the driver of the omnibus had broken the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, reg. 3, and had thereby injured the female respondent. On that basis the appeal must, in my opinion, fail.

First, it is clear that the duty arising under reg. 3 was imposed with a view to protecting persons on the crossings therein referred to from the peril of approaching vehicles. The female respondent can rest her claim, therefore, merely on a breach of that duty directly causing damage to her when on the crossing. It is not necessary for her to prove negligence on the part of the driver or an aggressive act directed against her. Next, the female respondent was on such a crossing as is referred to in reg. 3, for it is idle to suggest that a crossing controlled by lights ceases to be a crossing within the meaning of reg. 3 when the lights show green to on-coming traffic. Lastly, at no point of time could the driver see that there was no foot passenger on the crossing and at all times (until the female respondent emerged to his view when he was some 9 ft. from the crossing) he kept his speed of 15 miles an hour. I cannot see how, on any construction of the phrase "vehicle approaching a crossing," the driver can be acquitted of a breach of the regulation directly causing the injury suffered by the female respondent. The question of the proper construction of reg. 3 was, however, debated before your Lordships and on that question I desire to express my general agreement with the observations of DU PARCQ, L.J., in Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board (1). I differ only from him—I doubt whether there is between us more than a difference of expression—in that I think that the speed of the vehicle, as well as its distance from the crossing, should be taken into account in determining the point at which the vehicle begins to be an "approaching" vehicle. I would prefer to fix that point at the place at which, on a common sense view, the crossing first emerges as a possible obstacle to further safe progress by that vehicle if it continued to proceed at its then speed. If the driver at any time after the vehicle has become an approaching vehicle is unable to see that there is no foot passenger on the crossing, he has, subject only to the application of the principle, lex non cogit ad impossibilia, broken the regulation if the speed of his vehicle is not at that time such as to enable him, if necessary, to stop before reaching the crossing. The necessity of complying with the regulation is a matter which at all points of time the driver must bear in mind. The difficulties attending compliance with the regulation are, I think, easily exaggerated, for drivers can keep a look-out to the sides of the road as well as to the front. Undoubtedly, however, cases might well occur where, consistently with reading the regulation as directed to regulating the movement of traffic and not to stopping traffic (and, I think, it ought to be so read), it is impossible in any rational sense to comply with it. In such cases, the principle as to impossibility, the limits of which will be found stated in The Generous (8), takes the matter outside the purview of the regulation.

In the view that I have formed, it is not necessary for me to deal with the question of negligence. I desire only to register my dissent from the view expressed by LORD GREENE, M.R. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 512) that drivers are :

" . . . entitled to drive on the assumption that other users of the road, whether drivers or pedestrians, would behave with reasonable care . . . "

It is common experience that many do not. A driver is not, of course, bound to anticipate folly in all its forms, but he is not, in my opinion, entitled to put out of consideration the teachings of experience as to the form those follies commonly take. I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, the learned counsel for the appellants invited your Lordships to deal with this appeal on the footing that, notwithstanding the omission of any reference to the material statutory regulations in the statement of claim, the respondents were entitled to rely on any breach of them which the evidence established. Even without this invitation it would, I think, have been difficult for your Lordships to dispose of the appeal without regard to these regulations. To attempt to do so would be to shut one's eyes to considerations which are both relevant and important.

I hope that I shall not be thought to be lacking in respect for the forcibly expressed dissenting judgment of the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS when I say that it seems to me to be beyond doubt that the driver of the appellants' omnibus was guilty of a breach of the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, reg. 3. I agree with the majority in the Court of Appeal that there is no justification for the suggestion that a crossing controlled by lights ceases to be "a crossing" within reg. 3 while a green light is being shown to on-coming traffic. There is nothing in the context to make possible a construction which does such violence to the language of regs. 2 and 3, and I should not feel justified in refusing to give the words their ordinary meaning even if it seemed difficult to suppose that the Minister could have intended them to bear it. I find no such difficulty here. It must be agreed, I think, that one object of these regulations is to save foot passengers from injury and, since foot passengers are not prohibited from using a "pedestrian crossing-place" controlled by lights even when a green light is being shown to on-coming traffic, though it is sometimes negligent and often perilous for them to do so, it does not seem to me to be surprising that the Minister should think that the lives and limbs even of persons who may have been careless should to some extent be protected.

When once it is granted that the respondent, Mrs. Upson, was on "a crossing" (within the meaning of reg. 3) when she was knocked down by the appellants' omnibus, consequences follow which I find so clearly stated by COHEN, L.J., that I will borrow his language. The Lord Justice said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 515) :

"On the evidence it is plain that at all material times the presence of the stationary taxicab prevented the driver having an uninterrupted view of the whole of the crossing. That being so, it was impossible for him to see that there was no foot passenger thereon, and it was, therefore, his duty under the regulation to proceed at such a speed as to be able, if necessary, to stop before reaching the crossing. On the driver's own evidence he saw the plaintiff when she was 9 ft. away from the omnibus, and when he stopped the front wheels of the omnibus were on the crossing. Had he been driving at such a pace as to enable him to stop short of the crossing, it must, in my opinion, follow that he could have stopped within these 9 ft."

This brief statement, to my mind, disposes of the appellants' case. It is right, however, in deference to the opinion of LORD GREENE, M.R., that I should state my reasons for respectfully differing from him.

My Lords, the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS has stated with great clarity a view of the law of negligence which, in my opinion, ought not to receive the approval of your Lordships' House. The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 511) :

"The driver of the omnibus was entitled to assume that the plaintiff, like other pedestrians, would conform to common sense and ordinary care in the presence of an adverse signal, particularly in view of the provisions of the Highway Code."

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS then quoted the instruction to pedestrians in para. 98 of the Highway Code in force at the material time, by which they are advised "at controlled crossings . . ." to "cross the road only when the appropriate line of traffic is held up." Dealing with the admitted fact that the appellants' driver was well aware that foot passengers do frequently use a crossing when the lights are in favour of the vehicular traffic on the road, LORD GREENE, M.R., said (ibid., 512) :

" . . . the fact that a driver knows that other people on occasions do things that no careful driver would be expected to anticipate does not mean that he is under a duty to anticipate such action."

It followed from these premises that the appellants' driver was entitled to drive on the assumption that no pedestrian would disobey the light signal. The presence of the taxicab which obscured his view made no difference.

There was no evidence of negligence. Therefore, as the alleged breach of regulation was "relied on as evidence of negligence and nothing more," the case against the appellants failed. My Lords, if the premises are granted, this reasoning is impeccable, but I do not accept the premises as sound. It is assumed in them that a pedestrian is disobeying an adverse signal if he crosses a light-controlled "pedestrian crossing" at a time when the green light is signalling to vehicular traffic permission to advance, whereas, in truth, the pedestrian is under no legal compulsion to keep off the crossing at such a time, and the signal is never "adverse" to him in the sense that it prohibits him from crossing. The most that can be said is that he often takes a risk, which may be such that it is negligent to take it, if he crosses when the traffic is not being held up. If he crosses while the traffic is being permitted to proceed, he deprives himself, to some extent, of the special protection which the "pedestrian crossing" is designed to give to pedestrians. He does not, however, lose the protection which reg. 3 affords. Apart from this assumption, the propositions advanced by the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS do not, I think, accord with the law as it has been laid down in your Lordships' House. The correct principle was stated by LORD DUNEDIN in Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington (9) when he said (146 L.T. 392):

"If the possibility of the danger emerging is reasonably apparent, then to take no precautions is negligence; but if the possibility of danger emerging is only a mere possibility which would never occur to the mind of a reasonable man, then there is no negligence in not having taken extraordinary precautions."

I regard this statement and that of LORD MACMILLAN in the same case, which was to the like effect, as applying generally to actions in which the negligence alleged is an omission to take due care for the safety of others. It must follow that (if I may repeat what I said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 247) in Grant v. Sun Shipping Co., Ltd. (10) in this House):

"... a prudent man will guard against the possible negligence of others, when experience shows such negligence to be common."

The driver of the appellants' omnibus agreed in cross-examination that he knew "... that people in London have a habit of crossing a road when the lights are not in their favour."

Even apart from the duty imposed on him by the regulations, he was, therefore, bound to take precautions against the possibility that some person was concealed from his view by the stationary cab and might suddenly emerge from its protection. On this ground alone, it must at least be said that there was evidence to support the conclusion that the driver had failed to take reasonable care for the safety of others and was, therefore, negligent. A driver is never entitled to assume that people will not do what his experience and common sense teach him that they are, in fact, likely to do. It is true that in some circumstances it is not reasonably possible for a driver to do anything to save a pedestrian from the consequences of the pedestrian's own act, just as the pedestrian can sometimes truly say that, although he knows that drivers are sometimes negligent, he could not reasonably have been expected to avoid the particular act of negligence which has caused him injury. These are questions for a jury, but I must say, with all respect, that a direction to a jury in the terms of the propositions enunciated by the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS would be, in my opinion, unduly favourable to a defendant driver.

Another reason given by the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS for his opinion that the decision of HUMPHREYS, J., should be reversed was that the omnibus had ceased to be an "approaching" vehicle within the meaning of reg. 3 at the moment when the respondent stepped on the crossing. He said, relying on certain observations made in the Court of Appeal in Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board (1) that, if there had been no taxicab on the crossing, the omnibus would not at that moment have been an "approaching" vehicle, and argued that it could not be said to be an "approaching" vehicle merely because there was a taxicab there which obscured the omnibus driver's view. My Lords, it is never very satisfactory to consider a case on the hypothesis that its facts were other than we know them to have been. The words in reg. 3, A "unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon," are important words. When the reason why a driver cannot see that there is no one on the crossing is that his view is obscured, it seems to me that his duty under the regulation is plain. He must go at such a speed that, if someone emerges from behind the obstruction even at the last moment, he can stop. This, no doubt, B means that he must approach a crossing very slowly when (as in this case) the driver of some other vehicle has caused it to stop on a crossing, either lawfully in an emergency, or illegally in contravention of reg. 6. If he approaches the crossing slowly and, if no danger is apparent when he reaches it, crosses it slowly, he will have complied with the regulations. I think that the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, in his reference to Chisholm's case (1), was, naturally and C properly, if I may say so, disregarding the observations which I made in a dissenting judgment, and following the guidance given him by SCOTT, L.J., and MACKINNON, L.J. I hope, however, that I may be forgiven, especially as counsel at your Lordships' Bar were agreed that the opinion as to a driver's duty which I had expressed was correct, if I say that I still adhere to it. SCOTT, L.J., in one passage of his judgment ([1938] 4 All E.R. 859), suggested D that a pedestrian might reasonably essay to cross at a pedestrian crossing if the nearest approaching car was 50 to 70 yds. away. If by this the Lord Justice meant that it would necessarily be negligent to cross if a car were at a less distance from the crossing than 50 yds., and that the driver of the approaching car would not then be at all to blame if he collided with the pedestrian, I think that his dictum might give some support to the present E appellants' case. I would, however, respectfully dissent from it, if it is to be so construed. If it were generally accepted and acted on, no greater protection would be given to a foot passenger on a crossing, even an "uncontrolled" crossing, than on any other part of the road. Indeed, the foot passenger might be well advised to avoid pedestrian crossings, since most juries, I think, would be disposed in ordinary circumstances to attach some blame to a driver who F failed to avoid a foot passenger crossing the road (not at a pedestrian crossing) in a busy London street if he had seen the foot passenger start to cross considerably less than 50 yds. ahead of the driver's vehicle. I would, however, agree with the latter words of SCOTT, L.J. (ibid.):

" . . . in the case of any crossing where there is a likelihood of pedestrians wanting to cross, all cars ought to reduce to a moderate speed before G they get to a point at which they become 'approaching' cars within reg. 3."

I should myself interpret the words "moderate speed," so far as reg. 3 is concerned, as meaning such a speed as permits them to stop before reaching the crossing. MACKINNON, L.J., expressed his own view of the duty of a driver approaching a crossing in a different way. He assumed (ibid., 862) H that a reasonable speed was x miles an hour, and that at x miles an hour the driver could pull up in y feet. Then, he said, if, when a driver is going at x miles an hour, a pedestrian enters the crossing when the vehicle is less than y ft. away, the driver will not have broken the regulation if he hits the pedestrian. I must respectfully suggest to your Lordships that, notwithstanding the air of mathematical accuracy which the algebraical symbols employed lend to this argument, it is fallacious in so far as it overlooks the fact that no speed is reasonable which is not adjusted to the circumstances of the moment, including the fact that the driver is approaching a pedestrian crossing and may have to pull up quickly and within a very short distance. If the equivalent of x is found with proper regard to what I conceive to be the duty of a driver in such circumstances, the dictum of MacKINNON, L.J., will be innocuous, but it will, in my opinion, give no help to the present appellants. It is, I think, of some importance to notice that in Chisholm's case (1) MacKINNON, L.J., did not hold (as SCOTT, L.J., alone did) that there was no negligence on the part of the driver, and went no further than to say (ibid.) that he was doubtful whether the driver was negligent. The actual decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Chisholm's case (1) was that, in the circumstances of that case, there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. As the law then stood, that was enough to dispose of the case. In the case now before your Lordships, contributory negligence is admitted. The only question before this House is whether the appellants' driver was guilty of some negligence, or of a breach of statutory duty, which was, in part, a direct cause of the respondent's injury. In my opinion, both were proved against him, and this appeal should be dismissed.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, it is conceded by counsel for the appellants that this appeal cannot succeed if it be held that the driver of the omnibus in question committed a breach of the Pedestrian Crossing Places (Traffic) Regulations, 1941, reg. 3, and that such breach caused or contributed to the collision with the female respondent. No general proposition is involved in this concession, which is made only for the purposes of this appeal.

Regulation 3 is in the following terms :

"The driver of every vehicle approaching a crossing shall, unless he can see that there is no foot passenger thereon, proceed at such a speed as to be able if necessary to stop before reaching such crossing."

As a convenient method of considering whether the driver in question committed a breach of reg. 3, I shall propound three questions and supply to each of them an answer which seems to me inevitable, on the admitted facts of the case. (i) Was the driver of the omnibus, during some period before the collision occurred, the driver of a vehicle "approaching a crossing," within the meaning of reg. 3? This question can only be answered in the affirmative, and I agree with the observations of DU PARCQ, L.J. ([1938] 4 All E.R. 866) in Chisholm v. London Passenger Transport Board (1) as to the construction of this regulation. (ii) Could the driver of the omnibus, when his vehicle was approaching the crossing, see that there was no foot passenger on the crossing? To this question, again, I think there can only be one answer, viz., he could not, because a taxicab obstructed his view of the crossing for a width of 5 ft. This is the result of uncontradicted evidence, and for the present purpose it is unnecessary to enter into any discussion of the question whether the female respondent was on the pavement, or on the crossing but concealed by the taxicab, at the time when the omnibus was "approaching" the crossing. It is sufficient that the driver could not see, at that time, whether there was or was not a foot passenger on the crossing. (iii) Did the driver of the omnibus "proceed at such a speed as to be able if necessary to stop before reaching such crossing?" He did not, for it did become necessary for the omnibus to stop before reaching the crossing, but the driver was unable so to stop, and the front wheels of the omnibus were on the crossing when the collision occurred. Whatever may be the precise meaning of the words "if necessary," I feel no doubt that it is "necessary" to stop, within the meaning of the regulation, if the driver must either stop or collide with a foot passenger. Thus, I can see no escape from the conclusion that the driver of the omnibus committed a breach of reg. 3, and I can find nothing in any other of the regulations of 1941 which leads to a contrary conclusion. If this is so, the appeal must fail, as there can be no doubt that the breach of reg. 3 caused or contributed to the accident. If the driver had complied with the regulation, he would have proceeded at such a speed as to be able to stop before reaching the crossing in the event, which happened, of a person emerging from behind the obstructing taxicab.

A

For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal, but, as the question whether the driver was guilty of negligence at common law was fully argued in this House, and as the Court of Appeal differed on this point from HUMPHREYS, J., I add that, in my judgment, there was ample evidence to support the view of HUMPHREYS, J., that this question should be answered in the affirmative.

B

The facts bearing on this question are as follows. (i) The driver did not see the female respondent going across the pavement towards the kerb with the intention of crossing the road. The learned judge based his finding of negligence primarily on this fact, as he was satisfied that, if the driver had kept a proper look-out, he would have seen her. I agree that, if the driver had looked towards the near-side pavement, he would have seen her, but let me assume for the moment that his failure to look in that direction did not, taken by itself, amount to negligence. (ii) Having failed to look towards the near-side pavement as he approached the crossing, the driver came to the crossing without knowing whether there was or was not a person, concealed by the taxicab, who had just stepped off the pavement and was crossing the road.

C

D

In his evidence the driver, a very frank and honest witness, admitted that people in London "have a habit of crossing a road when the lights are not in their favour." Knowing this, and not knowing whether some person would or would not emerge from behind the taxicab, the driver drove into the gap between the taxicab and the refuge in the centre of the road without reducing his speed of 15 miles an hour, and without sounding his horn by way of warning.

E

To my mind, the failure of the driver to keep a look-out on the near-side pavement, coupled with his failure either to slow down or to sound his horn, afford ample evidence to support a finding of negligence at common law. No doubt, wise pedestrians do not cross the road when the lights are in favour of oncoming traffic, but there is no regulation which forbids this, and many pedestrians are unwise. The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS said in the course of his judgment ([1947] 2 All E.R. 511):

F

"The true view, in my opinion, is that a driver approaching a controlled crossing, whether it be controlled by lights or by the police, with the light signal or the police signal in his favour, is entitled to proceed on the assumption that pedestrians will conform to the indications given to them as to what their behaviour should be when the signals are against them, and that he is under no duty to keep a lookout for the possibility of a pedestrian disobeying the signals or to drive upon the assumption that a pedestrian may at any minute do so."

G

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS proceeded (ibid., 512):

H

"But let me not be misunderstood. If a driver approaching such a crossing does, in fact, see that a pedestrian is crossing, or, apparently, is intending to cross against the signals, it is the duty of the driver to do everything that he can reasonably do in the circumstances to avoid running the pedestrian down. Failure to take all reasonable steps to avoid injuring someone who is himself seen to be negligent is itself negligent . . ."

With the later passage I entirely agree, but I am unable to accept the earlier passage without qualification. In particular, I could not accept it as correct in a case such as the present case, where an obstruction on a pedestrian crossing prevents the driver from seeing whether a pedestrian has begun to cross the road against the signals. In such a case, I think that a driver fails to exercise due care, apart altogether from the regulations of 1941, if he proceeds on the assumption that pedestrians will refrain from crossing the road until the lights change, and drives his vehicle in such a way that he cannot avoid an accident if a pedestrian emerges suddenly from behind the obstruction. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: A. H. Grainger (for the appellants); Bryan O'Connor & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LAUDER v. LAUDER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Merriman, P., Singleton, L.J., and Pearce, J.), November 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 1948.]

Cruelty—Injury to health—Sulking by husband.

At times the marriage of the spouses was happy, but the husband was subject to moods and fits of depression, and on these occasions he would sulk and refuse to speak to his wife, ignoring her, sometimes for days on end, both privately and before other people. The husband knew that when he ignored the wife in this way it upset her, and the cumulative effect of this conduct over a number of years had a serious effect on the wife's nervous and emotional stability. The wife petitioned for a divorce on the ground that the husband's conduct amounted to cruelty.

HELD (SINGLETON, L.J., dissentiente): the husband's conduct in thus deliberately and persistently sulking, causing, as it did, injury to the wife's health, constituted cruelty which entitled her to a decree for the dissolution of her marriage.

Principles in Russell v. Russell ([1897] A.C. 395; 77 L.T. 249) applied.

[AS TO CRUELTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 649-654, paras. 954-962; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 281-293, Nos. 2513-2694.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Sagaporack, S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Durham Castle, [1927] A.C. 37; 95 L.J.P. 153; 136 L.T. 33; Digest Supp.
- (2) Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; 176 L.T. 498; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661.
- (4) Jackson v. Jackson, [1924] P. 19; 27 Digest 308, 2852.
- (5) Moss v. Moss, [1916] P. 155; 85 L.J.P. 182; 114 L.T. 1147; 27 Digest 345, 3261.
- (6) Mytton v. Mytton, (1886), 11 P.D. 141; 57 L.T. 92; 50 J.P. 488; 27 Digest 285, 2561.
- (7) Bethune v. Bethune, [1891] P. 205; 60 L.J.P. 18; 63 L.T. 259; 27 Digest 288, 2618.
- (8) Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 187; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319.
- (10) Hadden v. Hadden, The Times, Dec. 5, 1919.
- (11) Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of ORMEROD, J., dated June 24, 1948, granting the wife a decree nisi on the ground of the husband's cruelty.

The husband contended that the conduct complained of did not amount in law to cruelty. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgments of LORD MERRIMAN, P., and SINGLETON, L.J.

Sir Charles Doughty, K.C., and J. G. K. Sheldon for the husband.

Theodore Turner, K.C., and N. Parkes for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P. : This is a husband's appeal against a decision of ORMEROD, J., in which, on a wife's petition on the ground of cruelty, he pronounced a decree nisi in her favour.

The wife alleged a course of conduct (not including any acts of violence) of such a character as to be calculated to injure the wife's health. It is a commonplace to say that cases of that character need, as, indeed, do all cases of cruelty, to be strictly proved, and strictly proved in accordance with the well known definition of cruelty to which I will refer later. There is another principle to be kept in mind when it is sought to set aside the decision of a learned judge who for three days has seen and observed the witnesses. That principle is plainly laid down in The Hontestroom (1) where LORD SUMNER summarised the whole matter in three propositions. After saying ([1927] A.C. 49) : "The only alternative is boldly to ask oneself, which story is the more probable," he continued (ibid.) :

"My Lords, for these reasons I do not propose to re-try this case, nor do I think that the Court of Appeal should have done so. I particularly refrain, and for this reason only, from examining and criticising the judgment of SCRUTTON, L.J., in detail. The material questions to my mind are :

- (1) Does it appear from the President's judgment that he made full judicial use of the opportunity given him by hearing the viva voce evidence ?
- (2) Was there evidence before him, affecting the relative credibility of the witnesses, which would make the exercise of his critical faculties in judging the demeanour of the witnesses a useful and necessary operation ?
- (3) Is there any glaring improbability about the story accepted, sufficient in itself to constitute 'a governing fact, which in relation to others has created a wrong impression,' or any specific misunderstanding or disregard of a material fact, or any 'extreme and overwhelming pressure' that has had the same effect ?"

Turning to the second question, which is not the least important of the three :

"Was there evidence before him, affecting the relative credibility of the witnesses, which would make the exercise of his critical faculties in judging the demeanour of the witnesses a useful and necessary operation."

I think it is desirable also that we should remind ourselves that in Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas (2), not for the first time after the principle had been so firmly established in 1927, did the House of Lords think it necessary to re-affirm the importance of the principle thus established. I do not propose to read everything that was said in that case, but I would refer to one passage in LORD THANKERTON's speech. He also laid down three principles ([1947] 1 All E.R. 587) :

- (i) Where a question of fact has been tried by a judge without a jury and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the judge, an appellate court which is disposed to come to a different conclusion on the printed evidence should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial judge by reason of having seen and heard the witnesses could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial judge's conclusion.
- (ii) The appellate court may take the view that, without having seen or heard the witnesses, it is not in a position to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence.
- (iii) The appellate court, either because the reasons given by the trial judge are not satisfactory, or because it unmistakably so appears from the evidence, may be satisfied that he has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses, and the matter will then become at large for the appellate court."

LORD THANKERTON goes on :

"It is obvious that the value and importance of having seen and heard the witnesses will vary according to the class of case, and, it may be, the individual case in question. It will hardly be disputed that consistorial cases form a class in which it is generally most important to see and hear the witnesses, and particularly the spouses themselves, and, further, within that class, cases of alleged cruelty will afford an even stronger example of such an advantage. Normally, the cruelty is alleged to have occurred within the family establishment, and the physique, temperament, standard of culture, habits of verbal expression and of action, and the interaction between the spouses in their daily life, cannot be adequately judged except by seeing and hearing them in the witness box. The law has no footrule by which to measure the personalities of the spouses. In cases such as the present it will be almost invariably found that a divided household promotes partisanship, and it is difficult to get unbiased evidence."

I propose to approach the present case with those principles in mind. It is clear at the outset from that statement of principle that, if there is a misdirection of himself by the learned judge, then the whole matter is at large, because it is no use a trial judge relying on his appreciation of the demeanour of the witnesses if he has misdirected himself as to the principles by which his decision should be guided.

The present case is one of those difficult cases in which it is pre-eminently necessary to bear in mind the limits, on the finding of cruelty, imposed by the well known case of Russell v. Russell (3). I expressly refrain from saying "the definition" of cruelty, because several of their Lordships went out of their way to say that it was impossible to give any exhaustive definition of cruelty, while at the same time, in affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, they laid down definitely and clearly the limits within which alone cruelty should be found, and, although this exact phrase does not appear in any speech, but is imported from the decision of the Court of Appeal, these limits are always given as being "conduct of such a character as to have caused danger to life, limb or health, bodily or mental, or as to give rise to a reasonable apprehension of such danger." That was the whole point of the case. I am not going to multiply citations from this well known authority, but, taking first of all LORD HERSCHELL who delivered the leading opinion in favour of the majority view, he said ([1897] A.C. p. 445) :

"It was contended that it is impossible exhaustively to define 'cruelty.' Whether this be so or not, it is manifestly necessary to determine what elements were treated as essential to the constitution of the saevitia, or cruelty, which entitled to a divorce."

After going through the cases which had been cited, he said (ibid., 456) :

"Upon a review of the authorities prior to the time when the Divorce Act came into operation, I think it may confidently be asserted that in not a single case was a divorce on the ground of cruelty granted unless there had been bodily hurt or injury to health, or a reasonable apprehension of one or other of these."

LORD DAVEY, who agreed with LORD HERSCHELL's opinion, said, with regard to counsel's suggestion that the causing of bodily or mental pain such as was calculated to render matrimonial relations unendurable, was legal cruelty ibid., 468 :

A “In my opinion Sir Robert Reid’s proposition goes far beyond anything which had been laid down by the learned judges of the Ecclesiastical Court before the Divorce Act, and appears to me to be very far reaching in its possible application. I express no opinion whether the court ought or ought not, as a matter of policy, to give relief on that principle. My only duty is to say whether the appellant’s contention is conformable to the principles on which the Ecclesiastical Courts formerly acted and gave relief. I am constrained to say that in my opinion it is not, and I see no reason to differ from the reasons given by the majority of the judges in the Court of Appeal. There is no question here of personal violence, and in the circumstances of the case I see no evidence of any apprehended injury to the appellant’s physical or mental health against which he requires protection.”

B LORD DAVEY himself said it was a case of gross outrage by one person on another and an abominable action of a wife towards her husband. No less strong expressions were used by other noble Lords. One noble Lord described the wife’s conduct as scandalous and atrocious, but there was no evidence that it had caused any injury to mental health or a reasonable apprehension of such an injury. It is impossible to doubt that, if that evidence which was lacking, had been present, the decision both in the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords would have been the other way. The whole point of the case is the limit thus imposed on what in colloquial language is called cases of “mental cruelty,” a phrase which, I admit, that I abhor, but which is not a bad shorthand for the class of case we are discussing. That case explains and emphasises the principles on which such cases should be decided and the necessity for care and watchfulness in deciding them.

D Bearing those principles in mind, I turn to the learned judge’s judgment in the present case to see whether he apprehended the true nature of the matter he was called on to decide. He said :

“As I understand the case which is put forward by the wife, it is this.

E She was very much in love with her husband, and, so far as she could see, he was very much in love with her, and from time to time they were extremely happy together, but, unfortunately, from the very early stages of the marriage she discovered that her husband had a somewhat peculiar temperament. She found that he was subject from time to time to moods, as she called them, or fits of depression, and that at those times he would remain morose and sullen and silent and would not speak to her, sometimes for a few hours, sometimes for days on end, and from time to time for periods as long as a week or ten days. She said that this state of things had a distressing effect on her mind and affected her health. She said that she discussed these things with her husband and that he knew perfectly well that his attitude towards her when he was in these moods of depression was having a bad effect, and that he and she from time to time tried to co-operate to cure him of this habit of falling into fits of depression, but that in spite of that the situation went on. It went from bad to worse until in January, 1946, when the husband came home from Germany, she told him that, unless there was an improvement in his manner towards her, she just could not go on and there would have to be a separation. Then, according to her, they talked the matter over and he agreed that he must try to do better, and for the rest of the leave he behaved very well indeed, and, as a result, they had a leave which was one of the happiest times they had had together since their marriage. After that she thought that, perhaps, he had got over this queer habit of silence and his method of treating her, and she was looking forward to his leave in June, 1946. Her evidence is that in June, 1946, after a good beginning, matters went from bad to worse, and for the latter part of the leave, which was a somewhat long leave—I think it was six weeks—she says that her husband was ignoring her completely, and she decided that . . . she could go on no longer.”

Having summarised the husband's point of view, the learned judge said :

“I have to consider these two stories, and I have to decide what is the real truth in this matter. I have to decide how far this account given by the wife is a true account and whether or not it is exaggerated, or exaggerated to any large degree. I also have to decide whether, having regard to the view I may take on the evidence of the wife and the husband, the conduct of the husband is such as might amount to cruelty. Having considered carefully, as I have had the opportunity of considering during the last three days, the demeanour of the parties, and, having heard the evidence which has been given in very great detail by both the wife and the husband, I have come to the conclusion that the husband's conduct was of the nature described by the wife. I have come to the conclusion that during the whole of the married life, right up to 1946, the husband was continually in the habit of falling into moods of depression, or tempers, or call them what you will—at any rate, moods when he refused to speak to his wife and when he ignored her, sometimes for days on end, both privately and when other people were there. That is, of course, corroborated to some extent in the correspondence, with which I do not intend at this moment to deal, but it is clear that both from the letters and from his evidence he admits from time to time he did suffer from these moods, and I am satisfied, having heard the evidence of the wife, that he suffered from them to such an extent as to make her life with him almost intolerable. It is clear too, I think, on the evidence that he knew that when he ignored her in this way it was upsetting her seriously, and the cumulative effect of this, going on through the years, was in fact having a serious effect on her nervous and emotional stability.”

I have read those passages because, to my mind, they establish that the learned judge fully appreciated the necessity for the co-existence of the two essential elements in a charge of cruelty—something which could be called misconduct on the part of the husband coupled with danger actual, or, at least, apprehended, to the mental health of the wife.

It is my habit, in trying cases of this class, to begin with the latter element first. Is there in the case evidence which justifies the trial judge in holding that actual, or, at least, threatened, danger to the health, bodily or mental, of the petitioner is proved? In this case, in my opinion, the evidence is all one way. I do not propose, on the question whether on the medical evidence the learned judge was right in saying that the cumulative effect of the husband's conduct was having a serious effect on the wife's nervous and emotional stability, to say any more than that, in my opinion, there was abundant evidence to justify him in coming to that conclusion.

That brings me to what is the more serious element of controversy in this case, for it is said that the learned judge wholly misdirected himself on this matter. On the facts there can be no misdirection unless one of two things can be said—either (i) that the conduct complained of is incapable in law of being cruel conduct, or (ii) if such conduct is capable in law of being cruel conduct, there was no sufficient evidence on which the learned judge could find that such conduct existed. Manifestly, if either of those propositions can be established, the judgment is vitiated, the whole question is at large, and we are entitled to come to any conclusions that happen to appeal to us.

Let us see whether there was any such conduct. I am not going to repeat, though it is material to this point, my brief summary of Russell v. Russell (3) beyond saying that more than one of the noble Lords who dealt with that appeal were careful to point out that it was impossible to give an exhaustive catalogue of the circumstances which might amount to such conduct. I have already pointed out that, had it been possible in that case, as it was not, to say that the abominable, atrocious, scandalous conduct (to adopt some of the epithets that were used about the wife's conduct) had the effect of creating at least a reasonable apprehension of danger to the mental health of the husband, the decision would have been the other way. I mention in passing that LORD HALSBURY, L.C.—and that this was in a dissenting speech is immaterial because it does not touch the main point—said ([1897] A.C. 424) :

“As no judge has ever affected to define what cruelty is exhaustively, so no judge has, in my view, ever affected to prescribe what individual elements would go to make up cruelty.”

B In Jackson v. Jackson (4) SIR HENRY DUKE, P., said precisely the same thing of the correlative offence of desertion which, where a wife has been driven from home, is often almost exactly co-terminous with cruelty. He said ([1924] P. 23) :

C “If there is abandonment by one of the spouses of the other, that is desertion. If one of the spouses causes the other to live separate and apart, that is desertion. I am not going to attempt an exhaustive definition of desertion. No judge, so far as I am aware, has sought to do so, and certainly there is no prospect of its being successfully done.”

Words to the same effect can be found in LORD SHAND's speech, and in other passages in the opinions of the noble Lords in Russell v. Russell (3).

D That, however, only deals with the elements which may go to make up the conduct of the wrongdoer. The question of the method of approach, which I should have thought was by now established beyond the slightest possibility of doubt, is dealt with by PHILLIMORE, L.J., in Moss v. Moss (5). Delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal consisting of LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R., himself, and SARGANT, J., PHILLIMORE, L.J., summed up the whole matter E in these words ([1916] P. 162) :

“To use the language of LORD DAVEY in Russell v. Russell (3), which is in harmony with that of LORD HERSCHELL, protection is given ‘to the complaining spouse against actual or apprehended violence, physical ill-treatment, or injury to health’; while in a later passage he explains that he refers to mental as well as physical health. The other noble and learned Lords who formed the majority agreed with these judgments. Mytton v. Mytton (6) and Bethune v. Bethune (7) are useful instances of the application of this doctrine by courts of first instance. A course of conduct creating mental distress and anxiety and thereby injuring bodily health amounts to cruelty. This is, I apprehend, that which the learned judge found to exist and upon which he founded his decision . . .”

G Before passing on, I think it is as well just to glance at Mytton v. Mytton (6), a decision of BUTT, J. The headnote reads as follows :

“A persistent course of harsh, irritating conduct unaccompanied by actual violence but carried to such a point as to endanger the petitioner's health, and renewed after the resumption of interrupted cohabitation, H held to constitute legal cruelty.”

The evidence of the wife petitioner as summarised was :

“ . . . that the cruelty, which commenced during the honeymoon, consisted of harsh and irritating language and tyrannical conduct, which made her life intolerable and seriously injured her health. There was no actual violence, but he had shaken his fist in her face, saying at the same time that being a lawyer he knew the law too well to commit actual violence.”

There was an interruption in cohabitation, and it is true that after the resumption of cohabitation there was an instance of drunken and disorderly conduct in the course of which the servant employed by the parties is said to have rushed from the house in terror, but that this was not necessary for the decision, except to get rid of the condonation by the resumed cohabitation, is plainly shown by the learned judge (11 P.D. 143) saying that, even up to the time before the parting occurred, if "an application had been made to the court similar to that now made it would have been granted." The parting came about because the husband had to go to Canada, and the learned judge relied on a letter which had a certain resemblance to the wife's attitude as displayed in some of the correspondence in this case. I am referring in particular to what ORMEROD, J., in the present case described as "the happiest time they ever spent together, the leave in January, 1946." BUTT, J., said (11 P.D. 143):

"It is an affectionate letter, and it expresses a hope that there is a possibility of future happiness, and it ends thus: 'Your loving wife—always—if only you would behave as you did in the last three or four days and renew that period of happiness all would be well. For the sake of those few days of happiness, how much I could forget'."

The learned judge said there would have been no doubt that the wife would have been entitled to a decree in spite of that letter, or, as he thought, because of it, for he described the impression conveyed to his mind by that letter as being "that there was constant unhappiness, and one very small oasis of happiness." I agree that neither Moss v. Moss (5) nor Mytton v. Mytton (6), though not far removed from this case, is an exact precedent.

It is argued and has been asserted repeatedly, that there is no authority for holding that sulking can amount to such conduct as can constitute cruelty. That has tempted me to refer to decisions of my own. I only do so with becoming humility and simply because of this repeated assertion that there is no authority for any such proposition. I cannot pledge my recollection that I have ever decided a case which depended solely on sulkiness, but I am prepared to say, without hesitation or reservation, that I have decided several cases which, though there may have been some element of violence, nagging, or the like which, taken by itself, no court would be prepared to treat seriously, turned in the main on an allegation of deliberate sulking and sullen silences of the kind here described. It is said that none of these decisions has been reported and it so happens that none of the counsel engaged in the present case appears to have been engaged in any such case, but in such cases I always begin by stating the principle in Russell v. Russell (3) and I then go on to enquire whether or not there is evidence which satisfies me that the danger-to-health element in the charge of cruelty is present. Only if that is satisfied, do I then go on to deal with the course of conduct alleged. I am prepared to say, categorically, that on more than one of these occasions I have committed myself to the statement that I can imagine no course of conduct more calculated to be destructive of married life than persistent and deliberate sulking. It happens that in the present case we were provided with an argument which I had already noted for my judgment. Counsel for the husband said that if this case had amounted to "sending the wife to Coventry" he could well understand the charge, but that it did not because the husband's conduct was involuntary. I had made a note to recall that schoolboy phrase and to remind those of us who remember our schooldays that the most dreadful punishment which could be inflicted on a small boy was to send him, as it was called, "to Coventry." It requires very little imagination to understand what that meant when applied to a sensitive, and, at the outset, at any rate, an extremely affectionate, wife, when day after day for as much as ten days the husband persistently refused to hold any social intercourse with her, and that was emphasised by his being jolly with other people if they happened to be there while pointedly ignoring the wife. I confess I was unable to understand the argument that this could not amount to cruelty. It was subject to the qualification that the husband's action was involuntary, but that, to my mind, is sheer rubbish. The evidence is all one way on that point the husband admitted, and the wife and her mother proved, that when he was pulled up by one or other of them he would behave better for a few days. There was nothing involuntary about this. No doubt his temperament must be taken into account, but it was a temperament which he was not unable to control, and many of these incidents were brought about by things for which his wife was not responsible. There is no doubt that other of these instances were brought about by the wife in the sense only that she was resisting the imposition of his will on hers in matters in which she was entitled to have a will of her own. That position is illustrated in particular by the two instances connected with the church.

It is unfortunately true that religious differences played a considerable part in this case. Both the two incidents to which I have referred occurred when the wife was pregnant—a time when special tenderness would be required and any lack of it more keenly felt. In the case of the first pregnancy, which ended so tragically, the husband insisted that the wife should go to early mass when she was two or three months pregnant. The result was that she fainted. The point is not that her being made to go to mass was cruelty in itself, and this the learned judge fully appreciated. It is that this is an outstanding instance of the attitude of the husband to the wife—that he was prepared to bend her to his will by threatening her with one of his fits of temper and she gave way because she was afraid that such a thing would result. He admits that had she not given way such a thing would have resulted. The fact that it was in connection, as he puts it, with her soul's welfare of which he thought more than of her bodily welfare is no excuse. Still less is it an excuse when, in the second instance, his own priest had told him that he was not to force his wife to go to a confirmation class if she did not feel well enough, and yet, again at the expense of another faint, at a time when she was pregnant with the second child and was deeply anxious that there should be no such disaster over this child as there had been over the first, does he bully her for her soul's good, forsooth, in spite of what the priest had said, into going to the class, with another disastrous result.

I only want to add that, whatever may be said about the wife's conduct, it is impossible to assert that, if she has been the victim of a wrong, she was the author of her own wrong. I will only refer to one piece of evidence and that is about the occasion when she first burst out in words to her husband and said she could not stand what had been going on any more. His reaction was: "Oh, don't say that. That is the first time we have had a quarrel." How much better for everybody it would have been if, instead of these ghastly periods of sending the wife to Coventry, there had been a good "blow up" and after that they had kissed and been friends. To talk of the husband's course of conduct as "moods" is an euphemism, to put it mildly. To talk of them, as both his counsel talked of them, as "merely being quiet" and as "sitting reading a book" is a mis-use of the English language. I am not concerned to say what I should have found in this case. I do not know, and I am not entitled to ask myself because I was not at the trial and I did not see and hear these witnesses, but, if the learned judge properly exercised his functions and performed his duty to take advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses, and came to the conclusion that this course of conduct was proved, he could, in my opinion, give no other judgment than that which he has given. I would dismiss this appeal.

SINGLETON, L.J. : The appellant, Major Francis Joseph Lauder, is an officer serving at the moment in Germany. A decree nisi was granted against him by ORMEROD, J., on the ground of cruelty. It is not said that he ever raised his hand to his wife or ever spoke an unkind word to her. The case rested on "moods," or fits of depression which he had and which can properly be described as "the sulks." I confess that I have not very great experience of the practice in divorce, but I wondered from an early stage in the case whether there had been other cases reported of this kind. I ventured to ask whether there had been a case of this type reported and counsel on both sides undertook to look to see if there had been. Research was made and no case precisely like this has been found. In the course of argument my Lord told counsel for the husband that he himself had decided a number of cases of this kind. I am bound to say that I think it a great pity if matters of this kind are not reported. A

Since the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, it has been open to the court to grant a decree "if the respondent has since the celebration of the marriage treated the petitioner with cruelty." The petition in this case is based on allegations of cruelty. Parliament has not said, and I hope it never will be said, that a decree can be granted because two people find it impossible to get on the one with the other or because one does not like the other. The sole question to be considered by the trial judge is whether it is proved that there was cruelty as understood in law. I do not propose to refer to the authorities which my Lord has mentioned. I do propose, however, to say a few words about some more recent authorities, not that they alter, in any sense, the general principle as stated by my Lord, but because I think they provide some help towards an examination of this case. B

In Horton v. Horton (8), which came before BUCKNILL, J., the headnote is as follows : C

"In order to obtain relief under the Matrimonial Causes Acts on the ground of cruelty it is not enough for a husband to establish that his wife's character has developed in such a way as to make it impossible for him to live happily with her. He must prove that she has committed wilful and unjustifiable acts inflicting pain and misery on him and causing him injury to health. Where a husband petitioned for divorce on the ground of cruelty, it was held that his health was injured not merely by the development and manifestation of the wife's character acting in its own sphere, but by her wilful and unjustifiable conduct to him which was an intrusion upon and did violence to his own mode of living. That course of conduct amounted to legal cruelty." D

The learned judge said ([1940] 3 All E.R. 383) :

"When Russell v. Russell (3) was decided, the remedy for cruelty was a legal separation. It cannot be supposed that a wider or more liberal meaning should be attached to the word 'cruelty,' now that it is a ground for divorce. The question for me, therefore, is whether I am satisfied on the evidence that the wife has committed wilful and unjustifiable acts inflicting pain and misery upon her husband, which have caused him bodily hurt or injury to his health, or which have caused him reasonable apprehension of such hurt or injury. Mere conduct which causes injury to health is not enough. A man takes a woman for his wife for better or for worse. If he marries a wife whose character develops in such a way as to make it impossible for him to live happily with her, I do not think that he establishes cruelty merely because he finds that life with her is impossible. He must prove that she has committed wilful and unjustifiable acts inflicting pain and misery upon him and causing him injury to health." E

More recently in Squire v. Squire (9), the Court of Appeal, in reversing the decision of the trial judge, referred to certain authorities which seem to me to be apposite. The headnote is as follows : F

A “The proposition that a person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts applies to acts amounting to cruelty in matrimonial causes. If a spouse commits acts amounting to cruelty, they constitute cruelty notwithstanding that the conduct was the consequence of the spouse’s illness (not amounting to insanity) and not of any spiteful or malignant intention. Per TUCKER, L.J.: I must not, however, be understood to suggest that, in considering whether or not a case of cruelty has been established, the state of health of the parties is not a relevant matter to be taken into consideration, together with all the other surrounding circumstances of the case, or that the same weight is to be attached to every act whether committed in sickness or in health, or that it is not the duty of each spouse to care for and tend and show forbearance towards the other in case of illness. Per EVERSLED, L.J.: I do not say that proof of such an intention (i.e., a spiteful or malignant intention) may not be an important, or, in some cases, even an essential consideration.”

B
C TUCKER, L.J., in his judgment ([1948] 2 All E.R. 53), referred to Hadden v. Hadden (10) in which SHEARMAN, J., said: “I do not question he had no intention of being cruel, but his intentional acts amounted to cruelty.” That passage seems to me to be important from the point of view of this case. EVERSLED, L.J., in his judgment, said (ibid., 55):

D “I do not attempt any definition of the words ‘cruel’ or ‘cruelty’ save to say that the conduct complained of must at least satisfy the ordinary acceptance of those English words, and that, on well settled authority, it must be such as to have injured, in fact, the complainant’s mental or physical health or be such as to cause real apprehension of such injury.”

I refer to one other authority, also in the Court of Appeal, Buchler v. Buchler (11), where ASQUITH, L.J., said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 326):

E “As to the second head of complaint, the husband cannot be absolved from neglect and want of consideration for his wife, but this is a charge which thousands of spouses could prefer against each other with abundant justification, but without any hope or prospect of securing legal relief on the ground of constructive desertion or otherwise. It may, no doubt, be galling—or, in some sense of the word, humiliating—for a wife to find that the husband prefers the company of his men friends, his club, his newspaper, his games, his hobbies, or indeed his own society, to association with her, and a husband may have similar grievances regarding his wife, but this is what may be called the reasonable wear and tear of married life, and, if it were a ground for divorce, a heavy toll would be levied on the institution of matrimony.”

F
G
H Having referred to those authorities, and bearing in mind those which my Lord cited and the general principles laid down, I think it right to approach this case keeping in view the position of both parties. The husband had fits of depression which were most annoying, most disturbing, and most upsetting. There are people who will sulk however much they may try to stop it. The husband in this case sulked unduly. The evidence shows that he and his wife tried together to get him out of that state and to some extent they succeeded, particularly during his leave in January, 1946. Sometimes, when he was spoken to about it, he said: “I am sorry, I will try to do better” and sometimes he did improve. It so happened that the happiest time they spent together, according to the evidence, was that leave in January, 1946. Their life had been a little troubled. He was a regular soldier and had been on service all the time. He had had service in India for some nine or ten years prior to the world war. He was in France for a period and was evacuated from Dunkirk. Later he was in West Africa. There has been some kind of suggestion that his condition might have been caused by or made worse by his service, but so far as one can see he had it before. At one time, indeed, there was some discussion about it being inherited from his ancestors. I do not know anything about that, but what we all know is that he did have these fits of depression which he and his wife tried to correct. Other matters of importance must be considered. He is a Roman Catholic. She was not, but she wished to marry him and was ready to change her religion and become a Roman Catholic. According to his views, he could not have married her unless she had changed. There were two incidents in regard to church or church going and after September, 1944, she never went to church. That probably hurt his feelings. I have read a good many parts of the transcript of the evidence more than once. I do not find anywhere any complaint by him or any unkind word on his part. Importance is attached on behalf of the wife to the two incidents in regard to the church. It is said that he was domineering or tyrannical, that when she was carrying her first child and was about two months advanced in pregnancy, he insisted on her going to church. I find it difficult to see that it is either tyrannical or domineering if a man asks his wife to go to eight o'clock service in the morning. It may be that if she says: "I do not feel very well," he ought to say: "Stay in bed by all means," especially if she is in the early stages of pregnancy. To do otherwise may show lack of consideration, but I cannot regard it as either tyrannical or overbearing in any sense of those words. As to the incident of September, 1944, when, it is said, he insisted on her going to a confirmation class, this is her account:

"(Q) When your husband said he had arranged for you to go to the confirmation class on Tuesday, what did you say? (A) I was very upset about it, and I said I would far rather not go because I did not feel fit enough. He told me I must go and he wanted me to go. In the end I went, because, if I did not, he would not speak to me. After I had been in there for about half an hour I just fainted under the table and came round screaming. The priest brought me home and told my husband that I was not to go on Thursday unless I felt very much better."

From that time onwards, she never went to church again. It is not suggested that he said she should, but the wife, who, after all, was 27 years old at the time of her marriage and had undertaken to become a Roman Catholic, ceased to attend services at all. I cannot help feeling that that would have some effect on the likelihood of the marriage lasting.

When this petition was launched certain charges were made and particulars were asked for and given. The charges made in support of the charge of cruelty were, first, that the husband was a man of tyrannical disposition and had continually sought to force the wife to submit to his wishes by threat of persistently and ostentatiously ignoring her in private and public and had, in fact, frequently so ignored her for considerable periods, thereby causing her great anguish and injuring her health. I see no evidence that he was either tyrannical or domineering in disposition. Paragraph 8 is:

"That the respondent has persistently neglected the petitioner when she has been ill, he has forced her to undergo physical exertion for which she has been unfit, and, by himself consuming an undue proportion of food available for him and her, has caused her to suffer from undernourishment whereby her health has been injured."

Paragraph 9 is:

"That from the aforesaid date of the marriage to December, 1942, at Leasefield Drive, Meadowfield, aforesaid and at divers other places the respondent, by eating an undue proportion of food available for him and the petitioner, caused her to suffer from undernourishment so that by reason thereof her legs became swollen and weak and being pregnant she fell on or about June 16, 1943, and injured her spine."

The only support I have seen for that allegation is a statement of hers, I think in answer to a question in cross-examination, that the doctor somewhere had told her that. Then there are allegations as to ignoring her and an allegation that he forced her to cycle one and half miles to church to attend early mass.

A I do not think the evidence supports that. Paragraph 12 is :

"That on a date in September, 1944, near Plymouth in the county of Devon aforesaid, the respondent tried to force the petitioner to walk through a herd of cows in which a bull was running loose, and on her showing that she was afraid to do so he left her to walk home by a detour for half a mile unaided. The petitioner was pregnant and her legs were in a bad condition and she became very exhausted as a result."

B The child was born in April, 1945. I regard this conduct of his as silly, foolish, inconsiderate. When he had seen that she did not want to walk through the field in which there was a bull, he might well have walked round the other way with her. Apparently, he knew from the farmer there was nothing to be afraid of, but she went the other way round. I do not regard it as cruelty.

C I do not think the learned judge at the trial did either. Another allegation in the petition is that he compelled her to walk for the space of an entire afternoon in December, 1944, looking for the fuel office. Again, there was no need for her to go. It was silly of him to take her on that walk, but I do not think it can be put higher than that, even though she was five or six months advanced in pregnancy at the time.

D I come now to the further and better particulars which were delivered in reply to the request of the husband. There are two observations I would make in regard to them. The first is that they were delivered on Dec. 29, 1947—about 18 months after the parties had last lived together—and, secondly, as to the material ones, I appreciate the fact that ORMEROD, J., said he disregarded them. I do not think he was right in disregarding them. The material ones

E are as follows :

"In May, 1946, on the first night of the respondent's leave, he worried and teased the child of the marriage, in spite of the petitioner's protests, thereby causing the said child to cry all night and develop a rash whereby the petitioner was unable to get any sleep that night."

F What happened was that the husband played with the child, he was almost a stranger to his own child, and the child became upset for some reason and cried. I think there was evidence that the wife had asked him not to do it. I cannot regard it as cruelty that nevertheless he continued to play with the child and the child cried. Other particulars were :

G "On an occasion in May or June, 1946, the precise date whereof the petitioner cannot remember, the respondent in the presence of the petitioner, deliberately and sadistically permitted the child of the marriage to fall down a bank, thereby causing the petitioner to suffer great anguish. On another occasion during the said period, the precise date whereof the petitioner cannot remember, the respondent deliberately and sadistically permitted the child of the marriage to pull down the heavy front of a boiler, thereby endangering the life of the said child and causing great distress to the petitioner who was present. These incidents occurred at the petitioner's parents' home at Farnham."

H

It was said that those words were the wife's own words—"deliberately and sadistically permitted the child of the marriage to fall down a bank," and "deliberately and sadistically permitted the child of the marriage to pull down the heavy front of a boiler." Neither of those things happened. How any person can describe those incidents in the way they are described in the particulars I do not know, but I do not think it is right that they should be disregarded in considering the merits of this case.

In September, 1946, the husband saw a psychiatrist, at his wife's request, and there are two things in the psychiatrist's evidence to which I draw attention. Dr. Mathias was asked :

"(Q) When you did see the husband did you find him an abnormal person or a perfectly ordinary officer ? (A) At that time, in 1946, Major Lauder, in a very frank talk with me, admitted that he had certain moods. I do not think Major Lauder would think of it in terms of divorce or dissolution of any sort. We were discussing it as fairly as we could. I have a note somewhere where he says these moods were certainly not due to any apathy or antipathy to his wife, but that they were things he was trying to get over, and that nothing would make him happier than to be cured of such moods."

The other matter I want to refer to in Dr. Mathias' evidence is two questions asked by counsel for the wife in re-examination :

"(Q) You say he described himself as having moods in which he withdrew into himself—not out of any aversion for his wife ? (A) Yes. (Q) Is that a description consistent with any particular mental state with which you are familiar ? (A) Yes, there are people who are accustomed to becoming withdrawn from realities, shall we say ? In an extreme form they may withdraw completely from reality. There are others of us who withdraw occasionally for a short time."

Counsel explained why he asked those questions. I would not have it thought for one moment that I regard the husband as other than responsible for his actions. It is not set up that he is insane or anything of that kind. He was subject to moods. In considering these incidents one has also to bear in mind the wife's state of health and her position.

Shortly before the husband had gone back to Germany in July, 1946, he had, at his wife's request, found the money for the purchase of land on which a house was to be built for them. They had not had a house of their own before, and both thought it would be better that they should. In due course the building licence was obtained and one of the husband's last acts before going back was to pay for the land and to realise securities to the value of £2,000 for the building of the house. Very soon after he went back to Germany the wife consulted solicitors who recommended her seeing the psychiatrist, Dr. Mathias. He said she was suffering from an anxiety state. He was asked :

"(Q) Did she show any symptoms of a nervous disturbance ? (A) Yes. The diagnosis of anxiety state means that she showed considerable anxiety, or nervousness if you like, a certain amount of emotional disturbance and inability perhaps to think quite clearly about her condition at the time. (Q) What did you think was the proper treatment for her at that time ? (A) The proper treatment would have been to have given her a sedative, a re-assurance, separating her from any trouble that she might have experienced, and, of course, a talk as to the origin of the condition."

The psychiatrist saw her on that one occasion and did not see her again until May, 1948, a short time before the hearing of the petition. He was asked :

"(Q) You did not know there was a case contemplated ? (A) My note at the time is that divorce was contemplated."

[HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence, and continued:] I recognise that in almost every case which involves the consideration of evidence the opinion of the judge of first instance is important, but, if he is shown clearly to have gone astray, it is for the appeal court to say so, although that court always ought to bear in mind that the one who has seen and heard the witnesses is the best judge of their veracity. In the present case I do not think the view of the judge on the witnesses is of so much importance as it might be in other circumstances, because the husband's moods are admitted and it is on those moods or fits of depression or "sulks" that the learned judge decided the case. I regard the case as rather involving the question what is the true inference to be drawn from all the circumstances as found by the learned judge. In his judgment the learned judge said :

"Having considered carefully, as I have had the opportunity of considering during the last three days, the demeanour of the parties, and, having heard the evidence which has been given in very great detail by both the wife and the husband, I have come to the conclusion that the husband's conduct was of the nature described by the wife. I have come to the conclusion that during the whole of the married life, right up to 1946, the husband was continually in the habit of falling into moods of depression, or tempers, or call them what you will. At any rate, moods when he refused to speak to his wife and when he ignored her, sometimes for days on end, both privately and when other people were there."

There may be a question between the parties as to the word "refused." At least the husband did not speak to his wife for periods. The learned judge then said :

"That is, of course, corroborated to some extent by the correspondence . . . It is quite clear both from the letters and from his evidence that he admits that from time to time he did suffer from these moods, and I am satisfied, having heard the evidence of the wife, that he suffered from them to such an extent as to make her life with him almost intolerable. It is clear, too, I think, on the evidence that he knew that when he ignored her in this way it was upsetting her seriously, and the cumulative effect of this, going on through the years, was, in fact, having a serious effect on her nervous and emotional stability."

They had had an extremely happy leave in January, 1946. The letters show that they were still attached to each other after that time and after the June leave. I am inclined to think that to say her life had become almost intolerable is putting the matter too high. As to the effect on her health, she was of a sensitive disposition and she was not well, and, may be, at some time the silences of her husband did affect her.

In those circumstances, is cruelty proved ? I have referred to the law on the subject. It may well be that a deliberate course of conduct—such as my Lord spoke of as "sending the wife to Coventry"—of a kind which causes injury to health or a reasonable apprehension of danger to health is cruelty. I say nothing as to that, but I am not satisfied that there was such a deliberate course of conduct in this case. That there were moods is admitted, but I think there must be something more than that. I do not think there were any intentional acts by the husband which amounted to cruelty, nor do I think that the wife so regarded them. I regard him as having been inconsiderate at times, but not as having been guilty of cruelty in law as I understand the meaning of that word. I do not feel that in these circumstances a decree nisi ought to have been granted against him on the ground of cruelty. I would add that (and I do not claim much experience in this class of case) a husband and wife ought to take each other for better or for worse. There were faults on both sides. I think she could have done more. They were both difficult people. I cannot think that the legislature, in the word "cruelty," intended to include that which is proved in this case. For myself, I would allow this appeal, not because the learned judge did not take great care in his findings of fact, but because, in my view, cruelty in law was not established.

PEARCE, J. : In my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed. I agree with the judgment of the learned President. The trial judge saw the witnesses and observed their demeanour. Cruelty cases, more than any other class of case, depend particularly on a careful estimate of the witnesses, for in a cruelty case the question is whether this conduct by this man to this woman, or vice versa, is cruelty. How far a spouse has to depart from the normal standards of kindness and self control that are the basis of married life and how great an effect that departure has to have on the other spouse before it constitutes cruelty is always a question of degree, depending largely on the temperament, circumstances and health of each party. To attempt to decide that question in such a case as the present without seeing the parties or their witnesses would be a hazardous business, and an appellate court does not lightly embark on it. In Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas (2) LORD B THANKERTON sums up the effect of the cases on this point and says that the principles embodied therein may be stated in three propositions which my Lord has read. For reasons which I will give there seems to me here no question of misdirection of himself by the judge and my view on the points dealt with by these three propositions, using their exact language, is as follows:—

(i) I am not satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial judge by reason of his having seen and heard the witnesses could not be sufficient to explain or justify the judge's conclusion. (ii) I take the view that without having seen or heard the witnesses this court is not in a position to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence. (iii) I am not satisfied that the learned judge has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses. Indeed, after reading the whole transcript of the evidence more than once and hearing the detailed and able arguments on both sides, I am satisfied that the learned judge took the fullest advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses. His judgment confirms this, and his rare interventions show an open mind, a firm grasp of the evidence that had been given, and a correct realisation of the problems before him.

Evidence was given by the wife and confirmed by her mother and other witnesses of the infliction on the wife by the husband of continuous sulking in public and in private, of his ignoring her, and of his refusing to speak to her. These sulks, which the husband very euphemistically described as "moods," were often brought on by any opposition to his will. Sometimes, it was the acts of the wife which brought on the sulks, sometimes it was the acts of other persons (in one instance, the act of a taxi driver's wife, and in another it was even his own act in going out without a mackintosh and getting wet). But whatever the cause, when these moods did come on, it was the wife who suffered. Sometimes she suffered in common with all those around him. Sometimes she was a lonely sufferer and he was natural or even very chatty with others while ignoring her. The husband himself admitted that these sulks produced complete and utter silences for days on end (although the parties differed about their exact length). He admitted that, though they did not always come on after he and she had had a disagreement, they frequently did. He admitted that she hated these sulks, that she was anxious they should not come on, and that they had an effect on her. According to medical and other evidence these sulks had a marked effect on her, as one might expect they would. In July, 1946, just over a month after her husband's last leave, she was under the care of a doctor for an operation due to prolapse trouble and he considered that she was very overstrained mentally and sent her to a psychiatrist. In September, 1946, the psychiatrist found her to be showing considerable anxiety or emotional disturbance, which had mostly disappeared by May of this year. He said in evidence that the husband's conduct, if it was as described by the wife, would have put a considerable strain on a normal healthy woman. On a person of the wife's mentality he said it would have an even worse effect, and, perhaps, one which she might not be able to withstand for a considerable time. In his opinion, if she had continued to live with her husband, the effect might even have been such that she would not have been able to attend the trial. No medical evidence to counter this was called by the husband. The wife in evidence said (and, indeed, it was obvious) that to avoid these sulks she would try to take the course the husband wished even against her better judgment. On other occasions she did not give in, with a resulting sulk by him. In those instances there seems in him a complete absence of normal kindness and consideration.

The learned judge found that the husband's conduct was of the nature described by the wife, that during the whole married life, right up to 1946, he was continually in the habit of falling into moods, or depression, or tempers, or call them what you will—moods when he refused to speak to his wife and ignored her, sometimes for days on end, both privately and when other people were there. He found that the husband knew that when he ignored her in this way, it upset her seriously, and that in September, 1946, she was in a serious nervous state which was wholly or largely the result of the treatment she had had from the husband, and he gave her a decree on the ground of the husband's cruelty. I am not surprised that he so decided.

The attacks that are made on the judgment are these. It is said that intention must be proved to substantiate a charge of cruelty. It was argued by counsel for the husband, in opening the appeal, that the moods sprang from matters beyond the husband's control and were due to temperament and to hardships suffered in the war; that the moods were not an act of volition, but were negative acts; that, if the husband was taciturn when he was moody, it could not be an act of cruelty on his part not to talk when he did not feel like talking; and that the acts here complained of could not amount to cruelty. The answer to those arguments is to be found in Squire v. Squire (9) and the cases therein referred to. In that case the conduct complained of was the consequence of the wife's illness and did not consist of malignant acts done with the intention of injuring the husband, yet the husband was held entitled to a decree on the ground of cruelty. TUCKER, L.J., approved of the dictum of SHEARMAN, J., in Hadden v. Hadden (10), where he said:

"I do not question he had no intention of being cruel, but his intentional acts amounted to cruelty."

Assuming, in the present case, that the husband had no intention of being cruel, yet his intentional acts amounted, in the view of the trial judge, to cruelty. No medical evidence was called to show that the husband did not know the nature and quality of his acts. Plainly he did know. It was entirely within his power to address civil remarks to his wife. On some occasions he would speak normally to others, but chose not to speak to her. When he had been reprimanded by the wife or her mother or sister he improved for a time, and then, again, he would let his temper get the better of him. This shows that he could control his sulks when he made the effort. In most incidents in cruelty cases, the respondent's worse nature becomes temporarily in control over his better nature, but that does not make his acts any less intentional, and the fact that in the present case the cruelty was an omission, rather than a commission, does not make it any the less cruelty. It was in his power to avoid these omissions by normal civility to his wife, but he did not choose to exercise the necessary control over himself or sink his egotism for that purpose. I fully appreciate that, in weighing the evidence, one would scrutinise more carefully the evidence of sins of omission than that of sins of commission, since they are more liable to be due to inadvertence that was not culpable, but in the present case the evidence clearly points to the sulks being avoidable and intentional and the trial judge has weighed the matter carefully.

No reported case has been shown to us where sulking alone is the cruelty complained of, but cruelty can have many manifestations and few cases are reported. The principle involved is clear. In Moss v. Moss (5) a unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal given by PHILLIMORE, L.J., in the passage that my Lord has read, puts it clearly. In none of the cases approved of in that passage was there any physical violence. Those cases were merely concerned with the impact of the husband's course of conduct on the mind and health of the wife. It would be unfortunate if this court were to refuse its protection on the ground that the injury to the complaining spouse's health was only caused by the subtle weapon of sulking. On the facts in this case, the sulks affected the wife's health and the husband knew that they affected her. The sulks were, as even he admitted, expressly or by implication, when called to task about them, misconduct as a husband and often they were meant to wound and hurt. Whether or not they were meant to wound and hurt, they had that effect and caused injury to health and so they constitute cruelty on the principles laid down.

Counsel for the husband further argued that the wife's case is exaggerated and ought not to be accepted. [His LORDSHIP examined the evidence, and continued:] That criticism was, no doubt, urged on the learned judge and it was for him, after hearing the wife's cross-examination on the point and observing her demeanour, to decide how much (if at all) it reduced the effect of her other evidence. For those reasons, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Wedlake, Letts & Birds, agents for Gidley, Wilcocks & Maddock, Plymouth (for the husband); Baylis, Pearce & Co., agents for Stevens & Stevens, Farnham, Surrey (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

YOUNG AND ANOTHER v. SEALEY.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), November 4, 5, 8, December 2, 1948.]

Trust—Resulting trust—Joint account—Money placed in names of donor and another—Investment in joint names—Gifts not to take effect until death of donor—Whether gifts of testamentary nature not conforming with the Wills Act, 1837.

On Jan. 6, 1927, Miss J. transferred certain balances standing to her credit at the L. bank to a new deposit account at the same bank in the joint names of herself and the defendant, her nephew, and they both signed an authority to the bank (i) to pay the money in the joint account to or to the order of both or any one of them, or to or to the order of the survivor or the executors or administrators of such survivor, and (ii) to accept the indorsement of them or any one of them to cheques, etc., placed to the credit of the joint account. On Jan. 31, 1927, Miss J. and the defendant signed an authority to the S. bank, where Miss J. has two deposit accounts, the effect of which was that both accounts were to be transferred to the joint names of the signatories and that all money then deposited or thereafter to be deposited should "be repayable to either of us or to the written order of either of us, and in the case of death to the survivor of us." Miss J. also from time to time made certain investments in building societies in the joint names of herself and her nephews and nieces, including, on Jan. 11, 1935, £500 fully paid shares in the W. building society in the joint names of herself and the defendant. At no time did the defendant make any withdrawals from the bank accounts or pay anything into them. Miss J., on the other hand, retained possession or control of the pass books and made both withdrawals and deposits. On Mar. 10, 1941, Miss J.

died intestate, and her personal representatives brought this action claiming a declaration that the defendant was a trustee for Miss J.'s estate of the sums remaining to the credit of the joint accounts. It appeared from the evidence that Miss J. was always very fond of the defendant, although he visited her infrequently. The defendant said that Miss J. told him that the sums in the joint account were to be for his benefit, but he knew nothing about the building society investment. He said that he understood from Miss J. that her intention in putting the money in joint account was that her solicitors would know nothing of the transactions and that death duties would not be payable. He was to have anything that was left in the joint accounts at the date of Miss J.'s death, and he did not understand from anything Miss J. said that he had any right to any of the money during Miss J.'s lifetime.

HELD: (i) there being a general intention on Miss J.'s part to benefit the defendant, the defendant had not only a legal, but also a beneficial, title to the moneys and shares, and none the less so because Miss J. (as between herself and the defendant) retained control and dominion over the deposit accounts during her own lifetime.

Beecher v. Major, (1865) (2 Drew. & Sm. 431; 13 L.T. 54), observations of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Marshal v. Crutwell, (1875) (L.R. 20 Eq. 330), and Re Harrison, (1920) (90 L.J.Ch. 186), applied.

(ii) although the only possible view of the transactions, having regard to the evidence, was that the gifts were intended to be postponed until the death of Miss J., and that the gifts, therefore, appeared to be of a testamentary nature not made in conformity with the Wills Act, 1837, it would not be right, having regard to previous English decisions in which the circumstances had been similar, but in which it was not clear that the point had been argued, to defeat the defendant by applying that reasoning.

Re Reid, (1921), (50 Ontario L.R. 595), considered.

Owens v. Green, ([1932] I.R. 225), not applied.

[AS TO PROPERTY PUT INTO THE NAME OF ANOTHER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 35, pp. 149, 150, paras. 249, 250; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 650-652, Nos. 844-865.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Fowkes v. Pascoe, (1875), 10 Ch. App. 343; 44 L.J.Ch. 367; 32 L.T. 545; 20 Digest 462, 1878.

(2) Beecher v. Major, (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 431; 6 New Rep. 370; 13 L.T. 54; 43 Digest 566, 154.

(3) Prankerd v. Prankerd, (1820), 1 Sim. & St. 1; 25 Digest 515, 107.

(4) Marshal v. Crutwell, (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 328; 44 L.J.Ch. 504; 39 J.P. 775; 3 Digest 190; 391.

(5) Re Harrison, (1920), 90 L.J.Ch. 186; 27 Digest 165, 1338.

(6) Owens v. Green, [1932] I.R. 225; Digest Supp.

(7) Diver v. McCrea, [1908] 42 I.L.T. 249.

(8) Hill v. Hill, (1904), 5 O.W.R. 2; 25 C.L.T. 41; 8 O.L.R. 710; 44 Digest 237, d.

(9) Shorthill v. Grannen, (1920), 47 N.B.R. 463; 55 D.L.R. 416; 25 Digest 536, q.

(10) McKnight v. Titus, (1933), 6 M.P.R. 282; Digest Supp.

(11) Re Reid, (1921), 64 D.L.R. 598; 50 O.L.R. 595; 25 Digest 517, 124ii.

(12) Standing v. Bowring, (1885), 31 Ch.D. 282; 55 L.J.Ch. 218; 54 L.T. 191; 25 Digest 519, 133.

WITNESS ACTION.

The plaintiffs, the personal representatives of Miss Teresa Elizabeth Jarman, claimed that money on deposit in certain banking accounts in the joint names of Miss Jarman and the defendant and certain building society shares also in those joint names were held by the defendant as trustee for Miss Jarman's estate. ROMER, J., dismissed the action. The facts appear in the judgment.

Russell, K.C., and Hubert A. Rose for the plaintiffs.

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., and Sir Norman Touche for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 2. ROMER, J., read the following judgment. This is an action by the personal representatives (one of whom, Mr. R. L. Young, has died since the issue of the writ) of Miss Teresa Elizabeth Jarman and its object is to obtain a decision that the defendant is a trustee for Miss Jarman's estate of certain assets to which the defendant has a legal title by survivorship. A

Miss Jarman died intestate on Mar. 10, 1941, aged 85. She had spent much of her life at Taunton, Somerset, and it was there that she died. Her sole next of kin was a sister, Mrs. Mary Ann Sealey, who survived her by a few months and died on Aug. 23, 1941. The plaintiffs were the executors of Mrs. Sealey's will and obtained probate thereof on Dec. 10, 1941. On Feb. 26, 1942, they took out letters of administration to the estate of Miss Jarman. The only other relations that Miss Jarman had were the issue of Mrs. Sealey. This lady had two sons of whom the defendant, now aged 72, is one. It was thought, during the greater part of the hearing before me, that Mrs. Sealey's other son had died many years before Miss Jarman's death, but it eventually transpired that he died in 1939. This son had four children, namely, Mrs. Dora Matilda Reid, Reginald Clifford Delaney Sealey, Mrs. Beatrice Maud Cowan and Wilfred Alexander Sealey. B C

Prior to January, 1927, Miss Jarman had two accounts in her sole name at Fox's Branch, Taunton, of Lloyds Bank, Ltd. On Jan. 6, 1927, she caused the balances standing to her credit on these accounts, which amounted to £3,265 11s. 11d. and £1,053 18s. 11d. respectively, to be carried to a new deposit account which she opened with the same branch in the joint names of herself and the defendant. I will refer to this account hereafter as "the Lloyds account." The first of the deposit books relating to this account is for the period Jan. 6, 1927, to Mar. 19, 1929, and above the names of Miss Jarman and the defendant on the first page appear the words "either to draw." On Jan. 28, 1935, Miss Jarman wrote to the defendant a letter which was, so far as material, in the following terms: D E

"My dear Wilfred . . . I had the enclosed paper from the bank. They are doing this in case anything happened, then there would be no trouble either side. We both have to sign the larger paper. You must sign under mine. Please put your signature on the slip. There is no immediate hurry, when you are writing again send it back to me . . . Kind love to you all from Your affectionate Aunt Teresa." F

The document which Miss Jarman enclosed with this letter was a form of authority to Lloyds Bank, Ltd., in the following terms: G

"Authority 9. For joint credit account (current or deposit). To Lloyds Bank, Ltd. We the undersigned request and authorise you, until any one of us shall give you notice in writing to the contrary: 1. To pay any moneys now or hereafter standing to the credit of any account in our joint names including all interest thereon to, or to the order of, all or any one of us, or to, or to the order of, the survivors or survivor of us or the executors or administrators of such survivor. 2. To accept the endorsement of us or any one of us to any cheques, drafts, orders, bills and notes payable to us and placed to the credit of any such joint account. Dated Feb. 8, 1935. (Signed) Teresa Jarman. Wilfred Jarman Sealey." H

Apart from the relevant deposit books this letter and authority are the only existing documents which throw a light on Miss Jarman's intentions with regard to the Lloyds account.

Apart from her accounts with Lloyds Bank, Miss Jarman also had, with the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, Taunton, a deposit account on "ordinary department" and another deposit account on "special investment department." On Jan. 31, 1927, her credit balance on the first of these accounts amounted to £67 1s. 2d. and that on the second of the accounts to £2,294 13s. 11d. On that date, Miss Jarman, and the defendant signed the following declaration, addressed to the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, Taunton :

"Declaration as to joint account. No. 382. To the trustees and managers of the Somerset Savings Bank. We the undersigned Teresa Jarman and Wilfred J. Sealey Taunton and Walthamstow do hereby jointly and severally declare and agree that our account in the books of the Somerset Savings Bank, No. A432, shall be a joint account, and that all moneys now or hereafter to be deposited in the said bank to the credit of the said account, shall, on presentation of the passbook, be repayable to either of us or to the written order of either of us, and in the case of death to the survivor of us. And we hereby jointly and severally undertake, to hold the trustees and managers of the said bank harmless ; and indemnified against all claims and demands that may hereafter be made against them or the said savings bank in respect of any payment made against our said account in pursuance of the foregoing authority and instructions. Dated Jan. 31, 1927."

That was signed by the defendant and Miss Jarman, and witnessed. The account referred to in this document as No. A432 was the account which Miss Jarman had on special investment department. It is to be observed that the reference to this account as "our account" was not strictly accurate inasmuch as prior to the signing of the document the account was in the sole name of Miss Jarman. Counsel for the plaintiffs, however, did not seek to make any point on this, and he also conceded, and rightly, that the declaration must be taken to cover both the accounts which Miss Jarman then had, although the account on "ordinary department" was not expressly mentioned.

Apart from the above transactions, Miss Jarman from time to time purchased certain investments in the joint names of herself and one or more of her great nephews and great nieces, and she made one such purchase in the names of herself and the defendant. The dates and particulars of these investments are as follows : (i) on Mar. 25, 1927, £500 fully paid shares of the Equitable Benefit Building Society in the joint names of herself and Mrs. Beatrice Cowan ; (ii) on Oct. 8, 1929, £500 fully paid shares of the Western Counties Permanent Building Society in the joint names of herself and Mrs. Beatrice Cowan ; (iii) on Oct. 8, 1929, £500 fully paid shares of the last mentioned society in the joint names of herself and Wilfred Alexander Sealey ; (iv) on Jan. 1, 1930, £500 fully paid shares of the Woolwich Equitable Building Society in the joint names of herself and Mrs. Dora Reid ; (v) on May 15, 1930, £500 fully paid shares of the last mentioned society in the joint names of herself and Reginald C. D. Sealey, and (vi) on Jan. 11, 1935, £500 fully paid shares of the Western Counties Permanent Benefit Building Society in the joint names of herself and the defendant.

With regard to the Lloyds account, the deposit account books show that from Jan. 6, 1927, Miss Jarman drew freely on the account and made many payments into it. Some of the withdrawals were in favour of her solicitors, Messrs. Alms & Young, who from time to time made investments on her behalf. The defendant at no time made any withdrawals from the account, nor did he pay any money into it. On Nov. 5, 1940, Miss Jarman withdrew £5,000 from the account for the purpose of investing the same through Messrs. Alms & Young and at her death the balance standing to the credit of the account amounted to £575 odd. As to the deposit account of Miss Jarman with the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, Taunton (ordinary department), the first deposit book which is available starts with a credit entry dated July 1, 1935 : "Brought forward from old book £210 10s. 0d." The old book has been lost. The new book is headed "Miss Teresa Jarman and Mr. Wilfred Jarman Sealey," and above the defendant's name is written "Name added Jan. 31, 1927," and a number. This date is inserted in red ink and there is a deletion, also in red ink, of something which it is difficult to decipher but which appears to be a date. The account was comparatively inactive, only a very few sums being shown as paid out and those apparently for the purpose of keeping the credit balance free from odd shillings and pence. The payments in to the account consisted of interest and of dividends on a sum of £500 consolidated stock, which was paid off on July 1, 1940, the proceeds being credited to the account. At the date of Miss Jarman's death there was a credit balance of about £871 (including interest) on this account. Miss Jarman's deposit account with the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, Taunton (special investment department) was opened on Feb. 1, 1916, and the deposit book from that date is available and was produced. The book was originally in the name of Miss Jarman alone, but the words "and Mr. Wilfred Jarman Sealey" were added later. The only substantial withdrawals from this account were in 1924, when two sums of £900 and £250 respectively were paid out to Miss Jarman. The sum of £3,624 odd (including interest) stood to the credit of this account at the date of Miss Jarman's death. At no time did the defendant withdraw anything from either of these deposit accounts with the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, nor did he ever make any contribution to either account.

The plaintiffs contend that there is a resulting trust in favour of Miss Jarman's estate in relation to the credit balances on the three accounts to which I have referred and also in relation to the £500 shares of the Western Counties Permanent Benefit Building Society which stood in the joint names of Miss Jarman and the defendant. The defendant, on the other hand, claims that Miss Jarman intended that he should be beneficially entitled on her death, if he survived her, to the moneys in the said accounts and to the shares, and that he is, consequently, entitled to retain for his own benefit such moneys and shares free from any trust in favour of Miss Jarman's estate.

It will be convenient now to refer to the oral evidence which was given before me. The first witness called by the plaintiffs was a Mr. Francis Dembry, who is a managing clerk employed by Messrs. Alms & Young, the solicitors who formerly acted for Miss Jarman and who now act for the plaintiffs. Mr. Dembry, who has been with the firm for many years, had known Miss Jarman officially since his early days as an office boy. He described her as being somewhat abnormal in the matter of her clothes, and I gathered that her attachment to the various articles of apparel which she possessed did not diminish by reason merely that, as the years passed by, such articles lost something of their original novelty and freshness. Apart from this mild eccentricity there was nothing abnormal in Miss Jarman's character. She was, however, very secretive with regard to her financial affairs and would not disclose her financial position either to Mr. Young (a partner in the firm) or to anyone else. She liked investing in mortgages, and if a suitable security presented itself the firm would write and give her particulars of it. Mr. Dembry told me that in his experience Miss Jarman was very keen on avoiding payment of income tax. Mrs. Dora Reid, a great niece of Miss Jarman, said in evidence that she used to call her "Aunt." She (Mrs. Reid) lived as a small child with her grandmother, Mrs. Sealey, at Taunton, and Mrs. Sealey brought her up there except during the period 1914 to 1918 when she was in London. Mrs. Reid lived with Mrs. Sealey until she married in 1936, and thereafter she continued to live in Taunton. Throughout all this time Miss Jarman also resided in Taunton, and Mrs. Reid told me that she visited her once or twice every week, and, after her marriage, she visited her grandmother, Mrs. Sealey, every day. Mrs. Sealey was also frequently visited by Miss Jarman. Mrs. Reid said that the defendant did not visit Miss Jarman often—perhaps once in 2 or 3 years. She further told me that Miss Jarman was miserly, and that she was secretive and did not discuss her financial affairs with anyone or like anyone to know about them. As an instance of Miss Jarman's regard for money, Mrs. Reid said that she (Miss Jarman) owned some property at Portishead jointly with Mrs. Sealey and took care to see that the latter lady was charged with one half of the most trivial expenses incurred in relation to the property. In cross-examination, Mrs. Reid said that when the defendant went to Taunton he usually stayed with his mother, and on one occasion took his wife to stay with her too. She said further that the longest period he spent in Taunton was a week and that on other occasions he only stayed a few days. Mrs. Reid told me further that Mrs. Sealey did not like the defendant's wife.

- A The defendant said in evidence that he had known Miss Jarman from childhood and that she was always very fond of him and made a great fuss of him, and that this attitude went on right through the whole of her life. They never had any cross words. He said that he was born in Taunton but taken to London as a baby in arms by his parents, and, except during the 1914-1918 war and for a visit to Canada, he has spent his life in London. I gather that he has never been affluent. For some 6 years he was in a small one man business and he also worked as a tailor's cutter. His visit to North Alberta, Canada, lasted for about four and a half years and he returned to England in 1908. He said that while he was there he received a letter from Miss Jarman asking him to return to England, as she did not like his being so far away from her. In the letter she offered to pay his passage home and she did so, and he returned to England. He said that Miss Jarman sent the passage money out to him in Canada, and that he saw her in Taunton after he arrived in England. On Oct. 4, 1914, he married a widow, and a few days later was called up to the Army, he being a member of the National Reserve. He did not see anything of Miss Jarman during the war period. He was demobilised in February, 1919, and tried then to re-establish himself in civil life. He saw Miss Jarman in 1920 or 1921. Either then or on some subsequent occasion he told Miss Jarman that his mother (between whom and his wife relations were very strained) had told him that she would not leave him any money on account of his marriage to a widow and that she regarded his wife as "second-hand goods." Miss Jarman said that his marriage was no business of his mother's and that it was not his mother who had to live with his wife. He said that he first heard about the Lloyds account in a letter which he received from his aunt in 1927. He said that he was in regular correspondence with Miss Jarman after the 1914-1918 war, but it is his custom to destroy letters after answering them and he probably destroyed this letter of 1927 in the same way that he destroyed the others. He had searched for it, but could not find it. He said that in that letter Miss Jarman told him that she had opened joint accounts for his benefit and that she had done it in that manner so that the solicitors should know nothing about it and death duties would not be payable. After that he said he saw his aunt either every year or probably every two years. He never spent any long period at his mother's place because he knew the feeling of his mother towards his wife. He only stayed 2 or 3 days. In the same year as he received the 1927 letter, or the year after, he said he had a conversation with Miss Jarman in which she confirmed what she had said in the letter, namely, that she had opened the joint accounts, which were to be for his benefit, and that the reason she had done it in that way was so that the solicitors should know nothing about it and that death duties should not be payable. His evidence was that, except for this, he had no conversation with Miss Jarman about the joint accounts between receiving the 1927 letter and 1935. The defendant's attention was directed to the joint authority to the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank, Taunton, dated Jan. 31, 1927. He said that this was enclosed with the letter of 1927 from his aunt, and that he had signed it and returned it by letter to her. The defendant was then asked about a document of which a copy appears in the agreed correspondence and which is in the following terms: "Lloyds Bank, Feb. 2, 1935, Wilfred Jarman Sealey W. J. Sealey." He said he was under the impression that he signed another document and kept the above as a copy of his signature. He said it was enclosed with the letter which Miss Jarman wrote to him on Jan. 28, 1935, to which I have already referred. This letter, he said, he had discovered in a book, the letter having been used as a book mark. The letter also enclosed the joint authority to Lloyds Bank, Ltd., which was signed by Miss Jarman and the defendant and bears date Feb. 8, 1935. He told me that he distinctly remembers signing that authority. After 1935, he said, he saw his aunt at her home in Taunton every year or perhaps every two years, and that his relations with her continued as they had always been, namely, affectionate. He said that the next time he saw Miss Jarman after receiving her letter of Jan. 28, 1935, she again told him that she intended the sums in the joint accounts to be for his benefit, and that she hoped he would not squander the moneys but invest them. The defendant was asked when he first knew that Miss Jarman had invested money in the Western Counties Permanent Benefit Building Society in their joint names, and he answered that he did not remember that at all nor the circumstances in which the investment was made. Apart from this investment, and the moneys on the joint accounts, the defendant said that the only money he received from his aunt was when, on two occasions, she paid his fare to Taunton from London.

In cross-examination the defendant was challenged as to the book in which he said he had found his aunt's letter of Jan. 28, 1935. He could not give details of the book, but said that it was one of many that he was looking through for salvage. He gave a somewhat confused account of the document in the correspondence and obviously could not remember how it came into being, but he was clear that he found it in the book together with the letter of Jan. 28, 1935. With regard to the 1914-1918 war period, he said that he was in Jersey and later in this country and had no correspondence with Miss Jarman and did not see her, leave being very restricted. During his aunt's last illness when she was in hospital for about 3 months, he did not see her and said that at the Admiralty, where he was employed, they had the utmost difficulty in getting leave. He did, however, succeed in getting leave to attend her funeral. When asked what he understood from Miss Jarman was her intention as to the joint accounts, he again said that she told him that the reason for her doing it in that way was that the solicitors would not know anything and death duties would not be payable. The defendant then gave some evidence which I will set out verbatim, because it is the foundation of a contention by the plaintiffs, alternative to the view that Miss Jarman did not intend to pass any beneficial interest to the defendant, which I shall have to consider later.

"(Q) Did you understand from anything that Miss Jarman said to you that you had any right to any of the money during her lifetime? You did not, did you? (A) No. (Q) And you understood, I gather, that the idea of putting the money into the joint names was so that when in the future she died, you would have anything that was left? (A) That I have given in evidence, and I still maintain that that was her object—the reason why she told me she put these sums into these accounts. (Q) But, of course, all you would get would be anything that was left? (A) Yes, I presume so; I never questioned her about them at any time. (Q) Why do you say she did it in that way, instead of leaving it to you by will? Have you any idea? (A) I have already stated . . . (Q) It was to save death duties? (A) . . . that she told me she had done it in that way so that the solicitors would know nothing about it and death duties would not be payable."

Mr. George Spencer, who was formerly employed at Fox's Branch, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., Taunton, but is now retired, was called and said that he knew Miss Jarman quite well and that she came into the bank frequently. He remembers her opening the joint account in the names of herself and the defendant and having conversations with her. He formed certain impressions with regard to this account, but, as he was unable to say that these impressions were founded on anything that she said to him, his evidence did not carry the matter any further. Mr. Dyer, assistant manager of the Equitable Benefit Building Society, gave evidence. He told me that he had been in the employment of the society since 1897, and that he knew Miss Jarman for many years. He remembers her coming to see him in 1927 about making an investment in joint names. She said that she had a young niece named Margaret Sealey who was born years after her brothers and sisters and had, consequently, been left out of somebody's will, and as she (Miss Jarman) had benefited under this will she thought it was up to her to give Margaret £500 to bring her up to the level of her brothers and sisters. She asked whether the society's rules permitted a joint investment so that it would go to the survivor, and Mr. Dyer said they did. A few days later she made an investment of £500 in the names of herself and Margaret Sealey—or rather Beatrice Sealey (now Mrs. Cowan), for Miss Jarman had made a mistake as to this girl's Christian name. Mr. Dyer said that Miss Jarman was very particular about the interest being paid to her. Some time afterwards Miss Jarman came in again and said that she had more money than when she made her will and would like to make a couple more joint investments in the same way that she had done for Beatrice. She said it would save her altering her will and save death duties. She had referred to death duties also at the first conversation. Mr. Dyer said that she did not, in fact, make any more investments with his society. In cross-examination he said that Miss Jarman did refer to her will as stated by him in his evidence (above), and that he was surprised after her death to find that she had died intestate.

Having regard to the very few relevant documents that are available in this case the question whether Miss Jarman did or did not intend to confer a benefit, through the various media which I have mentioned, on the defendant depends primarily on the oral evidence and secondarily on the surrounding circumstances and the probabilities arising therefrom. With regard to the oral evidence, the main evidence is that of the defendant himself. This evidence is not, of course, inadmissible to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust which prima facie arises from the joint investments and from the fact that Miss Jarman did not stand in loco parentis. The defendant's evidence must, however, be treated with reserve, and would be readily displaced by other evidence not fairly reconcilable with it. My task in arriving at a conclusion whether Miss Jarman intended to benefit the defendant or to constitute him a trustee of the deposits and shares is facilitated by the fact that he impressed me as being a truthful and honest witness. That in certain matters of detail he was somewhat vague and uncertain is true. He is not, however, as young as he was, and to septuagenarians details are apt to be elusive. I am, nevertheless, confident that the substance of what Miss Jarman told him as to her intentions, and which he repeated again and again in the witness box, remains clear in his mind, and that his evidence on the matter should be accepted unless it is opposed by other relevant evidence, including all legitimate circumstances and such inferences as may arise from them.

I know nothing about the other nephew that Miss Jarman had, the defendant's brother. As I have said earlier, it only emerged towards the end of the hearing that his death did not occur until 1939 and that he had not died, as was previously believed, many years before. At all events, there was no evidence before me of any association between himself and Miss Jarman, though she must, presumably, have been aware of his existence. Apart from this gentleman, the defendant was Miss Jarman's only nephew and (except for her sister) her closest blood relation. In the only available letter that she wrote to him she subscribed herself as "Your affectionate Aunt." The letter is, moreover, obviously a friendly letter and tends to corroborate the defendant's evidence that he and Miss Jarman were on terms of affection. As against this view, it was pointed out that the defendant's visits to her at Taunton were few and irregular and that he did not write to her during the 1914-1918 war and did not go and see her in hospital during her last illness. As to these considerations, I have, however, to bear in mind that the defendant was never affluent and railway tickets to Taunton cost money, that his wife and his mother (who lived there) disliked each other, and that during Miss Jarman's illness he was subject to naval discipline. His admission that he never wrote to his aunt during the 1914-1918 war lends credibility to his evidence as a whole, for he need not have made the admission at all. Moreover, during the war he was in the army, and soldiers are not, perhaps, the most constant of correspondents. Viewing the circumstances as a whole, I find nothing which leads me to believe that the relations which existed over a long period between himself and his aunt were other than as he described them in his evidence. I am satisfied that she regarded him with that degree of affection which is commonly to be found between aunt and nephew in a small family such as theirs.

The next point of relevance is the first investment of building society shares in the joint names of Miss Jarman and her great niece Beatrice. On Jan. 6, 1927, Miss Jarman had opened the Lloyds account in the joint names of herself and the defendant. On Jan. 31, she and the defendant signed the declaration as to joint account with reference to Miss Jarman's deposit accounts with the Somerset & Wilts Savings Bank. On Mar. 25 of the same year, Miss Jarman invested £500 in the purchase of building society shares in the joint names of herself and Beatrice, and Mr. Dyer's evidence shows quite clearly that Beatrice was to take these shares beneficially in the (very probable) event of her surviving Miss Jarman—in other words, the evidence establishes that Miss Jarman had no intention, when effecting this transaction, of constituting Beatrice a trustee. In 1929 and 1930 she made four further investments of shares in the joint names of herself and one or other of her great nephews and nieces, including Beatrice. If, then, the plaintiffs are right, Miss Jarman created, between 1927 and 1930 inclusive, eight legal relationships, under seven of which the co-depositor or co-investor would be a trustee for her estate if he or she survived Miss Jarman, and under the eighth of which the co-investor, in the like event, became beneficially entitled. It cannot, of course, be said to be impossible that any person would carry out such a scheme, but I confess that I myself think that it is highly improbable, and in this I am fortified by the expression of a similar opinion by the Court of Appeal in Fowkes v. Pascoe (1). The fact that Miss Jarman intended to pass a beneficial interest to Beatrice under the first joint investment in their names is by no means conclusive as to her intentions regarding the other transactions, for that joint investment was due to a particular reason which was not common to the others, nevertheless it is to be noted that Beatrice would only succeed, if at all, by survivorship, and it was by survivorship alone that the exclusive legal title would pass to the co-depositors or investors in the other cases. The really important point, as it seems to me, is the difficulty of conceiving any sensible reason why Miss Jarman should set up seven different trusts, with five different trustees, for the benefit of her estate. A far more rational conception is that she intended to benefit the other member of the family who was brought into each of these transactions, but in such a way that the beneficial possession was postponed until her death. Mr. Dyer's evidence confirms part of what the defendant told me as to Miss Jarman's motives, as communicated by her to him, in making the joint deposits, namely, that she was anxious to save death duties. It is intelligible that she should imagine (though erroneously) that she was effecting this object if the co-depositors or co-investors were to inherit beneficially by survivorship, but it is scarcely possible that she could have thought so if the person concerned were to hold the assets in which they were interested as part of her own estate. I would here observe that the other reason of which the defendant spoke—that her solicitors would know nothing about it—fits in with the secretiveness of Miss Jarman's character as described to me by Mr. Dembry.

A The circumstances, accordingly, down to 1930 are, in my view, not opposed to the evidence which the defendant gave as to Miss Jarman's motives, as expressed to him, in making the joint deposits. On Jan. 11, 1935, Miss Jarman made the £500 investment of shares in the joint names of herself and the defendant. I see no reason to distinguish this from the similar transactions which she had effected in 1929 and 1930, and in which she had, in my judgment, a beneficial intention. Finally, on Jan. 28, 1935, she wrote the letter to the defendant which I have already considered, enclosing the joint authority to Lloyds Bank, Ltd., which he signed. The terms of this authority are perfectly in keeping with the intentions of Miss Jarman, as stated by the defendant, and I have no doubt but that she obtained his signature to it, having signed it herself, in furtherance of those intentions. Regarding the matter as a whole it is, in my opinion, both intelligible and clear that Miss Jarman wished to save death duties and at the same time to benefit the members of the family. Her natural secrecy in financial matters deterred her from consulting her solicitors on the matter, so she evolved a plan for herself. Such a plan would have to conform, as it did conform, to her fondness for the possession of money, and the beneficial enjoyment by her relatives must, accordingly, be postponed until her death. With regard to the £3,000 which she invested in building society shares she was content to take the income for her life and ensured that she should get it by causing her name to be entered as first of the joint investors in each case. The deposit accounts, however, stood on a different footing and she wanted to deal with them during her lifetime as she wished. Only what was left at her death was to go to the co-depositor, who was never expected to pay anything into the account and was not, so long as she was alive, to draw anything out for himself. When death should deprive her of any further use of her fortune then the benefits to her sister's issue would crystallise, but they were to remain in suspense until then and, so far as the defendant's interest in the deposit accounts was concerned, it might result in nothing at all.

Such being, as I believe, Miss Jarman's intentions, it would seem at first sight to follow that the defendant has not only a legal, but also a beneficial, title to the moneys and shares which are now in issue, and none the less because Miss Jarman (as between herself and the defendant) retained control and dominion over the deposit accounts during her own lifetime. In Beecher v. Major (2) a Mrs. Beecher transferred £1,000 stock into the name of her niece Mary Major, and wrote her a letter stating that she had done so and that she intended it for the niece's benefit. In the letter Mrs. Beecher enclosed a bank power which she stated was to enable her to receive the dividends for her life and directed Mary Major to sign the power and get it witnessed. The niece, accordingly, did so and returned it to Mrs. Beecher. Mrs. Beecher had asked her niece to destroy the letter, which she did. Mrs. Beecher subsequently died, having received the dividends on the stock, but not having otherwise acted under the bank power which, it turned out, instead of being merely a power to receive the dividends, was also a power enabling Mrs. Beecher to sell and transfer the stock. It appeared that Mrs. Beecher had always been very kind to Mary Major, and by her will made before the transfer had given her an annuity of £30. The question before the court was whether Mary Major was entitled to retain the stock for herself. SIR ROBERT KINDERSLEY, V.-C., after stating that the evidence proved satisfactorily that in her letter Mrs. Beecher had stated that she had transferred the stock into Mary Major's name and that she intended it for her benefit, proceeded (2 Drew & Sm. 436) :

"But it is contended that the fact of Mrs. Beecher having enclosed in her letter a power of attorney to be executed (and which was accordingly executed) by Mary Major, which power of attorney authorised Mrs. Beecher to sell and transfer the stock itself as well as to receive the dividends, is sufficient to prove that Mrs. Beecher intended that Mary Major should be a trustee for her, because it shows that she intended to keep the stock in her own power, and she might have sold it out at any time."

The VICE-CHANCELLOR then referred to and distinguished Prankerd v. Prankerd (3), and continued (ibid., 437) :

"Here we have Mrs. Beecher's express declaration of her intention that the transfer was for the benefit of Mary Major. And in the next place, Mrs. Beecher's procuring the power of attorney showed no intention to retain the beneficial ownership ; it was only reserving to herself a power to defeat Mary Major's interest, and it stands on the same footing as if Mrs. Beecher had executed a formal declaration of trust, in Mary Major's favour, with a power of revocation. The reservation of the power of revocation would not have destroyed the trust if the power was not exercised. Under these circumstances I can come to no other conclusion than that the letter clearly proves it was Mrs. Beecher's intention to give a benefit to Mary Major to the extent of the £1,000 stock ; and that Mrs. Beecher made the transfer into her name for the purpose of carrying out that intention ; and that all she did by requiring the power of attorney was to retain a right to receive the dividends during her life, and also a right, if she thought fit, to revoke the gift, which, however, she never did."

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made a declaration accordingly that Mary Major was entitled to the stock.

In Marshal v. Crutwell (4) the plaintiff's husband, being in failing health, transferred his banking account from his own name into the joint names of himself and his wife, and directed the bankers to honour cheques drawn either by himself or his wife, and he afterwards paid in considerable sums to this account. All cheques were afterwards drawn by the plaintiff at the direction of her husband, and the proceeds were applied in payment of household and other expenses. The husband never explained to the plaintiff what his intention was in transferring the account, but he was stated by the bank manager to have remarked at the time of the transfer that the balance of the account would belong to the survivor of himself and his wife. The husband died a few months after the transfer, and the plaintiff thereupon claimed to be entitled to the balance. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., held on the facts that no gift was intended by the husband to his wife and that the transaction was not intended to be a provision for the wife but simply a mode of conveniently managing the husband's affairs. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said (L.R. 20 Eq. 330) :

"Now, in all the cases in which a gift to the wife has been held to have been intended, the husband has retained the dominion over the fund in this sense, that the wife during the lifetime of the husband has had no power independently of him, and the husband has retained the power of revoking the gift."

He then proceeded to point out that in general a man would have no motive in transferring stock into the names of himself and his wife except the motive of benefiting her in case she survived, but that, as already indicated, he did find a contrary motive in the case before him. Two points seem to emerge from this, namely : (i) that a number of cases had been previously decided in favour of surviving wives whose husbands had put a fund into their joint names but had reserved dominion and control over the fund during their (the husbands') lifetimes, and (ii) that SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., would have decided in favour of the plaintiff if the evidence had shown an intention on the part of the husband that she should take the fund, whatever it might be at his death, beneficially.

In Re Harrison (5) the headnote is as follows :

- A "A husband, in 1908, transferred the money standing to a current account at his bank in his own name into the joint names of himself and his wife. He did not inform his wife of the joint account, and always drew cheques on the account himself. He died in November, 1919. The wife never drew any cheque on the account until shortly before his death, when he was in failing health and unable to attend to business. The bank manager then informed her of the joint account, and advised her to draw a cheque, which she did. The husband had also from time to time made deposits in the joint names of himself and his wife, and in August, 1919, consolidated them into one deposit in the joint names. The wife never knew of this deposit until after her husband's death. There was then found among his papers an envelope endorsed with the wife's initials and containing the deposit receipt and a document in which he said : ' I would like this paying away at once if possible as under,' with a list of names with amounts against them."
- B
- C

- In addition to the facts stated in the headnote it appears from the body of the report that the bank manager stated that the ledgers there contained entries for many years past of deposit receipts in the names of the husband and wife, and that in such entries there was written : " Repayable to either or survivor." The manager said that such words would be written on the verbal instructions of the husband. RUSSELL, J., said that counsel for the parties who were resisting the widow's claim did not dispute that prima facie she, as survivor, would be entitled to the credit balances on the current and deposit accounts, but contended that, at all events as regards the deposit account, he could rebut the presumption in her favour by the document which is referred to in the headnote. The learned judge did not, however, accept that view, and remarked that the document did not read so much as a trust of the husband's own property as a request relating to some one else's property. He then observed that the principles applicable to the case were dealt with by SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Marshall v. Crutwell (4). He distinguished the facts in that case from those in the case before him and said (90 L.J.Ch. 190) :
- D
- E
- F

" . . . it is difficult here to find any motive for transferring the account from the husband's name into the joint names, except that the wife should take the money if she survived her husband."

He concluded his judgment by saying (ibid., 191) :

- G " If I am to infer from the surrounding circumstances what the motive of the transaction was, I hold that it was intended by the husband that the moneys standing on current account in the joint names were intended to belong to the survivor. The case for the defendants as regards the deposit account is much more difficult than that as regards the current account; and I can see nothing to displace the wife's claim. I hold, therefore, that the moneys standing to the credit of both accounts belong to the wife."
- H

Having regard to the conclusions at which I have arrived on the facts, I should, in view of the above authorities, have found little difficulty in holding that the defendant is entitled to the funds and shares in question but for a point that was taken by counsel for the plaintiffs and which is founded upon the requirements of the Wills Act, 1837. The argument (which is confined to the credit balances on the Lloyds account and the savings accounts) is that by retaining as against the defendant dominion and control over these accounts during her lifetime and limiting her benefaction to such credit balances only as might be in existence at her death, she was attempting to do that which can only validly be done by a will executed in conformity with the Wills Act. Counsel says that for the defendant to succeed he must establish either an immediately effective gift by Miss Jarman during her lifetime, or an inter vivos settlement in his favour subject to a power of revocation by Miss Jarman, or a donatio mortis causa; that the evidence shows that Miss Jarman's bounty was not intended to operate in any of these ways; and that the medium through which it was intended to operate is invalid. The point does not appear to have been taken in any of the reported cases in this country which the industry of counsel brought to light, but it has been discussed in some Irish and Canadian cases. Before referring to them I should say that it is not in dispute that the relevant deposit books and pass books were, at all material times during Miss Jarman's lifetime, in her custody or under her control. A B

In Owens v. Green (6), which is a decision of the Supreme Court of the Irish Free State, the headnote is as follows ([1932] I.R. 225):

"A.F., an old man, kept large sums of money on deposit account in a bank in his own name for several years. In March, 1927, he called at the bank and asked the manager of the bank for his deposit receipts. He told the manager that he wished to settle his money, and that he was not able to do so until he saw Father O., but that he would like to do something for P.F. He then gave the manager a number of deposit receipts, which he asked the manager to put in the names of P.F. and himself, requesting the manager to put the money in such a way that he could draw the interest without going to P.F. The manager said that the only way that he could do that was 'by putting it payable to them or either of them.' A sum of £16,917, represented by ten deposit receipts, was then placed on deposit in the joint names of A.F. and P.F., the deposit receipts being left by A.F. with the bank manager. A couple of days later A.F. called at the bank and stated that he wished to take £700 out of the joint account and put it in his own name, which accordingly he did, leaving £16,217 standing in the joint names on nine receipts, the receipts stating that the bank acknowledged the receipt of the amount deposited by A.F. and P.F., and continuing: 'For which we (the bank) promise to be accountable to them or either of them.' A week later A.F. cashed all the deposit receipts with interest, and, having taken the interest, re-deposited the principal sum to the same account, where it remained until May, 1929, when he again cashed the receipts, took the interest and re-deposited the principal. He subsequently withdrew the principal several times, sometimes re-depositing only a portion of the principal in both names, as before, and depositing the remainder in his own name alone. On Sept. 8, 1930, he called at the bank and asked for his receipts, and stated that he was going to settle the money finally. He deposited £5,000 in the names of himself and P.F., receiving one deposit receipt, £3,506 in his own name alone, receiving one deposit receipt, and £10,826 6s. 3d. in a new deposit account, in his own name and that of Father O., receiving four deposit receipts. He told the bank manager that he wished no one to know anything of the moneys deposited except the parties named with him in the receipts, and that the manager could tell them that the moneys were to be their property if anything happened to him, and that the receipts were to be handed to the survivors. On Dec. 15, 1930, A.F. withdrew the sums deposited on Sept. 8, retained the interest, and re-deposited the amounts as before. All these deposit receipts were in the form already stated. A.F. died on Dec. 29, 1930. On Sept. 8, 1930, A.F. had made another deposit, viz., one for £200 in the joint names of Father O. and his brother R.O., the deposit receipt in this case being in favour of them 'or the survivor of them.' R.O. had worked for A.F., and when making this C D E F G H deposit A.F. asked the bank manager to get from R.O. a receipt acknowledging payment of all his claims up to date, and on getting such a release to deliver the deposit receipt to R.O. This the manager did on the same day. In October, 1930, P.F., was in the bank on business, and told the manager that A.F. had told him (P.F.) that A.F. had left him 'well off in the bank' and asked what the amount was, and the manager told him of the £5,000 deposited in the joint names. Some days later Father O. asked the manager the same question, and the manager told Father O. of the four deposits in his and A.F.'s names. On the day of A.F.'s death P.F. sent for and obtained from the manager of the bank the deposit receipt in which he was named with A.F., and on the same day Father O. also called at the bank and obtained the deposit receipts in which he was named with A.F. P.F. and Father O. each instituted an action against the executor of the will of A.F. claiming a declaration that the money on deposit in the joint names of each plaintiff and A.F. did not form portion of A.F.'s estate, but belonged to each plaintiff beneficially by right of survivorship."

The court held that the actions must be dismissed. In the course of his judgment, KENNEDY, C.J., said (ibid., 237):

"The onus of rebutting the implication of a resulting trust by evidence rests upon the plaintiffs, Patrick Freeley and the Rev. M. J. Owens, who instituted these actions claiming to be beneficially entitled by survivorship to the moneys standing to the accounts in which they were respectively named as joint creditors with Austin Freeley. They may discharge the onus which they have undertaken and rebut the presumption of a resulting trust by proving that it was the intention of Austin Freeley, when putting the moneys to the deposit accounts in the bank, to give to the plaintiffs respectively, then and there and by that act, a right, that is to say an immediate present right to take the moneys with which he associated their respective names by survivorship (should they survive him) for their own respective use and benefit as surviving joint beneficial owners with him. It will not suffice to prove a merely testamentary intention on his part, for a testamentary disposition can be made only by will. It will not suffice to show an incomplete, or a conditional, or a postponed gift, nor can such an attempted gift be made good by means of a fictitious trust. But a gift completed by immediate transfer of legal ownership or by declaration of trust taking immediate effect will, if proved, support an intention to give a voluntary benefit and rebut the presumption of resulting trust. These principles . . . are well established, and we have only to consider their application to the facts before us. I should, however, say a word as to the form of the deposit receipts which is stated to be peculiar to banks of Northern Ireland. The form of these receipts does not, in my opinion, determine the question under consideration. The intention of the depositor must still be ascertained. The use of the particular form may be part of a scheme of convenience in transacting the depositor's business, the other name in the receipt being that of an agent for the actual depositor, such an arrangement, for instance, as existed in the case of Marshal v. Crutwell (4). Again, it may be an attempt to give whatever may remain undrawn to credit of the account at the depositor's death as GIBSON, J., appears to have held in the circuit case of Diver v. McCrea (7). In such a case, however, the intention is not to make a joint deposit operating as a present gift. It is an attempt to make an ambulatory and postponed gift of such (if any) moneys as shall remain undrawn from the account at the depositor's death, which, in my opinion, is contrary to the established principles inasmuch as it is really testamentary in character and intention, and for that reason I am unable to accept the decision in Diver v. McCrea (7) which is, I think, erroneous."

FITZGIBBON, J., delivered a judgment to the like effect. He said (ibid. 245) :

“ With the exception of Diver v. McCrea (7) . . . I am not aware of any case in which the alleged donor retained throughout his life the complete power of disposition over the property in dispute, and it was held that there had been a complete gift by him in his lifetime.”

He also said (ibid., 251) :

“ In my opinion the plaintiffs have failed to establish any present intention on the part of Austin Freeley to part with his property in, and absolute dominion over, the deposited money during his lifetime, and a disposition, to take effect only upon his death, if he should not have previously disposed of the money, cannot be effected except by a declaration of trust, which is admitted not to have been made by him.”

MURNAGHAN, J., delivered judgment to the same effect.

Having regard to this decision, which has not, so far as I am aware, been adversely criticised, and which in fact adopted and applied earlier Irish decisions, it seems clear that, if the case before me were to be decided in the courts of Eire, it would be decided against the defendant. Similar principles were recognised and applied in the following Canadian cases, namely, Hill v. Hill (8), Shorthill v. Grannen (9), and McKnight v. Titus (10), the last two being decisions of SIR DOUGLAS HAGEN, C.J., of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. In Re Reid (11), however, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario took a different view. The facts of that case are sufficiently set out in the headnote, as follows (50 O.L.R. 595) :

“ R., having made up his mind to give his father a sum of money, to come into his possession after R.’s death, placed the amount on deposit in a bank to the credit of a joint account in his own name and that of his father. The terms on which the joint account was opened were evidenced by a document addressed to the bank and signed by R. and his father, reading : ‘ All moneys deposited or that may be deposited by us and each of us to the credit of this account are our joint property, but they may be withdrawn by cheques made by either of us or the survivor of us.’ It was understood between them that the father was not to draw the money during R.’s lifetime, and that R., if he needed the money for himself, should be at liberty to draw what he required. R. was then ill of the disease of which he died about three weeks later.”

The court held, with one dissentient, that there was a complete gift of the fund to the father. MEREDITH, C.J., Ontario, in the course of his judgment referred to Standing v. Bowring (12), in which the plaintiff, a widow, transferred a fund into the joint names of herself and her godson with the express intention that the godson, in the event of his surviving the plaintiff, should have the fund for his own benefit but that she should have the dividends during her life. The Court of Appeal held that there was no resulting trust in favour of the plaintiff, because she intended to confer a benefit on the godson, the intention being (in the words of COTTON, L.J. (31 Ch.D. 287)), “ to give him a beneficial interest in the stock, and that, on her death, as he survived her, the legal right must prevail, and he must take the property for his own benefit.” In applying that decision to the case before him the Chief Justice said that he saw no difference in principle between the retention by the owner of the dividends on the consols and the retention by the son of the right to draw from the fund what, if anything, he might require to use. The Chief Justice rested his judgment in favour of an effective gift by R. to his father on the ground that on the death of the son the legal right to the fund became vested in the father and that there was no ground for enforcing the equitable right which the son’s executors set up, it being clear that the son’s intention was that at his death the fund, or what remained of it, should belong to his father. MACLAREN, J., and MAGEE, J., Justices of Appeal, agreed with the judgment of the Chief Justice. FERGUSON, J., Justice of Appeal, said in his judgment that it was clear that R. intended that on his death the father should be the absolute owner of the fund. He added (ibid., 607):

“ . . . it seems to me that there was, at the time of and by virtue of the deposit, a complete and perfect gift of a joint title or interest in the money which, by operation of law as well as by expressed intention and agreement, carried with it a right to title by survivorship—to my way of thinking, the title of the defendant and the gift as a gift were complete when and as soon as the deposit was made; from that time on the donee’s title was complete and perfect.”

The learned judge rejected the argument that the effect of the arrangement between R. and his father was to leave the dominion and control of the fund in the donor so that he had power to and might revoke the gift, and that, therefore, the gift was not in any sense a complete and perfect one, and he said (ibid.):

“ To my mind, the gift was complete and perfect, and the promise and agreement deposed to should, according to the true intent and meaning of the parties, be viewed as a collateral agreement whereby the donor was not given a right of revocation, but a right and power to defeat in whole or in part the purpose of the gift. The gift of the joint interest was, I think, intended to be effective from the moment of the deposit, so as to carry with it the legal right to title by survivorship; the promise and agreement in reference to drawing were not intended to, and did not, prevent the vesting of a title to the joint interest, as to which there was, I think, a complete and perfect gift inter vivos.”

HODGINS, J., Justice of Appeal, dissented. In his view the decision in Standing v. Bowring (12) was inapplicable. He said (ibid., 606):

“ With great respect, I think the cases differ radically in this respect, that in Standing v. Bowring (12) there was on the evidence a complete gift with the express intention that on the donor’s death the donee should have all the principal, the donor having only the dividends for life—while here there is a retention, not of income, but of the right to use during the lifetime the substance of the gift itself. This dominion over the subject, said to be ‘given’ with the intention that on the death all or what is left shall go to the donee, seems indistinguishable from that incident to a testamentary gift, which does not change the ownership but takes effect only on death.”

HODGINS, J., founded his dissenting view on the principle on which the earlier Ontario case of Hill v. Hill (8) had been decided and which was, he thought, applicable to the case which was before him.

In Hill v. Hill (8), the plaintiff’s father owned 400 dollars on deposit in a bank to his credit. He procured from the bank a deposit receipt for the amount, payable to himself and the plaintiff, or either, or the survivor. The understanding between the father and son was that the money should remain subject to the father’s control and disposition while living, and that whatever should be left at his death should belong to his son. He retained the receipt intact in his own possession, and it was found amongst his papers at his death. The above facts were deposed to by the plaintiff. ANGLIN, J., in the course of his judgment, said (8 O.L.R. 711):

“ . . . upon the plaintiff’s own evidence, I find myself driven to the conclusion that the purpose of William Hill, deceased, was by this means to make a gift to his son, the plaintiff, in its nature testamentary. As such it could only be made effectually by an instrument duly executed as a will. The father retaining exclusive control and disposing power over the 400 dollars during his lifetime, the rights of the son were intended to arise only upon and after his father’s death. This is, in substance and in fact, a testamentary disposition of the money, and, as such, ineffectual.”

He added that he was unable to regard the receipt as equivalent to a voluntary settlement, reserving to the settlor a life interest with a power of revocation. It appears to me, accordingly, that, if the Irish case of Owens v. Green (6) had come before the courts of Ontario, it would have been decided the other way.

The plaintiffs invite me to follow Owens v. Green (6) and the Canadian cases which are in line with it. I confess that the reasoning of those cases appeals to me, and, if there had been no English authority relevant to the question, I should have felt inclined to apply that reasoning notwithstanding that, by so doing, I should have defeated Miss Jarman's expressed intentions. I find it difficult to regard Miss Jarman's deposit account transactions as voluntary settlements by her in the defendant's favour coupled with a power of revocation. I find it equally difficult to regard them as operating as immediately effective gifts of anything, seeing that, as between Miss Jarman and the defendant, the defendant was to have no power of withdrawal so long as Miss Jarman was living, while she retained the entire beneficial title to the funds. Further, it is impossible to regard the transactions as donationes mortis causa. There only remains the view, therefore, that the gifts were intended to be postponed until Miss Jarman's death and to operate then so as to pass for the first time to the defendant a beneficial right to assets of Miss Jarman as then ascertained. In my judgment, however, it would not be right for me to defeat the defendant by applying this course of reasoning. In the first place, the cases which have come before the courts of this country in which a depositor has put funds in the joint names of himself and another, intending to retain control over the funds and to withdraw from them if he thought proper, but with the further intention that the other party (if surviving) should take beneficially whatever might be left of the funds at the death of the depositor, have all, so far as I am aware, resulted in the surviving beneficiary taking free from any trust. It is true that there is no reported case, so far as I know, in which the point now raised was presented to the court. That there were cases of this type prior to Marshall v. Crutwell (4), however, appears from the observations of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., which he made in that case, and it is impossible to say that the point was not taken in any of them or in any subsequent cases. Secondly, there is the fact that a court whose decisions are entitled to very great respect, namely, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, had the very point before them but did not accept it. In these circumstances and having regard to the disturbing effect which an acceptance of the argument might well have on titles already acquired, I think it is better that the change in the current of authority which I am invited to make should be made rather by the appellate court than by a court of first instance, assuming that it is to be made at all.

I hold, accordingly, that the defendant is beneficially entitled to the credit balances on the deposit accounts, as well as to the shares, which are in issue in this action. The defendant raised a further point to the effect that Mrs. Sealey, who was entitled to the whole of Miss Jarman's residuary estate as her sole next of kin, admitted the defendant's claim after Miss Jarman's death and made her testamentary dispositions on that basis, and that, accordingly, it is not open to her executors now to withdraw that admission. It appears that, by her will, Mrs. Sealey gave the defendant an annuity and, after the alleged admission, made a codicil revoking it. By a subsequent codicil, however, she restored it, and for this reason, among others, I should have been quite unable to accept the point, had it become material to the decision of the case. The action, in my judgment, fails and must be dismissed.

Action dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Alms & Young, Taunton (for the plaintiffs); G. Houghton & Son (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

RUSSELL v. DUKE OF NORFOLK AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Asquith and Denning, L.JJ.), December 6, 7, 8, 1948.]

Contract—Implied term—Racehorse trainer—Licence to train—Condition—Discretion of Jockey Club to withdraw licence—Need to hold inquiry before withdrawal—Conduct of inquiry according to rules of natural justice—Libel—Privilege—Qualified privilege—Racehorse trainer “warned off”—Publication in “Racing Calendar.”

By r. 102 of the Rules of Racing of the Jockey Club: “(i) Every trainer of a horse running under these rules must obtain an annual licence from the stewards of the Jockey Club and pay a yearly subscription of one sovereign to the Bentinck Benevolent Fund. (ii) A person whose licence to train has been withdrawn on the ground of misconduct is a disqualified person.” Rule 17 empowered the stewards inter alia to grant and withdraw licences at their discretion, to inquire into and deal with any matter relating to racing, to warn off Newmarket Heath, and to authorise publication of their decisions in the RACING CALENDAR.

A trainer paid £1 and was granted a licence to act as a trainer during 1947. A condition of the licence was: “A trainer’s licence may be withdrawn or suspended by the stewards of the Jockey Club in their absolute discretion, and such withdrawal or suspension may be published in the RACING CALENDAR, for any reason which may seem proper to them, and they shall not be bound to state their reasons.” Following an inquiry into the circumstances in which one of the horses trained by him won a race, the stewards of the Jockey Club withdrew the trainer’s licence and published the fact of the withdrawal in the RACING CALENDAR. In an action against the stewards of the Jockey Club and the secretary of Club, who also published the RACING CALENDAR, for a declaration that the trainer’s name was wrongfully placed on the list of disqualified trainers, for an order to delete it, and for a declaration that the decision to withdraw the licence was void as contrary to natural justice, and also for damages for breach of contract and for libel:

HELD: (i) (TUCKER and ASQUITH, L.JJ.) assuming that the application for a licence and the licence itself together constituted a contract to permit the trainer to act as such, the stewards had power under the contract in their unfettered discretion to withdraw the trainer’s licence without any inquiry at all, and it was impossible consistently with an unfettered and absolute discretion to imply a term in the contract that an inquiry, if held, should be in accordance with natural justice, but (DENNING, L.J., consentiente) there was, in any case, no evidence that any principle of natural justice had been violated.

(ii) the defendants were protected from liability in respect of the publication in the RACING CALENDAR on the ground that the occasion was privileged, malice having been disclaimed.

Decision of LORD GODDARD, C.J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 488), affirmed.

[AS TO IMPLIED TERMS OF A CONTRACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 322-3, para. 451; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 607-616, Nos. 5028-5090.

AS TO QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 480-486, paras. 579-592; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 32, pp. 112-116, Nos. 1437-1478.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Nott & Cardiff Corporation, [1918] 2 K.B. 146; 118 L.T. 487; 82 J.P. 181; 12 Digest 612, 5053.

- (2) Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co., [1891] 2 Q.B. 488; 60 L.J.Q.B. 734; 65 L.T. 286; 12 Digest 610, 5042.
- (3) Green v. Blake and Others, [1948] I.R. 242.
- (4) Chapman v. Ellesmere (Lord), [1932] 2 K.B. 431; 101 L.J.K.B. 376; 146 L.T. 538; Digest Supp.
- (5) Dawkins v. Antrobus, (1881), 17 Ch.D. 615; 44 L.T. 557; 8 Digest 507, 18.
- (6) Wood v. Wood, (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 190; 43 L.J.Ex. 153; 30 L.T. 815; 8 Digest 510, 29. A
- (7) Weinberger v. Inglis (No. 2), [1919] A.C. 606; affmg., [1918] 1 Ch. 517; 87 L.J.Ch. 345; 118 L.T. 769; 8 Digest 506, 11.
- (8) Maclean v. Workers' Union, [1929] 1 Ch. 602; 43 Digest 101, 1046.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J., dated Feb. 26, 1948, reported ([1948] 1 All E.R. 488).

On Mar. 6, 1947, the Jockey Club granted the plaintiff a licence to act as a racehorse trainer for one year. The possession of such a licence was necessary for any person training for meetings to which Jockey Club rules applied, which comprised practically all the meetings held. After a race at the Lincoln Spring Meeting in 1947 the winning horse, trained by the plaintiff, was examined on behalf of the Jockey Club. Subsequently, an inquiry was held by the stewards of the Jockey Club which the plaintiff attended, and the stewards withdrew the licence and published the fact of the withdrawal in the RACING CALENDAR. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants, the stewards (sued on their own behalf and on behalf of all other members of the Jockey Club) and Messrs. Weatherby & Sons (as secretaries of the club and printers and publishers of the RACING CALENDAR) claiming a declaration that his name had been wrongfully placed on the defendants' list of disqualified trainers (as being "warned off Newmarket Heath"), an order that his name should be deleted from the list, and a further declaration that the licence had never been lawfully withdrawn and that the defendants' decision to withdraw it was void as contrary to natural justice. He also claimed for breach of contract and for libel. LORD GODDARD, C.J., ruled that the occasion of the publication of the statement in the RACING CALENDAR was privileged, and, in the admitted absence of malice, there was no case in libel to go to the jury. On the rest of the case he left to the jury only the question whether the inquiry held by the stewards was fair. The jury disagreed. LORD GODDARD then held that there was no case in contract to go to the jury and gave judgment for the defendants. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J. B
C
D
E
F

Roberts, K.C., Geoffrey Howard and Dennis Lloyd for the plaintiff.
Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and Elwes for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE in favour of the defendants in an action in which the plaintiff, Mr. James Russell, who at all material times had been a trainer of racehorses under a licence issued by the stewards of the Jockey Club, claimed: G

"... a declaration that his name has been wrongfully placed on the list of disqualified trainers (warned off Newmarket Heath), (ii) an order that the defendants do delete the plaintiff's name from the list of persons so disqualified as aforesaid, (iii) a further declaration that the licence of Mar. 6, 1947, was never lawfully withdrawn by the defendants, but that their decision to do so was void as contrary to natural justice, (iv) damages for breach of contract, (v) damages for libel," H and further or other relief. At the trial the learned judge ruled that there was no case to go to the jury on the issue of libel, and he left to the jury a question whether an inquiry which had been held by the stewards of the Jockey Club was fair. On that question the jury were unable to agree, but the learned judge entered judgment for the defendants on matters of law which he considered were concluded in favour of the defendants.

A The plaintiff, by an application dated Jan. 31, 1947, applied on a form provided by the Jockey Club for a trainer's licence. The application provides that : "The application on this form can only be made and accepted on the condition that the applicant, in all respects, subjects himself to the Rules of Racing," and then it gives spaces for particulars with regard to the applicant, and continues : "I hereby apply to the stewards of the Jockey Club for a trainer's licence under the Rules of Racing during the year 1947." At the top left hand corner there are the words "Annual fee £1." In response to that application the plaintiff received a licence (No. 333) headed "Rules of Racing. Trainer's Licence," giving his name and address, and showing that he is "hereby licensed under the Rules of Racing, and, subject to the conditions appearing on the back hereof, to train horses to run under the Rules of Racing during the year 1947." On the back of that form there are conditions as follows :

C "1. Subject to the Rules of Racing for the time being, and the conditions specified below, this licence shall be in force until Dec. 31, 1947. 2. Every application for a new licence should be made on or before Mar. 1, 1948, and on the form which can be obtained at the registry office. Applications made after that date will not be considered, unless in very exceptional circumstances. 3. A trainer's licence may be withdrawn or suspended by the stewards of the Jockey Club in their absolute discretion, and such withdrawal or suspension may be published in the RACING CALENDAR, for any reason which may seem proper to them, and they shall not be bound to state their reasons."

E Pursuant to that licence the plaintiff had in training on Mar. 26, 1947, a horse called Boston Boro which was owned by a Mr. Hardy. That horse ran in the Lincoln Spring Meeting in a race called the John o' Gaunt Plate. After winning that race, on the instructions of the stewards of the meeting, the horse was taken on one side and specimen swabs were taken of saliva and sweat for the purpose of analysis to ascertain whether or not the horse had been "doped." In due course the stewards of the Jockey Club received the report of the analysts to the Jockey Club on those swabs, and they caused a letter to be written on Apr. 11 by Messrs. Weatherby to the plaintiff in these terms :

F "The stewards of the Lincoln Spring Meeting have referred to the stewards of the Jockey Club the report made by the Jockey Club analysts on the samples of saliva and sweat taken from Boston Boro trained by you, after the John o' Gaunt Plate at Lincoln on Mar. 26. The stewards of the Jockey Club will consider the report at the Jockey Club Office at Newmarket at 12 noon on Apr. 15. I am instructed to request you to attend at that time and place. Please telegraph me that you have received this letter."

G The plaintiff attended, together with Mr. Hardy, the owner of the horse, before the stewards of the Jockey Club on Apr. 15. He took with him a statement which he had written out before and he handed it to the stewards in the course of the hearing. It starts :

H "My Lords, with reference to your inquiry into the running of Boston Boro in the John o' Gaunt Plate at Lincoln and the subsequent report by the stewards at that meeting, following is exactly what happened that day."

He gives an account of the movements of the horse from 8.30 that morning until the time of the race, and then he goes on :

"Dope would be worse than useless used on Boston Boro. He is a very free running horse, if anything too keen. He is a hard puller and runs until he is beat. He has never failed in any race to do his best."

He goes on to say that in 1945 the horse was examined by Mr. Beaumont, a veterinary surgeon, and was reported as having heart trouble. He was, therefore, a horse who should not be overstrained because of his heart. Then the plaintiff says that his bet on the horse in the John o' Gaunt Plate was £5 each way, and he won £37 10s., and adds :

"Would any trainer consider drugging a horse for this amount ? I was not in contact with the horse from 8.30 a.m. until I put the saddle on him for the race, and I would certainly never consider asking a stable lad to do any horse drugging."

It is clear from that letter that the plaintiff was well aware of the nature of the matter which was being inquired into and necessitated his attendance on Apr. 15, and that he would be called on to give an explanation with regard to his care and management of the horse and so forth.

The inquiry was conducted by the three stewards of the Jockey Club in office that year, Lord Willoughby de Broke, Lord Rosebery and the Duke of Norfolk. Their finding was expressed in these terms by Lord Willoughby de Broke :

"Mr. Russell, the stewards have given extremely careful thought to this case and also to the statements to them which you have made both verbally and in writing. The stewards must accept the report, which was submitted to them by their analysts, that both samples of sweat and saliva that were taken from your horse, Boston Boro, at Lincoln on Mar. 26 gave positive reactions for alkaloids. You are the trainer of the horse, and the stewards hold you responsible. They, therefore, have no option but to withdraw your licence as a trainer on the ground of negligence amounting to grave misconduct, and the horse Boston Boro will be disqualified from running again under the Rules of Racing. That is all."

Accordingly, the plaintiff was treated as a disqualified person within the Rules of Racing, r. 102, para. (ii), of which provides : "A person whose licence to train has been withdrawn on the ground of misconduct is a disqualified person." The stewards had withdrawn this licence, and they had intimated that it was withdrawn on the grounds of misconduct. The result was that the plaintiff became a disqualified person, and under r. 178 (d) the following consequences ensued :

"A disqualified person, so long as his disqualification lasts, shall not : (1) act as steward or official at any recognised meeting ; (2) act as authorised agent under these rules ; (3) enter, run, train, or ride a horse in any race at any recognised meeting, or ride in trials ; (4) enter any racecourse, stand or enclosure ; (5) except with permission of the stewards of the Jockey Club be employed in any racing stable."

In due course the defendants caused to be published in the RACING CALENDAR the following notice :

"The stewards of the Lincoln Spring Meeting referred to the stewards of the Jockey Club the report which they had received from the Jockey Club's analyst on an examination ordered to be made of Boston Boro after running in the John o' Gaunt Plate on Wednesday, Mar. 26. The stewards of the Jockey Club interviewed Mr. R. Hardy, the owner, and J. Russell, the trainer, on Apr. 15, and were satisfied that a drug had been administered to the horse for the purpose of the race in question. They disqualified Boston Boro from running again under their rules and withdrew Russell's licence to train."

Before considering the issues raised in this case, it is necessary to refer to one or two other of the Rules of Racing subject to which this licence had been issued. The relevant rules are, I think, as follows. Rule 17, which is the all-important rule in the present case, is as follows :

A "The stewards of the Jockey Club have power, at their discretion, to grant, and to withdraw, licences to officials, trainers, jockeys and race-courses . . . to make inquiry into, and deal with, any matters relating to racing, and to warn any person off Newmarket Heath ; and to authorise the publication in the RACING CALENDAR of their decisions respecting any of the above matters, and of the decisions and reports of stewards of meetings."

Rule 25 provides :

B "The clerk of the course shall have in his possession, for the information of the stewards, a list of persons warned off Newmarket Heath, and of suspended jockeys, and also a copy of the latest monthly forfeit list, and he shall not allow any horse which, or the owner or nominator of which, is in the forfeit list to start for any race."

C Rule 102 I have already referred to. Rule 176 deals with corrupt practices and disqualification of persons. One of the corrupt practices deals with the administration, for the purpose of affecting the speed of a horse, of "drugs or stimulants, internally, by hypodermic or other methods." It deals with conspiracy and any corrupt or fraudulent practice in relation to racing, and it provides : "Every person so offending shall be warned off Newmarket Heath and other places where these rules are in force." Rule 178 provides :
D "When a person is warned off Newmarket Heath, and so long as his exclusion continues, he is a disqualified person." Then follow r. 178 (a), (b), (c), and r. 178 (d) which I have already read dealing with the position of a disqualified person.

E The case for the plaintiff at the trial was that the application for and grant of his licence formed a contract between himself and the Jockey Club and he said in para. 5 of the statement of claim :

F "It was in the premises an implied condition of the said contract between the parties and a duty owing to the plaintiff by the three first-named defendants as stewards of the said club that they should not on the grounds of misconduct purport to disqualify the plaintiff as a trainer during the period covered by the said licence or to warn him off Newmarket Heath on such ground unless they had first fairly investigated and adjudicated upon any complaint made against the plaintiff on that behalf and/or that if they conducted an investigation or made an adjudication such investigation and adjudication as they might conduct should be in accordance with the principles of natural justice."

G It was said on behalf of the plaintiff that the plaintiff had his licence withdrawn, and he had been found guilty of misconduct and become a disqualified person without an inquiry having been conducted in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

H The first question that had to be decided, accordingly, was whether or not, assuming that there was a contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, it was a term or condition of that contract that he could not have his licence withdrawn or could not be disqualified on the ground of misconduct without an inquiry of that nature. LORD GODDARD, C.J., dealing with that contention said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 491) :

"I can find no contract here under which the stewards were under any duty to the plaintiff to hold an inquiry. It is said that they did hold an inquiry, and, therefore, that they must hold it honestly, fairly, and in accordance with natural justice. That seems to me to be a fallacy. If there was no contractual duty to hold an inquiry, how can there be a breach of contract in withdrawing the licence, however the inquiry was conducted? It is admitted that the licence might have been withdrawn without any inquiry."

As I understood the case when originally presented by counsel for the plaintiff, he conceded that the stewards were at liberty under the Rules of Racing to do what they did in their discretion without holding any inquiry at all, but he said that, if they did hold an inquiry, then, as a result of this implied term in the contract, the inquiry which they held must be conducted in accordance with the principles of natural justice. Reading the judgment of the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, it would appear to me that he had formed the same view with regard to counsel's argument in the court below as that which I formed when I heard the appeal opened, but, in his reply, counsel did present the case rather differently. The argument, as I understand it, is that, at any rate, with regard to the finding of misconduct, the Rules of Racing do postulate the necessity for an inquiry. I think he was disposed to concede that, if the stewards had merely withdrawn the licence for some unspecified reason, they could have done so under r. 17 without holding an inquiry, but, says counsel, an inquiry which accords with the principles of natural justice is a condition precedent to his being found guilty under r. 102 of misconduct, he thereby becoming a disqualified person and his licence being withdrawn.

That requires a consideration of the rules. The view I have formed is that it is clear that under r. 17 the stewards in their absolute discretion and by reason of the terms of the licence which was granted, which I, like the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, am assuming for the purpose of this judgment constituted a contract (although I have some doubt whether it constituted a contract or whether it was not merely a licence issued on conditions binding both parties), had power to withdraw the plaintiff's licence without any inquiry at all. Furthermore, I think it is clear from r. 17 that equally, acting in their unfettered and absolute discretion, they could have warned the plaintiff off Newmarket Heath, and so far as one can see from the rules, the consequences of being warned off Newmarket Heath and of becoming a disqualified person are very much the same. At any rate, r. 178 provides that every person warned off Newmarket Heath is a disqualified person so long as his exclusion continues. So the result seems to be much the same. At any rate, if the stewards warn a man off he becomes a disqualified person in the same way as if he is convicted under r. 102 of misconduct. Therefore, it appears to me that much of the discussion in this matter is rather academic. The stewards clearly had power without any inquiry at all both to withdraw the licence and to warn off, but had it not been for r. 178, which provides that any person warned off becomes a disqualified person, I should have thought that there was a great deal to be said for the argument of counsel for the plaintiff that r. 102 does postulate an inquiry. Counsel for the defendants said that the power to deal with a person guilty of misconduct, a person who is subject to the rules by contract, is to be derived from r. 17. When one reads r. 17, which I have already quoted, it becomes clear that the power is derived from the words: "and deal with any matters relating to racing," but those words follow the words: "to make inquiry into," and, therefore, the power to find a person guilty of misconduct under r. 102 is derived from the words in r. 17 which give the stewards power to make inquiry into and deal with any matters relating to racing. I should have been disposed to the view that, so far as it is dealing with matters not otherwise expressly dealt with in the rules, that rule, read together with r. 102, would require and postulate an inquiry, but as I have said, it is a rather academic matter. I think, so far as the withdrawal of the licence and the warning off Newmarket Heath are concerned, that it is impossible to imply into the contract between the parties the term which the plaintiff would seek to import. In my view, it is a term which is contradictory of the existence of an unfettered and absolute discretion because it would impose a very considerable fetter on the exercise of the discretion, if, although in their unfettered discretion the stewards can warn off or withdraw licences, none the less if they choose to make an inquiry they bind themselves to conduct the inquiry in a particular way and manner. I find myself in complete agreement with the views expressed by the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE on that part of the case, where, after referring to the judgment of PICKFORD, L.J., in Re Nott and Cardiff Corporation (1), and the judgment of LORD ESHER in Hamlyn v. Wood (2), he says (ibid., p. 491):

"It seems to me that in this case it would be impossible to say that the parties must have intended the term which is alleged here, because that would prevent the stewards from exercising the absolute discretion which the express term in the licence gives to them."

Somewhat similar language was used by BLACK, J., in an Irish case which has been brought to our attention, Green v. Blake (3). In the course of his judgment, dealing with one part of the case with regard to which he formed the view that no inquiry was necessary, BLACK, J., said this, and I should like, with respect, to adopt his language ([1948] I.R. 267):

"If, then, the rules entitled the stewards to publish the facts of the warning off without conducting any investigation at all, it could hardly be said that they failed to observe the rules, because, having conducted a purely supererogatory investigation, they did so without due regard to the essentials of justice. If they were not obliged to investigate at all, they could not be obliged to conduct an investigation with due regard to the essentials of justice."

So, with regard to the withdrawal of the licence, that was a thing which the stewards were entitled to do without any inquiry, and they would have equally been entitled to warn the plaintiff off Newmarket Heath which would have resulted in his becoming a disqualified person. So much with regard to the case as founded in contract.

The plaintiff also sues in libel. On that issue the learned judge entered judgment for the defendants on the ground that the occasion was privileged, and that there was no evidence of malice to go to the jury. It is to be emphasised that from the first in this case counsel on behalf of the plaintiff had disclaimed alleging express malice, and he also, before the end of the trial, made it clear that he was not impeaching the honesty or bona fides of the stewards in their conduct of the inquiry. The learned LORD CHIEF JUSTICE held that the occasion was privileged, and that in the absence of malice that concluded the matter on the authority of Chapman v. Ellesmere (4): see per LORD HANWORTH, M.R. ([1932] 2 K.B. 450), and per ROMER, L.J. ([1932] 2 K.B. 473). In my view, those words apply in every respect to the present case. The stewards having come to their decision, it was clearly their duty to communicate it to the racing public who had a corresponding interest in receiving the information. The plaintiff had assented by his contract to the RACING CALENDAR as the medium for the publication of the decision, and the publication is confined to matters which the stewards could indubitably have dealt with under their discretion without any inquiry at all. The notice merely stated that the licence had been withdrawn. That was a matter which, to my mind, is clearly covered by the language used by ROMER, L.J., and, in the absence of malice and any contractual provision in the rules requiring an inquiry before such a decision could be arrived at and published, the occasion is clearly privileged.

Counsel for the plaintiff says that the plaintiff only consented contractually to the publication of the decision of the stewards; that part of the decision of the stewards, namely, that the plaintiff had his licence withdrawn on the ground of negligence amounting to grave misconduct was omitted; and, accordingly, that there never was any consent by his client to the publication of the so-called decision. In my view, what was published in the RACING CALENDAR can properly be described as the decision of the stewards. They were not bound to publish the reasons why they arrived at that decision, and I think they might possibly have been open to criticism if they had. That is the view which I have formed with regard to that publication, but the matter does not rest there, because I think that this point is really covered by Chapman v. Lord Ellesmere (4), where the same question was raised. In the course of his judgment SLESSER, L.J. ([1932] 2 K.B. 463) points out that Sir Patrick Hastings had sought

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

" . . . to avoid the consequence of the apparent consent to publication in the RACING CALENDAR is as follows: he says that the plaintiff has only consented to the publication of the decision of the stewards, which I have quoted but repeat, that they 'considered the plaintiff as trainer directly responsible for the care of the horse'; that is to say, to a finding that he was under a duty to see that the horse was not drugged, which duty he failed to perform. Sir Patrick points out that the jury, having found that the statement in the RACING CALENDAR meant that the plaintiff was a party to the actual drugging of 'Don Pat,' it is a statement, as the jury have construed it, which is not the publication of the decision of the stewards, in that the stewards, to put it briefly, held that the plaintiff was negligent in not preventing the drugging of the horse, whereas the publication alleged that he had actually drugged it."

The argument there relied on by Sir Patrick Hastings seems to me identical with the argument of counsel for the plaintiff in the present case, namely, that the stewards had not incorporated in their publication in the RACING CALENDAR their finding that the plaintiff had been negligent. In Chapman v. Lord Ellesmere (4) the court none the less held that the occasion was privileged and LORD HANWORTH, M.R., deprecated the court being required to consider again and again the precise language used in a matter of this kind. Therefore, in my view, the learned LORD CHIEF JUSTICE was correct when he ruled that the occasion was privileged, and that in the absence of malice there was no case to go to the jury on the issue of libel.

I have expressed my views with regard to the issues in this case as they present themselves to me, but, if I am wrong in the conclusions which I have reached, and, if it was part of the contract between the parties that there should be an inquiry conducted according to the principles of natural justice and that such an inquiry was a condition precedent to the right of the stewards either to withdraw the licence or to find the plaintiff guilty of misconduct and disqualify him and such inquiry is necessary to support the plea of privilege, then, in my view, there was no evidence here that the inquiry conducted by the stewards was not in accordance with what is called the principles of natural justice. The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, no doubt as a precaution and pressed by counsel so to do, left that question to the jury in the form to which I have referred, but here again I derive considerable assistance from the language which was used by BLACK, J., in Green v. Blake (3) to which I have referred, where he is dealing with this matter and the function of the jury in this connection. He says ([1948] I.R. 242):

"Moreover, I think he never had those materials even at the last moment when the jury answered his questions other than that of malice. What materials did the judge require? In my opinion he required to know the truth about what took place at and in connection with the investigation and having found that out, it was for him to say whether that did or did not amount to a disregard of the essentials of justice. How was he to find out what took place? In my opinion he had to find that out from the jury; for it was a pure question of fact and of the credibility of the witnesses. I should deem it most unsafe to ask a jury to say whether the facts they had found did or did not amount to a disregard of the essentials of natural justice. I do not think the term is suitable for laymen to decide about."

A I am inclined to the view that this question—whether or not an inquiry has been conducted in accordance with the principles of natural justice is really one of law for the judge rather than for the jury. No doubt it is for the jury to find the facts, as BLACK, J., indicated, but, when once the facts are found, I am disposed to the view that it is really a matter of law for the court. However that may be, in my view on the admitted facts of this case, whether
B it be a matter of law or whether it be a matter of fact, there is only one possible answer, namely, that it has not been established that this inquiry was not in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

When the matter is narrowed down, it comes to this. The following are the matters complained of as showing that the inquiry did not accord with the principles of natural justice. It is said that the plaintiff had no sufficient
C information before he attended the inquiry as to the nature of the charge made against him; that he had not been supplied before the hearing with a copy of the analysts' report; that at the inquiry, although this matter might have been remedied if he had been shown a copy of the report and been given an opportunity to have an adjournment so that he could deal with it, only part of the report was read out; and, finally, that he was not given sufficient

D opportunity to present his case or call his witnesses. In dealing with this matter, I think it is essential to appreciate the precise nature of the inquiry. The evidence shows that in view of the danger of doping it is essential that the person in charge of a horse should have it carefully guarded and watched for two or three hours before the race, and, therefore, it may well be the view of those in racing circles that, if it be shown that a horse is doped, the person
E in charge of it, or the person who should have been in charge of it, two or three hours before the race must be held responsible, whatever his personal conduct in the matter may have been. It seems to me that, having got the analyst's certificate, the stewards have to consider, first, whether the horse has been doped, and, if it has, it may well be that unfortunate consequences may follow to the trainer, however personally blameless he may be in the matter.

F It is, however, right and proper that he should be given an opportunity of attending the inquiry and giving his explanation. It does not seem to me that at the outset there is necessarily any particular charge made against the trainer. The horse is said to have been doped. The stewards have evidence which satisfies them that there is a prima facie case of doping. They require the trainer and the owner to attend the inquiry and to give an explanation. If in

G the course of that explanation it is made manifest that there has been negligence or misconduct, a specific charge then emerges, and that is exactly what happened in the present case. The plaintiff's explanation showed on the face of it that the horse had been left unattended for something like 20 minutes during the vital period, and on that explanation given by the plaintiff himself it is not surprising that he should have been found to have been guilty of H negligence. I only make those observations to indicate what, in my view, was the nature of the inquiry. I think it is a mistake to regard all these matters as if they were prosecutions with a prosecutor and a defendant. It was an inquiry in the course of which it emerged that there were matters for which the stewards held the trainer responsible.

As to the specific complaints that were made, it is clear from the letter I have already read, and from the evidence, that the plaintiff, who has been in racing circles for 40 years, knew perfectly well what was the nature of the matter that was going to be inquired into. Complaint is made that only part of the analyst's certificate was read to him. It is clear that that is so, but I find it impossible to say that the mere fact that they omitted that part which dealt with the particular drug, viz., whether it was morphine or heroin, is sufficient for any tribunal to say that this inquiry was not conducted according to the principles of natural justice, and was, therefore, void. The only other matter complained of is that it was not until after the stewards had conferred together and come to a decision as to the course which they proposed to take that the plaintiff was, in terms, asked whether he had any further evidence to offer. Throughout this inquiry he was, at every stage, it seems to me, given an opportunity of presenting his case and of asking any questions which he desired to ask. It is true that he was not in terms asked: "Have you got any witnesses? Do you want an adjournment?" A layman at an inquiry of this kind is, of course, at a grave disadvantage compared with a trained advocate, but that is a necessary result of these domestic tribunals which proceed in a somewhat informal manner. Counsel for the plaintiff, in the course of his forceful argument on this point, again and again said: "What would be said of local justices who acted in this way?" With all due respect, the position is totally different. This matter is not to be judged by the standards applicable to local justices. Domestic tribunals of this kind are entitled to act in a way which would not be permissible on the part of local justices sitting as a court of law. The conclusion I have reached on this aspect of the case is that there was no material on which a jury could have arrived at a conclusion that this inquiry was conducted in a way contrary to the principles of natural justice. If, as I think is the better view, it really was a matter of law for the decision of the judge, I should unhesitatingly hold that there was nothing here which was contrary to the principles of natural justice as laid down in the various authorities which have been brought to our notice. There are, in my view, no words which are of universal application to every kind of inquiry and every kind of domestic tribunal. The requirements of natural justice must depend on the circumstances of the case, the nature of the inquiry, the rules under which the tribunal is acting, the subject-matter that is being dealt with, and so forth. Accordingly, I do not derive much assistance from the definitions of natural justice which have been from time to time used, but, whatever standard is adopted, one essential is that the person concerned should have a reasonable opportunity of presenting his case. I think from first to last the plaintiff did have such an opportunity. The fact that the tribunal for all I know—I am not suggesting it is so—may have arrived at a totally erroneous conclusion, the fact that they may have attached quite a mistaken value to the certificate of the analyst, is altogether beside the point. The mere fact that at the trial it was, as I think it was, necessary to get the plaintiff's case on its legs to call an expert witness to controvert the meaning of this certificate in itself seems to me to show that his real complaint goes to the weight of evidence and the value to be attached to this analyst's certificate. That was a matter for the tribunal to deal with. They may have dealt with it erroneously and in a mistaken manner, but it is not for this court to intervene in a matter of that kind. Accordingly, even if it is a necessary condition, either under the heading of contract or to support the plea of privilege, that there should have been a properly conducted inquiry, then I find in this case there was such an inquiry. For these reasons I think this appeal fails.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree and like my Lord I am inclined to the view, reading the rules as a whole, that where what is involved is the proposed withdrawal of a licence for misconduct, an inquiry, and an inquiry which conforms to the principles of natural justice, is a necessary pre-condition, but it is unnecessary to decide the point because I agree with my Lord that there is no evidence in the present case that any principle of natural justice was violated. That is a conclusion which, if right, disposes automatically of all issues in this case, except one, in favour of the defendants. That one is the contention of the plaintiff that the announcement in the RACING CALENDAR did not accurately record the decision of the stewards. The actual decision, it is argued, was in substance that the plaintiff was not guilty personally of administering the drug, but merely guilty of negligence in not preventing its administration. It is said that the announcement actually published, by omitting reference to negligence, conveyed the contrary implication, that is, that the plaintiff was himself a party or privy to the administration of the drug. The plaintiff, the argument continues, by r. 17, had consented to the publication in the RACING CALENDAR of an accurate version of any decision, but had not consented to the publication of an inaccurate one. It seems to me that in substance this is exactly the argument that was put forward in Chapman v. Lord Ellesmere (4), and against which this court ruled in a decision that is binding on us. In that case, as in this case, words which said or clearly implied that negligence and not deliberate misdoing had been proved were omitted from the decision as published, yet the publication was held sufficient to embody the actual "decision," and to have been consented to as such by the plaintiff. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

DENNING, L.J. : The first question is whether, under the Rules of Racing, it was incumbent on the stewards of the Jockey Club to hold an inquiry before withdrawing the plaintiff's licence to train on the ground of misconduct. I do not think that the rules postulate an inquiry when the stewards merely withdraw a licence without inflicting any penalty. Condition 3 of the licence gives them an absolute discretion on that matter. In such a case they need hold no inquiry and need give no reasons. It is sufficient that they should act honestly and in good faith, but when they are exercising the far more serious power of withdrawing a licence under r. 102 on the ground of misconduct, they must, in my opinion, give the trainer an opportunity of defending himself. Rule 102 creates the offence of "misconduct" in a trainer, and prescribes the penalty, which is the withdrawal of his licence and disqualification. This penalty of disqualification is the most severe penalty that the stewards can inflict. It is the same penalty as that which is imposed on persons guilty of corrupt practices. It disqualifies the trainer from taking any part in racing and thus takes away his livelihood. Common justice requires that before any man is found guilty of an offence carrying such consequences, there should be an inquiry at which he has the opportunity of being heard. It might, perhaps, be possible for the stewards to stipulate expressly for power to condemn a man unheard, but I should doubt it. It may be that such a stipulation would be contrary to public policy : see the judgment of BRETT, L.J., in Dawkins v. Antrobus (5) (17 Ch.D. 630), the judgment of KELLY, C.B., in Wood v. Wood (6) (L.R. 9 Exch. 196) and of LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Weinberger v. Inglis (7) ([1919] A.C. 616). It is very different from a mere dismissal of a servant or withdrawal of a licence or even expulsion from a club, which MAUGHAM, J., had in mind in MacLean v. Workers Union (8) ([1919] A.C. 623). The Jockey Club has a monopoly in an important field of human activity. It has great powers with corresponding responsibilities. Howsoever that may be, I find no stipulation here enabling the stewards to act under r. 102 without an inquiry. Nor, indeed, do the stewards themselves suggest they have such a power, or would wish to exercise it, if they had. Lord Willoughby de Broke was asked by counsel for the plaintiff : "You realise the extreme importance of seeing that a trainer does not have his licence withdrawn for misconduct, except after carefully inquiry," and he answered : "Most certainly." It has been argued that the stewards need have no inquiry at all, and that, therefore, it does not matter if they hold one which is not a proper one. I do not agree with that. I think there must be an inquiry at which the person concerned has an opportunity of being heard. The stewards should not act on information against him without giving him an opportunity of answering it. If an inquiry has been held in accordance with these essentials of justice, there is no reason why the result of the inquiry should not be published to all concerned with racing, and, indeed, it is in the interests of all that it should be. If the publication in the RACING CALENDAR is no wider than the occasion warrants, it is privileged. This might be the case even if the rules did not contain any provision on the matter, but any doubt is removed by the fact that the rules, to which the plaintiff has assented, empower the stewards to publish the decision in the RACING CALENDAR. That is, in effect, a consent by the plaintiff to this mode of publication, though consent cannot create a privilege where none would otherwise exist. If, however, the inquiry was not held in accordance with the essentials of justice, the privilege would be defeated, not on the ground of malice, for there might be none, but because the very foundation of the privilege is that there has been a proper inquiry. This result may be reached by saying the plaintiff has only consented to publication on the basis that there has been a proper inquiry, but I prefer simply to say that the defence of privilege in a case of this kind requires that an inquiry should be held in accordance with the essentials of justice.

Both the issues in this case, therefore—the issue whether the plaintiff was properly disqualified and the issue of privilege—depend on whether the inquiry was held in accordance with the essentials of justice. That, in my opinion, is a conclusion of law. It depends, of course, on what are the primary facts. If there is a difference about those, it must be decided by the tribunal of fact, in this case, the jury, but once the primary facts are found, the conclusion is a conclusion of law. It would be no easy matter for a jury to distinguish between the question whether there was a proper inquiry, and the question whether the decision of the stewards was right or wrong, whereas a judge is able to put aside the correctness of the decision as irrelevant. On this question, I am entirely in agreement that there is only one conclusion possible on the evidence, namely, that the inquiry was in accordance with principles of natural justice.

There remains only the question whether the privilege was defeated because the notice in the RACING CALENDAR omitted the finding that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence amounting to grave misconduct. Such an omission does not, in my opinion, defeat the privilege. A complaint as to the wording of the notice might go to malice, but would not itself defeat the privilege. Malice is not suggested here and the privilege holds good. I agree the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: W. R. Bennett & Co. (for the plaintiff); Charles Russell & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. H.L. [1950] 2 All E.R. 261.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Cohen and Asquith, L.J.J.), November 22, 23, 24, December 13, 1948.]

Excess Profits Tax—"Income received from investment"—Fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public collected and distributed to members by company limited by guarantee—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1).

To protect themselves against infringement of their copyright entitling them to the exclusive right of the performance in public of their records, groups of gramophone record manufacturers incorporated a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, with power under its memorandum of association to exercise and enforce on behalf of its

A members all rights and remedies of the members by virtue of the Copyright Act, 1911; to grant, on behalf of its members individually, licences for public performance of records, and to recover royalties, fees and other moneys, and damages for infringement; to obtain from the proprietors of the copyright such authorities as might be necessary or expedient for enabling the company to acquire the legal estate in the copyright, and to enforce the rights and remedies in its own name; to regulate the manner in which, the period for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors should authorise the company to exercise their rights and remedies; and to distribute the net moneys so received by the company among the members in accordance with the rules for the time being in force. By its articles of association members were bound to assign their interest in the copyrights to the company in certain circumstances, and until such assignment each member granted to the company sole power to grant licences on its behalf for public performances; all moneys received by the company were to become its property; and the company was authorised, before recommending any distribution among its members, to set aside a reserve fund.

B
C
D
HELD: on the true interpretation of the memorandum and articles the company was bound to distribute the moneys which it received among the members, not as profits, but by virtue of the proprietary interests of the members in the copyright, and so was rather acting as an agent for its members than carrying on an independent business, and, accordingly, the amounts received by members did not constitute "income from an investment" within the meaning of para. 6 (1) of pt. I of sched. VII to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, but fell to be included in the computation of the members' profits for the purposes of excess profits tax.

Decision of SINGLETON, J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 514), affirmed.

[FOR THE FINANCE (No. 2) ACT, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, p. 1220.]

E Case referred to:

(1) Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Stephen Cawardine & Co., [1934] Ch. 450; 103 L.J.Ch. 248; 150 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.

(2) Gas Lighting Improvement Co. Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1923] A.C. 723; 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503.

F
G
APPEAL by the taxpayers from an order of SINGLETON, J., dated July 6, 1948, and reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 514, on a Case stated by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax. The Special Commissioners held that money received by the taxpayers from a company limited by guarantee, incorporated to protect their copyright interests in respect of the performance in public of their gramophone records, was income from an investment within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), and, therefore, was to be excluded from their profits for the purposes of excess profits tax. SINGLETON, J., reversed the decision of the Special Commissioners, and the Court of Appeal now dismissed the further appeal. The facts appear in the judgment.

Grant, K.C., and Tribe for the taxpayers.

Cyril King, K.C., J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

H
Dec. 13. COHEN, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal from an order of SINGLETON, J., made on July 6, 1948, whereby he reversed the decision of the Special Commissioners who had allowed the appeal of the taxpayers, Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd., against an assessment to excess profits tax in a sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. part of the profits of the Gramophone Co., Ltd. The assessment was not made on the Gramophone Co., but on Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd., by reason of the provisions of the Finance Act, 1940, s. 28, and sched. V, dealing with the assessment of excess profits tax on inter-connected companies. Nothing, however, turns on the provisions of the Act of 1940.

The facts are conveniently stated by SINGLETON, J., as follows ([1948] 2 All E.R. 515) :

"The Gramophone Co., Ltd., which was a subsidiary company of Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd., throughout the accounting period, manufactures gramophone records, and in 1933 obtained judgment in the High Court in Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Stephen Cawardine & Co. (1) establishing that manufacturers of gramophone records have such a copyright under s. 19 of the Copyright Act, 1911, as entitles them to the exclusive right of performance in public of records made by them, so that they are entitled to restrain the use of those records for public performances. In due course manufacturers of gramophone records took measures to protect themselves against infringement of their copyright by the use of records for public performances without licence, and the manufacturers—there are two groups of them, the Electric and Musical Industries group and the Decca group—formed a committee to co-ordinate the arrangements for granting licences for public performances of their gramophone records. The business increased, and became very remunerative as the figures in this case show. It was decided later that other means should be taken to look after the copyright interests of the gramophone record makers, and to provide for the collection of fees for the granting of licences. Accordingly, on May 12, 1934, Phonographic Performances, Ltd., was incorporated as a company limited by guarantee, and not having a share capital. Since that time matters of the kind I have mentioned have been in the hands of the Phonographic Co., and in the accounting period July 1, 1943, to June 30, 1944, the sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. was paid over by the Phonographic Co. to the Gramophone Co. in respect of what I may describe as their share of a balance remaining due, after expenses had been paid. The question is whether that sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. received by the Gramophone Co. constitutes income from an investment in the hands of the Gramophone Co., and has thus to be excluded from its profits for the purposes of excess profits tax."

Counsel for the taxpayers seeks to support the finding of the Special Commissioners that the sum in question was income from an investment on the following grounds. (i) He says that the commissioners were right in the conclusions which they have reached. (ii) He says that, whether we think they are right or not, they have not erred in law, and, their finding being one of fact, we must not interfere. We are unable to agree with the second contention. The only finding of fact by the commissioners is to be found in para. 6 of the Stated Case, which may be summarised as follows :

"No legal assignment of the right to grant licences was made by the Gramophone Co. to the Phonographic Co. The licence granted by the Gramophone Co. to the Phonographic Co. covered every known make of record and the Phonographic Co. was in possession of the copyright."

In the light of their decision in para. 9 of the Case, this can, we think, only mean that on the true construction of the relevant documents and in the event (which happened) of no legal assignment being executed, the beneficial ownership of the copyright was vested in the Phonographic Co. Be that as it may, it is, we think, quite plain that the proper determination of the question before us depends mainly on the construction of the memorandum and articles of association of the Phonographic Co., and that the question is, therefore, a mixed question of fact and law. If the commissioners correctly interpreted the memorandum and articles, and if, on that correct interpretation, there was evidence on which they could find that the interest of the Gramophone Co. in the Phonographic Co. was an investment, and if the sum in question was received by virtue of that interest, the finding was, no doubt, one of fact by which we should be bound, but did the commissioners correctly interpret the memorandum and articles?

Their findings are set out in para. 9 of the Case as follows:

- A “The question we have to decide is whether the sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. received by the Gramophone Co., Ltd., in respect of the year ended May 31, 1944, was income from an investment or whether it constituted income arising to that company in the course of its trade as manufacturers of gramophone records. In our opinion, for the Crown to succeed in this appeal, it is necessary to establish that the Phonographic Co. was throughout acting as an agent for its members, including the Gramophone Co., Ltd., in granting licences and collecting payments. The circumstances of the case, and, in particular, cl. 3 (D) (1) and (2) of the memorandum and arts. 9 and 46 of the articles, in our opinion, negative the existence of an agency. It is true that no legal assignment was granted by the Gramophone Co., Ltd., to the Phonographic Co. in respect of the granting of licences. In our view there was an equitable assignment by the Gramophone Co., Ltd. of the whole of its beneficial interest in the copyright as regards public performances of records. Thereafter its interest, in this respect, was confined to membership of the Phonographic Co. and the obtaining of its share of the profits available for distribution. We regard the receipt of the sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. in the nature of a dividend from an investment. The Phonographic Co., Ltd., in one respect, acts as an agent of the Gramophone Co., Ltd., in making payments to publishers under the agreement dated Mar. 1, 1940. These payments are made out of the share of the respondent company group before the net amount receivable is arrived at. We do not consider that the manner in which these payments were made affects the conclusion at which we have arrived. The Phonographic Co. also made payments to artistes, who performed the recording, under the terms of the specimen letter. These payments were not made as agent of the Gramophone Co., Ltd. In our opinion, in the particular circumstances of this case, the fact that the Phonographic Co. was a company limited by guarantee is not material. We hold that the said sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. was income received from an investment held by the Gramophone Co., Ltd. and that the appeal succeeds.”
- B
- C
- D
- E
- F

If the construction they had there placed on the articles was correct, we should be inclined to agree that their ultimate conclusion follows, but we are unable to agree with their construction of the memorandum and articles.

- G We must first refer to cl. 3 (A) to (E) inclusive of the memorandum, which are in the following terms:

- H “(A) To exercise and enforce on behalf of members of the company, being manufacturers of gramophone records, perforated rolls and other contrivances by means of which sounds may be mechanically reproduced (all of which contrivances are hereinafter included in the term ‘record’) and/or the owners of or being otherwise entitled to the benefit of or interest in the copyrights in such records (hereinafter called ‘the proprietors’) all rights and remedies of the proprietors by virtue of the Copyright Act, 1911, or otherwise in respect of the public performance of records. (B) In the exercise or enforcement of such rights and remedies to grant licences and to make and from time to time to rescind, alter or vary any arrangements and agreements with respect to the public performance of such records in any and every respect whatsoever, and to collect and receive and give effectual discharges for all royalties, fees and other moneys payable under any such licences, agreements or arrangements or otherwise in respect of such public performances by all necessary actions or other proceedings, and to recover such royalties, fees and other moneys, and to restrain and recover damages for the infringement by means of such public performances as aforesaid of the copyrights of such records or any other rights of the proprietors or of the company on their behalf in respect of such records, and to release, compromise or refer to arbitration any such proceedings or actions or any other disputes or differences in relation to the premises. (C) To obtain from the proprietors such assignments, assurances, powers of attorney, or other authorities or instruments as may be deemed necessary or expedient for enabling the company to acquire the legal estate in the copyrights of such records, and to exercise and enforce in its own name or otherwise all such rights and remedies as aforesaid, and to execute and do all such assurances, agreements and other instruments and acts as may be deemed necessary or expedient for the purpose of the exercise or enforcement by the company of such rights and remedies as aforesaid. (D) To make and from time to time alter or vary any rules for regulating (i) the manner in which the period or periods for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors shall authorise the company to exercise and enforce the rights and remedies aforesaid of the proprietors in respect of such records as aforesaid; (ii) the method and proportions by and in which and the times at which the net moneys received by the company in respect of the public performance of any such records as aforesaid shall be divided and apportioned among the members of the company; (iii) the administration of the property or business of the company and any matters incidental thereto. (E) To distribute the net moneys received by the company in the exercise of the foregoing powers after making provision thereout for the expenses and liabilities of the company incurred in such exercise or in otherwise carrying out the purposes and operations of the company, and for any contributions or payments for any of the purposes specified in the next following sub-clause hereof, amongst the members of the company entitled thereto in accordance with the rules for the time being in force with respect to the distribution thereof."

Sub-clause (A) by its terms plainly contemplates that the ownership of the copyright in the records should remain in the members and that the rights in respect thereof should be enforced by the company on behalf of its members. Sub-clause (B) leads to a similar conclusion since the Phonographic Co. is to recover damages for infringement on behalf of the members. Sub-clause (C), it is true, visualises the possibility of an assignment of the legal estate in the copyright to the Phonographic Co., but, if the matter rested on the memorandum alone, this provision would, in our opinion, plainly be merely machinery to enable the Phonographic Co. to carry out in its own name what it was to do for its members. In other words, vis-a-vis outsiders they were to be entitled to act as principals. Sub-clause (D) again seems to contemplate the members remaining the owners of the copyright, for it provides for the making and regulating the manner in which, the period or periods for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors should authorise the company to exercise rights and remedies of the proprietors. Sub-clause (E) also seems to us to be more consistent with the idea that the Phonographic Co. should be agent for its members than the idea that it was itself to become the beneficial owner of the copyright. It is also to be observed that this sub-clause contemplates, not the division of profits, but a division of net moneys received by the company in the exercise of certain powers. We shall refer further to this distinction when we are dealing with the articles.

Counsel for the taxpayers was inclined to admit that, if the matter had rested on the memorandum alone, he would have been in a difficulty, but he said that the articles made it clear that the Phonographic Co. was to become the beneficial owner of the copyright at any rate for the period during which the proprietors remain members of the Phonographic Co. He based his case in the main on arts. 6, 7 and 9 which are in the following terms :

A "6. Every member who is the proprietor of the whole or any part of the performing rights in any record may, on or at any time after his election, and shall, if and when requested by the directors in writing so to do, assign to the company in the form prescribed by the company his interest, whether present or future, in such performing rights, and until B such assignment and so far as such assignment may not extend, every member, by virtue of his application for membership, and his election as a member by the directors, grants to the company for and during the period of his membership, but subject to the provisions of arts. 10 and 11, the sole power and authority—(A) To authorise or permit or forbid the public performance of all or any records the performing right in which is or shall during his membership be or become vested in him ; (B) To grant licences on his behalf for the public performance of all or any of C such records. 7. Every member, by virtue of his application for membership and his election as a member by the directors, authorises the company for and during the period of his membership in their or his name, but at their sole charge and expense—(A) To collect fees and subscriptions and all moneys, whether for the performance of any of the records the performing rights in which are vested in or controlled by the company D or by way of damages or compensation for unauthorised performances thereof ; (B) To institute and prosecute proceedings against all persons infringing the performing rights, and to defend or oppose any proceedings taken against any member in respect of such records, and to compound, compromise, refer to arbitration or submit to judgment in any such proceedings, and generally to represent the member in all matters concerning E the performing rights vested in or controlled by the company ; and
(C) To protect generally his interests in the said records . . . 9. All moneys received by the company in respect of the exercise of the rights, licence or authority granted by the member shall be the property of the company, and shall be by them dealt with in accordance with the rules for the time being in force."

F Now, art. 6 seems to us to link with cl. 3 (C) of the memorandum and is prima facie more consistent with agency than with an assignment of the beneficial interest in the copyright to the Phonographic Co., for in the absence of an assignment the authority conferred on the Phonographic Co. is to grant licences on behalf of the members. Article 7 seems to us to be consistent with either view of the matter, but it is to be observed that under sub-cl. (C) the G duty of the Phonographic Co. is to protect generally the members' interests in the records. Counsel for the taxpayers, however, says that the matter is concluded in his favour by art. 9 which, he says, provides in plain terms for all moneys received by the Phonographic Co. becoming the property of the Phonographic Co. His argument is that, reading this article with arts. 6 and 7, the effect is that there is an equitable assignment to the Phonographic Co.
H of the beneficial interest in the copyright for the whole period during which the member remains a member of the Phonographic Co. This view, he says, is endorsed by the provisions of art. 46 which authorises the directors of the Phonographic Co., before recommending any distribution among the members of the Phonographic Co., to set aside a reserve fund to meet contingencies, or for future distribution, or for the repairing, improving, and maintaining any of the property or premises of the Phonographic Co., and for such other purposes as the directors should in their absolute discretion think fit.

It is quite true that as a matter of law there is no special form required to constitute an equitable assignment. Whether or not what has been done in any particular transaction amounts to an equitable assignment is a matter of inference from the facts and documents concerned and the question is whether the requisite intention can properly be inferred from the memorandum and articles of the Phonographic Co. plus the fact of membership. We, therefore, return to the construction of the memorandum and articles. First of all, it has to be remembered that the governing document is the memorandum of association, and that, while the articles can be used to explain an ambiguity in the memorandum, they cannot override the memorandum. We are unable to find any real ambiguity in the memorandum, nor do we think that, properly read, there is any real inconsistency between the articles and the memorandum. In our opinion, having regard to the terms of the memorandum, the real meaning of art. 9 is that while the legal ownership of the moneys received by the Phonographic Co. in respect of rights, licences or authority granted by the member is to be in the Phonographic Co., the Phonographic Co. is bound by the very contract under which they acquire their title to the moneys to distribute them among the members, not as profits, but by virtue of the proprietary interests of the members in the copyright. In other words, the articles coupled with the contract of membership arising from the application for membership and the acceptance thereof constitute an arrangement between each member and the Phonographic Co., and also between the members inter se, under which the members agree to pool the proceeds of exploitation of the copyright on the terms recorded in the articles, and art. 9 is mere machinery to enable the Phonographic Co. to give effect to the pooling agreement. We do not think that this conclusion is in any way vitiated by the fact that the Phonographic Co. is given power to create a reserve by art. 46 and to apply, if it thinks fit, all or part of that reserve for its own purposes. That provision seems to us to be merely a necessary provision for the protection of the agent from loss, or, at most, a provision giving the agent certain remuneration for discharging his duties as such.

Some support for this view is, we think, to be derived from the fact that the constitution of the Phonographic Co. is not that of a profit-earning company. In this connection we were referred to the Companies Act, 1929, s. 123, which draws a distinction between a profit and loss account and an income and expenditure account, the former applicable to a company trading for profit and the latter applicable to a company not trading for profit. Now, there are no provisions in the memorandum or articles of association of the Phonographic Co. providing for a distribution of profits, and arts. 65 and 68 are plainly drawn up on the basis that the Phonographic Co. will lay before the general meeting an income and expenditure account and not a profit and loss account. We were also impressed by the point to which counsel for the Crown called our attention which would arise if the Phonographic Co. were, for instance, to undertake under cl. 3 (G) of its memorandum some other business than the exploitation of its members' copyright and were to make a profit from that business. There appears to be nothing in the articles enabling the Phonographic Co. to make special regulations for the distribution of that profit, and it seems to us quite plain that that profit would be distributable among the members equally. This, as counsel for the Crown pointed out, seems to emphasise the distinction between a dividend out of profits arising from carrying on a business and a distribution among the members as proprietors of the net moneys arising from the exploitation of their copyright. If this be, as we think it is, the true view, it is plain that the commissioners have erred in law in construing the articles. We would add that we think it was also the view tentatively expressed by SINGLETON, J., in his judgment where he said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 522) :

"I regard the case as nearer to an agency case than an income from investment case . . . It seems to me to be something in the nature of a mixture. It is difficult to put into words what I mean, but it really is an arrangement made by the different members, and in particular by the Gramophone Co., for the convenience, I think, of their business. It is largely a matter of agency, but if you resolve it down to the end it does appear to me more in the nature of a business deal, as counsel for the Crown put it."

On this construction, the income in question was plainly not income from an investment, and, accordingly, we must dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Broad & Son (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

OLLEY v. MARLBOROUGH COURT, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Singleton and Denning, L.JJ.), December 2, 3, 1948.]

Negligence—Bailee—Hotel—Residential hotel—Theft of resident's clothing from room—Key left on board in office during absence—No proper system of control—Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41), ss. 1, 3.

The plaintiff was a guest at the defendant's hotel. On Nov. 7, 1945, she left the hotel for some four hours, locking the door of her room and leaving the key on the rack in the reception office. On her return to the hotel, she found that the key was missing and various articles had been stolen from her room. A notice limiting liability under the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, was displayed in the reception office, and the defendants contended that they received the plaintiff into the hotel subject to the terms contained in a notice exhibited in her bedroom, cl. 1 of which stated: "The proprietors will not hold themselves responsible for articles lost or stolen unless handed to the manageress for safe custody. Valuables should be deposited for safe custody in a sealed package and a receipt obtained." In an action by the plaintiff for negligence the defendants also pleaded contributory negligence and claimed the protection of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, whereby their liability was limited to £30.

HELD: (i) the defendants were negligent in that no watch was being kept to see that no stranger came in who was minded to steal. Accordingly, it was unnecessary to decide whether the premises were a common inn since, if the defendants were negligent in the conduct of the establishment, they would lose the protection of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863.

(ii) the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, being entitled to expect that a reasonable watch would be kept on the hall to prevent undesirable strangers from coming into the hotel.

(iii) the terms of the notice in the bedroom were not incorporated in the contract between the defendants and the plaintiff, since the plaintiff had not seen it until after she had been accepted as a guest, and, even if it had been incorporated in the contract, its terms were not sufficiently clear to exempt the defendants from liability for negligence.

Decision of OLIVER, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 955), affirmed.

[AS TO DEFINITIONS OF AN INN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 18, pp. 136-140, para. 197; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 29, pp. 2-4, Nos. 1-21.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Scarborough v. Cosgrove, [1905] 2 K.B. 805; 74 L.J.K.B. 892; 93 L.T. 530; 3 Digest 83, 187.

- (2) Rutter v. Palmer, [1922] 2 K.B. 87; 91 L.J.K.B. 657; 127 L.T. 419; Digest Supp.
- (3) Chapelton v. Barry Urban District Council, [1940] 1 All E.R. 356; [1940] 1 K.B. 532; 109 L.J.K.B. 213; 162 L.T. 169; 104 J.P. 165; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendants, the proprietors of a residential hotel, from a decision of OLIVER, J., dated May 5, 1948, and reported ([1948] 1 All E.R. 955), holding them liable in damages to the plaintiff, a resident in the hotel, for articles stolen from her room. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgments of BUCKNILL, and SINGLETON, L.JJ. A Berryman, K.C., Quass and Foot for the defendants.

Glyn-Jones, K.C., and G. G. Baker for the plaintiff.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : This is an appeal from a judgment of OLIVER, J., given on May 5, 1948, in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of £329 2s. 0d. The plaintiff, Violet Ellen Olley, a married woman, was a guest for reward in the Marlborough Court Hotel, belonging to the defendants. She was there from May, 1945, until February, 1947. At about 11 a.m. on Nov. 7, 1945, she went out of her bedroom, closed the door (which had a self-locking lock), took the key (a Yale key with a little disc attached bearing the number of the key and the number of the room), went down to the hall, entered the reception office, and put the key on the appropriate hook for that particular key on the key board in the office. She was out until about 3.30 p.m. When she came back she found that the key was missing from the key board. With the aid of a pass key she entered her room and she found that various articles belonging to her were missing—furs, a hatbox, some jewellery valued at £50, and minor articles of personal clothing. B C D

The plaintiff has framed her case against the defendants in negligence. She alleges that they failed to guard or supervise the key board and that they permitted a person unknown to enter the hotel and to leave the same with her property. The plaintiff also pleads the breach of a contract between herself and the defendants containing an implied term that the defendants would take proper care for the safety of her property in her bedroom and would keep her bedroom key in their custody and control and adequately guard it when on the key board. The defendants, after denying any negligence and any term as alleged, set up the defence that they received the plaintiff into the hotel and that she became a guest there subject to the terms contained in a written notice which was exhibited in her bedroom, by which terms they were protected. Further, they set up a plea of contributory negligence—that the plaintiff was negligent in depositing the key on the key board instead of taking it with her when she left the hotel. Further, or in the alternative, they say that they duly complied with s. 3 of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, and, under s. 1 of that statute, are not liable to a greater amount than £30. Those were the issues on which the case was tried. OLIVER, J., came to certain conclusions of fact of which, I think, the most important is that the defendants were negligent and that their negligence caused the loss. He said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 956): E F G

“In the case of a hotel of this nature it is clearly a bad system to have a rack of keys within easy access by anyone coming into the premises.” H

He found that the plaintiff was not guilty of negligence. He found that the hotel was not a common law inn, and he found that, although the plaintiff had notice of the terms relied on in the defence, they did not absolve the defendants from liability. In this court the argument has been based on the findings whether there was negligence, whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, whether this was a common law inn, and the exact effect of the terms of the notice.

On the main point, whether the defendants were negligent, a plan has been produced which shows the general lay-out of the ground floor of the hotel. The main entrance is reached through the usual swing doors. Anyone who has entered the hall can either go up the stairs into the lounge, or into the cloakroom on the left, or they can go on until they come to the reception office where, normally, an arriving guest would be received. The reception office is bounded by the usual counter in the shape of an "L" and at one end of the counter

A there is a small gate or flap which can be raised to enable anybody to walk into the reception office. At the back of the reception office there is a letter rack 9ft. long stretching to the wall at the further end of the office. At right-angles to the rack and on that far wall there is the key board and a little in front of the key board and rather to the right of it as you stand facing the board, there is an enclosed office where we were told the accounts were mainly done.

B In a conspicuous place is framed a notice under the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863. I am a little surprised to see it placed in such a prominent position on the plan if, as is now alleged, this is not a common law inn at all. One can get into the reception office from the back, by means of three swing doors, and I suppose that entrance is used by the staff. There was no evidence given of the use of the key board. The plaintiff used it. She was not invited, expressly,

C to put her key on the board, but the fact that the board bore a hook with the number of her key underneath it, and the fact that the board was in the reception office, seem to me to be an implied invitation to guests to use the key board if they were so minded.

About 3 p.m. on the day in question, a Colonel Creaer, who was a guest in the hotel, was sitting in the lounge talking to a fellow guest and he saw a young

D man come in through the front door and go straight forward towards the office. He went into the office, came out of it and went along to the lift which is to the right of the reception office. In going along that passage he would pass the foot of the main staircase going up to the bedrooms. It appears that at the foot of the staircase there is a bust of the Duke of Marlborough and the porter who was on duty, instead of attending to what I should have thought was his

E obvious duty to see who was coming in by the main door, was busily engaged cleaning the bust with his back to the passage and so was not able to see this young man go by. It was remarkable that the porter was not called as a witness. In fact the defendants did not call any evidence. What the porter did after he had finished cleaning the bust, one does not know. After about a quarter

F of an hour Colonel Creaer saw the young man come down (he, apparently, had gone up in the lift, which was self-acting) with a suitcase in his hand. Colonel Creaer thought it was rather peculiar that he had come down with a suitcase as he had nothing in his hands when he went up. Then the young man went out. The only evidence of what happened on that afternoon was

G the evidence of the manageress, Miss Robbie, who was called by the plaintiff. She said that it was the practice to have one receptionist on duty and that when she, Miss Robbie, went away, the receptionist was sitting in the front office. She was a Miss Alexander, a lady described as in her sixties who was thinking of retiring. She did retire later on because it was thought that someone a little younger might be more efficient. What Miss Alexander was doing at the time when this young man came in and went out does not appear, for she was not called as a witness. In those circumstances, the learned judge had no

H difficulty in finding that these goods were stolen by this young man who entered and departed without being noticed by anybody of the defendants' staff.

In those circumstances was there negligence on the part of the defendants? The learned judge has found negligence on the ground that the keys were within easy access of anyone coming into the premises. Speaking for myself, I do not quite agree with that ground, because, if Miss Alexander had been on duty in the reception office, she could not have failed to see this young man come in and she could hardly have failed to ask him what he was doing taking a key off the board. She would know that he was not a guest in the house, because the evidence is that a very large proportion of the people staying in this hotel were residents. It was a residential hotel. It may be that occasionally somebody got a bed there for the night. The porter also, if he had been on duty in the hall, would have seen the young man going up and his suspicions would have been aroused if he had seen him come down with a suitcase in his hand. The negligence, in my opinion, is not that the key board was in a dangerous place, but that at the material time there was absolutely no watch being kept over the open door to see that no stranger who was minded to steal entered. I think that, without any doubt, the plaintiff has made out her case that the defendants, through their agents, were negligent. The points made by the defendants were: (i) That a key board was placed in the office merely for the convenience of residents and it might equally well have been put in the hall at the bottom of the stairs. I cannot agree with that. The position of the key board seems to me to indicate that it had been placed in as safe a position as it could conveniently be put. It is true that it was put there for the convenience of the residents, but it is far better that a bedroom should be locked up when its occupant goes out, and I should have thought that hotels would much prefer that a guest should leave his key in a safe place in the hotel rather than take it out and, perhaps, lose it, with all the serious results which might result. (ii) It is said that the receptionist and the hotel porter were about. I do not think that the evidence bears that out. I do not think they were about in any such position as enabled them to see what was going on. (iii) It was said that the system had worked for three years and there had been no incident of this kind before. That often happens. People often take risks and nothing untoward happens for a long time. Then, perhaps, they get rather too careless and something does happen. I do not think the fact that a system has worked for three years proves that there was no negligence on this particular occasion.

With regard to the question of contributory negligence, it was said that, if the system was bad, the plaintiff had adopted it. There again, I do not think, myself, that the position of the key board was such as to make it negligent, in itself, to put the key there. The plaintiff was entitled to expect that a reasonable watch would be kept on the hall to prevent undesirable strangers from coming into the hotel. I entirely agree with the learned judge's finding on that point.

Then one comes to the interesting question of the notice under the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863. I do not think that the plaintiff ever read the notice. I do not think she was ever certain that it was there, but it was admitted that it was there. The notice, so far as the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, is concerned, must state (see ss. 1 and 3 of the Act) that the innkeeper is not liable to make good to any guest any loss of or injury to property brought to his inn, not being a horse or other live animal, or any gear appertaining thereto, or any carriage, to a greater amount than £30, except:

"(1) Where such goods or property shall have been stolen, lost, or injured through the wilful act, default, or neglect of such innkeeper or any servant in his employ; (2) Where such goods or property shall have been deposited expressly for safe custody with such innkeeper: Provided always, that in the case of such deposit it shall be lawful for such innkeeper, if he thinks fit, to require, as a condition of his liability, that such goods or property shall be deposited in a box or other receptacle, fastened and sealed by, the person depositing the same."

Anybody reading that notice would clearly come to the conclusion that, if the guest's property were stolen through the neglect of the innkeeper, the innkeeper would be liable to a greater amount than £30. Up in the bedroom behind the door, but in a position where it could be seen, there was another notice, the material clause (cl. 1) of which was as follows:

"The proprietors will not hold themselves responsible for articles lost or stolen unless handed to the manageress for safe custody. Valuables should be deposited for safe custody in a sealed package and a receipt obtained."

Then there are 14 other reminders as to what the guests are expected to do. It seems to me that, if a very careful person had read that cl. 1 after reading the notice in the hall, he would clearly have come to the conclusion that cl. 1

- A was never intended to exempt the proprietors from liability in respect of loss or theft caused by the neglect of the proprietors. I do not propose to refer to the various cases which have been cited. Scarborough and Wife v. Cosgrove (1) lays it down clearly that the duty of a boarding house keeper with reference to property brought by a guest into his house is no more than to take reasonable care for the safety of that property. It is said that unless one reads into cl. 1
- B of the notice in the bedroom something to the effect that, "the proprietors will not hold themselves responsible for articles lost or stolen through the neglect of the proprietors unless handed to the manageress for safe custody," the notice is otiose, because it is only stating what is the common law position. The answer to that is two-fold. First, I think that anybody reading that notice would be entitled to couple it with the notice in the hall under the Innkeepers
- C Liability Act, 1863, and, secondly, I think that, if one reads the notice as is suggested, namely, by reading in the words "through the neglect of the proprietors," it would be extremely difficult to know what was the position with reference to property handed to the manageress for safe custody. Would it mean that, if the property were handed to the manageress for safe custody, the proprietors would be liable only on proof of negligence by the guest? I
- D think the guest would be in an impossible position. How could he prove what was the cause of the loss of the property which he had handed to the manageress? I do not think that that is the right interpretation of cl. 1. I think that clause is merely a general statement on the lines of the notice in the hall, namely, that the defendants are not to be responsible for articles lost or stolen unless there has been negligence on the part of the defendants causing the loss.
- E That being so, the notice in the bedroom has no bearing on the present case, because the loss here was caused by the neglect of the defendants' agents. Therefore, I do not think it is necessary to discuss the interesting question who made the contract with the owners of the hotel, the plaintiff or her husband.

- As regards the question whether this was or was not a common law inn, the learned judge has not given any reasons for his decision that it was not a common
- F law inn, but it appears from HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (Hailsham ed., pp. 136-140, para. 197) that the question whether any particular house be a common law inn is one of fact. That being so, I myself should be very slow to disturb the learned judge's finding that this was not a common law inn at the time when the plaintiff went to stay there. At p. 138 there appears this passage:

- G "A house used as a private hotel, that is to say, for the reception of persons who desire to go and live there, appears not to be an inn."

I think on the whole that the evidence does establish that this was a private hotel, much more like a private hotel than a common law inn. For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed.

- H SINGLETON, L.J. [after stating the facts]: In those circumstances I do not consider that any good purpose would be served by embarking on a diligent inquiry whether at the material time the defendants carried on a common inn, or a guest house, or a boarding house. If their establishment was a common inn and if they were negligent in the conduct of it, they would lose the protection of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, s. 1. If it was not a common inn, but something less than that, they are responsible, as I read the authorities, for negligence. A number of authorities from Scarborough and Wife v. Cosgrove (1) onwards would seem to show the measure of their responsibility. This court had to deal with the question in Scarborough and Wife v. Cosgrove (1), and LORD COLLINS, M.R., said that there was a duty on the part of the boarding house keeper to take reasonable care for the safety of property brought by a guest into his house. If he fails to do so he is guilty of negligence. ROMER, L.J., put the matter a little differently, though the result was the same. I think it is right to read a few lines of his judgment because it seems to me apposite to this case. The learned LORD JUSTICE said ([1905] 2 K.B. 815): A

"Seeing that the landlord carries on his business of a boarding-house keeper for reward, I think he is bound to carry on that business with reasonable care, having regard to the nature and normal conduct of the business as known to the guest, or as represented to the guest by him; and if by reason of a breach of that duty on his part the luggage is lost I can see no reason why he should not be held liable for the loss to the guest." B

I observe that the LORD JUSTICE put it in this way: "I think he is bound to carry on that business with reasonable care." So, it seems to me that, if this were a boarding house, the defendants were bound to carry on their business with reasonable care, which would include reasonable care of a part of the hotel in which they had by implication invited guests to leave keys of bedrooms. C

Therefore, as I have said, I do not think it desirable to examine in detail the question whether this was a common inn or a boarding house. In either event the defendants are responsible for negligence, subject to this further and more difficult question. Counsel for the defendants raised a question of the true effect of a document exhibited in the bedroom occupied by the plaintiff and her husband. That document was inside some sort of cupboard which hid the washstand in the bedroom. It began thus: D

"The proprietors will not hold themselves responsible for articles lost or stolen unless handed to the manageress for safe custody. Valuables should be deposited for safe custody in a sealed packet and a receipt obtained."

I agree with what my Lord said, that the terms of the beginning of that notice are more like something embraced in a notice under the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1863, than anything else. Counsel for the defendants submitted that the words that I have read should be read into the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, and that, if they were so read, they must be regarded as freeing the defendants from their own negligence. He cited a number of authorities in support of that proposition, the most useful of which, perhaps, was a case in the Court of Appeal in 1922, Rutter v. Palmer (2), where SCRUTTON, L.J., dealing with a somewhat similar question, said ([1922] 2 K.B. 92): E

"In construing an exemption clause certain general rules may be applied: First the defendant is not exempted from liability for the negligence of his servants unless adequate words are used; secondly, the liability of the defendant apart from the exempting words must be ascertained; then the particular clause in question must be considered; and if the only liability of the party pleading the exemption is a liability for negligence, the clause will more readily operate to exempt him." F G

Counsel for the defendants submitted that, on the finding of the judge, the defendants were the keepers of a guest house and their only liability was for negligence, and, therefore, the effect of the words at the beginning of the notice, implied in the contract as they should be, must be to exclude the defendants from liability for negligence. I confess that I feel some difficulty about those words of SCRUTTON, L.J., "secondly, the liability of the defendant apart from the exempting words must be ascertained . . ." If one has to look back and ascertain what the defendants were in 1945 and construe the contract with that in mind, well and good. It might be necessary to consider more seriously H whether they were keepers of a common inn or merely boarding house keepers, but I find it a little difficult to ascertain what the true contractual basis would be if they were keepers of a boarding house when, clearly, from the notice they exhibited in the entrance hall of the hotel, they regarded themselves as keepers of a common inn. So, too, might the plaintiff be expected to regard them, having regard to what they exhibited in the hotel. Therefore, it is not easy to see the basis of the contract. I am more attracted, I confess, in considering this matter by the earlier words of SCRUTTON, L.J.: "First, the defendant is not exempted from liability for the negligence of his servants unless adequate words are used." If the defendants, who would prima facie be liable for their own negligence, seek to exempt themselves by words of some kind, they must show (i) that those words form part of the contract between the parties and (ii) that they are so clear that they must be understood by the parties in the circumstances as absolving the defendants from the results of their own negligence. On both those points it seems to me that the defendants' argument fails. It is clear when the plaintiff and her husband went to the hotel they had not seen the notice. Apparently, by the custom of the hotel, they were asked to pay a week in advance, and when they went to the bedroom for the first time they had not seen the notice and the words at the head of the notice could not be part of the contract between the parties. When did they become so? It might be said that it was at the end of the first week when the second payment was made, the notice then having been seen by the plaintiff, although she said she did not read it. But there ought to be some certainty in a matter of this kind, and there is none. I do not attach great importance to the point made by counsel for the plaintiff as to the husband in all probability being the payer, the contracting party. If he was, I am inclined to think he would have contracted in this regard on behalf of his wife. I do think, however, there is more importance in his further submission that when this contract was entered into, it was, not a contract for a fixed period subject to renewal, but a contract for an indeterminate period to which an end could be put by notice, and an end was put to it by notice at the time this loss took place. Indeed, the conditions, so far as one knows, remained the same. I do not think it is open to the defendants to place reliance on that clause or, at least, I do not think they are exempted from their liability for negligence by the words at the beginning of that notice. I agree with what my Lord said on the subject and I attach even more importance to the fact that this was no part of the contract at the time when the parties first went into the bedroom and there is no evidence to show that there was ever any alteration in the terms of that contract. I agree with the submission which counsel for the plaintiff made, that it is for the defendants to show that these words form part of the contract and that they have only one clear meaning. I think they are ambiguous in more ways than one. That is all I need say upon that side of the case.

There is one further matter. It was submitted on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiff herself must have been guilty of negligence if the defendants were guilty of negligence. I do not so regard the position. The plaintiff, in leaving her key on the key rack, was entitled to expect that the defendants would perform their duty and their part of the contract and carry on their business reasonably having regard to the circumstances as ROMER, L.J., said in Scarborough and Wife v. Cosgrove (1). In leaving her key on the key rack she was doing that which the defendants, by inference at least, asked her to do. I see no evidence of any contributory negligence on her part, and I am in agreement that this appeal should be dismissed.

DENNING, L.J.: I agree. When the plaintiff put the key of her room on the hook in the reception office, she put it in charge of the defendants. It gave access to her room, and it was their duty to take reasonable care to see that it was not taken by any unauthorised person. It was so taken and consequences followed which might reasonably have been foreseen—a thief used it to get into the room and steal. At common law the defendants are liable for that loss unless they prove that they took reasonable care of the key. They have not proved it. They did not call either the receptionist or the porter to explain how the key came to be taken.

The only other point is whether the defendants are protected by the notice which they put in the plaintiff's bedroom providing :

“ The proprietors will not hold themselves responsible for articles lost or stolen unless handed to the manageress for safe custody.”

The first question is whether that notice formed part of the contract. People who rely on a contract to exempt themselves from their common law liability must prove that contract strictly. Not only must the terms of the contract be clearly proved, but also the intention to create legal relations—the intention to be legally bound—must also be clearly proved. The best way of proving it is by a written document signed by the party to be bound. Another way is by handing him, before or at the time of the contract, a written notice specifying certain terms and making it clear to him that the contract is in those terms. A prominent public notice which is plain for him to see when he makes the contract would, no doubt, have the same effect, but nothing short of one of these three ways will suffice. It has been held that mere notices put on receipts for money do not make a contract : see Chapellon v. Barry U.D.C. (3). So, also, in my opinion, notices put up in bedrooms do not of themselves make a contract. As a rule, the guest does not see them until after he has been accepted as a guest. The hotel company, no doubt, hope that the guest will be held bound by them, but the hope is vain unless they clearly show that he agreed to be bound by them, which is rarely the case.

Assuming, however, that the plaintiff did agree to be bound by the terms of this notice, there remains the question whether on its true interpretation it exempted the defendants from liability for their own negligence. It is said, and, indeed, with some support from the authorities, that this depends on whether the hotel was a common inn with the liability at common law of an insurer, or a private hotel with liability only for negligence. I confess that I do not think it should depend on that question. It should depend on the words of the contract. To exempt a person from liability for negligence, the exemption should be clear on the face of the contract. It should not depend on what view the courts may ultimately take on the question of common inn or private hotel. In cases where the establishment is clearly a common inn or, indeed, where it is uncertain whether it is a common inn or a private hotel, I am of opinion that a notice in these terms would not exempt the defendants from liability for negligence but only from any liability as insurers. Indeed, even if it were clearly not a common inn, but only a private hotel, I should be of the same opinion. Ample content can be given to the notice by construing it as a warning that the hotel proprietor is not liable in the absence of negligence. As such it serves a useful purpose. It is a warning to the guest that he must do his part to take care of his things himself, and, if need be, insure them. It is unnecessary to go further and to construe the notice as a contractual exemption of the defendants from their common law liability for negligence. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs. No order on the cross appeal.

Solicitors : Gardiner & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; Hair & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SWANSON v. FORTON AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell and Evershed, L.J.J.), November 18, 19, 22, December 10, 1948.]

Lease — Assignment — Withholding of consent — Reasonableness — Prevention of creation of statutory tenancy.

By an agreement dated Oct. 14, 1937, the landlord let to the tenant, a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, the tenant covenanting not to sub-let or assign the lease without the landlord's previous consent "such consent not to be unreasonably withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible sub-tenant or assignee." The tenant was not residing in the premises, and, contrary to the terms of the agreement, had, since 1944, sub-let the premises, furnished, to Mrs. M. In July, 1945, the parties entered into a second tenancy agreement whereby the landlord waived the breach and granted a further term expiring on Aug. 31, 1947. This second agreement also included a covenant as to assignment. The tenant, having terminated the furnished tenancy, applied to the landlord for a licence to assign, and on Aug. 19, 1947, twelve days before the expiration of the tenancy, without waiting for the licence, he assigned the premises to one H.E. to hold for the remainder of the term then vested in the tenant. The landlord thereupon commenced proceedings, claiming a declaration that the assignment was void and that her refusal to consent to the assignment was not unreasonable, and claiming possession and damages.

HELD : the refusal of the landlord to consent to the assignment of the lease in order to prevent a statutory tenancy arising at the termination of the contractual tenancy was not unreasonable, and, therefore, the landlord was entitled to damages for breach of covenant.

Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 690), applied.

Bates v. Donaldson ([1896] 2 Q.B. 241; 74 L.T. 751), distinguished.

Observations of EVERSLED, J., in Re Swanson's Agreement ([1946] 2 All E.R. 631; 176 L.T. 27), not approved.

[AS TO UNREASONABLE WITHHOLDING OF CONSENT TO ASSIGN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 349-352, paras. 421, 422; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 382-385, Nos. 5279-5304.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Swanson's Agreement, [1946] 2 All E.R. 628; [1947] L.J.R. 169; 176 L.T. 25; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Bates v. Donaldson, [1896] 2 Q.B. 241; 65 L.J.Q.B. 578; 74 L.T. 751; 60 J.P. 596; 31 Digest 383, 5284.
- (3) Re Gibbs & Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd.'s Lease, [1925] Ch. 575; 94 L.J.Ch. 312; 133 L.T. 322; affmg., [1925] Ch. 198; 31 Digest 383, 5286.
- (4) Tredegar v. Harwood, [1929] A.C. 72; 97 L.J.Ch. 392; 139 L.T. 642; Digest Supp.
- (5) Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 690.

APPEAL by the landlord from a decision of ROXBURGH, J., dated May 11, 1948, in an action by the landlord claiming possession of premises which the tenant had purported to assign without having obtained the landlord's consent. The learned judge held that the withholding of consent by the landlord was unreasonable and dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal now allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

S. H. Noakes for the landlord.

Mulhigan for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 10. The following judgments were read.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : The landlord, who was plaintiff in the action, is the owner of a dwelling-house known as No. 3, Greenhalgh Walk, Hampstead Garden Suburb. This house she let to the tenant by a tenancy agreement dated Oct. 14, 1937. The term was for three years, from Oct. 1, 1937, and thereafter from month to month until determined by notice. The rent was £120 a year. Clause 2 (f) of the agreement contained an undertaking by the tenant not to assign, underlet, or part with possession of the premises or any part thereof without the landlord's previous consent in writing :

" . . . such consent not to be unreasonably withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible sub-tenant or assignee."

On July 20, 1945, the parties entered into a second tenancy agreement. It recited the last mentioned undertaking and that, contrary to the terms thereof, the tenant had, since Oct. 1, 1944, continued to sub-let the premises, furnished, to Gertrude Marcuse without first obtaining the landlord's consent. It then recited an agreement by the parties that, in consideration of the landlord's waiving the breach and granting a further term, the tenant should, during the continuation of the sub-letting, pay an additional rent of £40 per annum as from Oct. 1, 1944. It was further agreed (i) that the term created by the first agreement should be deemed to have expired on Oct. 1, 1944; (ii) that the landlord let the premises to the tenant from Oct. 1, 1944, until Aug. 31, 1947, or until the end of the emergency mentioned in the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, and for six months thereafter, whichever period should be the shorter, at a rent payable in advance of £160; and (iii) that the agreement should be read as if the terms and conditions contained in the first agreement were included therein, so far as not inconsistent. This last mentioned clause imported into the second agreement the undertaking by the tenant as to sub-letting or assignment.

On Aug. 19, 1947, when the tenancy had (as is now admitted) only twelve days more to run, the tenant, without having obtained the consent of the landlord, by deed assigned the premises to a sub-tenant, Horace Edelman, to hold during the continuance of the term then vested in the tenant. No sum was expressed to be payable, but the assignee gave the usual covenant to pay the rent (which, however, had been paid in advance) and observe the agreements and conditions contained in the tenancy agreement and to indemnify the tenant in respect thereof. Application had been made to the landlord's solicitors on July 29, 1947, for a licence to assign to the sub-tenant. A question was raised whether the tenancy had already come to an end so that the tenant, if in occupation, would have become a statutory tenant under the Rent Restrictions Acts, and, as such, had no assignable interest. It is common ground, however, that this was not the case, with the result that the contractual tenancy would continue until Aug. 31, 1947. The tenant did not await the result of his application for the landlord's licence to assign, and on Aug. 12, that is, seven days before the assignment was executed, the landlord's solicitors were informed on the telephone by the sub-tenant that the tenant was proposing to make the assignment without waiting for a licence. On Aug. 19, 1947, the tenant's solicitors informed the landlord's solicitors that he would assign during the then coming week without waiting any longer for the licence. The landlord had not then, and has not since, given her consent to the assignment and claims that she has not unreasonably withheld it. It appears that before the assignment to the sub-tenant, Mrs. Marcuse's tenancy was brought to an end and the sub-tenant went into occupation before the tenant's contractual tenancy came to an end.

On Oct. 2, 1947, the landlord issued her writ against the tenant and sub-tenant. In her statement of claim she alleged that the assignment was in breach of the tenancy agreements, that the tenant had failed to deliver up possession on Aug. 31, 1947, and that the sub-tenant remained in wrongful occupation of the premises. She claimed a declaration that the assignment was void and of no effect and not binding on her and that her refusal of consent to the assignment was not unreasonable, and she claimed possession of the premises and damages. Before the commencement of the proceedings, no such notice was served by the landlord as is mentioned in the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (1), and the learned judge ruled that the action, in so far as it claimed forfeiture on the ground of breach of covenant, was incompetent by reason of non-compliance with s. 146 (1). Against this ruling there is no appeal, with the result that the tenancy was not determined by any effective election to forfeit before the expiration of the contractual term. On this basis, the assignment to the sub-tenant was admittedly effective to vest the residue of the term in him, notwithstanding the alleged breach of the undertaking not to assign, with the result that, on the expiration of the contractual term, the sub-tenant was in occupation, and, therefore, entitled to claim the benefit of the Rent Restrictions Acts. Effect was given to this in the judgment of ROXBURGH, J., by dismissing the action against the sub-tenant. Against this part of the order there is no appeal, and the only matter that remains is the landlord's claim against the tenant for a declaration that her refusal or withholding of consent was not unreasonable and for damages for breach of the undertaking not to assign. These claims ROXBURGH, J., dismissed, holding for the reasons (with which he agreed) given by EVERSHED, J., in Re Swanson's Agreement (1) that the withholding of consent was unreasonable. Against this part of the judgment the landlord appeals. It was agreed by counsel for the parties that, in the event of our holding that the withholding of consent was not unreasonable, we should assess the damages. It was not disputed that the sub-tenant was a respectable and responsible assignee. The landlord, however, asserts, and the tenant denies, that the withholding of consent to the assignment was not unreasonable in the circumstances and for the reasons which I will now proceed to explain. It will be borne in mind that the burden of proving unreasonableness was on the tenant.

The house was a dwelling-house which fell within the Rent Restrictions Acts, and, if no assignment had taken place and if the tenant had determined the sub-tenancy of Mrs. Marcuse and gone himself into occupation before the contractual tenancy came to an end on Aug. 31, 1947, he would have been entitled to remain on in the house as a "statutory tenant." On the other hand, if Mrs. Marcuse had remained in occupation, no statutory tenancy would have come into existence, and the landlord would have been entitled to possession on the termination of the contractual tenancy, the reason being that Mrs. Marcuse was not entitled to the protection of the Acts as her tenancy was a furnished one. At the date of the assignment the tenant had, for a considerable time, ceased to live in the house. On some date before July 20, 1945, he had granted the furnished tenancy to Mrs. Marcuse and she was still in occupation under that tenancy at or shortly before the date of the assignment. On that date, according to the deed of assignment, the tenant was living near Ipswich. From these facts and the fact of the assignment itself, which was made when the contractual tenancy had only twelve days to run, the only reasonable inference to be drawn was that the tenant had no intention of resuming occupation of the house so as himself to be able to claim the protection of the Acts when the contractual tenancy came to an end, and from that fact, coupled with the fact that the rent was payable in advance and had been paid down to the end of the term; the only reasonable inference to be drawn was that the assignment was made for the sole purpose of enabling the assignee to claim the protection of the Acts which the tenant could not himself have claimed since he had no intention of returning to occupy the house. I should have said that that inference was the only reasonable one to draw on the admitted facts even if counsel for the tenant had not refrained from disputing it. The tenant did not give evidence at the trial. This was, no doubt, because ROXBURGH, J., dismissed the action without calling on counsel for the tenant. We asked counsel whether, assuming we thought there was a case for him to answer, he wished to call any evidence, and he informed us that he did not.

This, therefore, was the position, as between the landlord and the tenant, when the application for consent to the assignment was made. Unless an effective assignment of the remaining days of the term could be made, the landlord would be entitled to recover possession of the house on the expiration of the term in accordance with the terms of the tenancy agreement. She was anxious to do so in order to be in a position to let it to a tenant of her choice. She had a long waiting list of persons anxious to take one of her houses (of which she owned a number) and she wanted to be fair to them. She, apparently, had no intention at the time of selling the house with vacant possession on the termination of the tenancy. On the other hand, if the tenant could obtain the consent of the landlord to an assignment, he would be in a position to introduce a tenant of his own choice, not merely for the residue of the contractual term, but also for the duration of the statutory tenancy which would automatically come into existence in favour of the assignee as the tenant in occupation on the termination of the contractual tenancy.

Apart from authority and construing the undertaking in its natural meaning in relation to the facts which I have stated, I should have had no hesitation in saying that the landlord was not acting unreasonably in withholding her consent to the assignment. Under the contract the tenant had only twelve days of the term to assign. What he was attempting to do was not merely to assign the twelve days, but to put his assignee in a position to obtain what he himself could not obtain, namely, an extension of the right to occupy lasting beyond the expiration of the contractual term. If he himself had, contrary to his intention, returned to occupy the house so as to become a statutory tenant, he could not have assigned his statutory tenancy. By taking advantage of the fact that the contractual tenancy had twelve days to run, he attempted to do what for all practical purposes (but not, of course, in law) is the same thing.

One suggestion I may dispose of at the outset. It was that, in some way, the withholding of consent to assign would, in the circumstances, be a violation of the spirit of the Rent Restrictions Acts. There is nothing in the Acts which restricts a lessor's right under the tenancy to withhold his consent. The lessee can only put his assignee into a position to become a statutory tenant if he can lawfully do so. Whether he can or cannot lawfully do so depends on the unreasonableness or the reasonableness of the lessor's refusal. To say that it is unreasonable for the lessor to refuse his consent because it would prevent the lessee doing something which he can only do if the refusal is unreasonable is to beg the question. The main argument on behalf of the tenant is based on the judgment of this court in Bates v. Donaldson (2). In that case the views of A. L. SMITH, L.J., were expressed in a way more restrictive of the lessor's rights than those of KAY, L.J. LORD ESHER, M.R., agreed with both. A. L. SMITH, L.J., said ([1896] 2 Q.B. 247):

"It is not, in my opinion, the true reading of this clause that the permission can be withheld in order to enable the lessor to regain possession of the premises before the termination of the term. It was in my judgment inserted alio intuitu altogether, and in order to protect the lessor from having his premises used or occupied in an undesirable way or by an undesirable tenant or assignee, and not in order to enable the lessor to, if possible, coerce a tenant to surrender the lease so that the lessor might obtain possession of the premises, which was the reason why in the present case the assent was withheld."

The facts in that case were very different from those in the present case. The object of the lessor in withholding consent was to recover possession before the end of the term, and it was on this ground that he lost the case. In Re Gibbs & Houlder Bros. & Co., Ltd.'s Lease (3), TOMLIN, J., following what he took to be the view of A. L. SMITH, L.J., held ([1925] 1 Ch. 209) that the only circumstances relevant to consider on the question of reasonableness were matters affecting "the personality of the lessee or the nature of the user or occupation of the premises." There, the lessor's object was to avoid the loss of a good tenant of adjoining premises which he owned because it was apprehended that, if the assignment was allowed, the assignee, who was in fact the tenant of the adjoining premises, would give up his tenancy of them and move into the premises proposed to be assigned to him. This decision was affirmed by this court, but it was subjected to criticism in the House of Lords in the later case of Tredegar v. Harwood (4) on the ground that it involved adding glosses to the plain words of the covenant. As a decision, however, it is, just as Bates v. Donaldson (2) itself, binding on this court. It was, however, carried a step further by some observations of EVERSLED, J., in Re Swanson's Agreement (1) which were approved by ROXBURGH, J., in the present case. Those observations were, in fact, made obiter, as the decision was based on other grounds, the case being one in which EVERSLED, J., held that the contractual tenancy had come to an end so that no assignment was possible. I shall return to this case presently. After the judgment of ROXBURGH, J., in the present case, namely, on July 22, 1948, Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd. (5) was decided by this court. There, the lessee was a limited company, and, being such, was not capable of becoming a statutory tenant. Towards the end of the tenancy, the company asked the landlord for his consent to an assignment to one of its directors, and, on the landlord refusing it, nevertheless made the assignment. The object of the landlord in refusing his consent was to prevent a statutory tenancy arising at the termination of the contractual tenancy, and it was held that his refusal was not unreasonable. The court examined the decisions in Re Gibbs & Houlder Bros. & Co., Ltd.'s Lease (3) and Tredegar v. Harwood (4) and the dicta of EVERSLED, J., in Re Swanson's Agreement (1). TUCKER, L.J., after pointing out ([1948] 2 All E.R. 695) that those dicta were obiter and that, assuming the contractual tenancy there to have been subsisting, the proposed assignee was a person who, if he had remained tenant, would have become a statutory tenant at the termination of the agreement, explained the dicta of EVERSLED, J., as being based on the view that the landlord's real objection to the assignment was :

" . . . that he would have been thereby deprived of his opportunity of getting possession of the premises before the expiration of the lease, and therefore, the case would have been almost identical with Bates v. Donaldson (2) . . ."

and if the dicta went beyond that and were inconsistent with the view taken by himself in the then instant case he would differ from them.

In Re Swanson's Agreement (1) the tenant was actually in occupation at the time of the assignment and all that he had to do was to remain in occupation until the lease came to an end for a statutory tenancy to come into existence. The present case is quite different, for its basis, in fact, is that the tenant was not in occupation, was residing elsewhere, and had no intention of returning to the house. The only way, therefore, as I have pointed out, that a statutory tenancy could be brought into existence was by the device of an assignment. The present case is, however, different from Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd. (5) in that the tenant there was a limited company whereas here the tenant is an individual, but on the facts I do not think that this makes any difference. In the present case, on the facts, as in law, the only method of bringing a statutory tenancy into existence was by the device of an assignment, and it does not matter that in Lee's case (5) the reason why, in the absence of an assignment, no statutory tenancy could arise was one of law, whereas in the present case the position is that on the inference which the landlord was entitled to make no statutory tenancy was, in the absence of an assignment, going to arise in fact. In his judgment in Re Swanson's Agreement (1) EVERSLED, J., had used the following words ([1946] 2 All E.R. 631):

"... it is, I think, plain from the terms of the judgment of TOMLIN, J., and of the judgment of the Court of Appeal that by 'user or occupation' is meant the manner in which the premises are used or occupied—for example, for purposes which might cause offence even although they did not involve any breach of covenant . . ."

If I may respectfully say so, this appears to me to be adding yet another gloss on the plain language of the undertaking and to go farther even than TOMLIN, J., had gone and farther than Bates v. Donaldson (2). I find in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J., in Lee's case (5), two passages of great assistance. The first is as follows ([1948] 2 All E.R. 694):

"Once again it is necessary, I think, to emphasise that that language must be considered in the light of the facts of the particular case with which the learned judge was dealing. I do not think for one moment that TOMLIN, J., was purporting to lay down some principle of universal application which would cover every conceivable case, and it is clear that he had not in his mind any such situation as that which has arisen in this case, viz., the results which might follow at the end of a lease from the acceptance of a particular assignee for the termination of that lease."

The second is where, speaking of the case before him, he said (ibid., 695):

"It is true that the consequences would not show themselves until the expiration of three months from the date of the assignment, and counsel for the tenants is right when he says that the contractual relationship would be the same had the landlord consented to the assignment, but none the less it was a contractual relationship pregnant with future possibilities, or more than possibilities, which would not have resulted from the previous existing contractual relationship between the landlord and the tenants."

These words appear to me to apply mutatis mutandis to the circumstances of the present case and I must respectfully disagree with the opinion expressed by EVERSLED, J., in the passage quoted. I see no reason for limiting the matters to be considered in regard to reasonableness to matters which will arise during the currency of the lease. It is the effect of the assignment as leading inevitably to the extension of the right of occupation beyond the expiration of the contractual term that is here objected to. The assignment would lead, in the words of TUCKER, L.J., to "a contractual relationship pregnant with future possibilities." I can see no reason, and I find no authority which leads me, to think that in these circumstances the landlord's refusal was unreasonable. Apart from Lee's case (5), there is no case binding on this court in which the delayed effect of an assignment on the position of the parties after the termination of the lease has been considered. Nothing that I have said must be taken as applying to a case of what in the argument was sometimes referred to as "normal assignment." If that phraseology be adopted, the whole basis of fact in the present case is that the assignment proposed was an "abnormal" one in that it was an assignment of the tail end of the term by the lessee, not for the purpose of conferring the right to occupy for the few remaining days of the term, but in order to enable the assignee to occupy thereafter under the Rent Restrictions Acts. In my opinion, therefore, the withholding of consent by the landlord was not unreasonable.

The only remaining question is one of damages. It was admitted in evidence at the trial that the landlord had suffered and would suffer no pecuniary damages from the assignment. The sub-tenant is respectable and responsible and no rent higher than the standard rent (with any permissible additions) could have been obtained from another tenant. The landlord had no intention of selling the house. In the circumstances I do not see how she can claim more than nominal damages. I would award her 40s. for this. The appeal is accordingly allowed. The landlord will have a declaration that her withholding of consent was not unreasonable and judgment for 40s. damages.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

EVERSHED, L.J. (read by SOMERVELL, L.J.): I agree. It is plain, since the judgment of this court in Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd. (5) that in the earlier case of Swanson's Agreement (1), I used language in reference to the decision of TOMLIN, J., in Re Gibbs & Houlder Bros. & Co. Ltd.'s Lease (3) which went further than was justified by the judgment of TOMLIN, J., and, particularly, by his formula "user or occupation." It could not be suggested to be right that a landlord may always reasonably refuse his consent to an assignment (or an underlease) merely because his chances of dominion over his property at the end of the lease might thereby be enhanced or the chances of a continued right of personal occupation after the end of the term might be thereby diminished, for otherwise a landlord would, in effect, be justified in refusing his consent at any time to any assignment or any underletting of "rent restricted" premises. The facts of the present case are, however, wholly exceptional. For reasons fully stated by LORD GREENE, M.R., it is in this case obvious that the assignment of the "fag-end" of the term was intended to relate, in its effect, not really at all to the contractual term, but only to the period after the end of the term. Save in relation to what should follow after the term expired, the last twelve days of the term were without significance to assignor or assignee. In these circumstances, I think the present case is in essence the same as that of Lee v. K. Carter, Ltd. (5) and that a similar conclusion should follow.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : The appeal will be allowed and a declaration in the form I have mentioned will be made. There will be judgment for 40s. damages, and in the matter of costs, we shall give the landlord the costs of the appeal, but, having regard to the fact that in the court below there were two defendants, against one of whom the landlord failed, we think the proper order will be to give her one-half of her costs in the court below and no more.

Appeal allowed. Judgment for the plaintiff for a declaration and 40s. damages with costs in the Court of Appeal and half the costs in the court below.

Solicitors: Barfield & Barfield (for the landlord); F. Bernard Smith (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Distinguished. W. v. W. [1952]
1 All E.R. 858.

L. v. L.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pearce, J.), November 29, 30, 1948.]

H Nullity—Approbation of unconsummated marriage—Artificial insemination of wife with husband's seed—Birth of child—Estoppel—Public policy—Bastardisation of child by nullity decree.

The parties were married in 1942, and, although neither the wife nor the husband were incapable, the marriage was never consummated owing to the husband's psychological attitude in sexual matters. The wife was anxious to bear a child, and in December, 1947, she was artificially inseminated from the husband's seed. On Jan. 27, 1948, the parties ceased to live together. Unknown to herself, the wife was then pregnant as the result of the artificial insemination, and in September, 1948, she gave birth to a child. In a suit by the wife for a decree of nullity, it appeared from the evidence that the wife's dominant motive in conceiving the child was the hope that the advent of a child might help her and her husband to have normal intercourse.

HELD: (i) the wife was not estopped as against the husband by her conduct because he was not misled by it into thinking that she acquiesced in an abnormal marriage, nor had he as a result of it altered his position for the worse.

(ii) the conception of the child in the circumstances did not constitute approbation of an abnormal marriage, and there was no authority for saying that public policy bound the court to hold that by her conduct the wife had approbated towards the world at large. On the contrary, the fact that a decree would bastardise the child was no ground for refusing the decree, which would, therefore, be granted on the ground of incapacity.

Dicta of LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in G. v. M. (1885) (10 App. Cas. 186; 53 L.T. 399) and Dredge v. Dredge ([1947] 1 All E.R. 29), applied.

[AS TO GROUNDS FOR DECREE OF NULLITY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 639-645, paras. 934-945; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 265-272, Nos. 2328-2407].

Cases referred to:

- (1) Clarke (otherwise Talbott) v. Clarke, [1943] 2 All E.R. 540; 112 L.J.P. 41; 168 L.T. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) G. v. M., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339.
- (3) Dredge v. Dredge (otherwise Harrison), [1947] 1 All E.R. 29; 2nd Digest Supp.

PETITION for a decree of nullity by a wife on the ground of the husband's incapacity or, alternatively, wilful refusal to consummate the marriage. By his answer the husband did not deny that the marriage had not been consummated, but he denied incapacity and wilful refusal.

The husband had not succeeded in consummating the marriage, but the wife had borne a child as a result of having been artificially inseminated with the husband's seed. PEARCE, J., held that the conduct of the wife and the birth of a child in these circumstances did not debar the wife from being given a decree, notwithstanding that the child, in consequence of such a decree, would be bastardised, and he granted the relief asked.

J. Stirling for the wife.

R. Hughes for the husband.

PEARCE, J.: The parties were married in 1942 and the wife is now 31, and the husband 37, years of age. The medical examination shows that the wife has no impediment. The husband is, apparently, capable, but that proves nothing since the trouble here is psychological. For the first three years the husband made no attempt at intercourse. The wife suggested it, but the husband evaded it, saying that he was too tired or too busy or that it was difficult to have children during the war. The husband found it difficult to talk about sex. In June, 1945, the wife made him face the question, and he said that he supposed it was fear of failure that made him avoid intercourse. At the wife's insistence they tried, and he was unable to have sexual intercourse. He made many subsequent abortive attempts, but he was never able to consummate the marriage. In the autumn of 1945, the wife, who was, as might be expected, run down in health and suffering from nervous trouble, consulted a doctor. The doctor found no impediment in her. He impressed the seriousness of the position on the husband, and tried to persuade him to have psycho-therapy. The husband was unwilling to have this and wished to try physical methods of cure. His reluctance to try psycho-therapy probably sprang from the same trouble that caused his inability to consummate the marriage, since, undoubtedly, he wished to be cured. By the end of 1945, the wife knew from the doctor that she had grounds for a decree of nullity.

- A In 1946 another doctor took over the husband from the first doctor, but no doctor has effected any improvement in him. The wife was anxious to have a child and discussed artificial insemination with her husband. At the end of 1946, she tried, under the guidance of an expert in such matters, to inseminate herself artificially with the husband's seed, but she had no success. From April to September, 1947, the husband had to be abroad while the wife remained
- B at home. From September to December, 1947, she continued her attempts to inseminate herself artificially from the husband. There were further ineffective attempts to consummate the marriage, and the wife was urging the husband to undergo psychological treatment.

- In December, 1947, he at last agreed to pay a visit to a psychologist. The psychologist advised a course of treatment, but it would be long, and, in the
- C husband's view, almost impossible for him. As an attempted short cut, the psychologist put forward suggestive treatment by Dr. Leahy, and this treatment the husband was prepared to have. On Dec. 1, 1947, the wife had artificial insemination by an expert from the husband's seed. On Dec. 30 she had another such insemination. Between those two dates the husband had started a course of treatment by Dr. Leahy, and by Jan. 27, 1948, when the parties ceased
- D to live together, he had paid him nine or ten visits. Dr. Leahy's treatment was intended to eradicate from the husband the sense of failure caused by his repeated inability to consummate. Although the psychologist suspected that there might be a deep-seated neurosis, Dr. Leahy was not concerned with the question whether there was. Such a neurosis would take a long time to eradicate, and Dr. Leahy was trying a short cut. The first moment to which he attributed
- E any medical significance was the moment after the husband had failed a few times. As the husband told Dr. Leahy that he had little sexual desire and had never been sexually strong, and as the husband had slept with his wife for three years and during all that time had evaded any sexual intercourse, it seems clear that there was some far more deep-rooted trouble than a mere sense of failure induced by the lack of success of his efforts when he did make them.
- F It is hardly surprising that Dr. Leahy's treatment did not make the efforts to consummate any more effective than they had been in the past, but the treatment had an unfortunate result. It consisted largely in instilling confidence in the husband by giving him a card on which was written the information that, after reading the card, his arm would become rigid and thereafter he would feel desire. Twice he tried to consummate the marriage with that help. They
- G were in bed, he read the card, his arm did become rigid and he did thereafter feel desire. Unfortunately, the desire was not sufficiently strong or long-lived to achieve its purpose. These attempts differed only from the earlier ones in that they were rough and crude and devoid of love-making, and appeared to the wife to be just the attempted satisfaction of a physical need. In most nullity cases there comes a moment when the most forbearing wife becomes
- H sickened by the role, so unnatural to a sensitive woman, of trying to stimulate an impotent spouse sufficiently to enable him to achieve penetration. After five years of patient and constant effort by the wife, that moment was probably not very far off. Having heard her evidence, I have no doubt that that moment came when the husband added to his impotence the artificiality and crudity induced by Dr. Leahy's treatment. Those experiences, on top of a difficult and trying five years, made the wife decide that she should leave her husband. At the end of January, 1948, she left, determined to end the marriage, and since then they have lived apart and no persuasion has been able to get the wife to go back to him.

It was unhappy that the break in her endurance should have occurred at that moment, since, unknown to herself, she was pregnant by the artificial insemination, and there was just a chance—though, in my view, a slim one—that the birth of a child might have overcome the husband's psychological trouble or have resigned the wife to an unnatural marriage. In September, 1948, she gave birth to a boy. I have seen the wife and she was a perfectly honest witness. She seemed to me to be a woman who had tried nobly to make a success of the marriage under conditions which inflicted on her a degree of strain and humiliation which few women can endure indefinitely without serious injury to health, and to return to which for further attempts after the break would probably be intolerable for a sensitive woman. In my view, this marriage has broken down hopelessly, and she could never endure to go back to her husband. Dr. Leahy claims that success was in sight, and says that his treatment succeeds in 50 per cent. of cases, though I gather that the patients who, unlike this husband, were strongly sexed were the better subjects. After considering his evidence and the other evidence, I feel sure that success was not in sight, and that the only hope for any normal sex life of the husband would be some far more thorough course than Dr. Leahy's treatment, and, probably, with some other wife.

On those facts is it my duty to grant or withhold a decree? I find it a difficult case to decide, and there is little guidance to be had from authority. The husband has not chosen to give evidence, but his counsel says that I ought to refuse a decree on the ground of want of sincerity. He did not plead it, and, in my view, it should be pleaded, but there seems doubt whether it must be pleaded and, in my view, the husband ought not to be excluded from raising that argument. The husband says that the birth of the child should make me refuse a decree—that, because there was a voluntary act by the wife that led to this conception, the court should consider the marriage as approbated, not only in the interest of the parties, but also of the public, and he calls public policy in aid. He also relies on the prospect of a cure of the husband's condition. The last point I disregard, because from one's experience of such cases and from the evidence before me I see no hope of repairing this marriage. It would be shutting one's eyes to realities to expect this marriage, with its background of failure and neurosis, to become an effective marriage.

The birth of the child, however, is a far more serious matter. It is important to see how this came about. The wife admitted two motives in conceiving the child—a woman's desire for a child, and (the dominant factor) the hope that the birth of a child would help her and her husband to establish a normal sex relationship. Does the birth of a child so conceived deprive her of the relief to which otherwise she has a clear right? In Clarke v. Clarke (1) a decree of nullity was granted although a child had been born 13 years before and for three years the husband had been living in adultery. PILCHER, J., there held that there was no want of sincerity. So far as that case helps at all, it is in the wife's favour, since, in addition to the birth of the child, there was adultery by the husband and his object in getting a decree was to re-marry. In this case the wife has no desire to re-marry, and she left home because the sex side of marriage made it intolerable to her and for no other reason. As counsel for the husband rightly points out, however, the birth of the child in Clarke v. Clarke (1) was due to an accidental freak of fecundatio ab extra during an attempt to consummate, while here the conception was a deliberate act by the husband and wife. I do not feel that much help can be obtained from Clarke v. Clarke (1).

The leading case on this point is G. v. M. (2). In that case LORD SELBORNE, L.C., said (10 App. Cas. 186):

" . . . there may be conduct on the part of the person seeking this remedy which ought to estop that person from having it ; as, for instance, any act from which the inference ought to be drawn that during the antecedent time the party has, with a knowledge of the facts and of the law, approbated the marriage which he or she afterwards seeks to get rid of, or has taken advantages and derived benefits from the matrimonial relation which it would be unfair and inequitable to permit him or her, after having received them, to treat as if no such relation had ever existed. Well now, that explanation can be referred to known principles of equitable, and, I may say, of general jurisprudence. The circumstances which may justify it are various, and in cases of this kind many sorts of conduct might exist, taking pecuniary benefits for example, living for a long time together in the same house or family with the status and character of husband and wife, after knowledge of everything which it is material to know. I do not at all mean to say that there may not be other circumstances which would produce the same effect ; but it appears to me that, in order to justify any such doctrine as that which has been insisted upon at the Bar, there must be a foundation of substantial justice, depending upon the acts and conduct of the party sought to be barred. Further than that I do not think it necessary for the purpose of this case to go. Of course, when facts are in dispute, motive may be all important ; but that is not the case here."

In the ordinary meaning of the word "sincerity" the wife was sincere. She was set on making this a normal marriage, and when she found it intolerable she started these proceedings. She has not been actuated by any indirect or improper motive, but from LORD SELBORNE'S opinion I understand that this, though not irrelevant, is not the test. The question is whether one ought to draw inferences from her conduct and acts which would make it inequitable now to give her a decree. Conduct and acts, however, include the contemporaneous expression of her intentions, since conduct or acts may differ according to the words by which they are accompanied. In judging her acts and conduct I must regard the understanding between her and her husband at the time. It would be unreal to infer from her acts a meaning which the husband always knew they did not bear.

If estoppel be the test, then I do not think there is an estoppel as against her husband. An estoppel would arise if, on the faith of representations by word or conduct, she had induced her husband to alter his position for the worse. Here she has not misled her husband to do anything on the faith of her acquiescence in an abnormal marriage. Her letters and conduct show no such acquiescence. They show rather a determination to bring her marriage to a normal relationship. In one letter she says : "The only security for marriage is the reality of marriage. This must be striven for at any price." I think that no-one could read her letters as meaning that, if she is given a child by artificial insemination or adoption, she will acquiesce in an impotent marriage. So one essential of estoppel is absent. The second essential of estoppel is that the husband should have altered his position for the worse. It has not been proved that the husband has done so. Her persistence with the marriage for over five years was in his interest. The birth of the child may have made him liable to pay for the child's education, but it has not been shown that he will have to do so. Against that he has the privilege of having had a child by the woman he loved, and, apparently, still loves, which is no small privilege to a man. It is difficult to weigh up such things, but I doubt if he will be the loser in the long run by the fact of her having produced a child.

So far as approbation of the marriage is concerned, it must be a question of degree. What acts done, with what intention, constitute approbation? Her letters and her evidence show that she never intended to approbate an abnormal marriage. Until the end she made it clear that she desired and intended to have a normal marriage. I do not regard the conception of the child, serious as it is, when done with the dominant intention of producing normality in their sex relations, to be approbation of an abnormal marriage. I see no authority for saying that public policy makes it my duty to hold that she is estopped or has approbated towards the world at large. Dredge v. Dredge (3) shows the contrary. There it was held that the fact that a decree would bastardise a child born many years before was no ground for refusing a decree in a belated petition based on wilful refusal. LORD WATSON in G. v. M. (2) (10 App. Cas. 198) used the words "public policy", but only, I think, in connection with the rights between the spouses in the sense that to allow one spouse to act with glaring inequity as against the other is contrary to public policy.

If I am right, the question of discretion does not arise, and it is irrelevant to weigh the public and private advantages of granting or refusing a decree. If I am wrong, I should, in the exercise of my discretion, grant a decree for these reasons. I see no hope of happiness by keeping these two people married. I am told by his counsel that the husband might divorce the wife for desertion when the time arrives, but there is no certainty of this. If I grant a decree it seems possible that the wife, who appears to be affectionate and likely to be a good wife, may marry again, and even the husband might marry again and conquer his inhibitions and enjoy normal married happiness. The future holds better augury for the child, I think, if I grant the decree than if he is brought up by an embittered mother who may be tied for life to a marriage that has never been a real marriage, and which, only through the unnatural aid of science, has produced the fruit of a real marriage. That the child should be made illegitimate is most regrettable, but the stigmas of birth are of less effect than they were, and sons are not now judged by the errors of their parents. The few who know of the illegitimacy will probably also know the facts, and in them there is nothing that reflects any dishonour on either parent or on the child. For those reasons I order a decree nisi on the ground of incapacity, with costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Withers & Co. (for the wife); Marsden, Burnett & Davy, agents for Faithfull, Gardner & Stanier, Winchester (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ed. H.L. [1950] 1 All E.R. 728.

BOISSEVAIN v. WEIL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Asquith and Denning, L.JJ.), December 10, 13, 1948.]

Currency Control—Loan in foreign currency—Promise to repay in sterling—Parties resident in foreign country in military occupation of enemy—Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 950), reg. 2 (1).

By reg. 2 (1) of the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939 (as amended) it is provided: "Except with permission granted by or on behalf of the Treasury, no person other than an authorised dealer shall buy or borrow any foreign currency or any gold from, or lend or sell any foreign currency or any gold to, any person not being an authorised dealer." Section 3 (1) of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, provides: "Unless the contrary intention appears therefrom, any provisions contained in, or having effect under, any Defence Regulation shall—. . . (b) in so far as they impose prohibitions, restrictions or obligations on persons, apply . . . to all persons in the United Kingdom and all persons on board any British ship or aircraft, not being a Dominion ship or aircraft, and to all other persons being British subjects except persons in any of the following countries or territories, that is to say—(i) a Dominion, (ii) India, Burma and Southern Rhodesia, (iii) any country or territory to which any provisions of this Act can be extended by Order in Council, and (iv) any other country or territory, being a country or territory under His Majesty's protection or suzerainty . . ."

While, owing to war conditions, the parties were involuntarily resident in Monaco, which was in the military occupation of the enemy, the plaintiff, a Dutch subject, lent to the defendant, a British subject, a sum of money in French currency. The defendant drew cheques in blank for the full amount on an English bank, wrote a letter addressed to the bank informing it of the circumstances, and instructing it, on presentation or as soon as the law permitted, to honour the cheque in sterling. She also signed a document acknowledging the debt, certifying that she had posted the letter to the bank, and undertaking, in case the plaintiff failed to obtain payment on presentation of the cheque, to repay the sum borrowed in cash not later than one month after the declaration of an armistice, with additional provisions in the event of her death before payment was made. In an action by the plaintiff for the recovery of the amount lent, HELD : (i) the transaction was prohibited by the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, reg. 2 (1) which, having regard to the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 3 (1), had extra-territorial force and applied to any British subject, wherever he might be, other than in one of the excepted territories, who bought or borrowed foreign currency.

(ii) the proper law of the contract was English law, and, since it was illegal by that law, it could not be enforced either by action for money lent or on the cheques or by an action for money had and received.

Observations of LORD WRIGHT in Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 136; [1943] A.C. 63; 167 L.T. 110), and LORD ATKINSON in Dynamit Act. v. Rio Tinto Co. ([1918] A.C. 299; 118 L.T. 194), distinguished.

Decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 893), reversed.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (FINANCE) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 2 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 33, p. 703 and FOR THE EMERGENCY POWERS (DEFENCE) ACT, 1939, s. 3 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, p. 933.]

E Cases referred to :

(1) Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Dynamit Act. v. Rio Tinto Co., [1918] A.C. 292; 87 L.J.K.B. 549; 118 L.T. 191; 11 Digest 405, 749.

F (3) Santos v. Illidge, (1860), 8 C.B.N.S. 861; 29 L.J.C.P. 348; 3 L.T. 155; 11 Digest 404, 744.

APPEAL by the defendant from a decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., dated Apr. 23, 1948, in an action by a Dutch subject against a British subject for £6,000, money lent while the parties were resident in Monaco at a time when that principality was in the military occupation of the enemy. CROOM-JOHNSON, J., held that the contract was enforceable in this country, but the Court of Appeal now reversed this decision.

Salmon, K.C., and Stenham for the defendant.

Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, K.C., and B. M. Goodman for the plaintiff.

TUCKER, L.J. : This is an appeal from a decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., by which he gave judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of £6,000 and costs. The action was brought by the plaintiff, who is a Dutch subject, against the defendant, who is a British subject, and the claim, as shown in the statement of claim endorsed on the writ, is as follows :

"The plaintiff's claim against the defendant is for the sum of £6,000 money lent by the plaintiff to the defendant at her request which is still due and unpaid, and interest thereon from June 9, 1945, at 5 per cent. per annum."

The claim for interest is for agreed interest. There are particulars with regard to the dates on which three sums of £2,000 were lent : June 10, 1944, June 15, 1944, and July 8, 1944. By an amendment made subsequently the statement of claim goes on :

" On each of the said dates the plaintiff lent to the defendant 320,000 francs, which the defendant agreed to repay to the plaintiff in sterling at the agreed rate of 160 francs to the pound."

The transactions took place in 1944, when the plaintiff and the defendant were both in Monaco. The plaintiff, in evidence said :

" (Q) What was the official rate [of exchange] at the time ? (A) Well, we did not know if there was an official rate, but the last rate known was 176. (Q) Having arranged the rate, did you on each occasion advance to her 320,000 francs ? (A) Yes. (Q) How were the francs paid ? (A) in cash. (Q) Notes ? (A) Notes. (Q) Bank of France notes ? (A) Bank of France notes. (Q) That is 320,000 each time ? (A) Yes. (Q) The number of francs you paid her is the one thing that is not mentioned in the documents ? (A) No, because it was expressly understood that she was to pay me back out of her capital in England, as she had none other at her disposal. (Q) CROOM-JOHNSON, J. : And in English currency ? (A) Yes, my Lord. (Q) She was to pay in sterling in England ? (A) Oh, yes."

That is the contract sued on. Certain documents were entered into for the purpose of carrying out the transaction, but I do not think it necessary to read them in their entirety. One of them varied slightly on each occasion, but I am looking at one dated July 8, 1944, in respect of the last of these transactions, in which the defendant writes :

" I, the undersigned, Mrs. Dora Weil, nee Lewis . . . certify having addressed my letter . . . to the manager of the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., Baker Street branch, . . . London, and having given my cheque No. PC/632599 for the sum of £2,000 sterling on the said bank to — with a view to the repayment of the said sum of £2,000 sterling to him or his assigns, which sum he has kindly lent me without interest for the purpose of meeting my personal expenses and the payment of doctors' fees. In thus lending me the sum of £2,000 — has genuinely helped me in a very difficult situation and has rendered me a great service. If, for any reason, — or his assigns is or are unable to obtain payment of the said sum of £2,000 sterling on presentation of my said letter [the letter, dated July 8, 1944, to the manager of the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., Baker Street, London] I undertake to pay to him or them directly and in cash, not later than one month after the declaration of an armistice in the present war between Great Britain and Germany, and even earlier if my account at the National Provincial Bank, Ltd. has been released prior to the said armistice. After the lapse of the said period of one month the said sum of £2,000 sterling shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum payable annually."

There follows a provision for the event of her dying before the presentation of the letter and an irrevocable acknowledgment by her of the said sum as a debt. The next document is a certification of the defendant's signature by the police at Monaco, and, on July 8, 1944, there is the letter addressed by her to the manager of the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., Baker Street, London, informing him that she had that day drawn a certain cheque on that bank to the order of — :

" . . . who lent me this money for my living expenses and doctors' bills during the time of financial restrictions in Europe and who thus . . . rendered me a great service. Will you please honour this cheque on presentation or as soon as the law permits its payment, said cheque having priority over all other payments. These instructions are irrevocable."

The defendant also drew a cheque for that amount with the name of the payee left in blank, and those documents were handed to the plaintiff. Similar documents had been given to him with regard to the other transactions. The evidence showed that the defendant had not got an account at that particular bank and, in fact, there did not appear to be any merits attaching to her or her defence in connection with these transactions.

A A number of defences were raised at the trial. It was contended that the transaction was prohibited by the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, and it was also contended that the transaction was illegal according to the law of Monaco. The learned judge dealt fully with both those defences, and they have been expressly abandoned by counsel for the defendant on this appeal. He confined his appeal to two points: He relies on two of the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, and he says that this transaction is prohibited under one B or both of those regulations. The first is reg. 2, but, before reading it in its present form, I will read it in the form in which it was before the amendment which was made on Aug. 5, 1940. It then read as follows:

C "Except with permission granted by or on behalf of the Treasury, no person other than an authorised dealer shall in the United Kingdom buy or borrow any foreign currency or any gold from, or lend or sell any foreign currency or any gold to, any person not being an authorised dealer."

By an amendment of Aug. 15, 1940, the words "in the United Kingdom" are omitted, and the regulation now reads:

D "Except with permission granted by or on behalf of the Treasury, no person other than an authorised dealer shall buy or borrow any foreign currency or any gold from, or lend or sell any foreign currency or any gold to, any person not being an authorised dealer."

By s. 3 of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, it is provided, so far as is material:

E "(1) Unless the contrary intention appears therefrom, any provisions contained in, or having effect under, any Defence Regulation shall . . . (b) in so far as they impose prohibitions, restrictions or obligations to all persons in the United Kingdom and all persons on board any British ship or aircraft, not being a Dominion ship or aircraft, and to all other persons being British subjects except persons in any of the following F countries or territories, that is to say, (i) a Dominion, (ii) India, Burma and Southern Rhodesia, (iii) any country or territory to which any provisions of this Act can be extended by Order in Council, and (iv) any other country or territory . . . under His Majesty's protection or suzerainty."

So, unless the contrary intention appears, these regulations apply to all British subjects wherever they may be except in those specified territories. The G result of reg. 2 appears to me to be that, as it was originally worded, it must be construed as follows: "Except with permission granted by or on behalf of the Treasury, no British subject wherever he may be, except in one of the excepted territories, shall in the United Kingdom buy or borrow any foreign currency . . ." that is to say, it would prohibit a British subject in America from buying or borrowing foreign currency in the United Kingdom, which, of H course, he could do through an agent or by instructions by mail or otherwise. Then comes the amendment of Aug. 15, 1940, in which the words "in the United Kingdom" are omitted. Having regard to s. 3 of the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, the result appears to be that the regulation now applies to any British subject, wherever he may be, other than in one of the excepted territories, who buys or borrows foreign currency anywhere.

Is there a contrary intention to be found in the regulation? I am unable to find any indication of any intention to the contrary. The whole object of the regulation appears to me to be to protect sterling and to be expressly aimed at, or expressly to include, transactions carried out in foreign countries by British subjects as well as transactions carried out by British subjects in the United Kingdom. I am, therefore, unable to accept the first and widest submission of counsel for the plaintiff, namely, that, on the proper construction, this regulation has no extra-territorial effect, but, counsel advanced the second argument that, even if it has got extra-territorial force, it should not be applied to transactions in enemy occupied territory between two persons both of whom, for the purposes of trading with the enemy, are to be regarded as enemies. He says it would be absurd to suppose that transactions in a foreign currency in an occupied country between two persons who are involuntarily detained there should come within the scope of this regulation, and he fortifies that argument by pointing out that the regulation contemplates obtaining consent from the Treasury and that it only applies to persons other than authorised dealers. Counsel, therefore, submits that the regulation should only be construed as applying to territories in which it is possible to obtain a consent of the Treasury, or in which it is reasonable to contemplate the existence of, or access to, an authorised dealer.

There are several answers to that submission. One is that in its terms the regulation is wide enough to cover all foreign countries, and that, if it had been intended to exclude countries in foreign occupation, or countries which were included under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, it would have been easy so to do. There is a further difficulty, namely, that the mere fact that a person may be in an enemy occupied country does not necessarily preclude the possibility of some communication through some channels with the Treasury in this country. It is to be noted that the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, as pointed out to us by counsel for the defendant, in the proviso to s. 1, enacts :

“ Provided that a person shall not be deemed to have traded with the enemy by reason only that he has (i) done anything under an authority given generally or specially by, or by any person authorised in that behalf by, a Secretary of State, the Treasury or the Board of Trade . . . ”

As pointed out by DENNING, L.J., it appears from the correspondence that, at any rate in 1942, the defendant was able to be in communication with her solicitors in this country. With regard to the position of Monaco, the evidence given before the learned judge as to the nature and extent of the enemy occupation is not very specific. It appeared that it was in the military occupation of the enemy, but the civil administration appeared to be functioning normally and the mere fact that Monaco was brought within the scope of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, by S.R. & O., 1940, No. 1467, made on Aug. 13, 1940, would not, in my view, by itself, be sufficient to take it out of reg. 2. I feel unable to attach this limited construction to reg. 2 and to read into it an exception applying either to foreign enemy occupied countries or countries which are treated as enemy countries for the purpose of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939.

Those were the two main arguments advanced by counsel for the plaintiff for contending that this regulation did not apply, but he also used the ad absurdum contention and said that, if the regulation were to be construed literally, it would apply to a British subject permanently resident in America, who, for a few days, had occasion to borrow some dollars from a friend. With regard to that, it is sufficient to say—without expressing a concluded opinion on the matter—that I am by no means satisfied that a transaction of that kind would come within the language of “ buying or borrowing foreign currency.” The transaction with which we are concerned is one of the kind with which these regulations were designed to deal, that is to say, a transaction in which a British subject borrows francs and undertakes to repay in sterling.

That is, I think, clearly a buying or borrowing of foreign currency within the meaning of the regulation and is the kind of transaction aimed at. Whether or not the suggested transaction—which, in my view, is clearly not one at which the regulation is aimed, might come within this language, it is not necessary to decide. I am not impressed by the argumentum ad absurdum.

A Finally, counsel for the plaintiff contended in the alternative that, if this transaction is hit by reg. 2, none the less the plaintiff ought to be entitled to recover on the principle of unjust enrichment, and he referred to the speech of LORD WRIGHT in the Fibrosa case (1) relying on the observations made by LORD WRIGHT, where, in dealing with the doctrine of unjust enrichment, he said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 136) :

B “The gist of the action is a debt or obligation implied or more accurately imposed by law, in much the same way as the law enforces as a debt the obligation to pay a statutory or customary impost.”

C It must be remembered that in that case LORD WRIGHT was dealing with a contract which was lawful when made, but the performance of which had become impossible and the consideration for which had, accordingly, failed. It is said that the transaction in the present case comes within the language which was there used and that it should be applied in the present circumstances. D It is to be observed that in the present action there is no claim based on fraud or tort, or any alternative claim grounded on any implied obligation imposed by law or otherwise, and if, as I think, this transaction was one forbidden by reg. 2 and binding on a British subject abroad, it would, as counsel for the defendant forcibly says, be a curious result if we were compelled to say that E the law imposed an obligation which had been expressly prohibited by a statutory enactment to which this court is bound to give effect. I think the whole notion of a debt or obligation imposed by law, as contemplated by LORD WRIGHT in the Fibrosa case (1), is alien to a transaction of the kind with which we are dealing, where the regulation, which has the force of law, has, in terms, prohibited the particular transaction. For those reasons, I think the alternative contention of counsel for the plaintiff fails.

F In this connection it is to be observed that, when one is considering the law applicable to a transaction of this kind, and whether or not in these circumstances the plaintiff could enforce his claim in an alternative manner by claiming repayment in Monaco of the francs that had been lent and by invoking the law of Monaco as applicable to the transaction, it is necessary to consider what the view of the courts of this country would be with regard to a claim so framed. In that connection, our attention has been drawn by counsel for the defendant to the language used by LORD ATKINSON in Dynamit Actien-Gesellschaft v. Rio Tinto Co., Ltd. (2). LORD ATKINSON, referring to Santos v. Illidge (3), said ([1918] A.C. 299) :

G “There the action was brought against a British subject by a native of Brazil to recover damages for the non-delivery to the plaintiff in Brazil of certain slaves living in Brazil and owned by the defendant, and there sold by him to the plaintiff by contract made in Brazil. The contract was to be performed in Brazil, and might be lawfully performed there. The question for decision was whether, having regard to the time when, the mode in which, and the purposes for which the slaves were acquired by the defendant, the holding and sale of them by him was not made unlawful by the provisions of a certain English statute, binding on defendant as an English subject, namely [the Slave Trade Act, 1843]. The Court of Exchequer Chamber decided that on the proper construction of s. 5 of that statute the defendant was not prohibited from holding and selling these slaves in Brazil, and accordingly the plaintiff succeeded ; but the whole case proceeded on the basis that had these things been prohibited by this statute the contract could not have been enforced against the defendant in an English court, despite the fact that it was made in Brazil and was to be performed in Brazil, and was there lawful."

I think the present case is a fortiori to that referred to there, because here not only is the contract prohibited by the law of this country, but its performance is to take place in this country. I do not think that in any shape or form the courts of this country will lend themselves to the enforcement, directly or indirectly, of the contract which was proved in the present case.

For these reasons, I think this appeal succeeds. I should add that I have not found it necessary to refer to the argument of counsel for the defendant with regard to reg. 3c. It is sufficient for me to say that I think there is a great deal to be said for the contention of counsel for the plaintiff that 3c is not applicable to the present case. The language in 3c relied on is this :

"Subject to any exemptions which may be granted by order of the Treasury, no person shall, except with permission granted by or on behalf of the Treasury (a) . . . acknowledge any debt . . . in favour of a person who is resident outside the sterling area."

The argument is that this present action is founded on a contract creating a debt and not on an acknowledgment of some pre-existing debt, but, it is unnecessary to express a concluded view with regard to that regulation because I think that reg. 2 is the one that is fatal to the plaintiff's claim.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I agree.

DENNING, L.J. : The regulations here in question were made during the war for the protection of our purchasing power. All the foreign assets of the people resident in this country were mobilised to form a pool which was used for purchases abroad. There were big demands on this pool for essential purchases, such as payments for necessary imports, and the country could not afford to allow it to be used for any other than essential purposes. The country could not, therefore, permit British subjects unrestricted freedom to deal in foreign exchange or to buy goods or services from foreign countries, for that would give foreigners sterling credits and increase the demands on the pool. These regulations, 2 and 3c, by statute apply to British subjects in foreign countries unless the contrary intention appears from the regulations themselves. I can find no such contrary intention. If the regulations were not to apply to British subjects in foreign countries, it would mean that any British subject who went on a visit to the United States could freely buy dollars and give sterling cheques in exchange—or promise to repay in sterling in London—and thus create a drain on sterling for non-essential purposes. The sterling credits could be used by Americans for their purposes here instead of bringing goods or dollars here which would strengthen the pool. Again, if the regulations were not to apply to British subjects in enemy occupied territories, it would mean that any British subject in the south of France during the war could freely buy francs and create in exchange sterling credits which might be transferred to the enemy and used against this country in the war, or transferred to a neutral country and increase the pressure on sterling. I cannot agree, therefore, with either of the suggested limitations as to the scope of regs. 2 and 3c. The principal argument against their application here was the argumentum ad absurdum. It is said that it is unthinkable that a British subject long resident in, say, the United States, should not be able to buy or borrow dollars and pay for them with a cheque on his New York bank in dollars, or that a British prisoner of war should not be able to borrow foreign currency on which to live during his escape through enemy occupied territory. Those cases are, however, very different from the present case, because they do not involve the creation of any sterling credit. The proper law of the contracts in those cases is not English law. According to private international law, when a British subject who is residing in the United States borrowed dollars from an American the question whether the contract to repay is valid, that is whether it creates legal obligations or not, depends on the proper law of the contract, and that depends not so much on the place where it is made or on the intention of the parties as on the place with which it has the most substantial connection: see WESTLAKE'S PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW, 7th ed., p. 302, and PROFESSOR CHESHIRE'S recent book on INTERNATIONAL CONTRACTS

A pp. 12-15, 30-33. If, in the case put, he promises to repay in dollars in the United States, the proper law of the contract is the law of the United States, and its validity in no way depends on what the British Defence Regulations may say. If, however, he promises to repay in sterling in the United Kingdom, the proper law of the contract is the law of this country, and its validity depends on whether it is made illegal by the Defence Regulations. If it is illegal by the law of B England, it is, or should be, invalid everywhere. In construing the Defence Regulations, it must be assumed that, in so far as they have extra-territorial effect on the validity of contract, they apply only to contracts of which the proper law is the law of England, for those are the only contracts whose validity they can affect, and not to contracts of which the proper law is the law of some other country the validity of which they do not affect.

C I need hardly say that a British subject cannot contract out of the Defence Regulations. If, for instance, when on a visit to the United States, he makes a contract to borrow dollars and to repay in sterling in the United Kingdom, the proper law of the contract is the law of England, and he cannot escape the effect of that law by stipulating in the contract that it is governed by the law of the United States. If, however, a British subject resident in the United D States makes a contract to borrow dollars and to repay there in dollars, the proper law of the contract is the law of the United States, and, if it is valid in the United States, it is, or should be, valid everywhere. Nevertheless, although it is valid and would be enforced in the United States, it is quite another matter to say that it would be enforced in this country. The validity of the contract is one thing and the enforcement of it is another. Then the public policy of the lex E fori may come into play. An English court, while recognising that the contract was valid, would yet have to face the fact that a British subject is not allowed to make a payment to any person resident outside the sterling area without the consent of the Treasury. So, also, cases might occur where English law clearly prohibited a British subject from entering into a foreign contract which was valid by its proper law, in which case, of course, it would not be enforced F by the English courts. I need not, however, go into these matters in detail. Suffice to say that the regulations do not affect innocent transactions such as those instanced in argument, because when the contract is valid by its proper law and the only question is payment, the Treasury would, no doubt, in any proper case grant the necessary permission to make payment. In my opinion, therefore, the argumentum ad absurdum is not valid, because, on the view of G the regulations which I have expressed, there is nothing unreasonable in them. In the present case, the proper law of the contract is English law. Having regard to the nationality and domicile of the defendant, to the detailed arrangements for the repayment of the loan in London, and to the circumstances which gave rise to the transaction, there can be no doubt that England was the country with which the transaction was most essentially connected, and that, therefore, English law was H the proper law. The only connection with Monaco was that it happened to have been effected there. It is illegal by English law, and cannot be enforced either directly by an action on the loan or the cheques, or indirectly by an action for money had and received. I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs and half the costs in the court below.

Solicitors: William Charles Crocker (for the plaintiff); Pettiver & Pearks (for the defendant).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

McQUADE v. BARNES.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Hilbery and Birkett, JJ.), November 30, 1948.]

Street—Touting—Prohibition—Touting “in any street”—Touting from forecourt of shop—Construction of bye-law—Intention of local authority.

By a byelaw made by the corporation of the borough of Blackpool it was provided: “No person shall in any street within the borough of Blackpool, to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of any person, either verbally or by the distribution of handbills, circulars, or advertisements, tout or importune any person for the purpose of selling any article to or of obtaining the custom of such last mentioned person.”

On June 5, 1948, the appellant stood on the forecourt of shop premises known as No. 25, The Promenade, Central Beach, Blackpool, calling out in a loud voice to persons passing along the promenade: “Come inside. This way for your fish and chips. No waiting.” Fried fish and chipped potatoes were being sold on the premises which were occupied by the appellant. The cries were audible on the other side of the promenade, and they annoyed several persons walking on the promenade who deviated from their path to avoid the appellant's shouting. The carriageway and footpath of the promenade together constituted a public thoroughfare. The forecourt where the appellant was standing was private property, but it immediately adjoined the public footpath and normally was not enclosed or divided from the footpath, being open to the public for the purposes of approaching the premises.

HELD: the byelaw must be so construed as to give effect to the intention of the authority which made it, and, so construing it, the appellant had committed an offence although he, himself, had not been standing in the street.

Dictum of LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., in Dereham (Derham) v. Strickland (1911) (75 J.P. 300; 104 L.T. 821), applied.

Case referred to:

- (1) Dereham v. Strickland, (1911), 104 L.T. 820; sub nom. Dereham v. Strickland, 75 J.P. 300; 42 Digest 862, 144.

CASE STATED by Blackpool justices.

The appellant was convicted on an information preferred by the respondent, the chief constable of Blackpool, charging that he in a street “unlawfully and to the annoyance of persons did tout for the purpose of obtaining the custom of persons, contrary to the borough byelaws.” It was contended for the appellant that the forecourt of shop premises where he stood was not part of the street. The justices were of the opinion that the offence was proved and convicted and fined the appellant. The Divisional Court dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the headnote and the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

R. Lambert for the appellant.

Vernon Gattie for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the borough of Blackpool by whom the appellant was convicted of “unlawfully and to the annoyance of persons” touting “for the purpose of obtaining the custom of persons, contrary to the borough byelaws.” The byelaw in question provides:

“No person shall in any street within the borough of Blackpool, to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of any person, either verbally or by the distribution of handbills, circulars, or advertisements, tout or importune any person for the purpose of selling any article to or of obtaining the custom of such last-mentioned person.”

The appellant was employed by the owner of a shop which adjoins the street. There is no physical division between the shop and the street, nor do I think it would make any difference for the purpose of the present case if there were a rope or a fence dividing them. The appellant stood on the forecourt of his shop and touted to people in the street to come in and have some fish and chips. If the true construction of the byelaw is that persons in the street shall not be touted, then the appellant committed an offence although he did not actually stand in the street, and, in my view, that is the obvious meaning of the byelaw. It is possible to read it in one of two ways—either, that the tout must be standing in the street or that he must be touting people in the street. We must so construe a byelaw as to give effect to the intention of the authority which made it just as we must construe a statute so as to give effect to the wishes of Parliament, and if we gave to this byelaw the meaning for which the appellant contended it would mean that to a great extent the byelaw would be waste paper. I cannot distinguish this case from Derham (Dereham) v. Strickland (1), where the same thing happened except that the piece of land on which the man who was touting stood and which was open to the public and had been declared part of the highway belonged to an owner who had given him permission to stand there. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the court), said (75 J.P. 300) :

“They [the justices] must consider whether the respondent was touting in the street. There seems to be no doubt about it, for he stood on a piece of ground adjoining the street. If he was standing practically at the corner of the pavement, the fact that the title to the land on which he stood was in private hands does not prevent what he did from amounting to touting in the street.”

That is exactly what happened in the present case. The decision in Derham (Dereham) v. Strickland (1) gave to the byelaw there exactly the same effect as we are giving to the byelaw in this case by reading it as meaning: “No person shall tout or importune any person who is in any street.” In the present case such persons were importuned. The justices find that they were annoyed, and, therefore, in my opinion, the justices came to a right decision and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

HILBERY, J. : I agree.

BIRKETT, J. : I also agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless, agents for Baden Barnes & Co., Blackpool (for the appellant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Trevor T. Jones, Blackpool (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD. v. NOVIMEX, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), December 10, 13, 1948.]

Contract—Commission—Agreement to pay commission in return for introduction—Amount to be agreed—Refusal to pay commission after introduction made—Whether agreement binding—Amount of commission—Application to all subsequent transactions.

On Dec. 9, 1946, the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs agreeing to pay the plaintiffs certain commission in respect of a consignment of oilskins with which it had been arranged, with the plaintiffs' assistance, that the P. company, with whom the defendants had not at that time direct contact, should supply the defendants. The letter proceeded: “We also undertake to cover you with an agreed commission on any other business transacted with your friends [the P. company]. In return for this you are to put us in direct touch with your friends." In due course, the plaintiffs put the defendants in direct contact with the P. company. The defendants entered into further transactions with the P. company, but refused to pay commission to the plaintiffs in respect thereof.

HELD: although, if the arrangement had been wholly executory on both sides, there might have been no binding contract, the plaintiffs had executed their part of the transaction, and the defendants were, therefore, bound to pay, in default of agreement as to the amount, a reasonable sum as commission on all their subsequent business with the P. company, whether or not such business was a direct consequence of the plaintiff's introduction.

[AS TO WHAT TERMS MAY BE IMPLIED, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 322, 323, para. 451; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 610-612, Nos. 5044-5058.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Levy v. Goldhill & Co., [1917] 2 Ch. 297; 86 L.J.Ch. 693; 117 L.T. 442; 1 Digest 523, 1829.
- (2) Hillas & Co., Ltd. v. Arcos, Ltd., (1932), 147 L.T. 503; Digest Supp.
- (3) Foley v. Classique Coaches, Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 1; 103 L.J.K.B. 550; 151 L.T. 242; Digest Supp.
- (4) May & Butcher v. R., [1934] 2 K.B. 17, n.; 103 L.J.K.B. 556, n.; 151 L.T. 246, n.; Digest Supp.
- (5) Scammell (G.) & Nephew, Ltd. v. Ouston, [1941] 1 All E.R. 14; [1941] A.C. 251; 110 L.J.K.B. 197; 164 L.T. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Bishop & Baxter, Ltd. v. Anglo-Eastern Trading & Industrial Co., Ltd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 598; [1944] 1 K.B. 12; 113 L.J.K.B. 26; 169 L.T. 351; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Branca v. Cobarro, [1947] 2 All E.R. 101; [1947] K.B. 854; 177 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Central London Property Trust, Ltd. v. High Trees House, Ltd., [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Bryant v. Flight, (1839), 5 M. & W. 114; 2 Horn. & H. 84; 12 Digest 410, 3311.
- (10) Wilson v. Harper, Son & Co., [1908] 2 Ch. 370; 77 L.J.Ch. 607; 1 Digest 523, 1830.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from a judgment of DENNING, J., dated May 12, 1948, dismissing an action by them for commission on business transacted by the defendants with a company to which the plaintiffs had provided an introduction following the defendants' promise to pay in return for such introduction "an agreed commission" on any business transacted. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

Quintin Hogg for the plaintiffs.

Eustace Roskill for the defendants.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I will ask COHEN, L.J., to give the first judgment.

COHEN, L.J.: This is an appeal from an order DENNING, J., made on May 12, 1948, in which he dismissed the plaintiffs' action against the defendants for commission in respect of a purchase by the defendants of three parcels of oilskins from a company known as Pritchard & Gee Trading Co., Ltd.

In December, 1943, Mr. Vischer, who was a director of the defendants, approached Mr. Sussmann, who was managing director of the plaintiffs, and told him he wanted to buy 20,000 suits of oilskins. Mr. Sussmann said he had friends in Holland who could provide the requisite number, and as a result a letter of Dec. 9 was written by Mr. Vischer which has given rise to this action. The first four paragraphs of that letter dealt with a particular parcel of 20,000 skins, and stated that the defendants were willing to buy them from the plaintiffs' friends at 5s. 6d. each. The second and third paragraphs dealt with payment and delivery, and then the letter proceeded :

A "We confirm that we have agreed to cover you on this transaction with a commission of 4d. per oilskin suit."

Then comes the paragraph (the sixth) on which the present dispute arises :

"We also undertake to cover you with an agreed commission on any other business transacted with your friends. In return for this you are to put us in direct touch with your friends."

B The plaintiffs carried out their part of the transaction as mentioned in that letter, namely, to put the defendants in direct touch with the plaintiffs' friends. The case was rightly conducted before us on the basis that, whatever be the effect of that sixth paragraph, it constituted a separate arrangement independent of the original contract for 20,000 oilskins.

C The commission on the original transaction having been paid in September, 1947, nothing further occurred until the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants the following letter of Jan. 8, 1948 :

D "We refer to your letter to us of Dec. 9, 1946, since when we have received the agreed commission upon the oilskins transaction which was referred to in your letter. However, we call attention to the paragraph therein [para. 6, now in question] . . . We think the time has now arrived when, with a view to making up our accounts for 1947, we should receive details of the various businesses you have done with Messrs. Pritchard & Gee Trading Co., Ltd., during 1947, and that we should now meet together to agree the commission to be paid to us thereon."

E The reply to that letter, dated Jan. 13, 1948, repudiated the liability which had been alleged by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs placed the matter in the hands of their solicitors, and on Jan. 30, 1948, the writ in this action was issued. It refers to the letter of Dec. 9, 1946, and alleges that it was an express or implied term of the request that the defendants be put in touch with the clients of the plaintiffs

F " . . . that the defendants would pay a reasonable commission to the plaintiffs on any business thereafter transacted with the said clients other than a particular transaction for the purchase of oilskin suits dealt with more particularly in the said letter."

G It alleged as a fact that the plaintiffs had put the defendants in touch with Pritchard & Gee Trading Co., Ltd., and further alleged that by their letter of Jan. 13 the defendants had repudiated the obligation which the plaintiffs said arose from para. 6 of the letter of Dec. 9, 1946, and that :

" . . . a reasonable commission would be 5 per cent., alternatively 3 per cent., on the value of the transactions with the said clients after Dec. 9, 1946, and, alternatively, a reasonable commission would be 4d. per oilskin dealt in by the parties within the said period."

H The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the defendants were liable to pay a commission of 5 per cent., or, alternatively, 3 per cent., on the value of the transactions, or alternatively, 4d. a skin, and they asked for an inquiry or an account of the transactions and for payment of the commission on the value of the transactions found to be due as a result of the inquiry or taking of the account, and, finally, further or in the alternative, damages for breach of contract.

The defendants repudiated liability, though they admitted three subsequent purchases through Messrs. Pritchard & Gee Trading Co. The first, the defendants admitted, was linked with the original transaction and they were liable to pay commission on it, and they have, in fact, paid it. The other two transactions were these. On or about Aug. 8, 1947, the defendants purchased 1,000 oilskin suits from Pritchard & Gee, Co., Ltd., at a price of 5s. 6d. each, or a total cost of £275. Then, in or about August, 1947, they purchased 20,000 oilskin suits at a cost of £5,000. The defendants denied liability to pay commission on those two transactions, first, on the ground that there was no legally enforceable bargain arising under para. 6 of the letter, it being an agreement to pay a commission to be agreed and no further agreement had been reached. Alternatively, they said that, at any rate as to the 20,000 skins, they were under no liability, because, on the true construction of the letter, if the arrangement constituted an enforceable bargain, it was only a contract to pay commission on business arising directly from the introduction by the plaintiffs to Messrs. Pritchard & Gee and the second transaction arose from an advertisement in a newspaper. The learned judge appears to have accepted both submissions. He says in his judgment :

"I am quite clear that the 20,000 transaction in August, 1947, had nothing to do with the original transaction," and on that ground he refused to allow any commission thereon, but, in my opinion, there is nothing in the agreement limiting the commission to commission on orders directly attributable to the introduction. The language used seems to me unambiguous. What is said is that the commission is to be payable "on any other business transacted with your friends." I find it difficult to imagine wider language than that used in the letter, and I am unable to find any circumstances which would justify us in cutting it down. It seems to me a perfectly reasonable arrangement to come to in order to prevent litigation on the point (which it is very difficult to prove) whether or not a particular item of business did or did not arise out of the original introduction.

I turn next to the main question. Is this an enforceable agreement? A number of authorities have been cited to us, to which I do not propose to refer in detail, because, in my view, the effect of the authorities is correctly stated in the learned judge's judgment where he says :

"The principle to be deduced from the cases is that, if there is an essential term which has yet to be agreed and there is no express or implied provision for its solution, the result in point of law is that there is no binding contract. In seeing whether there is an implied provision for its solution, however, there is a difference between an arrangement which is wholly executory on both sides, and one which has been executed on one side or the other. In the ordinary way, if there is an arrangement to supply goods at a price 'to be agreed,' or to perform services on terms 'to be agreed,' then, although, while the matter is still executory there may be no binding contract, nevertheless, if it is executed on one side, that is, if the one does his part without having come to an agreement as to the price or the terms, then the law will say that there is necessarily implied from the conduct of the parties a contract that, in default of agreement, a reasonable sum is to be paid."

With that statement of the principle of law I respectfully agree. My difference with the learned judge is only on the question whether he has correctly applied that statement of principle to the facts of this case. The learned judge goes on :

"The difficulty is to apply the distinction in this case. This is not a case of services to be rendered for wages or goods to be supplied for a price. It is an arrangement in regard to repeat transactions or follow-up transactions, in respect of which the person effecting the original introduction has performed no fresh service whatever apart from his original introduction. He has, however, done his part. He has effected the original introduction."

If I may pause there for a moment, I can see no difference in principle between a case where the service which is rendered is labour and a case where the service is an introduction. It seems to me here that, whatever the value of the service may be, the plaintiffs have rendered to the defendants the service which was intended to be the consideration for the agreement to pay commission on future orders. I cannot think that there is a difference in principle between such a service and an agreement to serve an employer as a clerk or in any other capacity. The learned judge goes on to say that, in his view, it is impossible to apply the principle to the present case because there is so much left in the air. He says: "Is commission to be payable until the crack of doom?" In my view, if the defendants go on dealing with Pritchard & Gee until the crack of doom, they will have to go on paying commission to the plaintiffs, if they are in existence, until that doom occurs. As was pointed out in Levy v. Goldhill (1) by PETERSON, J., parties having entered into a bargain have it in their power to put an end to it, and so the defendants here need not go on dealing with Messrs. Pritchard & Gee. Therefore, I do not feel any difficulty on those points.

The next point put by the learned judge is in these terms: "Does that mean business which is not the result of the introduction at all." That has been covered by what I have already said. As I read the agreement, it says plainly that commission is to be payable on any other business whether or not it has resulted as a direct consequence of an introduction by the plaintiffs, and, therefore, it includes a transaction arising, as happened in this case, from an advertisement in a newspaper. Then the learned judge says: "Is it confined to oilskins or does it apply to business of an entirely different kind, in different commodities, by different departments, and so forth?" Here, again, I can find no ambiguity in the agreement, and I do not, therefore, feel any difficulty in answering the question in favour of the second alternative. The real point comes where the learned judge goes on:

"And what is the amount of the commission to be? If there is no usual or customary commission, how can anyone say what is a reasonable commission for a follow-up transaction or a repeat transaction? That appeared clearly from the evidence which showed that when parties are negotiating for the price they are going to pay, they take account of any commission they have to pay to agents."

DENNING, J., goes on to say that this shows that the agreement is too vague, but this argument involves the proposition that the agreement had not said in terms: "We also undertake to cover you with a reasonable commission on any other business transacted with your friends." DENNING, J., regarded that condition as being too vague to be enforceable. I cannot agree with his view. I think that the court should take the view that a jury properly directed would be able to arrive at a proper conclusion as to what in the circumstances of this case is a reasonable commission.

[HIS LORDSHIP then considered what would be a reasonable commission in respect of the transactions and concluded that it would not exceed $\frac{1}{4}$ d. per skin.]

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree.

SINGLETON, L.J. : I agree.

Declaration that the defendants were liable to pay a reasonable commission to the plaintiffs in respect of each transaction entered into with Messrs. Pritchard & Gee Trading Co., Ltd., after Dec. 9, 1946. Defendants to pay the costs here and below.

Solicitors : Herbert Baron & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Wm. A. Crump & Son (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ARGONAUT NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. MINISTRY OF FOOD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), December 9, 10, 1948.]

Charterparty—Demurrage—Loading—Bagging—Cargo of wheat put on board in bulk and requiring to be bagged before stowing.

By a charterparty a ship was to proceed to a port in Canada, as ordered, to load wheat, and was "to be loaded according to berth terms, with customary berth dispatch," and, if detained more than 5 days (Sundays and holidays excepted) the charterer was to pay demurrage "provided such detention shall occur by default of charterer or his agents." The ship arrived at Montreal, as ordered by the charterer, and was ready to load a cargo of grain on Oct. 7, 1946, and by the terms of the charterparty, the lay days started at 7 a.m. on Oct. 8. The charterer loaded no cargo at Montreal, but ordered the ship to proceed to Sorel, where she arrived at 12.45 p.m. on Oct. 11. Loading began at 3.30 p.m. and continued intermittently until Oct. 17, the lay days expiring and the ship coming on demurrage at 7 a.m. on Oct. 15. Under the port regulations the ship, a two-deck steamship, was allowed to carry bulk grain to the full capacity of the lower holds, but all grain in the 'tween decks had to be in bags, and this requirement was necessary for the safety of the ship and the proper stowage of cargo. The loading was done by the charterer's agents who put the wheat on board the vessel by means of elevators. By 8.45 a.m. on Oct. 17, as much wheat as could be carried by the ship in bulk had been loaded on board and some loose wheat had been placed in the 'tween decks where it was being put into bags. As the bagging proceeded, more loose wheat was poured in from the elevators at a reduced rate. The last wheat was put on board at 1 p.m. and the bagging of the loose wheat was completed at 3 p.m. The charterer paid demurrage until 8.45 a.m. on Oct. 17, but contended that he was not liable for demurrage for the period from 8.45 a.m. to 3 p.m. of that day.

HELD: loading was not complete until the cargo was so placed in the ship that she could proceed on her voyage in safety, and, therefore, as bagging was necessary for the safety of the ship and was also required by the port regulations, it was a part of the loading, and, as the detention was due to his default in not providing the cargo at the proper time and place, the charterer was liable to pay demurrage until 3 p.m. on Oct. 17, when the bagging of the loose wheat was completed.

Per BUCKNILL, L.J. The authorities all indicate that the task of loading is a joint operation, that each party must do what is reasonable to enable the other to do his part, and that loading is not complete until the cargo is so placed in the ship that the ship can proceed on her voyage in safety.

Observations of LORD ESHER, M.R., in Harris v. Best, Ryley & Co. (1892) (68 L.T. 77), and of WRIGHT, J., in Svenssons (C. Wilh.) Travaruaktiebolag v. Cliffe S.S. Co. ([1932] 1 K.B. 494; 147 L.T. 14), approved.

Decision of SELLERS, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 871), affirmed.

[AS TO DEMURRAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 344-349, paras. 524-529; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 559-566, Nos. 3851-3909.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Akt. Reidar v. Arcos, Ltd., [1927] 1 K.B. 352; 96 L.J.K.B. 33; 136 L.T. 1; 41 Digest 341, 1922.
- (2) Harris v. Best, Ryley & Co., (1892), 68 L.T. 76; 41 Digest 564, 3886.
- (3) Sociedad Anonima Comercial de Exportacion y Importacion (Louis Dreyfus y Cia), Limitada v. National Steamship Co., Ltd. (1932) 49 T.L.R. 50; revsg. S.C. sub nom. National Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Sociedad

Anonima Comercial de Exportacion y Importacion (Louis Dreyfus y Cia), Limitada, 48 T.L.R. 325.

(4) Svenssons (C. Wilh.) Travaruaktiebolag v. Cliffe S.S. Co., [1932] 1 K.B. 490; 101 L.J.K.B. 521; 147 L.T. 12; Digest Supp.

A APPEAL by the charterer from a decision of SELLERS, J., dated Apr. 23, 1948, and reported ([1948] 1 All E.R. 871), in an action by shipowners for a declaration that the charterer was liable to pay demurrage for time spent in stowing the cargo in accordance with statutory port regulations after the full cargo had been loaded, on the ground that the shipowners had completed the stowing with all reasonable dispatch and without any default, and the delay was due to the charterer or his agents. SELLERS, J., gave judgment for the shipowners, and the Court of Appeal now affirmed his decision. The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

Le Quesne, K.C., E. W. Roskill and Holman for the charterer.
Mocatta for the shipowners.

C BUCKNILL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of SELLERS, J., in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants, the Ministry of Food. The amount awarded was £77 10s. The case raises some interesting questions as to the proper interpretation of a charterparty entered into between the plaintiffs, as the owner of the S.S. Argobec, and the Minister of Food.

D The charterparty provided for the loading at one port of several ports mentioned in the charterparty, Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Quebec, Sorel, or Three Rivers, of a full and complete cargo of wheat, or Indian corn, or rye, or oats, or barley, or feedwheat, or soya beans, in bulk—I stress the words “in bulk”—or flour in bags. The vessel was to load:

“ . . . under inspection of underwriters’ agents, at her expense, and to comply with their rules, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her cabin, tackle, apparel, provisions, fuel and furniture . . . ”

E There is the all-important clause from the point of view of this case:

“ Steamer to be loaded according to berth terms with customary berth dispatch, and if detained longer than 5 days, Sundays and holidays excepted, charterer to pay demurrage as per cl. 19 attached, provided such detention shall occur by default of charterer or his agents. Notification of the vessel’s readiness must be delivered at the office of the charterer or his agents, at or before 4 p.m. (or at or before 12 noon if on Saturday), vessel also having been entered at the Custom House, accompanied by pass of the inspector of vessel’s readiness in all compartments, and the lay days will then commence at 7 a.m. on the next business day, whether in berth or not.”

G A further clause provides:

“ It is also mutually agreed that this contract shall be completed and be superseded by the signing of bills of lading . . . which bills of lading shall however contain . . . ”

H certain clauses. There is no evidence that any bills of lading were signed in this particular case, and I do not propose to refer to those clauses except to say that some of the terms are incorporated in what I have already read.

The ship arrived at Montreal on Oct. 6, 1946. Written notice of her readiness to load a cargo of grain was given to the charterer’s agent at 1.45 p.m. on Oct. 7, and the lay days started at 7 a.m. on Oct. 8. She did not load any cargo at Montreal, but was sent by the charterer to Sorel, where she arrived at 12.45 p.m. on Oct. 11. The loading started on that day at 3.30 p.m., and took place intermittently on Oct. 11, 12, 14, 15, 16 and 17. The five lay days ran out at 7 a.m. on Oct. 15, which was, in fact, a week after Oct. 8, but there were two days which did not count. It is admitted by the charterer that demurrage started to run from Oct. 15, and that it started to run because of his default.

At 8.45 a.m. on Oct. 17 all the cargo in bulk which the vessel was allowed to carry under the rules and bylaws of the office of port warden of the harbour of Montreal had been loaded. The charterparty does not refer to these rules in terms, but the agreed statement of facts says, in para. 3 :

"The provisions above quoted of the charterparty as to loading under the inspection of underwriters' agents and complying with their rules are only applicable to vessels loading in United States ports, but the said rules are similar to the regulations for the loading and carriage of grain cargoes laid down by the rules and by-laws of the office of port warden of the harbour of Montreal, copies of which are appended and form part hereof. The latter are sanctioned by the Council of the Board of Trade of the Dominion of Canada under an Act of the Canadian legislature, 45 Vict., c. 45, s. 5, and failure by a master or owner to comply with certain of them is punishable by fines. Moreover, until the master of a vessel produces to the Canadian customs authorities a certificate from the port warden to the effect that all the requirements of the regulations have been fully complied with, he is unable to secure a clearance for his vessel to leave the port of Montreal for any port not within the limits of inland navigation. These regulations apply not only to Montreal itself but also to Sorel, a port on the St. Lawrence some 40 miles downstream from Montreal."

The appropriate regulations in this case are those which deal with the loading of two deck steamships :

"Two deck steamships may carry bulk grain to the full capacity of all lower holds, provided properly constructed feeders are fitted in the hatches and trunked in the 'tween decks, and, if necessary, with supplementary feeders as required by para. 4, 'Stowage' . . . 2. All other grain in the 'tween decks and/or deck erections must be in bags, complying with regulations affecting shifting boards and dunnage."

Rule 1 under "Stowage" is :

"In loading, the grain shall be properly stowed, trimmed and secured."

Then there are certain other provisions about bagging.

At 8.45 a.m. on Oct. 17, the ship could not take any more cargo in bulk. If more cargo was to be taken in the ship, it would have to be placed in the 'tween decks, and if it were placed in the 'tween decks it must be in bags. The ship was not at that time down to her marks. The charterer's agents started to pour wheat from the elevators into the 'tween decks at a reduced flow, and the stevedores started to bag the wheat there. This went on, and at 1 p.m. on Oct. 17 the vessel was down to her marks, so that she was then not able to take in any more cargo, but there was still some bagging to be done in respect of the cargo which had been poured into the 'tween decks in bulk. The bagging continued until 3 p.m. on Oct. 17, when that operation was completed, the necessary certificate was issued, and the ship was ready to sail. The total number of bags used was 14,000 bags, and the total amount of wheat in the 'tween decks was 28,300 bushels.

That being the position, the question arose what demurrage the charterer ought to pay. He has, in fact, paid £617 14s. in respect of demurrage of the ship until 8.45 a.m. on Oct. 17. The shipowners claim £77 10s. 10d. in respect of demurrage between 8.45 a.m. and 3 p.m. That sum can be split into two. As regards the demurrage between 8.45 a.m. and 1 p.m., when the cargo was all on board the ship, the sum is £52 14s. 7d. and as between 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. the sum is £24 16s. 3d., making the total of £77 10s. 10d. The learned judge came to the conclusion that "loading" included the time occupied in bagging. In the course of his judgment, he said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 875) :

"In the case of the loading of a general cargo, time is, of necessity, taken in placing and stowing the cargo as it arrives in the hold. Often the delivery of cargo on board a vessel is slowed down because of the difficulty of stowing certain kinds of cargo, or of stowing it in a place particularly difficult of access, or by reason of its structure or some obstruction. I have never heard it suggested in such a case that, in assessing the time taken in loading for purposes of demurrage, an apportionment should take place (on some estimated basis, for accuracy would be impossible) between time taken in stowing and time taken in bringing the goods to the hold."

Towards the end of his judgment he said (ibid.) :

"In this case I find that loading was not completed until 3 p.m. on Oct. 17. The facts reveal that the actual loading took only one day, twelve hours and twenty minutes, and that the charterer was in default in not completing the loading within the lay days. To detain the vessel beyond the lay days was a breach of the contract by the charterer: see Aktieselskabet Reidar v. Arcos, Ltd. (1). He remained in default and without any protection under the charterparty until the loading was completed. The shipowners have, therefore, established all that is necessary for them to recover demurrage under the relevant clause of the charterparty."

The question is whether that is a right decision or not. Harris v. Best, Ryley & Co. (2) is the leading authority, if it may be called an authority, because I agree with counsel for the charterer that the passage relied on by SELLERS, J., which I am about to read, was not absolutely essential for the purpose of the decision of the case. It is a statement of the law and practice with reference to loading ships, made by that great master of commercial maritime law, LORD ESHER, M.R., as far back as 1892. Although that is fifty-six years ago, counsel for the charterer, with his immense knowledge of this branch of the law, was not able to refer us to any passage by any judge or text book writer or other legal authority which questioned the accuracy and good sense of what LORD ESHER there said (68 L.T. 77). I will read the passage in full because it is so important :

"What is the obligation created by the agreement 'to be loaded' ? Loading is a joint act of the shipper or charterer and of the shipowner ; neither of them is to do it alone, but it is to be the joint act of both. What is the obligation on each of them in that matter ? Each is to do his own part of the work, and to do whatever is reasonable to enable the other to do his part. This puts upon the shipper the obligation of bringing the cargo alongside the ship, and of doing a certain part of the loading. What is that part of the loading ? By universal practice the shipper has to bring the cargo alongside so as to enable the shipowner to load the ship within the time stipulated by the charterparty, and to lift that cargo to the rail of the ship. It is then the duty of the shipowner to be ready to take such cargo on board and to stow it in the vessel. The stowage of the cargo is the sole act of the shipowner. What is a reasonable course of action for both parties ? The shipper has all the lay days within which to bring his cargo to the ship, and, if he did not act reasonably, he might bring it all upon the last of those days ; to do so would be unreasonable ; he must act reasonably and bring the cargo alongside in sufficient time to enable the shipowner to do his part within the lay days."

That passage has been referred to with approval in the Court of Appeal by GREER, L.J., in National Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Sociedad Anonima Comercial de Exportacion y Importacion (Louis Dreyfus y Cia), Limitada (3). GREER, L.J., said (48 T.L.R. 328):

"As LORD ESHER pointed out in . . . Harris v. Best, Ryley & Co. (2): 'Loading is a joint act of the shipper or charterer and of the shipowner; neither of them is to do it alone, but it is to be the joint act of both. What is the obligation on each of them in the matter? Each is to do his own part of the work, and to do whatever is reasonable to enable the other to do his part' . . . In any event, the use of the winch, or any other method of loading adopted by the ship after the goods are brought by the shipper alongside, is part of the loading."

There is also a passage in CARVER'S CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA, 8th ed., p. 370, s. 250:

"The manner in which the goods are to be shipped is ascertained, so far as not expressly agreed upon, by reference to the usages of the place, and having regard to the regulations and laws there prevailing. The ordinary practice generally determines how, and by whom, the goods are to be taken alongside and put on board. The operation of loading a ship involves all that is required, i.e., stowing, and, semble, where necessary, lashing—to put the cargo in a condition in which it can be carried."

The authority for that particular passage is Svenssons (C. Wilh.) Travaruak-tiebolag v. Cliffe Steamship Co. (4), decided by WRIGHT, J. The question there was whether the loading of a particular ship had come to an end, it being a loading of a deck cargo. WRIGHT, J., said ([1932] 1 K.B. 494):

"I think that in a case like this, and, indeed, in most cases, the mere reception or dumping down of the cargo on the ship does not involve the completion of the loading, because I think the operation of loading involves all that is required to put the cargo in a condition in which it can be carried. In this case the operation of stowing the cargo was comparatively simple. The pit props came up from the water in the ship's slings and were slung on to the deck. Then the sling was released, but, before it was released, the sling was put in such a position that the props would fall in the proper direction—that is, lying fore and aft—and would more or less sink into their places. Some operation of stowing, however, was necessary in respect of each such sling—some props would not fall in the right position and would have to be straightened out, and the props generally would have to be arranged so that they would lie as closely as possible together with their round sides as neatly in contact as could be achieved. That was a small operation, no doubt, but it was done sling by sling before the next sling could come on board, and it had to be done in respect of the last load. It might only take one, two, three or four minutes in respect of each sling load, but it was, in my judgment, a necessary part of the operation of loading."

It seems to me that those authorities all indicate that the task of loading is a joint operation, that each party must do what is reasonable to enable the other to do his part, and that loading is not complete until the cargo is so placed in the ship that the ship can proceed on her voyage in safety. Looking at the present case, apart from authority, on principle, there seem to me to be two questions. First: Was the loading completed at 8.45 a.m.? To my mind, it certainly was not. The loading of grain continued after that time. It is true that it continued slowly, but it continued slowly because it had to be bagged. It would have been most unreasonable to have poured it in at a great speed, forming large mounds in the 'tween decks and making it difficult to bag it. The ship could not sail unless it was bagged. If it had not been bagged, I presume the charterer would have had to remove it. I am not at all sure that, strictly speaking, the regulations might not require that the cargo should be bagged before it was put in the 'tween decks. Perhaps, from a business point of view, that would be unreasonable, but the rule is clear that "all other grain in the 'tween decks must be in bags." Therefore, as regards the time, I think that there can be no doubt that the loading was not completed before 1 p.m.

- A The second question is : Was the loading and bagging completed later ? It is said on behalf of the charterer that by 1 p.m. he had completed his contract, had shipped all the wheat, and had nothing more to do. If one applies the test of what is reasonable in a case such as this, it seems to me unreasonable for the charterer to allow no time for the bagging. He ought to have put the cargo into the 'tween decks in sufficient time for the wheat there to be bagged before the five lay days had run out, but he did not do so. He acted reasonably at the time in dribbling it in, but it was impossible to dribble it in in such a way that the flow ended at the precise moment when the last bag was full. The fact that there was some cargo left over to be bagged when the full amount had been put into the ship seems to me to show that the loading had not been completed then. In my view, bagging was a part of loading. It was necessary for the safety of the ship. It was necessary to comply with the rules of the port warden, rules which the charterer agreed to comply with. For these reasons, I think that the judgment of the learned judge was right and this appeal should be dismissed.
- B
- C

COHEN, L.J. : I am of the same opinion. Counsel for the charterer relied on the cesser clause, which, so far as material, is in the following words :

- D "Vessel to have a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, demurrage or average. Charterer's liability under this charter to cease on cargo being shipped, except for payment of freight as per cl. 18."

Counsel for the charterer said that the object of that clause was to supply the charterer with a release co-extensive with the lien on the cargo except in so far as otherwise expressly provided. He said that that object would not be achieved if we adopted the construction placed by SELLERS, J., on the word "loaded," and gave it a different meaning to that given to the word "shipped." According to the construction adopted by SELLERS, J., of the word "loaded," demurrage might cover detention until completion of bagging and stowage, and, therefore, cover a period subsequent to the time at which the cargo was shipped and at which, accordingly, the release would operate.

- F That is true, but I doubt whether it follows that the lien and the release were not co-extensive. The charterer would, I think, get release from all demurrage, whether accruing on completion of shipment or accruing thereafter, and the lien would extend to all demurrage, whenever the liability for that demurrage arose. Be that as it may, that question does not really arise on the facts of this case, since the cesser clause only comes into operation when the bill of lading comes into force, and we have no evidence that a bill of lading was ever executed. Indeed, having regard to the fact that the Minister of Food was both shipper and consignee, it is highly unlikely that any effective bill of lading ever came into being. I do not think that the clause in question affords any reasonable guide to the meaning of the word "loaded" in other parts of the charterparty.
- G
- H

I agree so entirely with what has been said by my Lord and by SELLERS, J., in the court below on the meaning of the word "loaded" that I will only refer to one other short clause in the charterparty. In the early operative part of the charterparty I find this provision :

"Vessel to load under inspection of underwriters' agents, at her expense, and to comply with their rules, not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her cabin, tackle, apparel, provisions, fuel and furniture, and being so loaded shall therewith proceed to one safe port in the United Kingdom."

It seems to me plain that in that clause the expression "loaded" means not only shipped but stowed. Indeed, counsel for the charterer, perhaps unconsciously, adopted this construction when he relied on the words in the clause "at her expense" as imposing on the shipowner the obligation to pay for the bagging of the wheat in question, and I see no reason for giving a narrower meaning to the same word in the provisions in regard to demurrage. For these reasons, I entirely agree with the construction placed by SELLERS, J., and by my brother BUCKNILL, L.J., on the meaning of the word "loaded," and, in consequence, it seems to me that, having regard to the agreed facts stated in para. 9 of the statement of agreed facts, the shipowners were entitled to succeed and the judgment of SELLERS, J., must be affirmed. I need not read that paragraph, but I would point out that it expressly states: "Had the charterer or his agents had cargo available and desired to load it, there would have been time" within the lay days "to have completed the bagging" of the cargo to be carried in the 'tween decks. It seems to me necessarily to follow, once one accepts the meaning of the word "loaded" which was adopted, and, in my opinion, rightly adopted, by SELLERS, J., that the shipowners must succeed. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. I think it right to say a word or two on one aspect of the case. Counsel for the charterer raised a question as to the onus of proof, and submitted that it was not shown that the charterer was in default. It would be a matter for regret in a case of this kind, which affects other cases, if it fell to be decided on a question of onus. On examination, however, it appears to me that there is no substance in the point as to onus. The charterer has paid demurrage on the basis that he was in default. The clause in the charterparty is in these terms:

"Steamer to be loaded according to berth terms with customary berth dispatch, and if detained longer than 5 days, Sundays and holidays excepted, charterer to pay demurrage as per cl. 19 attached, provided such detention shall occur by default of charterer or his agents."

In para. 9 of the agreed statement of facts it is stated:

"Had the charterer or his agents had cargo available and desired to load it, there would have been time between 7 a.m. on Oct. 8, or 3.30 p.m. on Oct. 11, and 7 a.m. on Oct. 15, within which to have put it on board and to have completed the bagging of the portion to be carried in the 'tween decks required by the regulations to be bagged."

Those words alone show that the charterer was in default in that he had not provided cargo at the proper place within reasonable time. These words follow in para. 9 of the agreed statement of facts:

"The bagging of the wheat carried in bags in the 'tween decks was carried out by stevedores employed by the shipowners with all reasonable despatch and without any default by the shipowners or their stevedores, and the operation of bagging could not reasonably have been completed before 3 p.m. on Oct. 17."

That paragraph makes it quite clear (a) that the shipowners were not in default, and (b) that the charterer was at fault in that he did not provide the cargo at the time at which he ought to have done. The default of the charterer lay in not providing the cargo at the proper time and place. It was through that default that the detention occurred.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor (for the charterer); Stokes & Mitcalfe (for the shipowners).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re GREENE (deceased). GREENE v. GREENE AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), November 19, 23, December 7, 1948.]

Company—Shares—Transfer—Disposition on death—Article of association providing for automatic transfer of shares to director's widow on his death—Trust—Contract—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 63 (now Companies Act, 1948, s. 75).

On Aug. 20, 1942, following a resolution of the board of directors, an extraordinary general meeting of a private company passed a special resolution: "That the articles of association of the company be altered as follows:—(1) by adding to art. 8 the following sub-clause to be numbered (f), namely:—(f) Provided that sub-cl. (a) to (e) (inclusive) of this clause shall not apply in the case of a transfer or transmission of the share or shares of any male member of the present board of directors, that is to say R.J.F., C.A.G., H.M.J. and J.S.S., arising upon the death of any such director if such director leaves a wife him surviving, in which event the share or shares of such deceased director shall, notwithstanding any provision or direction made by such director in his lifetime as to the disposition of such share or shares upon his death to the contrary, be deemed to have passed upon the death of such director to such deceased director's wife and such wife shall be the only person recognised by the company as having any title to the share or shares and shall forthwith be registered as the holder of such share or shares in place of such deceased director . . ." On Jan. 20, 1945, C.A.G. died intestate, leaving him surviving his second wife, two children of his former marriage, and one child by his second wife. On Feb. 15, 1945, the board of directors of the company resolved that the widow be registered as the holder of the shares held by C.A.G., and the registration was made accordingly. On a summons to test the validity of the registration.

HELD: (i) sub-clause (f) was invalid as being in contravention of the Companies Act, 1929, s. 63, which provided that it should not be lawful for a company to register a transfer of shares unless a proper instrument of transfer had been delivered to the company, and, therefore, the registration was unlawful and the register ought to be rectified by registering the shares in the joint names of the personal representatives of C.A.G.

(ii) the resolutions passed in 1942 did not create a trust in favour of the widow, because the shares were in no way bound during C.A.G.'s lifetime, and for such a trust to take effect on death a testamentary document would be required.

(iii) the resolutions did not constitute a contract between R.J.F., C.A.G., H.M.J. and J.S.S. that, in consideration of a reciprocal promise by the others of them, each would dispose of his shares in favour of his widow, nor could the widow have enforced such a contract if there had been one.

[AS TO TRANSMISSION OF SHARES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 281, 282, para. 486; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 9, pp. 404-411, Nos. 2591-2643.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Strong v. Bird, (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 315; 43 L.J.Ch. 814; 30 L.T. 745; 25 Digest 538, 268.
- (2) Re James, [1935] Ch. 449; 104 L.J.Ch. 247; 153 L.T. 277; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Pink, [1912] 2 Ch. 528; 81 L.J.Ch. 753; 107 L.T. 241; 25 Digest 539, 270.
- (4) Welton v. Saffery, [1897] A.C. 299; 66 L.J.Ch. 362; 76 L.T. 505; 10 Digest 958, 6565.

(5) Re Flavell, (1883), 25 Ch.D. 89; 53 L.J.Ch. 185; 49 L.T. 690; 43 Digest 837, 2835.

(6) Re Davies, [1892] 3 Ch. 63; 61 L.J.Ch. 595; 67 L.T. 548; 25 Digest 312, 170.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the beneficial ownership of shares in a private company, and, in particular, to determine the validity of a provision in the articles of association of the company under which the shares of a deceased director were to be transmitted on death to the director's widow. HARMAN, J., held that the article was invalid as being contrary to the Companies Act, 1929, s. 63, and that the shares devolved under the deceased director's intestacy. The facts appear in the judgment.

Lightman for the plaintiff, one of the personal representatives of C.A.G., and a child of C.A.G.'s first marriage.

Lindner for the first defendant, the widow of C.A.G., who was also a personal representative of C.A.G., and for the fourth defendant, the company, and the directors of the company and their wives.

Parbury for the second defendant, a child of C.A.G.'s first marriage.

E. J. T. G. Bagshawe for the third defendant, the child of the second marriage.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 7. HARMAN, J., read the following judgment. Charles Alfred Greene, with whose affairs this summons is concerned, died on Jan. 20, 1945, intestate, leaving a widow, the first defendant, who was his second wife, and three children, namely, the plaintiff and the second defendant (children of his first wife) and the infant defendant, the only child of his second wife. These four persons are, therefore, between them entitled to the estate. He was the registered holder at his death of 949 "A" shares and 1 "B" share in a company, known as Faulkner, Greene & Co., Ltd. This company had been formed in 1934 by the intestate and the defendant, Reginald James Faulkner, with the object of taking over, as it did, a glass merchants' business, theretofore carried on in partnership by the intestate and Mr. Faulkner at 99, Red Cross Street, Borough, S.E. The share capital of the company was, and still is, £3,500, divided into 3,495 "A" shares and 5 "B" shares, all of £1 each. There is not any difference in the rights conferred by the "A" and the "B" shares. Formerly the holding of a "B" share was the necessary qualification of a director, but that was altered in 1943, since which time the holding of one share of either class is a good qualification for office. Other directors of and shareholders in the company whose interests may be affected by the question here to be determined are the defendants, Spreckley and James, and the remaining defendants are the wives of the defendants, Faulkner, Spreckley and James respectively.

The company was, and is, a private company and has articles adapting Table A of the Companies Act, 1929. Special article No. 7 provides that no person shall be recognised by the company as holding any share on any trust, and the company is not bound to recognise any equitable interest in any share or any other rights in respect of it except an absolute right in the registered holder. Special article No. 8 is of a usual character, giving members prior rights to purchase any shares which another member wishes to transfer. Clause 20 of Table A of the Companies Act, 1929, provides: "The legal personal representatives of a deceased sole holder of a share shall be the only persons recognised by the company as having any title to the share."

In 1942 a Mr. Purser, then a director of the company, died leaving his shares to his daughter, and this event led to a discussion between the surviving corporators, namely, the intestate and the defendants, James, Faulkner, and Spreckley, and the company's minute book bears the following record of a board meeting on May 27, 1942:

"It was proposed by Mr. Faulkner that the articles of association be altered to provide that, in the event of the death of any of the present board of directors, the shares held in their name shall be automatically transferred to their wives and that the wife or wives shall be automatically and immediately appointed to the board of directors and receive the same benefits as the other directors. This proposal was unanimously approved and agreed upon, and Mr. Faulkner instructed to call upon the company's solicitors and have the articles of association altered to embrace this decision."

A As a result, apparently, of this proposal, a special resolution was passed at an extraordinary general meeting held on Aug. 20, 1942, in the following terms:

"That the articles of association of the company be altered as follows:—

(1) by adding to art. 8 the following sub-clause to be numbered (f), namely:—(f) Provided that sub-cl. (a) to (e) (inclusive) of this clause shall not apply in the case of a transfer or transmission of the share or shares of any male member of the present board of directors, that is to say, Reginald James Faulkner, Charles Alfred Greene, Harold Magnus James and John Stanley Spreckley, arising upon the death of any such director if such director leaves a wife him surviving, in which event the share or shares of such deceased director shall, notwithstanding any provision or direction made by such director in his lifetime as to the disposition of such share or shares upon his death to the contrary, be deemed to have passed upon the death of such director to such deceased director's wife and such wife shall be the only person recognised by the company as having any title to the share or shares and shall forthwith be registered as the holder of such share or shares in place of such deceased director, and cls. 17, 18, 20 and 21 of Table A in the Companies Act, 1929, sched. I, shall not apply to the transfer or transmission of shares arising under this sub-cl. (f) in so far as they are not consistent with the provisions of this said sub-cl. (f)."

E On the death of the intestate it was resolved at a board meeting held on Feb. 15, 1945, that the intestate's widow, the first defendant, should be registered forthwith as the holder of the shares held by her husband. This was carried into effect, and she has been since, and is now, the registered holder of these shares, and claims to be the beneficial owner of them. The first question which arises is as to the validity of the article introduced by the special resolution of Aug. 20, 1942. Is it competent to a company by an article in this form to by-pass, so to speak, the personal representatives of a deceased holder of shares and to put them direct into the name of his widow? F In my judgment, it is not. Such an article is contrary to s. 63 of the Companies Act, 1929, (now s. 75 of the Companies Act, 1948) which provides:

"Notwithstanding anything in the articles of a company, it shall not be lawful for the company to register a transfer of shares in or debentures of the company unless a proper instrument of transfer has been delivered to the company: Provided that nothing in this section shall prejudice any power of the company to register as shareholder or debenture holder any person to whom the right to any shares in or debentures of the company has been transmitted by operation of law."

G I believe that the primary object of a section in this form, which first appeared H in the Act of 1928, was to scotch the then prevalent practice of providing for the oral transfer of shares to the great detriment of the Revenue, but, in my judgment, it applies to this or a similar case, for no proper instrument of transfer has been delivered, nor has the right to the shares been transmitted to the widow by operation of law. In my judgment, therefore, the registration of the widow was wrong and the register ought to be rectified accordingly by registering the shares in the joint names of the personal representatives, who are the plaintiff and the first defendant.

So far as the company is concerned, there is an end of the matter, for it is not bound to recognise any equitable interest. The first defendant, nevertheless, claims that, as between herself and the other beneficiaries under the intestacy, she is beneficially entitled to the shares, and to this claim I must now turn. The widow puts her claim in three ways. First, she says that there was an imperfect gift to her of the shares which was perfected when she obtained a grant of administration to the donor's estate on the principle of Strong v. Bird (1) as extended by Re James (2). I can deal shortly with this. There was, in my judgment, no gift at all here. The intestate remained throughout his life completely free to deal with the shares, and his marriage to the first defendant might have come to an end and he might have re-married, in which case she would clearly not be the person having any claim on them. Secondly, it is said that by the resolutions passed in 1942 a trust was created in favour of the first defendant. I cannot see that there was any trust here. Presumably, it must have been created by something tantamount to a declaration whereby the intestate constituted himself a trustee for someone. I have already pointed out that the shares in his hands during his lifetime were in no way bound, and that the first defendant might not have been his widow at his death. If it be said that this was a trust to take effect on the intestate's death in favour of such person (if any) as should then be his widow in respect of such shares (if any) as he should then hold, this was an attempt to make a gift in a way which can only be effected by a testamentary document: compare Re Pink (3) ([1912] 2 Ch. 536); and of such there is no trace here. Thirdly, the widow seeks to rest her claim on a contract and she points first to the Companies Act, 1929, s. 20, whereby the articles constitute a contract between the members. The answer to this is that such a contract could only be enforced by or through the company: Welton v. Saffery (4) ([1897] A.C. 315); and an article which is, as I have held, ultra vires the company clearly cannot be so enforced.

Next, it is said that the resolutions, or one of them, constituted a contract between the intestate and the defendants, Faulkner, Spreckley and James, that each of them would, in consideration of a reciprocal promise by the others of them, dispose of his shares (if he had any at his death) in favour of his widow (if he left one), and that this is a contract of which specific performance might be decreed. I do not find that there was any such contract, in fact, nor could the widow, who was no party to it, enforce it if there were. In truth, these four persons wished to benefit their respective wives, and were, apparently, advised that they could do so by means of the alteration of the articles which they in fact carried out. That alteration was ineffective, and it follows that their intentions were frustrated, but sympathy for the widow cannot induce the court to invent a contract which no one had a mind to make. I was pressed with two decisions—Re Flavell (5) and Re Davies (6)—which, it was said, showed that a man can by contract made in his lifetime create an obligation which will be enforced against his estate (at any rate, by his creditors, and, apparently, also by beneficiaries) by means of declaring his representatives trustees for the persons for whose benefit the contract was entered into. Each of those cases, however, concerns something which was not the testator's property in his lifetime, and it seems to me that they have no application to that which, till the moment of his death, was the dead man's absolute and unfettered property.

I, therefore, hold that these shares form part of the intestate's estate beneficially as well as legally and must devolve accordingly.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client out of the estate.

Solicitors: Tucker, Turner & Co. (for the plaintiff and the second and third defendants); Davidson, Doughty & Co. (for the remaining defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

GREEK GOVERNMENT v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT. THE ILISSOS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Cohen and Singleton, L.J.J.), December 8, 9, 1948.]

Charterparty—Time charter—Payment of hire—Suspension of hire clause—Hire not payable in respect of time lost owing to “deficiency of men . . . or other accident”—Refusal of officers and men to sail during war except in convoy.

A A clause in the charterparty of a ship, hired under a time charter, provided: “In the event of dry-docking or other necessary measures to maintain the efficiency of the vessel, deficiency of men or owners’ stores, breakdown of machinery, damage to hull or other accident, either hindering or preventing the working of the vessel and continuing for more than 24 consecutive hours, no hire to be paid in respect of any time lost thereby during the period in which the vessel is unable to perform the service immediately required.” An addendum to the clause, with a sidenote, “Deficiency of crew,” provided that “in the event of loss of time due solely to inability to get or to complete a crew,” full hire would be paid for the first 72 hours of such loss of time, and in certain cases, half hire for the next 72 hours. When the ship was due to sail from Newcastle, Australia, on Dec. 16, 1943, she was delayed for a week owing to the refusal of her officers and crew to sail except in convoy, and she was thus unable to perform the service immediately required, although numerically there was a full complement of officers and crew. The charterer contended that the delay was due to “deficiency of men” or “other accident” within the meaning of the suspension of hire clause, and that, therefore, he was not liable to pay hire for that period, or that the addendum applied and he was not liable to pay in full.

HELD: (i) the words “deficiency of men” in the suspension of hire clause meant numerical insufficiency and not deficiency of willingness in men to work.

(ii) the wilful refusal of the officers and crew to sail except in convoy was not an “accident” within the meaning of the clause.

Decision of SELLERS, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 904), affirmed.

[AS TO PAYMENT OF HIRE UNDER TIME CHARTER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 308-312, para. 500; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 357-363, Nos. 2060-2106.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Mendl & Co. v. Ropner & Co., [1913] 1 K.B. 27; 82 L.J.K.B. 75; sub nom. Meral & Co. v. Ropner & Co., 107 L.T. 699; 41 Digest 431, 2708.
- (2) Radcliffe & Co. v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, (1918), 24 Com. Cas. 40; 41 Digest 361, 2096.
- (3) Burton v. English, (1883), 12 Q.B.D. 218; 53 L.J.Q.B. 133; 49 L.T. 768; 41 Digest 596, 4218.

APPEAL by the charterer from a judgment of SELLERS, J., dated Apr. 23, 1948, (reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 904) on a Special Case stated by an arbitrator under the Arbitration Acts, 1889-1934. The Greek Government, as disponent owners of the ship Ilissos, claimed from the charterer, the Minister of Transport, hire for the vessel under a time charter for the period Dec. 16 to Dec. 23, 1943, while the vessel was detained at Newcastle, Australia, because the officers and crew refused to sail except in convoy. The charterer claimed that under a suspension of hire clause in the charterparty he was relieved from his obligation to pay hire during that period because the inability to sail was due to a “deficiency of men . . . or other accident” within the meaning of the charterparty, and he counterclaimed to recover a sum paid by him as hire. The arbitrator made his award in favour of the owners, and was upheld by SELLERS, J., and by the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

E. W. Roskill for the charterer.

Sir Robert Aske, K.C., and Mocatta for the shipowners.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : The point raised is one very simple to state. It is : what is the meaning to be attached to the words "deficiency of men or owners' stores" in a charterparty which was made on Aug. 29, 1941, between the claimants, the Royal Greek Government, as disponent owners of the steamship Ilissos, and the Minister of Transport as charterer. A

The dispute arises in the following circumstances which are set out in para. 2 of the Special Case :

"On Dec. 16, 1943, while the vessel was subject to the charter and was ready to sail from Newcastle, Australia, her officers and crew refused to sail except in convoy, and because of this refusal the vessel remained in Newcastle until, on Dec. 23, 1943, the officers and crew agreed to proceed without convoy. There was at all material times a full complement numerically of officers and crew, but they were not willing to work, and consequently the vessel was unable to perform the service immediately required." B C

Then the learned arbitrator sets out the details of the times lost. Clause 11A in the charterparty is :

"In the event of drydocking or other necessary measures to maintain the efficiency of the vessel, deficiency of men or owners' stores, breakdown of machinery, damage to hull or other accident, either hindering or preventing the working of the vessel and continuing for more than 24 consecutive hours, no hire to be paid in respect of any time lost thereby during the period in which the vessel is unable to perform the service immediately required." D

The exact period of delay at Newcastle was 6 days, 7 hours, and 32 minutes, and, therefore, if the facts which I have stated amounted to a deficiency of men, then no hire was to be paid by the charterer in respect of that time. Clause 34, the side note of which is "Deficiency of crew," provides : E

"Addendum to cl. 11A. Notwithstanding the provisions of cl. 11A it is agreed that in the event of loss of time due solely to inability to get or to complete a crew (a) full hire will be paid for the first 72 hours of such loss of time and (b) in the event of such loss of time taking place at a port in the United Kingdom or in ports in the British Empire overseas and continuing beyond such 72 hours, half hire will be paid for a further period of 72 hours, but thereafter hire shall cease until the vessel is again ready to resume her service. Owners shall not be entitled to claim hire under this clause more than once during every round voyage or any period of 3 calendar months, whichever period be the shorter." F G

Assuming that I have understood the figures aright, if the owners are entitled to hire under cl. 34, the amount due would be £964 16s. 1d. On the other hand, if neither cl. 11A nor cl. 34 apply, and they are entitled to their full hire, it would amount to £1,353 3s. 7d. H

SELLERS, J., came to the conclusion that the facts did not bring cl. 11A into operation. On that point he said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 906) :

"The inability of officers and men to work through sickness or injury would, in my view, amount to 'deficiency of men' and the clause would apply if the working of the vessel was hindered or prevented thereby, and it would make no difference if the incapacitated members of the crew were in the ship or in hospital on shore. Physical inability to work is different in quality and character from refusal to work when full capacity to work exists. In my opinion, the provision 'deficiency of men' in the suspension of hire clause is directed to putting the vessel off hire when a complement of officers and crew for working the ship is not available. Here there was no failure in the complement. The complete crew was present in the ship and able to work, but, for the time being, they were unwilling to take the ship to sea, except in convoy. On these facts the learned arbitrator has found that there was not at any material time a 'deficiency of men.' I am of opinion that his decision was right in law."

The question we have to decide is whether that decision of the learned judge is right. Counsel for the charterer, in his careful and interesting argument, has put forward certain cogent reasons to the contrary, but, although at one time I confess that they appeared to me to be very attractive, after hearing counsel for the shipowners and reconsidering the whole matter, I think the learned judge was right. First of all, there is no doubt that the word "deficiency" has a variety of dictionary meanings. The question is what meaning are we to give to the word in this document. I do not think I can do better than cite this passage in SCRUTTON ON CHARTERPARTIES AND BILLS OF LADING, 15th ed., art. 6:

"The construction to be given to charters and bills of lading is not an unnecessarily strict one, but such a one as with reference to the context and the object of the contract will best effectuate the obvious and expressed intent of the parties. They are to be construed according to their sense and meaning, as collected in the first place from the terms used understood in their plain, ordinary and popular sense."

Those words were cited with approval by BRAY, J., in Mendl & Co. v. Ropner & Co. (1) ([1913] 1 K.B. 32). BRAY, J., went on to say (ibid.):

"Being commercial documents the terms used must be understood in a business and practical sense."

Looking at the words as they stand, and endeavouring to give them a meaning which business men, as ordinary reasonable beings, would give them, I think that "deficiency of men" means deficiency of men and not deficiency of willingness in men to work. There is no doubt that the men on board this ship amounted to a full complement of officers and crew. That is what the owners agreed to provide, and they provided them. By a mere change of mind these men would have been competent at once to work the ship. It was not even as though they were sick. I am not sure that the learned judge is right when he says that sickness might amount to deficiency, but we have not to decide that point because these men were not sick. They were able and competent to do their work, and, therefore, I think, giving the words "deficiency of men" their ordinary sense, the facts in this case do not come within those words.

Then one has to look at the general lay-out, if I may use that expression, of the charterparty. As counsel for the shipowners pointed out, the cardinal rule in interpreting such a charterparty as this is that the charterer will pay hire for the use of the ship unless he can bring himself clearly within an exception. If there is a doubt what the words mean, those words must be read in favour of the owners because the charterers are attempting to cut down the owners' right to hire. In that connection, I attach considerable importance to the words in cl. 34, which I have already quoted. To illustrate the way in which the courts interpret rather strictly against the charterers words of this kind, which cut down the liability to pay hire, one may refer to Radcliffe & Co. v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique (2), where the words concerned were very much like these—"loss of time from deficiency of men or stores." In that case there was a deficiency of men because the gunners who had to man the guns to protect the ship against enemy submarines were not available. It was said that that amounted to a deficiency of men. BANKES, L.J., said (24 Com. Cas. 44) :

"And as for the alleged deficiency of men, I think it is clear from other clauses in the charterparty that the word 'men' is only intended to include officers, seamen, firemen, or others who would properly constitute part of the crew."

I think the word "men" in cl. 11A must be read as meaning "officers and crew." Clause 34 provides :

"Addendum to cl. 11A. Notwithstanding the provisions of cl. 11A it is agreed that in the event of loss of time due solely to inability to get or to complete a crew full hire will be paid . . ."

I think it is a very fair reading of those two clauses to say that they refer to a deficiency of men "due to inability to get or to complete the crew." In other words, the clauses deal with numbers and not with willingness.

That, I think, disposes of the point. It does not seem helpful to go through all the different clauses in this charterparty. The owners have to appoint officers and pay them their wages. Clause 9 provides that the master is to prosecute all voyages with the utmost despatch and to render customary assistance with the vessel's crew. In dealing with the bills of lading, the charterparty says :

"If the charterer has reason to be dissatisfied with the conduct of the master, officers, or engineers, the owners on receiving particulars of the complaint [undertake] promptly to investigate the matter, and, if necessary, and practicable, to make a change in the appointments."

It does not say that, if the conduct of the master, officers, or engineers causes delay or disuse of the ship, the ship is to come off hire. It seems to me that, if counsel for the charterer was right in his interpretation of this clause, it might well happen that during a voyage war was declared and the crew declined to continue the voyage on the ground that it was dangerous, and that must be taken to be a case of "deficiency of men" although the crew were in the ship and it was only their unwillingness to work which caused delay or loss. One must read these words fairly and not stretch them beyond their plain meaning.

The only other question is whether this is "an accident" within cl. 11A. SELLERS, J., dealt with that matter in this way ([1948] 1 All E.R. 907) :

"The wilful refusal of the officers and crew to sail except in convoy does not appear to me to have any element of 'accident.' It is not an accident and it in no way resembles any of the other enumerated events which would serve to put the vessel off hire."

I agree with that so completely that I do not think there is anything I need add. For these reasons, in my opinion, this appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J. : I am of the same opinion. Despite the able and ingenious argument of counsel for the charterer. I agree with the learned judge that in the context in which it appears in this charterparty "deficiency" means numerical insufficiency. Counsel invited us to say that the word imported a qualitative as well as a quantitative element. He cited definitions from the OXFORD DICTIONARY which show that the meaning he argued for is a possible meaning of the word, but I agree with counsel for the shipowners that "deficiency" is normally used in contrast to "sufficiency" and that, if it were desired to introduce the qualitative element, the natural contrast would be between efficiency and inefficiency. I think I should have come to this conclusion from the consideration of cl. 11A by itself, but, in my opinion, that view is reinforced by a reference to cl. 34, where the side note to the clause is "Deficiency of crew," and the operative words, so far as material, are :

"Addendum to cl. 11A. Notwithstanding the provisions of cl. 11A it is agreed that in the event of loss of time due solely to inability to get or to complete a crew (a) full hire will be paid for the first 72 hours of such loss of time . . ."

I think the natural meaning of the words in the body of the clause suggests that the clause is dealing only with numerical deficiency in the numbers of the crew. Reading it with the marginal note, it seems to me to throw light on the sense in which the word "deficiency" is used in this charterparty. Be it remembered that the clause is described as "Addendum to cl. 11A." I cannot believe that "deficiency of crew" in the marginal note to cl. 34 is used in a different sense to "deficiency of men" in cl. 11A. I will add that, if there is an ambiguity, the ambiguity appears in an exceptions clause, and the charterer must show that he is clearly within the exceptions clause. I think the passages in Burton v. English (3), to which counsel for the shipowners referred, are in point. The first passage is from the judgment of BRETT, M.R., where with regard to a clause in a charterparty that "the steamer shall be provided with a deck load required at full freight, but at merchant's risk," he said (12 Q.B.D. 220):

"The stipulation is in favour of the shipowners, and is in restriction of their liability under their contract to carry. The general rule is that where there is any doubt as to the construction of any stipulation in a contract, one ought to construe it strictly against the party in whose favour it has been made."

Finally, at the end of the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., appears this passage (ibid., 224):

"But still, what is the sound principle to apply? Why, it is that those who wish to make exceptions in their own favour, and by which they are to be relieved from the ordinary laws of the sea, ought to do so in clear words; and on that principle I think this case ought to be decided, and my judgment goes upon the basis that the terms used here are not clear enough to absolve the shipowners."

That being so, in my opinion, the first argument of counsel for the charterer fails.

So far as the alternative argument based on the words "or other accident" is concerned, I do not desire to add anything to the observations of the learned judge in the court below which have been approved by BUCKNILL, L.J. In conclusion, I would only add this. Supposing I had been prepared to accept the argument that "deficiency of men" contained the qualitative element which counsel desires to import into it, as well as a quantitative element, I should still have felt a difficulty in giving a different effect to a somewhat similar phrase, "Deficiency of crew", in the marginal note to cl. 34. I think it would then have been necessary to have read cl. 34 as if after the word "crew" appears the words "willing to act."

SINGLETON L.J.: I agree that this appeal should be dismissed, and I do not wish to add anything to that which has been said by my Lords.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Transport, the charterer); Holman, Fenwick & Willan (for the Royal Greek Government, the shipowners).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KAIN v. NORFOLK AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), December 7, 8, 1948.]

Easement—Right of way—Right “to go pass and re-pass” over way “at all times hereafter with or without horses carts and agricultural machines”—Grant made in 1919—Use of road by 3-ton motor lorries.

Easement—Right to take water from pond—Right of owner of pond to clean pond.

By a conveyance, dated Feb. 13, 1919, N., the purchaser, was granted rights of way and water over adjoining land retained by the vendor, in the following terms: “a right . . . at all times hereafter with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements to go pass and re-pass over and along” a certain strip of land leading from the dominant tenement to the highway, “and also to take water from and to water horses sheep and cattle at the pond . . . but the vendor does not guarantee a supply of water in the . . . pond.” At the time of the grant the dominant tenement was mainly agricultural land. By a conveyance, dated May 10, 1945, the servient tenement was sold to K., subject to N.’s rights of way and water. In September, 1946, K. removed a wall of the pond in order to clean it, as it was silted up and full of rubbish, and he failed to replace the wall until after writ issued. On Apr. 26, 1947, N. sold to E.B., Ltd., a large quantity of sand on his land, and to remove this sand E.B., Ltd., employed convoys of 6 to 8 three-ton motor lorries which passed daily up and down the way which was the subject of the grant. In an action brought by K. against N. and E.B., Ltd., it was contended by K. that the use of the way by motor lorries was an excessive user. In a counter-claim by N. it was contended that K. had interfered with N.’s easement of water by wrongfully draining the pond:—

HELD: (i) on the true construction of the grant of the right of way, a “cart” was a vehicle adapted to carry materials and goods and the particular mode of propulsion of the cart was immaterial, and, therefore, no excessive user of the way was involved in its use by E.B., Ltd., as licensees of K., as a way for carting sand from the dominant tenement by means of motor lorries.

A.-G. v. Hodgson ([1922] 2 Ch. 429; 127 L.T. 329), applied.

(ii) as the owner of the pond, K. was entitled to drain and clean it, but he was at fault in not replacing the wall after the pond had been cleaned.

[AS TO RIGHT OF WAY UNDER EXPRESS GRANT, see HALSBURY, Hails-ham Edn., Vol. 11, pp. 324-326, paras. 575-577; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 19, pp. 107-109, Nos. 683-688.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) White v. Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, Ltd., [1913] 1 Ch. 113; affd., (1913), 84 L.J.Ch. 938; 110 L.T. 209; 19 Digest 114, 738.
- (2) Taylor v. Goodwin, (1879), 4 Q.B.D. 228; 48 L.J.M.C. 104; 40 L.T. 458; 43 J.P. 653; 26 Digest 438, 1553.
- (3) Danby v. Hunter, (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 20; 49 L.J.M.C. 15; 41 L.T. 622; 44 J.P. 283; 26 Digest 438, 1554.
- (4) A.-G. v. Hodgson, [1922] 2 Ch. 429; 91 L.J.Ch. 426; 127 L.T. 329; 87 J.P. 121; 36 Digest 250, 30.
- (5) Re Hall, (1912), 107 L.T. 196; 44 Digest 736, 5905.
- (6) Re Ashburnham, (1912), 107 L.T. 601; 44 Digest, 648, 4875.
- (7) Re White, [1916] 1 Ch. 172; 85 L.J.Ch. 368; 114 L.T. 353; 44 Digest 714, 5625.
- (8) Re Fortlage, (1916), 60 Sol. Jo. 527; 44 Digest 735, 5900.
- (9) Lock v. Abercester, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 562; [1939] Ch. 861; 108 L.J.Ch. 328; 161 L.T. 264; Digest Supp.

(10) Cannon v. Villars, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 415; 47 L.J.Ch. 597; 38 L.T. 939; 42 J.P. 516; 19 Digest 108, 685.

ACTION by the owner of a servient tenement alleging excessive user of a right of way by the owner of the dominant tenement and his licensees.

By an express grant the dominant owner had the right to use a certain way "with or without horses carts and agricultural machines," and the servient owner contended that the user of the way by 3-ton motor lorries was in excess of the terms of the grant. The dominant owner brought a counterclaim alleging that the servient owner had interfered with an easement of water to which the dominant owner was entitled. JENKINS, J., held (a) that there had been no excessive user of the right of way, and (b) that the dominant owner was entitled to nominal damages on the counterclaim. The facts appear in the judgment.

Lightman for the plaintiff (the servient owner).

Milner Holland, K.C., and Morgan Blake for the defendants (the dominant owner and his licensees).

JENKINS, J.: The plaintiff, Mr. Colin Howell Kain, is the owner of a house, outbuildings and garden grounds known as the Old Rectory, Bradwell, in Essex. The first defendant, Mr. Albert Arthur Norfolk, owns adjoining land amounting in area to some 30 acres. The whole of the land, i.e., the plaintiff's and the first defendant's land, was formerly comprised in the rectory and glebe land of the parish, and they both derived title from the rector for the time being on the respective dates of the conveyances to them. The action concerns the alleged excessive user by the first defendant and by the second defendants, E. Baker (Hauliers), Ltd., as the first defendant's licensees, of a right of way to which the first defendant is admittedly entitled by express grant under the conveyance to him. The right of way is granted in terms to which I shall have to refer presently, and it is said that on the facts the user complained of was in excess of the terms of the grant. In addition to the road-way alleged to be excessively used, there is on the plaintiff's land a pond, and the conveyance to the first defendant gave him a right to take water from, and to water his beasts at, the pond. There is a counterclaim by the first defendant that the plaintiff has interfered with that easement of water.

The conveyance of the first defendant's property to him contains the grants of the rights in dispute and the case must turn very largely on the construction of the material parts of it. It is a conveyance dated Feb. 13, 1919, made by the then rector of the first part, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of the second part, the patron of the living of the third part, and the first defendant of the fourth part, of:

"All those pieces or parcels of land (part of the glebe lands belonging to the said benefice) with the barn yards stable sheds and out buildings thereto belonging situate in the parish of Bradwell aforesaid, and containing by admeasurement 31 acres 2 roods 22 perches or thereabouts and now in the tenure or occupation of Hugh Webster which said hereditaments are more particularly described in the schedule hereunder written and for the better identification thereof delineated with the dimensions and abutments thereof on the plan drawn hereon and thereon coloured pink and green."

In the schedule the parcels are set out, with their respective quantities totalling the 31 acres, 2 roods and 22 perches, and consisting of various acreages of arable land, some plantation and some pasture, and some buildings and yards, the character of the buildings being, according to the schedule description of them, clearly agricultural. Then comes the grant of the right of way which has given rise to this litigation:

"Together with a right for the purchaser his heirs executors and assigns and his and their tenants being owners or occupiers of the hereditament hereby conveyed at all times hereafter with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements to go pass and re-pass over and along the strip of land near the said rectory to and from the hereditaments hereby conveyed from and to the highway there which strip of land is delineated upon the said plan and therein coloured yellow upon contributing a fair proportion towards the upkeep and maintenance of the roadway upon the said strip of land."

A

Immediately after that grant comes the grant of the right of water, which is the subject of the counterclaim and is in these terms :

"And also to take water from and to water horses sheep and cattle at the pond also delineated upon the said plan and therein marked 'pond' and coloured blue but the vendor does not guarantee a supply of water in the said pond."

B

It will be convenient if I refer also at this stage to certain rights of way which were excepted and reserved to the vendor as the form of those excepted rights has been relied on as throwing some light on the scope to be attributed to the right of way granted. Those exceptions are : "Except and reserved to the vendor and his successors" and so on, certain pieces of ground :

C

"And also a right for the vendor and his successors and his and their tenants being owners or occupiers of the said rectory at all times hereafter without horses carriages or carts to go pass and re-pass over the footpath lying between the points marked with the letters A and B upon the said plan and thereon coloured green and also with or without horses carts and carriages to go pass and re-pass over and along the strips of land lying between the points marked with the letters A, C, and D upon the said plan to and from the said coachhouse and garden from and to the said rectory which strips of land are delineated upon the said plan and therein also coloured green."

D

It is to be noted that, in these excepted rights of way, in the one case the way is to be "without horses carriages or carts" and, in the other case, it is to be "with or without horses carts and carriages," whereas the expression used in the granted right of way is "with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements," there being no reference to carriages.

E

In 1919, or shortly thereafter, the first defendant put his land down mainly to grass, and it was used for grazing until about 1939, when, I assume, owing to the war and the consequent change in agricultural policy, most of it was ploughed up. After it was ploughed, the pond ceased to be of such great interest as it had been while the land was used for pasture. In 1937 the first defendant leased the right to take sand and gravel from the property to a company, called Alresford Sand and Ballast Co., for a period of 7 years, expiring, therefore, in 1944. That company seems to have carried on its business on a large scale and it made very considerable excavations on the first defendant's property and carried away the gravel and sand. At the end of the term there was on the first defendant's property a large quantity of sand which had been won by Alresford Sand and Ballast Co., Ltd., but not carried away by them. The first defendant bought that sand from Alresford Sand and Ballast Co., and from 1945 or so onwards he sold it to purchasers who came and took it away in vehicles. On Apr. 26, 1947, the first defendant sold the rest of the sand on the ground to E. Baker (Hauliers), Ltd., the second defendants, and it is really the user of the way by the second defendants which has given rise to the present action.

F

G

H

The plaintiff first came to the Old Rectory in 1943, or thereabouts, as a tenant. He decided to buy the property and it was conveyed to him by a conveyance dated May 10, 1945. I do not think I need refer to anything in that conveyance in detail except to say that there were these exceptions corresponding to the rights of way and water which had been granted in the first conveyance to the first defendant, subject to the right of the first defendant :

A “ . . . his heirs executors administrators and assigns . . . being owners or occupiers of the adjoining property on the west side of the property hereby conveyed (a) at all times with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements to go pass and re-pass to and from the said adjoining property over and along the strip of land delineated on the said plan and thereon coloured yellow upon the said Albert Arthur Norfolk his heirs executors administrators and assigns contributing a fair proportion towards the upkeep and maintenance of the roadway upon the said strip of land (b) to take water from and to water horses sheep and cattle at the pond also delineated upon the said plan and thereon marked ‘pond’ and coloured blue.”

B It will be seen, therefore, that the plaintiff first came on the scene as tenant when Alresford Sand and Ballast Co.’s lease was nearing an end, and it had come to an end the year before he actually bought the property. He said in C his evidence that following the termination of that lease, various vehicles came to take sand, but there was no user of the way in question of which he felt inclined to complain until the second defendants began to take away the rest of the sand. The user by the second defendants, i.e., the user of which he complains, amounted to what he described as a convoy of four, six or eight lorries coming every day including Sundays. His evidence on this point is not in dispute. D An agreed plan has been prepared showing the relative positions of the plaintiff’s and the first defendant’s property, and that shows the way in yellow. It runs from the southern end of the eastern boundary of the first defendant’s land over the plaintiff’s land, skirting the pond. The pond lies between the way and the southern boundary of the plaintiff’s property. The way goes past the pond, which is immediately to the south of it, and joins the drive going up to the rectory door. That drive runs northwestward to the Old Rectory house. E After that junction the way takes a turn to the southeast and so into the road. The inconvenience to the plaintiff of the use of this way by lorries is increased by the fact that the way joins the drive to the Old Rectory, so that the first part of the way proceeding from the main road is the plaintiff’s approach to his house. He has young children, and he says that the risk of there being F lorries coming along this road is a source of anxiety. He also says that the lorries wear the road and make pot holes on it, and it becomes rough and disagreeable to go over, especially with children. I mention those matters because at one stage it was suggested on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiff’s objection to the user of the way by these three-ton sand lorries had something fanciful about it. I do not agree. I see nothing unreasonable in G the plaintiff wishing to prevent the use of this way by three-ton lorries if he is entitled to prevent it. There is no doubt that the use of the road by lorries of this size imposes a larger burden on the plaintiff’s property than would be imposed if, as the plaintiff contends, the use of the way is limited to horse-drawn vehicles as opposed to motor vehicles.

H I have now stated all the relevant facts with regard to the claim which relates simply to the question of the scope of this right of way. It is a right of way depending on an express grant and, therefore, its extent in the modes of user it permits must be determined by the construction of the document granting it, i.e., the conveyance of 1919 to the first defendant. The document must, of course, be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Counsel for the plaintiff relies on the fact that at the date of the grant the dominant tenement, i.e., the land conveyed to the first defendant, was agricultural land. That is a circumstance which it is perfectly legitimate to take into account. He does not contend that one may infer from the fact that the dominant tenement was then agricultural land a limitation of the user to purposes connected with the use of the dominant tenement as agricultural land. He expressly disclaimed that contention, and, in my view, he was right in doing so having regard to the law as laid down in White v. Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, Ltd. (1), the headnote to which states :

"A right of way granted for general purposes is not to be restricted to access to the land merely for such purposes as were reasonably required at the date of the grant ; therefore a right of way for general purposes to a private dwelling-house is not affected by the house being turned into a hotel." A

But, says counsel for the plaintiff, the mode in which the dominant tenement was used at the date of the grant is a matter to be taken into account in resolving any doubt as to the modes of user permitted. He says that, bearing in mind that the land was agricultural land, a right to pass "with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements" should be construed as meaning horse-drawn carts of the kind one expects to see going up and down a farm road and agricultural machines and implements. He uses the character of the dominant tenement as an aid to the construction of the mode of user, but his main argument turns on the meaning of the word "carts." He says with force that by a "cart" anyone means a handcart or a cart drawn by a horse or by some kind of draught animal. No one, he says, has ever heard of a "motor cart," and he submits that his contention that "cart" was used in the ordinary sense is reinforced by the circumstance that the land at the time was agricultural land. He contrasts with the word "carts" the word "carriages," which twice appears in the excepted rights of way. He says that "carriage" is a far wider word, and he has cited to me Taylor v. Goodwin (2) as authority for the proposition that even a bicycle is a carriage. In contrast to that he has referred me to Danby v. Hunter (3) which related to the use of a cart on the highway without the owner's name being painted thereon, as required by the Highway Act, 1835, s. 76. The cart in question was a light spring cart with two wheels, and it was : B C D E

"Held, that the 'cart or carriage' contemplated by the Highway Act, 1835, s. 76, was 'ejusdem generis' with a waggon, and that this was not such a cart, and that the magistrates were therefore right."

That case is far removed from the present case, as, indeed, is Taylor v. Goodwin (2), but it illustrates the proposition that "cart" is a word with a more restricted meaning than carriage. Counsel for the plaintiff further relied strongly on the one particular surrounding circumstance, if one may so term it, viz., the date of the conveyance to the first defendant being Feb. 13, 1919. He said that at that date motor transport was in general use and everyone knew about it, and he urged me to hold that it is impossible when one is considering a deed dated in 1919 to regard such an expression as "with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements" as including motor lorries, because, if the grantor had had motor lorries in mind, he would have expressly mentioned them. F G

By way of contrast, counsel for the plaintiff referred me to A.-G. v. Hodgson (4) where it was considered whether a right of carriage, horse and footway through a certain park, such right having been granted between 1853 and 1861, extended to motor cars. The decision was : H

"... that the right of carriage way was not restricted to carriages impelled by any particular kind of traction, and that a motor car was within the meaning of the grant . . ."

PETERSON, J., in his judgment, said ([1922] 2 Ch. 437) :

A “The plaintiffs’ first contention was that the conveyance to Mr. Milnes did not grant a right of way for motor vehicles; that the right was confined to carriages to which was applied the kind of traction known in 1861. In support of this argument reference was made to various cases, such as Re Hall (5); Re Ashburnham (6); Re White (7) and Re Fort-lage (8). These were cases in which the court in construing wills came to the conclusion that, having regard to the context, the word ‘carriage’ did not include a motor car. But authorities of this kind have not any bearing on the present case. The question which I have to consider is what is meant by a carriage way in the conveyance of 1861. The right which was granted was a right to pass along the roads on foot or on horse or in carriages. There is not, I think, anything in the deed which shows that the right of carriage way is restricted to carriages which are impelled by any particular kind of traction; nor is there in my opinion any ground for saying that the word ‘carriage’ ought to be restricted to a carriage drawn by horses. A motor car, is, I think, a carriage within the meaning of this grant.”

C Counsel for the plaintiff sought to distinguish that decision on the following grounds: (i) that “carriage” is a far wider word than “cart” and a motor car can be properly called a carriage, i.e., a “motor carriage”; (ii) that the document there in question was dated long before the date of motor cars; and (iii) that the learned judge was there considering what was called a right of carriage way, which might well be a different thing from a right of passing or re-passing with or without a carriage, and, certainly, an entirely different thing from a right of passing or re-passing with or without a cart.

D Counsel for the plaintiff also cited Lock v. Abercester, Ltd. (9) in which BENNETT, J., had to consider the fact of the change over from horse to mechanical transport in a case of a way claimed by prescription. The headnote is:

E “Where proof is given of the user of a way by carriages drawn by horses for the required period, so as to establish the right to an easement for a carriage-way, the right so acquired is one which enables the owner of the dominant tenement to use the way with mechanically propelled vehicles.”

F It does not seem to me that that decision has any bearing on the present case, as in the present case one has to find out what the meaning is of the words of an express grant of a right of way exercisable in certain modes. The decision to the effect that user by horse-drawn carriages prescribes for use by mechanical transport, in my view, does not throw any light on this matter. On the other hand, counsel for the defendants says that this is a right of way for all purposes. He says, and I think he is supported by authority, that a right to the grantee of property “at all times hereafter” “to go pass and re-pass over and along” a certain way, without any reference to horses, carriages, carts or anything else, will, per se, unelaborated as it is, give a right of way for all purposes, i.e., a right to pass with vehicles as well as on foot, provided that the way to which the grant refers is a way suitable at the date of the grant for use by vehicles. I think that accords with the statement of the law contained in the judgment of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Cannon v. Villars (10). Therefore, says counsel for the defendants, one starts with that which would be sufficient in itself to give a right of way for all purposes, but superadded to that are certain explanatory notes, “with or without horses carts and agricultural machines and implements.” That, according to the argument, is intended, not to limit the general right, but merely to illustrate, not necessarily exhaustively, the various modes whereby it is contemplated that the right may be exercised. Counsel for the defendants accepts the difference between the particular modes mentioned in the grant of the way and the particular modes mentioned in the reservation of ways by saying that in the former case the land was at the date of the grant agricultural, and, therefore horses, carts, agricultural machines and implements were the kinds of things one would expect to be the typical sort of traffic on it, whereas, on the other hand, the ways under consideration when one comes to the exception are ways connected with a private house where one might expect to find carriages. Counsel for the defendants further contends that, whether his previous contention is right or not, the word "carts" in this context should not be restricted to carts drawn by horses. He admits that the word "cart" is not a word apt in itself to describe a motor vehicle. For some reason or other, although the word "lorry," for instance, which was originally a word descriptive of a certain kind of horse drawn vehicle, was adapted for use in connection with motor vehicles, and for a time the word "carriage" was so used in the old fashioned expression "horseless carriage," the word "cart" has never, if I may use the expression, been mechanised. Counsel for the defendants admits all that, but he says that, nevertheless, in this context one should not construe the reference to carts as excluding, if I may so describe them, carts propelled by mechanical means, or, in other words, either carts drawn behind a separate mechanical tractor or mechanical horse or carts propelled by a power unit carried on their own frame or chassis.

In my judgment, the argument of counsel for the defendants on this point should prevail. It is unnecessary for me to decide that this is a right of way for all purposes. I propose to limit myself to the question whether the use of this way by motor lorries is an excessive user. In my judgment, it is not. I think that a reasonable construction should be placed on this grant, and that it should be construed as meaning that the grantee, his executors, assigns and so forth, and tenants can pass and re-pass over the way either on foot or with vehicles in the nature of carts or with agricultural machines or implements. A cart for this purpose, in my judgment, is primarily a vehicle adapted to carry materials, goods, and so forth, possibly in contradistinction to a vehicle adapted for carrying passengers, and I do not think the particular mode of propulsion of the cart or vehicle is for the present purpose of any materiality. I think I can derive assistance from the passage I have read from the judgment of PETERSON, J., in A.-G. v. Hodgson (4). To hold the contrary would, as it seems to me, produce an absurd result which is not to be imputed to the parties. If counsel for the plaintiff is right, the way would be available for a horse-drawn cart or lorry or waggon, however large, but would not be available for a motor van, however small. I cannot impute to the parties the intention of making the mode of propulsion the criterion. I think that what is granted is in substance a right of way including the carting of loads, i.e., including the right of carting things along the way, as well as leading horses along the way, and as well as bringing agricultural implements and machines along the way.

That being the construction I place on the grant, and in view of the admission—in my view, rightly made—by counsel for the plaintiff to the effect that the user of the way was not to be limited to purposes connected with the dominant tenement as agricultural lands, it follows, in my judgment, that no excessive user of the way is involved in its use by the second defendants as licensees of the first defendant as a way for carting sand from the dominant tenement by three-ton lorries, and, that being the excessive user complained of, it follows that the case of excessive user has not been made out, with the result that the action fails and must be dismissed with costs.

That leaves the question of the counterclaim concerning the alleged interference with the first defendant's right to take water from and water horses, sheep and cattle at the pond. The facts about the pond are obscure. There is a conflict of evidence about it. I think there is no doubt that interest was lost in it in 1939 when the bulk of the first defendant's property changed over from pasture to arable. The plaintiff gave evidence that when he came into the property the pond could not really be called a pond. It was silted up and overgrown with grass and bushes and brambles, and it became a "dump" for rubbish. On the other hand, the first defendant claimed that in 1939, i.e., some years before the plaintiff's first acquaintance with the pond, but still fairly recently, it was a good pond with water lilies in the deep end. The plaintiff's evidence is supported by two neighbours both of whom speak to the silting up of the pond and also to the deposit of refuse in it. The first defendant's evidence was supported by a witness who had occupied the Old Rectory during the winter of 1942-43, and was able by means of the pond to supply one cow with water.

The acts of the plaintiff of which the first defendant complains were of this nature. The pond was fed through a culvert at its western end. It also took and takes, presumably, some surface water off the roadway which skirts it on the northern side, and it shares with everything else such rain as may fall.

The flow in the pond is from the culvert at the west end towards the east. At the east end the water is prevented, or intended to be prevented, from running away by means of a wall, which has been referred to as a retaining wall and is made of brick and backed with a bank of earth. The plaintiff found the pond—quite naturally, having regard to his description of it—a highly unpleasant neighbour. He said that it was not a pond, but a bog, with nothing in it but silt and rubbish, and all overgrown, so he decided to clean it out, and in September, 1946, with that in view he took down a section of the retaining wall at the east end, and dug a trench about 18 ins. deep from end to end of the pond to drain away the water, which was not clear water but a sort of aqueous mud. The effect of those operations was to allow such water as there was in the pond to run away. The plaintiff was then enabled to clear out the accumulated silt and rubbish and clean the pond. These activities were not unknown to the first defendant, but it was of no importance to him that there should be any water in the pond because at that time he had not got any beasts. Indeed, accepting, as I do, the plaintiff's evidence, I think it is pretty plain that in September, 1946, before the plaintiff started his operations on it, the pond was not suitable for the watering of beasts. I think the cleaning out work which the plaintiff did was quite necessary. As I have said, the first defendant attached no importance to these operations, at that time, having no beasts to water at the pond, but, when the action started or was threatened, he brought up this matter of the pond by way of counterblast to the plaintiff's claim about the right of way, and it was not until after the counterclaim had been delivered that the plaintiff made good the breach which he had made in the retaining wall, so there was a period of something like two years during which the breach remained in the retaining wall and any water coming down into the pond would flow straight through it. In 1948, after the delivery of the counterclaim, the plaintiff repaired the retaining wall. I, therefore, cannot take the view that, as matters stand at present, there is anything of which the first defendant can justly complain so far as the pond is concerned. It will be remembered that the plaintiff's predecessor in title, as vendor to the first defendant, was said in the first defendant's conveyance "not to guarantee a supply of water in the said pond." The plaintiff, therefore, clearly was not obliged to do anything to maintain the supply of water. His obligation was limited, I think, to doing nothing to interfere with the supply of water in the way of active steps by him, as opposed to mere non-feasance, which would not involve him in any liability. The pond was his pond, on his property, and he could do what he liked with it, provided that he did not interfere with the first defendant's right of taking water. He did nothing wrong, in my judgment, in draining and cleaning the pond. That is a perfectly proper step which the owner of a pond is clearly entitled to take. There is no evidence that when his work on it was finished the pond was any worse for beasts to drink at than it had been immediately before the plaintiff started his work of cleaning it. The only matter on which the plaintiff may be said to have been technically in fault is that, having made this breach in the retaining wall for his cleaning operations, he did not mend it for two years. There it seems to me that he was in fault, because the first defendant was entitled to have the pond left in being as a pond whether it contained water or not, i.e., the receptacle, if I may so describe it, constituting the pond, was essential to the first defendant's easement, and he was entitled to have it left as a receptacle capable of retaining such water as might flow into it, and it is clear that, so long as the breach in the retaining wall remained, the pond could not hold water, because any water that came into it would flow straight through. The defect not having been remedied until after delivery of the counterclaim, it seems to me that I ought to hold, although I confess with reluctance, that on that matter the first defendant is entitled to recover nominal damages of £2.

In the result, the action is dismissed with costs, and the first defendant will recover on his counterclaim the nominal sum of £2 by way of damages, but without costs.

Action dismissed with costs. Judgment for the defendant on the counterclaim, the defendant to recover nominal damages of £2 without costs.

Solicitors: Attwater & Liell, agents for H. J. Smith, Braintree (for the plaintiff); G. Howard & Co., agents for Holmes & Hills, Braintree (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

RANSOM & LUCK, LTD. v. SURBITON BOROUGH COUNCIL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell, L.J., and Wynn-Parry, J.), December 13, 14, 15, 16, 1948.]

Town and Country Planning—Interim development agreement between landowners and local authority—Permission to develop land in accordance with specified method—Permission relating to period after planning scheme in force—
A Revocation of permission for interim development—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), ss. 10 (3), 34 (1)—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 4 (1), (2).

B The plaintiffs were the owners of certain land in Chessington forming part of the Chessington Hall estate and the defendants were the interim development authority for the area for the purpose of the Town and Country Planning Acts. On May 11, 1934, the Minister of Health, in exercise of powers conferred by s. 10 (5) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, allowed an appeal by the plaintiffs from the refusal of the defendants to grant permission for the development of the land in question under the Town and Country Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1933, and gave permission for its development in accordance with
C the original lay-out plan or any lay-out plan approved by the defendants or the Minister. In 1938 the defendants had made a planning scheme under the Act of 1932 and submitted it to the Minister, but it had not yet been approved. On May 19, 1939, the plaintiffs entered into two agreements with the council, one known as the development agreement and the other known as the roads and sewers agreement. The development
D agreement was supplemental to and in consideration of the roads and sewers agreement by which the plaintiffs agreed (inter alia) to dedicate certain lands to the public for highways, to convey certain other lands to the defendants, and to expend money on the construction of sewers. The development agreement stated that it was intended to be made under s. 34 of the Act of 1932 (which empowers "authorities and owners to enter into agreements restricting use of land") and that it was to be
E scheduled to the defendants' planning scheme. By cl. 3 of the agreement: "The lands described in the first and second parts of sched. I hereto may be used for the purposes mentioned in and subject to the restrictions set out in sched. II hereto and in accordance with the lay-out in plan No. 2 hereto annexed." The schedules and plan provided for the erection on
F the plaintiffs' lands of a limited number of dwelling-houses, shops or business premises, as specified. Clause 4 (a) provided: "Until the scheme shall come into force this agreement shall operate as if the owners . . . had submitted an amended lay-out plan for the approval of the council and the council by this agreement had approved the said plan and had granted permission to the owners . . . to develop by virtue of s. 10 of the Act and the Town and Country Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1933." Section 10 of the Act of 1932 deals with the interim
G development of land. Pursuant to the development agreement and the roads and sewers agreement, the plaintiffs withdrew objections they had lodged against the defendants' proposed planning scheme which included the Chessington Hall estate, and they dedicated certain lands as public
H highways, conveyed land to the defendants, and expended money on the construction of sewers, but, owing to the outbreak of the war, they were unable to start the development of their land. In January, 1946, the plaintiffs applied to the defendants for permission to proceed with part of the development, but were refused on the ground that the proposed development would contravene the proposals of the Greater London Plan of 1944. By the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 4 (1), permissions for interim development may be revoked or modified by order made with the consent of the Minister, and by s. 4 (2) the Minister may initiate proceedings for the revocation of any permissions. By the Surbiton Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Direction, dated July 12, 1946, the Minister, under s. 4 (2) of the Act of 1943, directed the council to submit for his consent under s. 4 (1) of the Act, an order revoking the permission granted on May 19, 1939, to the plaintiffs for the development of part of the Chessington Hall estate. The defendants made this order and, on Aug. 8, 1946, wrote to the plaintiffs informing them of the fact. The plaintiffs contended that under the development agreement the defendants had assumed a contractual obligation that they would not at any time thereafter exercise any existing or future statutory powers so as to restrict the development of the plaintiffs' lands to a greater extent than was provided for by the agreement and that the defendants were competent so to limit their powers by virtue of s. 34 of the Act of 1932.

HELD: (i) section 34 (1) of the Act of 1932, which was of very limited application, and only gave power to a local authority to accept restrictions offered to it by a landowner, and, by so doing, to acquire the right to enforce those restrictions against the land as if they had been entered into for the benefit of an adjoining landowner, did not empower the authority to undertake, in consideration of the landowner's submission to restrictions, not to use its planning powers or otherwise to fetter its discretion in respect of powers conferred on it by the Town and Country Planning Acts.

(ii) the development agreement, on its true construction, was nothing more than a permission to develop under s. 10 of the Act of 1932, or as part of the bargain under the express terms of cl. 4 (a) of the agreement, was to be treated as such a permission. Accordingly, there had been no breach of the agreement by the defendants.

A.-G. v. Barnes Corpn. and Ranelagh Club, Ltd., ([1938] 3 All E.R. 711; [1939] Ch. 110; 159 L.T. 305), distinguished.

Decision of ROMER, J. (reported sub nom. Chessington Development Co., Ltd. v. Surbiton Borough Council ([1948] 1 All E.R. 876; [1948] Ch. 369), affirmed on different grounds.

[AS TO INTERIM DEVELOPMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 264-270, paras. 419-429, and 1948 Supplement.]

Case referred to:

- (1) A.-G. v. Barnes Corpn. and Ranelagh Club, Ltd., [1938] 3 All E.R. 711; [1939] Ch. 110; 107 L.J.Ch. 385; 159 L.T. 305; 102 J.P. 448; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs from a decision of ROMER, J., dated Apr. 21, 1948, and reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 876.

The plaintiffs claimed damages for breach of a term of an agreement made under s. 34 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, alleging that the defendants thereby undertook, in consideration of certain restrictions assented to by the plaintiffs, not to interfere in any way with the development of their land, provided that it was in accordance with the limits prescribed by those restrictions. Pursuant to the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 4, the defendants, on a direction from the Minister under s. 4 (2) of the Act, made an order revoking the permission granted by the agreement, and the plaintiffs claimed that this revocation amounted to a breach of the said undertaking. ROMER, J., held that the revocation did not constitute a breach of contract and dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal now dismissed an appeal from his decision on the ground that, on the true construction of s. 34, no such undertaking could be implied. The facts appear in the headnote.

Blain and Boydell for the plaintiffs.

Capewell, K.C., and Wilfrid Hunt for the defendants.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : The discussion in this appeal has led to some rather complicated considerations, but, in my opinion, the answer to it is comparatively simple. The plaintiffs are the owners of land at Chessington, in the area of the defendants, the Surbiton Borough Council. That council
A is the planning authority and the interim development authority in respect of that area under the Town Planning Acts. The action in its original form, as appears from the endorsement on the writ, was for damages for breach of an agreement, a declaration that under the agreement the plaintiffs were entitled to erect houses and buildings, and an injunction to restrain the defendants from taking any steps to prevent the plaintiffs from erecting them.
B When the statement of claim was delivered, the second and third claims to relief were dropped, and there only remained a claim for damages. That claim is based on the proposition that the agreement has been repudiated by the defendants and that the plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to claim damages as for an entire breach. Of course, in that proposition is implicit the assertion that the plaintiffs accepted the breach alleged as a repudiation of the agree-
C ment, thereby discharging it altogether.

The case of the plaintiffs is really based on the construction and effect of s. 34 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932. That Act was a comprehensive Act in relation to town and country planning. It contained the well-known provisions for the making of schemes, dealt with the various stages of bringing them into force, with the powers of the Minister in relation to D them, the rights of objectors, and so forth. Under that Act very large and important powers are given to the planning authorities, and the scheme, when it has gone through all the necessary stages and has become a definitive scheme, acquires, by one of the schedules to the Act, what is equivalent to statutory force. The main part of the Act is taken up with the provisions relating to the making of schemes, but, since schemes would take a long time to prepare,
E provision was made for what might be done in the meanwhile under the provisions relating to the interim development of land. That is provided for by s. 10. Under that section the Minister is to make a general order with respect to the interim development of land within the areas to which resolutions to prepare or adopt a scheme apply. This was such an area. Under sub-s. (2) an order so made by the Minister might itself permit the development of land
F or might empower an authority to permit it. Under sub-s. (3), when the authority is applied to for permission to develop, it may grant the application either unconditionally or subject to such conditions as it thinks fit. I may say in passing that the word "development" is not confined to the construction of buildings, but includes a change of user from that existing at the time. That appears in the definition section. Under s. 10, in case the authority refuse
G consent to an interim application, there is a right of appeal to the Minister. In the present case that machinery was gone through by the present plaintiffs or their predecessors in title, and, their application for permission for interim development having been refused, they took the matter on appeal to the Minister, and the Minister reversed the decision of the local authority. On that basis the parties negotiated. Permission was again applied for to the defendants,
H a new and different plan was agreed, and, finally, the parties entered into two agreements under seal. One of them is called the development agreement and the other the roads and sewers agreement. They are both dated May 19, 1939. They are supplemental to one another. Each appears to be by way of consideration for the execution of the other, and each of them purports to be made by virtue of s. 34 of the Act of 1932. The parties to the development agreement were the parties to this appeal. The two agreements are interlocked in the way which I have mentioned, and the conditions which they impose are of a very miscellaneous character. The covenants which they contain are in part restrictive and in part affirmative. The plaintiffs affirmatively agreed, e.g., in the roads and sewers agreement, to dedicate land to the public. They also entered into restrictive agreements as to the amount of development to be permitted on their land. The defendants entered into certain affirmative undertakings, such as making roads and sewers and so forth.

The essence of the case put forward by the plaintiffs is that this is an agreement which, on its true construction, contains, either expressly or by necessary implication, an undertaking by the defendants, in consideration of the restrictions assented to by the landowners, not to interfere in any way with the development of their land provided that it is in accordance with the scheme of those restrictions. We are not here dealing with the ordinary subject-matter of a contract which can provide for something permanent. The period with which the agreement is concerned is what I call the interim period as well as the period if and when a final scheme comes into effect. It would be possible in a case where permission for interim development has been granted under s. 10 for that interim development to be annulled and the physical results of it destroyed by the scheme which ultimately comes into operation. There is nothing permanent about it, but there are provisions in the Act relating to compensation in cases where a party is aggrieved by something which is done to the land which he has developed under the interim permission. The argument here, based on s. 34, carries it a step further. It is said that under s. 34 it is competent to the local authority, when accepting the offer of a landlord to subject his land to restrictions, itself to enter into an affirmative or a negative covenant not to interfere with the operations of that landlord within the limits specified by the restrictions. The defendants maintain that, under statutory provisions to which I shall refer, they have power to revoke any permission that they have given or to cancel, or procure the cancellation of, any agreement that they have entered into. It is asserted by the plaintiffs that by doing so they commit a breach of their agreement.

The first thing is to examine s. 34. If the argument of counsel for the plaintiffs is right, he concedes that the section will have empowered the planning authority to bargain away the statutory powers of planning and of altering its plans at any time before a scheme is final and complete—powers which are conferred on it by the Act in the public interest—because the agreement on which he relies would have the effect of stabilising the quantity or quality of development specified in that agreement without any possibility of the planning authority being able ever afterwards to alter it except on the terms of paying damages for breach of contract. I am bound to say that, in approaching an Act of this character, I do so without any expectation that I shall find in it a power in the planning authority to bargain away important powers that the legislature has conferred on it. Section 34 which is to be found in a fasciculus of sections headed by a cross-heading "Supplemental Provisions with respect to Schemes." That group of sections begins with s. 27 and ends with s. 34, and it deals with a miscellaneous collection of matters, all of them ancillary to the making of schemes in one way or another. Under s. 34 (2), the local authorities, who are empowered to enter into such agreements as are mentioned in s. 34 (1), comprise any of the therein specified authorities, who need not be planning authorities, and yet, if counsel for the plaintiffs is right, the effect of entering into such an agreement is in substance to do a great deal of planning and carry out a great deal of the effective results of planning, power to do which is given, subject to many checks and balances, to planning authorities. Section 34 (1), which contains the basic words, starts in this way :

"Where any person is willing to agree with any such authority as is mentioned in sub-s. (2) of this section that his land, or any part thereof, shall, so far as his interest in the land enables him to bind it, be made subject, either permanently or for a specified period, to conditions restricting the planning, development, or use thereof, in any manner in which those matters might be dealt with by or under a scheme . . .”

That is what I may call the contemplated initiation leading to an agreement dealt with under the sub-section. One has to get a landowner who is willing to agree that his land shall be subject to restrictions of the character which might be inserted lawfully in a scheme. When a willing person has appeared and announced his willingness, “the authority may, if they think fit, enter into an agreement with him to that effect,” i.e., to the effect of subjecting his land to restrictions. That, and nothing more, is expressly mentioned.

Pausing there, I might usefully make an excursion into the law of property and state the well-known fact that restrictive covenants, apart from some special provision like those we are going to find here, only run in equity so as to bind the land when they are taken for the benefit of the adjoining land of a covenantee. Parliament was minded to make use of that valuable theory, but, to do so, it had to put the local authority artificially into the same position as a neighbouring landowner, because a restrictive covenant entered into by the landowner with the local authority would not bind the landowner under the ordinary law, for it would not have been made for the benefit of adjoining land. The legislature does this by a simple device of draftsmanship. After empowering the local authority to enter into an agreement to the effect mentioned, it inserts this provision :

“ . . . and shall have power to enforce the agreement against persons deriving title under him in the like manner and to the like extent as if the authority were possessed of, or interested in, adjacent land and as if the agreement had been entered into for the benefit of that adjacent land.”

It appears to me that s. 34 has a very limited application. It gives a local authority power to do, in terms, one thing and one thing only—to accept restrictions offered to it by a landowner and by so doing to acquire the right to enforce those restrictions against the land as if they had been entered into for the benefit of an adjoining landowner. There is not a word expressed in the section which specifies the consideration which the local authority is to give or be able to give for the subjection by the landowner of his land to the restrictions indicated. Here we are only concerned with one type of consideration. The consideration in the present case, the plaintiffs say, was an implied or expressed undertaking by the defendants not to do anything in exercise of its statutory planning powers which might go beyond the restrictions entered into by the landowner. In other words, the consideration consists of a partial, or, perhaps, total, relinquishment by a planning authority of certain of its statutory powers in relation to planning. I think it is conceded that, unless there is to be found somewhere in the statute power to restrict a planning authority in the matter of planning, no such power could exist. Counsel for the plaintiffs says that power is to be found in s. 34 itself.

Is it likely that Parliament, in a section falling under the head I have mentioned, and without express words to that effect, would do anything so unusual, so explosive, as to enable a planning authority to do something which all the principles laid down and observed by the courts and the legislature in regard to statutory duties of this kind forbid, namely, to tie its hands and contract itself out of them ? The weakness of the argument on behalf of the plaintiffs is that it is based on what is said to be extracted from a single word, “agreement.” A local authority, says counsel for the plaintiffs, is entitled to enter into an agreement which, apart from documents under seal, requires consideration. What objection can there be, he says, to the planning authority, by way of consideration for the subjection of the landowner to restrictions, itself undertaking not to subject his land to some plan which would prevent the landowner building up to the limit of the restrictions into which he has entered ? It is argued that, as there is nothing in the section to prevent the making of such an agreement, the section must be construed as though it authorised it and gave effect to such an agreement. Such an undertaking in an agreement under s. 34 would be a contractual undertaking entered into by the authority with an individual. I find nothing either in the section or in the general law which would enable, for instance, the successors in title of the landowner to enforce such a covenant against the authority. The running of the burden of the restrictive covenant entered into by the landowner is provided for expressly by the section. The running of the benefit of any restrictive covenant which the authority may enter into restricting its planning powers is not mentioned in the section, nor is any provision made for it. One would have expected that, if the intention had been what counsel says it was, the section would have expressly provided for what I may call mutuality—that the successors in title of the landowner should be not only bound by, but also entitled to, the benefit of these covenants. Nothing of the kind is mentioned. ROMER, J., I think, accepted the view that s. 34 authorised the local authority to enter into restrictive agreements which might have the effect of limiting or circumscribing the exercise of their statutory planning powers. He felt himself constrained to take that view by the authority of A.-G. v. Barnes Corpn. and Ranelagh Club, Ltd. (1), but I do not read that decision of LUXMOORE, J., as covering the present case. The contest there was whether it was competent to a local authority to agree with a landowner for the imposition of restrictions less severe than had been imposed on neighbouring landowners. It was said that, if a local authority tried to do that, it was, in effect, doing something permissive and not restrictive, a view which the learned judge negatived. That is quite a different question from the one which we have here. If the language of LUXMOORE, J., is wide enough to cover the proposition of counsel for the plaintiffs in the present case, then I would respectfully disagree with it, but I do not think it has that meaning. In any event, I cannot accept the view that s. 34 empowers a planning authority, by an agreement under that section, in any way to tie its hands for the future.

I think at this stage I should refer shortly to one or two things in the development agreement. It recites, among other things, the Minister's reversal of the defendants' refusal to grant interim permission. It then says, by cl. 1 :

"This agreement is made by virtue of s. 34 of the Act and is intended to be scheduled to the scheme."

Clause 2 :

"This agreement is supplemental to and as respects the parties hereto in consideration of an agreement of even date herewith" [the roads and sewers agreement.]

Clause 3 :

"The lands described in the first and second parts of the sched. I hereto may be used for the purposes mentioned in and subject to the restrictions set out in sched. II hereto and in accordance with the lay-out in plan No. 2 hereto annexed."

So far, in my opinion, the agreement is defining what it is proposed to include in the matter of restrictions on these lands in the scheme when finally settled, but that was not enough. Naturally the landowner wishing to develop the land would want to get ahead and build the houses that it was contemplated could be built under the proposals to be embodied in the scheme. That is provided for in cl. 4 which says this:

"(a) Until the scheme shall come into force this agreement shall operate as if the owners and the development company had submitted an amended lay-out plan for the approval of the council and the council by this agreement had approved the said plan and had granted permission to the owners and the development company to develop by virtue of s. 10 of the Act and the Town and Country Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1933. (b) To the extent to which this agreement operates and is valid as from the date of this agreement the recited instrument in writing [the Minister's Order] shall cease to have effect."

A By (c) the objections made by the owners to the approval of the scheme were withdrawn. Having regard to the conclusion to which I have come as to the meaning and very limited scope of s. 34, I ought, perhaps, to say this with regard to the statement in this agreement: "This agreement is made by virtue of s. 34 of the Act and is intended to be scheduled to the scheme." In so far as the agreement contains what is expressly provided for by s. 34, namely, an agreement by the landowner that his land shall be subject to conditions
B restricting the planning, development or use thereof, it is an agreement made under and having force by virtue of that section—a special statutory force, as I have pointed out, which goes beyond the force it would have had as a mere contract, because it gets all the characteristics, so far as enforceability by the authority is concerned, of a restrictive covenant. In so far as this agreement and the roads and sewers agreement, which is supplemental to it, contain other
C matters, s. 34 appears to me to have nothing to do with the case. I am not attempting to deal with the question what other considerations can validly be incorporated in an agreement under s. 34. All I have said so far is that it is not competent for the local authority in such an agreement to incorporate a consideration consisting of a restriction of its statutory planning powers such as that for which counsel contended.

D To return to the contention of the plaintiffs, it is said that the agreement must be taken to mean that the plaintiffs, if they found the defendants doing anything which would affect detrimentally to them (the plaintiffs) the measure of restriction to which they had subjected themselves, could interfere and obtain an injunction to stop it. In other words, the court, according to counsel, might be asked by injunction to restrain the defendants, who are given by E the legislature a number of important planning powers, from exercising any of those powers in so far as such exercise involved a departure from the provisions of this agreement. I cannot accept that view. Although the claim for an injunction is now dropped, the same principle is implicit in the claim for damages, namely, that the defendant authority has tied its hands.

I now come to the action which, it is alleged, was a breach of contract by the defendants, and to explain that it is necessary to refer to the Town and F Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943. Section 4 provides:

"(1) If at any time before a scheme under the principal Act comes into operation it appears to an interim development authority that it is expedient, having regard to the provisions then proposed to be included in that scheme, that any development for which permission has been granted on an interim
G development application should not be carried out or completed, or should not be carried out or completed to the extent or in the manner allowed by the permission, they may, by order made with the consent of the Minister, revoke or modify the permission to such extent as appears to them to be necessary in that behalf. (2) The Minister may give directions to any
H interim development authority requiring them to submit to him for his consent under the foregoing subsection an order for the revocation of any permission specified in the directions, or for the modification thereof in such manner as may be so specified; and if any such directions are not complied with within the time specified therein, the Minister may himself make the order on behalf of the authority."

Then there is provision for an inquiry when there is a proposal to revoke such a permission and under sub-s. (4) power is given in the case of revocation to the interim development authority to:

" . . . pay to any person whose property is injuriously affected thereby any such contribution as might have been made by them under sub-s. (4) of s. 10 of the principal Act if a fresh application for such permission had been made by that person."

It is to be observed that that section deals with interim development for which permission has been granted on an interim development application. A mere permission under s. 10 of the Act of 1932 would be nothing more than an executive licence. It would have no contractual force, but its revocation might clearly injuriously affect the licensee because on the faith of it he may, e.g., have incurred expense, and for that reason, no doubt, the legislature makes provision permitting compensation to be granted in such a case. Counsel for the plaintiffs points out that the section says nothing about agreements. Basing himself on his theory as to the scope of s. 34, he says: "Here is an agreement which by contract gives a right to a certain interim development. Sub-section (4) does not in terms provide for the cancellation of any such contract. It only provides for the cancellation of interim development permissions, that is to say, permissions granted under s. 10 of the Act of 1932." By way of reinforcing that, he calls attention to s. 10 of the Act of 1943 which provides:

"No agreement made after the commencement of this Act under s. 34 of the principal Act for restricting the planning, development or use of any land shall have effect unless it has been approved by the Minister."

That, he says, shows that under s. 34, agreements made before the Act are not to be subject to the power of revocation. Of course, the whole of counsel's argument falls to the ground if his initial proposition as to the scope of s. 34 is wrong, because if the contract, in so far as it would have the effect of limiting the powers of the defendants is void, no revocation would be necessary and the defendants could disregard that limitation.

The defendants took into consideration the position raised when, after the war, the plaintiffs in terms applied for permission to develop on the lines of the agreement. That permission, according to counsel's argument, was unnecessary because they had at that moment the contractual right to continue that development and nothing the defendants could do or say could stop them. Permission was, in fact, refused, but the defendants had pointed out to them by their town clerk that there was a complication in the position owing to the existence of the development agreement, whatever view might be formed of the effect of that agreement in law. Since the making of the agreement a further complication had occurred. A plan called the Greater London Plan had been prepared and was much in the public eye and that of the Ministry and the local authorities concerned. This area was in the ambit of that plan. If that plan were to be carried out, it would be impossible for the houses which are mentioned in the agreement ever to be built. The two things are completely inconsistent, but, according to counsel's argument, the defendants would not be entitled, however much they wished to change their minds, to depart from the terms of the agreement with the plaintiffs. Of course, if, by virtue of overriding powers, the Minister could interfere, that would not be the fault of the defendants and would not constitute any breach by them, but the defendants themselves, it is said, must not do anything which would involve a departure from what was contemplated by the agreement. The defendants did not make up their minds as to what they were going to do because they were waiting for the then expected new Act which might have some bearing on the question of compensation. It is notorious that the defects in the operation of the earlier Town Planning Acts were largely due to the heavy burden of compensation which local authorities found lay on their shoulders if they put their powers into execution, and one of the objects of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, was to get rid of that deterrent to effective development. It was not unnatural, therefore, that any local authority concerned should endeavour to mark time until the compensation provisions were passed by Parliament. It seems to me obvious that the power to revoke permissions under s. 4 of the Act of 1943 and the overriding power of the Minister in that regard given by that section have a very sensible application, because an interim development permission might very well impede, directly or indirectly, the formulation of satisfactory schemes. An authority who had given permission to a landowner might, as a practical matter, be unable to revoke it or to insert in the scheme any different or improved provision. Therefore, it is given power to revoke subject to compensation of a limited description, and, in the event of its not exercising the powers, the Minister is given an overriding power himself to make the revocation on behalf of the authority.

As I have said, the remarks of counsel for the plaintiffs on this section have only any applicability if he is right on his construction of s. 34 of the Act of 1932 and I might content myself with saying that, as I think he is wrong on that, this point under s. 4 of the Act of 1943 does not arise, but there is the further point that, even if he was right on his construction of s. 34, all that is being attempted to be done here is a revocation of a permission such as is contemplated by s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1943. It is said that sub-cl. (4) (a) of the agreement (the sub-clause which expressly gives the right to interim development) is nothing more nor less than a permission under s. 10 of the Act of 1932. The fact that it is incorporated in this document with a lot of other things, does not make it in character anything different from a permission, and, being such, it is revocable under s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1943. An application for permission under s. 10 had been made. All the necessary formalities had been gone through. It could have been dealt with simply as a permission and granted or not granted. That, however, was not done. The parties were discussing a variety of matters and they incorporated the permission in this agreement. That does not, in my opinion, alter its character as a mere permission or deprive the defendants of the powers, in the case of development for which permission has been granted on an interim development application, of revoking that permission.

Even if that be wrong, there is a further point, and it is this. It seems to me that under cl. 4 (a) of the agreement, on its true construction, the parties have contracted that the permission shall have the same effect as a permission under s. 10 of the Act of 1932. That means that they agreed that the permission which is incorporated in this agreement was to be no better and no worse than a permission granted under s. 10. It would have all the force and convey all the rights that such a permission would give. On the other hand, it would be subject to any defects or powers in relation to it which might exist. It is true that the power of revocation is subsequent to the agreement. If at the date of the agreement a section similar to s. 4 of the Act of 1943 had been in force, it appears to me that cl. 4 (a) of the agreement would necessarily have meant that the permission there given was subject to the statutory powers of revocation. I cannot see that it makes any difference that the statutory power of revocation was introduced by later Acts. I cannot construe cl. 4 (a) of the agreement in a way which would prevent any subsequent statutory power of revocation relevant to that type of permission being brought into operation or as meaning that no future provision made by Parliament for the revocation of such a permission should have effect as between these parties. That appears to me to be a thing which cannot be read into the clause.

I ought to return to one matter, which I forgot to mention when I was dealing with the construction of s. 34. I said that, as I understand the decision of ROMER, J., he thought that s. 34 did entitle the authority to enter into agreements which would prevent it from interfering with a permission which it was supposed contractually to have granted. He said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 883) :

"In the light of the foregoing considerations, the effect which I attribute to cl. 3 of the agreement is, accordingly, that the council, by virtue of s. 34 of the Act, contractually debarred itself from interfering, after the scheme came into force, with the specified method of development by requiring the plaintiffs to pull down or alter buildings erected in conformity with that method."

One of the reasons which I think, apart from the decision of LUXMOORE, J., A led the learned judge to take that view was this consideration. He points out in his judgment that, if it was not competent to the authority to give a consideration of that kind to the willing landowner, no landowner would be willing to subject his land to such restrictions. With great respect to the learned judge, I cannot take that view. A landowner who has, hanging over his head, the possibility or probability of a stringent scheme being introduced B and made effective which would seriously affect the development of his land, coupled with the prospect of having, perhaps, to oppose the scheme at great expense to himself, would naturally prefer to meet his enemy at the gate and say to him: "I am prepared myself voluntarily to subject my land to certain restrictions. Now let us talk about it and see if we cannot agree". They come C to an agreement, and the local authority accepts his offer to subject his land to named restrictions. That appears to me to be of real benefit to a landowner. Until s. 34 was passed it was impossible in law for an authority to accept such an offer in such a way as to get a permanent benefit out of it, for the simple reason that such a restrictive covenant could not be made enforceable against the successors in title of the landowner. Now, under s. 34, the authority is D empowered to take advantage of offers of that kind, and that seems to me to open up a possibility extremely beneficial to the landowner. It may operate, of course, in another way. If, even as here, two or more adjoining landowners agree on a measure of restriction and are prepared to enter into restrictive E covenants with the authority, landowner A. may think it worth his while to enter into such a restrictive covenant provided landowner B. is doing the same thing at the same time. By that means each can mutually provide for the protection of his land from deterioration by reason of some worse form of development on his neighbour's land which the authority would be unable to prevent without a scheme.

I now return to say one word with regard to the allegation of breaches. As I have said, I think the argument breaks down in limine owing to the true construction of s. 34. If, however, the construction which I have put on that F section be wrong, it appears to me that the argument breaks down on the construction of the agreement, which, either by itself, is nothing more than a permission under s. 10 of the Act of 1932, or, as part of the bargain under the express terms of cl. 4 (a) of the agreement, is to be treated as such a permission. I have said that on that basis it is subject to all the incidents which affect G such a permission including a power of revocation in the authority. That is enough to dispose of the case. The allegation that the defendants had repudiated their contract is of a rather peculiar nature, at any rate on one aspect of it, because it seems to me that, if the statute has given power to the defendants to revoke something that they have done, it cannot be said to be a breach of contract if that power is exercised. Moreover, when it is pointed out that the H defendants, so far, have not revoked, and, indeed, so far as they are concerned, were prepared to mark time, it was really the action of the Minister in calling on the defendants under s. 4 (2) of the Act of 1943 to submit for his consent an application for power to revoke, and not the action of the defendants, which has led to the present position. I only refer to that because I do not wish it to be thought that I am in any way accepting the proposition that there is a repudiation, much less two effective repudiations of different characters, or that repudiation has been accepted so as to entitle the plaintiffs, even if they were right, to sue for damages as on an anticipatory breach. It is not necessary for me, in view of what I have said, to go into that matter, because the appeal, in my opinion, fails for the reasons which I have stated.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree. If a planning authority wishes to put into operation the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, the first step for it to take is to pass a resolution under s. 6. A scheme is then prepared in draft and submitted to the Minister, and it requires his approval under s. 8. In this appeal we are concerned with the period between the passing of the resolution and before any scheme comes finally into operation. Broadly speaking, the position in that period is this. There is no legal machinery for stopping the owners developing their land in any way which seems good to them, but, if they do it without the approval of the planning authority (and I will refer to the form in which approval is sought and obtained in a moment), they run the risk of having any buildings they put up pulled down without getting compensation. That, I think, is the combined effect of ss. 13, 18, 20 (2), and the definition of "existing building" in s. 53. If they do not wish to run that risk they must operate the machinery of s. 10, and it is on that part of the Act that this appeal in the main turns. Section 10 provides, first, for the Minister making a general order with respect to the interim development of land. Such an order was made here and we were referred to one or two paragraphs in it. That order having been made, a landowner, in any area where a resolution has been passed, may apply for permission to develop his land. That permission may be granted in the form in which it is asked for, or there may be negotiations and the parties may agree on modifications, or, if they do not, the planning authority has a power to impose conditions. In the present case in this period an application for permission under s. 10 was put in. There were then negotiations, and the parties came to what I may call a composite arrangement which is set out in the two documents before us. The plaintiffs were prepared to agree to restrictions being imposed on their land under s. 34 of the Act of 1932. In these documents restrictions under s. 34 were imposed on the land. The documents also deal expressly with the owners' position in the interim period before a scheme came, if it ever was to come, into operation, and they also make provision, as between these parties and certain other parties, for various events which, no doubt, it was contemplated in 1939 would happen fairly soon, namely, covenants as to sewers, drains and roads.

I agree with what has been said by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS that it is impossible to construe s. 34 as itself empowering the planning authority to undertake, in consideration of the landowner's submission to restrictions, not to use its planning powers or to fetter its discretion in respect of powers conferred on it by statute, nor do I think that there is anything in these documents to indicate that the defendant planning authority purported to enter into an undertaking of that kind. I think that clause 4 (a) of the development agreement, on its true construction, negatives any such intention. It says, I think, in plain terms that, so far as development is concerned, the owner is agreeing that he shall be in exactly the same position, quoad interim development, as if no s. 34 restriction had been imposed, and he had applied and obtained permission under s. 10. That is what I would have expected to find, and that, it seems to me, is what in the plainest terms one does find. On that basis the argument, in my opinion, fails. If that is right, when we come to s. 4 of the Act of 1943, the statutory powers conferred by that section on the planning authority and on the Minister plainly apply to the plaintiffs in this case. Quoad their interim development rights, they either have obtained permission under s. 10 (which I think is the more probable view) or they are to be treated as being in law in exactly the same position. These words of s. 4 (1), therefore, apply:

"If at any time before a scheme under the principal Act comes into operation it appears to an interim development authority that it is expedient, having regard to the provisions then proposed to be included in that scheme, that any development for which permission has been granted on an interim development application should not be carried out or completed . . . they may, by order . . . revoke . . . the permission . . ."

It seems to me that the permission to develop, which the plaintiffs had, was granted on an interim development application, and it can, therefore, be A revoked under the provisions of this section of the 1943 Act. I agree with what has fallen from the MASTER OF THE ROLLS on the subject of the learned judge's application or construction of the decision in the Ranelagh case (1). For these reasons, I think that this appeal fails.

WYNN-PARRY, J. : I agree. In my view, the case can be made to turn on the true construction of s. 34 of the Act of 1932 and the development agreement. Section 34 is concerned with agreements, but agreements only, B or those parts of agreements only, which, as between a landowner and a local authority, have as their object the subjection of the land of the landowner, either permanently or for a specified period, to conditions restricting the planning development or use thereof in any manner in which those matters might be dealt with by or under a scheme. Having regard to the rule that C covenants to the effect of such conditions cannot exist in gross, the latter part of s. 34 (1) is introduced to allow the desired result to be achieved, notwithstanding that the proposed covenantee, the local authority in question, is not possessed of, or interested in, adjacent land. I think that is the whole scope of the section. That, however, does not mean that an agreement designed, inter alia, to achieve a result within the scope of s. 34, must contain nothing D more, but, if it does so, effect must only be given under s. 34 to such part of an agreement as if within the scope of that section. Otherwise the result would be that this section, which finds its place under the heading "Supplemental Provisions with respect to Schemes," could be used to by-pass the whole of the preceding provisions of the Act regarding schemes.

On this view no difficulty arises on the construction of the development E agreement. Whatever be the true scope of the earlier clauses of that agreement, which has to be read in conjunction with the sewers agreement, I share the view that cl. 3 relates only to the period after the scheme comes into force. Clause 4 relates to the interim period, and, in my view, it introduces s. 10 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1943, for all purposes, and is, therefore, outside the scheme of s. 34. The result is that, during the period between the F date of the agreement and the expected coming into force of the scheme, the only respect in which the land was affected was that it became the subject of an interim development consent. At the date of the development agreement that consent could not be revoked, although the defendants could have refused to have scheduled it to the scheme, in which case it would have ceased to have effect. The Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, G 1943, by s. 4, gave a means of revoking the interim development consent. It must be open to the defendants to take advantage of this provision because s. 34 of the Act of 1932 cannot have the effect of enabling a local authority to bind itself not to exercise future statutory powers. Section 4 of the Act of 1943 was effectively brought into operation, and the interim development consent given by cl. 4 (a) of the development agreement revoked. I agree that H in taking part in that revocation the defendants committed no breach of the development agreement, and I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Bennett & Bennett (for the plaintiffs) ; Lees & Co., agents for R. H. Wright, Town Clerk, Surbiton (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COW v. CASEY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R. and Wynn-Parry, J.), December 16, 17, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Sub-tenant—Sub-tenant of part of premises—Whole premises outside Rent Acts—Surrender of lease of whole premises—Right of landlord to possession of part sublet—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1)—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (3).

In 1942, the plaintiff demised to S.-R. Ltd. for a term of three years from Sept. 29, 1942, a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts did not apply. On the expiration of the term S.-R. Ltd. held over as yearly tenants, and in 1944 they assigned their yearly tenancy to F. A. Ltd., that tenancy being terminable by six months' notice expiring on Sept. 29 in any year. The defendant was employed by F. A. Ltd. who sub-let a flat in the premises to him on a weekly tenancy at a rent of 30s. per week. The rateable value of the flat brought it within the Rent Restrictions Acts. On Dec. 23, 1947, the plaintiff served on F. A. Ltd. a notice to quit expiring on June 24, 1948, and, in spite of the fact that it was bad, the company accepted it, vacated the house and thereby surrendered the tenancy. On June 14, 1948, F. A. Ltd. served the defendant with a notice to quit on June 26, 1948, i.e., two days after the company was due to leave the premises. On a claim for possession of the flat the defendant contended that, on the surrender of the head lease, he became a tenant of the plaintiff as head lessor, with two days of his contractual tenancy to run and thereafter as statutory tenant, and, therefore, was entitled to claim the protection of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 3 (1).

HELD : (i) the whole of the dwelling-house being outside the scope of the Rent Restrictions Acts, after June 26, 1948, the defendant was a trespasser and his tenancy was not only protected by s. 3 (1) of the Act of 1933.

(ii) section 15 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, is limited to a case where the tenant is tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Acts apply, and, as F. A. Ltd. was a tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Acts did not apply, the defendant was not to be deemed to become the statutory tenant of the plaintiff.

Wright v. Arnold ([1946] 2 All E.R. 616 ; [1947] K.B. 280 ; 176 L.T. 45) followed.

[AS TO THE POSITION OF SUB-TENANTS UNDER THE RENT RESTRICTIONS ACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 333, 334, para. 399 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 581, 582, Nos. 7303-7310.]

Case referred to :

(1) Wright v. Arnold, [1946] 2 All E.R. 616 ; [1947] K.B. 280 ; [1947] L.J.R. 341 ; 176 L.T. 45 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the defendant from an order of PRITCHARD, J., dated Nov. 23, 1948, confirming an order of MASTER HORRIDGE giving leave to the plaintiff to sign final judgment in an action for possession and mesne profits against the defendant sub-tenant, who asked leave to defend because he had an arguable point of defence, viz., that after the surrender of the head lease, the defendant became the direct tenant of the landlord and as such entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the headnote.

L. A. Blundell for the defendant.

Heathcote-Williams for the plaintiff.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : This is an appeal from an order of PRITCHARD, J., confirming an order of MASTER HORRIDGE giving leave to the plaintiff to sign final judgment for possession with mesne profits. The defendant says that he has a reasonably arguable defence and ought to have been given leave to defend.

[HIS LORDSHIP stated the facts and continued :] The defendant argues that the effect of his sub-tenancy was that on the surrender of the head lease on June 24, 1948, he became in direct relation as tenant with the plaintiff as his landlord. On that date, he says, he was a tenant of the plaintiff in occupation with two days of his contractual tenancy to run, and that entitles him now to claim against the plaintiff the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts, his flat being clearly within the scope of the Acts. In my opinion, that argument is completely misconceived. At common law, it is true, he had two days' occupation to which he was entitled as against the superior landlord. On the expiration of those two days at common law he became a trespasser. What possible ground is there for his claiming the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts ?

The defendant says that s. 3 (1) of the Rent, etc., Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, protects him. That is the main operational provision of this Act, and it provides :

" (1) No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom, shall be made or given unless . . . " and then are set out the well-known conditions.

He contends that this flat is a dwelling-house to which the Rent Acts apply, that an order for the recovery of possession of that dwelling-house is being sought against him, and that it is not open to the court to make such an order by virtue of s. 3 (1). That appears to me to be a complete misconception of the true position. What is being sought is recovery of possession of part of the dwelling-house which was demised by the plaintiff. That dwelling-house is not one to which the Rent Acts apply. It is a mere accident that only part of that dwelling-house is occupied, the reason being that the tenant of the rest of it has moved out. Test the matter in this way. Suppose the head tenant had surrendered by deed and afterwards refused to move out and an action had to be brought to eject him. That would have been an action against a head tenant and his sub-tenant for the recovery of possession of the whole house, which is not a dwelling-house to which the Rent Acts apply. In that case the Acts would have had nothing to do with the case. It cannot make any difference that the head tenant is not a defendant because he has vacated the house. What the plaintiff is trying to do is to get possession of the whole of his house and occupying a corner of it is a person who at common law is a pure trespasser. It seems to me impossible to say that in those circumstances s. 3 (1) applies.

I am not sure whether reliance is placed on s. 15 (3) of the Rent Act, 1920, which deals with sub-tenancies, but, in my opinion, it is equally impossible to rely on that sub-section. The sub-section provides :

" Where the interest of a tenant of a dwelling-house to which this Act applies is determined, either as the result of an order or judgment for possession or ejectment, or for any other reason, any sub-tenant to whom the premises or any part thereof have been lawfully sub-let shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be deemed to become the tenant of the landlord on the same terms as he would have held from the tenant if the tenancy had continued."

That sub-section deals with a case where there is a dwelling-house to which the Acts apply occupied by a tenant, whom I will call the head-tenant, whose tenancy is determined. It would cover, therefore, a case where the head tenancy is determined by a surrender, but the sub-section is clearly limited to a case where the head-tenant whose tenancy is determined is tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Acts apply. Here the company was not a tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Acts apply. It was tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Acts did not apply.

The matter is not devoid of authority, because in Wright v. Arnold (1) this court had to consider a question of the position under s. 15 (3) of a sub-tenant of part of a house which did not fall within the Act. In that case the head tenancy came to an end by the expiry of the lease. It was not a case of surrender, but that distinction makes not the slightest difference. It was clearly said in that case that s. 15 (3) only applies where the head tenant is tenant of a house to which the Acts apply. If that was not the case, the position would be fantastic. It would mean that the tenant of a house to which the Act did not apply could grant a sub-tenancy of a part and then, his own tenancy having been brought to an end, could leave the landlord saddled with a statutory sub-tenant. In other words, it would put the head tenant in a position to foist on the head landlord a statutory tenant by carving out of the house demised to him a small portion and subletting it. Section 15 (3) permits nothing of the kind, in my opinion. The result, therefore, is that the defendant is clearly a trespasser at common law as the two days, the remainder of his weekly tenancy, had expired before the writ was issued and there is nothing in the Rent Restrictions Acts which can give him protection.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: H. C. Morris, Woolsey, Morris & Kennedy (for the plaintiff); Rising & Ravenscroft, agents for Sherwood Cobbing & Williams, Kingston-on-Thames (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HEATH'S WILL TRUSTS. HAMILTON v. LLOYDS BANK, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), November 30, December 1, 21, 1948.]

Married Woman—Restraint on anticipation—Validity—Imposition by will dated 1932—Codicils dated 1937 confirming will—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (2).

The Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 2 provides: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act all property which—(a) immediately before the passing of this Act was the separate property of a married woman or held for her separate use in equity; or (b) belongs at the time of her marriage to a woman married after the passing of this Act; or (c) after the passing of this Act is acquired by or devolves upon a married woman, shall belong to her in all respects as if she were a feme sole and may be disposed of accordingly: Provided that nothing in this subsection shall interfere with or render inoperative any restriction upon anticipation or alienation attached to the enjoyment of any property by virtue of any provision attaching such a restriction, contained in any Act passed before the passing of this Act, or in any instrument executed before Jan. 1, 1936. (2) Any instrument executed on or after Jan. 1, 1936, shall, in so far as it purports to attach to the enjoyment of any property by a woman any restriction upon anticipation or alienation which could not have been attached to the enjoyment of that property by a man, be void."

By his will, dated Dec. 10, 1932, the testator directed his trustees to hold a share of his estate on trust to pay the income to his daughter during her life for her separate use and so that during coverture the same should be without power of anticipation, with remainders over to her children. In 1933 and 1934 the testator executed four codicils which did not vary the provision for his daughter, but confirmed the will except as otherwise varied. In 1937 the testator executed two further codicils which did not affect the said provision for his daughter, but they both confirmed his will as amended by the former codicils. In 1939 the testator died.

HELD: the restraint on anticipation was attached by an instrument executed before Jan. 1, 1936, and was contained in no other instrument, and, therefore, notwithstanding the codicils of 1937, it was not rendered invalid by the Act of 1935.

[FOR THE LAW REFORM (MARRIED WOMEN AND TORTFEASORS) ACT, 1935, s. 2, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 28, p. 105.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Waring, [1942] 2 All E.R. 250; [1942] Ch. 426; 111 L.J.Ch. 284; 167 L.T. 145; revsg., [1942] 1 All E.R. 556; [1942] Ch. 309; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Tredgold, [1943] 1 All E.R. 120; [1943] Ch. 69; 112 L.J.Ch. 68; 168 L.T. 135; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Sebag-Montefiore, [1944] 1 All E.R. 672; [1944] Ch. 331; 113 L.J.Ch. 280; 170 L.T. 395; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Berkeley v. Berkeley, [1946] 2 All E.R. 154; [1946] A.C. 555; 115 L.J.Ch. 281; 175 L.T. 153; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Grealey v. Sampson, [1917] 1 I.R. 286; 44 Digest 375, 2091 i.
- (6) Goonewardene v. Goonewardene, [1931] A.C. 647; 100 L.J.P.C. 145; 145 L.T. 7; Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Fraser, [1904] 1 Ch. 726; 73 L.J.Ch. 481; 91 L.T. 48; 44 Digest 376, 2102.
- (8) Rolfe v. Perry, (1863), 3 De G.J. & Sm. 481; 32 L.J.Ch. 471; 8 L.T. 441; 44 Digest 377, 2109.
- (9) Re Elcom, [1894] 1 Ch. 303; 63 L.J.Ch. 392; 70 L.T. 54; 44 Digest 380, 2144.
- (10) Re Moore, [1907] 1 I.R. 315; 41 I.L.T. 150; 8 Digest 285, d.
- (11) Doe d. Biddulph v. Hole, (1850), 15 Q.B. 848; 20 L.J.Q.B. 57; 15 L.T.O.S. 392; 44 Digest 376, 2106.
- (12) Hopwood v. Hopwood, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 728; 29 L.J.Ch. 747; 34 L.T.O.S. 56; 44 Digest 375, 2099.
- (13) Mountcashell (Earl) v. Smyth, [1895] I.R. 346; 44 Digest 375.
- (14) Re Hardyman, [1925] Ch. 287; 94 L.J.Ch. 204; 133 L.T. 175; 44 Digest 385, 2196.
- (15) Re Reeves, [1928] Ch. 351; 97 L.J.Ch. 211; 139 L.T. 66; 44 Digest 382, 2165.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether a restraint on anticipation imposed on a gift to the testator's daughter by his will made on Dec. 10, 1932, to which the testator had made four codicils in 1933 and 1934 and two in 1937, was invalidated by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 2. HARMAN, J., held that the restrain on anticipation was valid. The facts appear in the judgment.

M. Albery for the plaintiff (the testator's daughter).

Wilfrid Hunt for the defendants (the trustees of the will).

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21. HARMAN, J., read the following judgment. The late Cuthbert Eden Heath made his will on Dec. 10, 1932. The only clause with which I am here concerned is cl. 14 (3) whereby the testator directed his trustees to hold two-thirds of the moiety of his trust estate which he called "my daughter's portion" on trust to pay the income to his daughter, the plaintiff, during her life for her separate use and so that during coverture the same should be without power of anticipation, with remainders over to her children. The testator made four codicils to his will in 1933 and 1934 which did not vary the provisions above mentioned, but did confirm his will except as otherwise varied.

The Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 2 (1) enacts that all property which either before or after the passing of the Act was held for the separate use of a married woman should belong to her in all respects as if she were a feme sole and might be disposed of accordingly subject to a proviso in the following terms :

A " Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall interfere with or render inoperative any restriction upon anticipation or alienation attached to the enjoyment of any property by virtue of any provision attaching such a restriction, contained in any Act passed before the passing of this Act, or in any instrument executed before Jan. 1, 1936."

Sub-section (2) provides :

B " Any instrument executed on or after Jan. 1, 1936, shall, in so far as it purports to attach to the enjoyment of any property by a woman any* restriction upon anticipation or alienation which could not have been attached to the enjoyment of that property by a man, be void."

Sub-section (3) (c) reads :

C " the will of any testator who dies after Dec. 31, 1945, shall (notwithstanding the actual date of the execution thereof) be deemed to have been executed after Jan. 1, 1936."

So far, it is clear that the Act did not affect the testator's testamentary dispositions and that the restraint on anticipation imposed on the plaintiff's enjoyment of her portion remained a valid restriction. It is said by the plaintiff that this state of things has been altered because the testator in 1937 made two further D codicils. These did not expressly affect the disposition of his residuary estate, but did in each case confirm his will as altered by the former codicils. The testator died in 1939. His will has been duly proved, and the defendants are now the trustees of it. The question is whether the execution by the testator of the codicils of 1937 operated, having regard to the terms of the Act, to invalidate the restraint on anticipation imposed by his will. This is a question E of the true construction of the Act, and, particularly, of the proviso to s. 2 (1).

Now, at first sight and without consulting authority, I should come to the conclusion that this restriction which appears in the will executed on Dec. 10, 1932, was " contained in an instrument executed before " the critical date, and, therefore, was valid, but the plaintiff invokes the doctrine of re-publication and claims that by executing codicils in 1937 the testator brought his will F down to that year so that it must be read in all respects as though executed on the date of his latest codicil, and that, if so read, the restriction is void under s. 2 (3) as being contained in " an instrument executed after Jan. 1, 1936." The doctrine of re-publication of wills has been much canvassed in recent years in connection with another statute, namely, the Finance Act, 1941. Section 25 G of that Act varied provisions as to tax free annuities by words (so far as relevant) modifying " any provision, however worded, for the payment . . . of a stated amount free of income tax . . . being a provision which (a) is contained in any . . . will . . . and (b) was made before Sept. 3, 1939." This section has had a chequered career. It was first considered by FARWELL, J., in Re Waring (1) where the learned judge held that provisions contained in a will do not take effect till the death of the testator, and that, therefore, provision H for a tax free annuity made in the will of a testator dying after Sept. 3, 1939, was not affected though the will bore an earlier date. This decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal, the court holding that the provision was made on the date when the will was executed. There was in that case a codicil after Sept. 3, 1939, but it did not expressly confirm the will and was held to be irrelevant. In the next year, however, SIMONDS, J., in Re Tredgold (2) had before him a case where there was a will before the date and a codicil after it which expressly confirmed the will, and he distinguished Re Waring (1) and held that the provision was made at the date of the codicil, and was, therefore, not modified. There was no appeal in that case, but the decision was overruled by the Court of Appeal in Re Sebag-Montefiore (3) where it was held that the provision was made by a will before the date notwithstanding that there was a subsequent codicil expressly confirming the will. The whole question was re-considered by the House of Lords in Berkeley v. Berkeley (4) where the House, in effect, restored the original decision of FARWELL, J., and held that the provision was not made till the testator's death. This made it unnecessary to consider the question of confirmation by codicil on which subject the House was divided. It is to be observed that the majority concluded on that Act that the word "provision" signified the thing given and not the words creating the gift. LORD PORTER, the only member of the House who took a contrary view of the meaning of the word "provision," also disagreed with the majority about the relevant date. He held that the relevant date was that of a codicil after 1941, and, therefore, in the result agreed with the majority while rejecting all their reasons. It appears to me that in the Act of 1935 which I have to consider, the word "provision" could not possibly mean anything but the words used to attach the restriction. This at once deprives me of any real guidance in the construction of the statute of 1935 based on the views of the majority of the House of Lords on the statute of 1941.

LORD PORTER'S observations are more germane for my purpose, and he held that the provision, i.e., the words creating the bequest, was contained in the last codicil and used these words ([1946] 2 All E.R. 163) :

"The second question is what is the codicil in which the provision is contained. Originally, no doubt, it is to be found in the second, but that codicil is confirmed by the fourth, and in the end it has to be determined which of the two ultimately 'makes' it. The inquiry goes back behind the Wills Act, 1837, to the history of the publication and re-publication of wills, an expression now meaningless, but still unhappily in use. I do not, however, think it necessary to explore its origin ; it is enough to say that there is a series of cases since the Wills Act, 1837 was passed insisting that, just as re-publication of the will substituted the date of the re-publication for that of the will before the Wills Act was passed, so afterwards the will spoke from the date of confirmation rather than from that of its original execution, and this result occurred even when there was no express confirmation contained in the codicil, provided the will was referred to and it appeared that the codicil intended to confirm it. To this result, it is true, there were some exceptions made with the object of preserving the intention of the testator where a strict fulfilment of the general rule would defeat it, e.g., in cases where an exact compliance with the rules would result in the giving of double portions, or would defeat a gift to charity which the testator obviously intended to be effective. It may be enough to quote Grealey v. Sampson (5) and Goonewardene v. Goonewardene (6), as exemplifying the rule, and Re Fraser (7), as exemplifying the exception. In the present case, however, there are no facts rendering either of these two exceptions applicable and the general rule that a will or earlier codicil is made at the date when it is confirmed by a codicil of later date must, in my opinion, prevail."

It will be seen that the principle which he enunciated is, according to him, not of universal application, but only a general rule, and is not to be adhered to where it defeats the intention of the testator. That consideration did not apply in Berkeley v. Berkeley (4) and LORD PORTER, therefore, held that the doctrine of re-publication prevailed. What is the position here ? It seems to me that this testator clearly intended when he made his will in 1932 to impose this restriction on his daughter, and that, so far from changing his mind, he adhered to that view at least until the date of his last codicil in 1937, for each of these instruments confirms the will. If then I am, by applying the doctrine, to prevent the restriction from being effective, I conceive that I am defeating the testator's intention, and if I am to follow LORD PORTER's guidance, this must be an exception from the rule.

I turn, therefore, to the earlier cases for guidance as to instances of the application of the rule, or its rejection, and first to Rolfe v. Perry (8). In that case the will was executed before the coming into force of the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (Locke King's Act), which altered the incidence of debts charged on real estate, excepting, however, "the rights of any person claiming under or by virtue of any will, deed, or document already made, or to be made before" a certain date. There was a codicil following that date, but LORD WESTBURY, L.C., held that the will was a will "already made" within the exception. His Lordship held that on the construction of the statute a will was "already made" on the date of its execution and not at the date of a codicil re-publishing it or at the testator's death.

The like case is Re Elcom (9) which was concerned with the Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857 (known as Malins' Act). This entitled a wife to assign a reversionary share provided she was "entitled under any instrument made after Dec. 31, 1857." The will under which the lady in question claimed was made before that date, but there was a subsequent codicil confirming the will. CHITTY, J., who was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, held that she was not entitled under any instrument made after Dec. 31, 1857, relying particularly on the word "instrument," and held that whether or no the codicil in terms re-published the will was immaterial. In the Court of Appeal, LINDLEY, L.J., made the following observations ([1894] 1 Ch. 312):

"The will was made in March, 1856. Whether it would remain in force depended on the subsequent proceedings of the testatrix. She made a codicil in 1864, after Dec. 31, 1857. By this codicil she bequeathed various pecuniary legacies, and thereby diminished the residue, but did not otherwise affect the disposition of it. She did not in terms re-publish her will; but that, in my judgment, is quite immaterial. It is ingeniously argued that her will is made up of the aggregate of all her testamentary instruments, and for many purposes that is so; but can it be said that this lady became entitled to this reversionary interest under an instrument made after Dec. 31, 1857? I think that it cannot by any ingenuity be made out that she did. How do you 'make' a testamentary instrument? By signing it with such formalities as the law requires. Under what instrument does Mrs. Hamilton derive her title? Under the will, and the will was made before the Act. I do not think it necessary to refer to cases—there are none that throw much light upon the point. The case that comes nearest is Rolfe v. Perry (8) and it makes against the appellant. But we do not want cases, for the language of the Act is plain."

I cite next the Irish case of Re Moore (10) which decided that a charitable devise by will dated more than three months before the death followed by a codicil confirming it within three months of the death was valid notwithstanding s. 16 of the Charitable Donations Act, 1844, which enacts that no devise for charitable uses in Ireland shall be valid to create any estate in lands "unless the will or other instrument containing the same shall be duly executed three calendar months at least before the death." BARTON, J., made the following observations ([1907] 1 I.R. 318):

"It is well settled that for many purposes re-publication brings the will down to the date of the codicil, and makes it speak as a new will of that date, and take effect as if it had been reinserted in the codicil and re-executed at the date of the codicil. But it is equally well settled that there are limits to the doctrine. 'The rule is subject to the limitation that the intention of the testator is not to be defeated thereby'; per PATTESON, J., in Doe d. Biddulph v. Hole (11). 'It does not necessarily operate as if the will had been originally made at the date of the codicil': per LORD CAMPBELL, L.C., in Hopwood v. Hopwood (12). The effect of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mountcashel v. Smyth (13) is that re-publication re-publishes the will with all its contents, including its original date. It is as if the old document, with its old date, were translated into the codicil. Re-publication gives to the will a fresh starting point, but it does not erase the old date. Nor does it, in my opinion, falsify the fact that the will contained a particular devise and was executed at a particular time. The authorities which have been cited lead me to the conclusion that the courts have always treated the principle that re-publication makes the will speak as if it had been re-executed at the date of the codicil not as a rigid formula or technical rule, but as a useful and flexible instrument for effectuating a testator's intentions, by ascertaining them down to the latest date at which they have been expressed."

In the more recent case of Re Hardyman (14), ROMER, J., after considering the cases and citing from Re Moore (10), made the following observations ([1925] Ch. 292):

"In other words the court, for the purposes of ascertaining the intention of the testator, would regard the re-publication of the will by the codicil as an expression of the testator's intention as at that date. When, therefore, the testator, at the date of his codicil, by which time legacy duty had been replaced by succession duty, expressed a wish that the legacy duty on the particular legacy should be paid, the court was able to arrive at the conclusion that the testator intended to refer to succession duty."

Then he cites from Re Moore (10) and goes on (ibid.):

"It appears to me, in the circumstances, and having regard to the authorities, that I must construe the present will in light of the fact that by re-publication the testatrix has said to me: 'This will expresses my intentions at this date' (i.e., the date at which this codicil was made), and that I must not disregard that fact."

He came to the conclusion that in that case he would be effectuating the testator's intention by holding that a second wife existing at the date of a confirming codicil was intended by a bequest which if it had been contained in the will alone would have operated in favour of the first wife. The same principles are seen at work in Re Reeves (15) and Re Goonewardene (6).

Finally, I find the following observation in JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 192:

"It would seem, on general principles, that if a testamentary gift is valid at the date of the will, it cannot be invalidated by mere re-publication of the will."

The editor cites Re Moore (10) for this proposition which seems to me to have much to commend it.

In my judgment, in this state of the authorities, I am free, if, indeed, I am not bound, to follow what would have been my own inclination. The instrument by which this restriction attached was dated before Jan. 1, 1936, and the restriction is contained in no other instrument, and, in my judgment, therefore, it is a valid restriction notwithstanding the Act of 1935 and the codicils of 1937.

Declaration accordingly. Costs as between solicitor and client out of the capital.
Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon (for the plaintiffs); Deacons & Pritchards (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

AKTIEBOLAGET MANUS v. R. J. FULLWOOD & BLAND, LIMITED.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell and Evershed, L.JJ.), November 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, December 15, 1948.]

Trade Mark—Removal from register—Non-user—“Special circumstances in the trade”—Foreign manufacturing company—War conditions preventing importation of goods—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (c. 22), s. 26 (1) (b), (3).

The Trade Marks Act, 1938, s. 26, provides: “(1) . . . a registered trade mark may be taken off the register . . . on application by any person aggrieved to the court or . . . to the registrar, on the ground . . . (b) that up to the date one month before the date of the application a continuous period of 5 years or longer elapsed during which the trade mark was a registered trade mark and during which there was no bona fide use thereof in relation to those goods by any proprietor thereof for the time being . . . (3) An applicant shall not be entitled to rely for the purposes of sub-s. (1) (b) . . . of this section on any non-use of a trade mark that is shown to have been due to special circumstances in the trade and not to any intention not to use or to abandon the trade mark in relation to the goods to which the application relates.”

Prior to 1940 the defendants had acted as sole commercial agents in England for the marketing of a milking machine evolved and manufactured (with the exception of certain accessories) in Sweden by the plaintiffs, a Swedish company. The machines bore the word “Manus,” which was registered in Part B of the register as the plaintiffs’ trade mark. On June 10, 1940, when, owing to war-time restrictions imposed in both Sweden and England, the importation of the machines had terminated, the parties entered into an agreement for the period until September, 1941, under which the defendants were to manufacture the machines in England, continuing the use of the name, “Manus,” with the object of keeping the plaintiffs’ name and good will alive in the English market. The defendants continued the manufacture of the machines during the war, and it was admitted that the plaintiffs, did not themselves use the trade mark after the date of the agreement. The plaintiffs’ factory in Sweden was requisitioned from 1941 until 1944. On May 6, 1946, the defendants applied for the rectification of the register by the removal of the trade mark.

In an action in which the plaintiffs claimed an order restraining the defendants from passing off their goods as those of the plaintiffs and from infringing their trade mark, the defendants, by a counterclaim and on the ground of alleged non-user, claimed the removal of the mark from the register under s. 26 (1) of the Act of 1938.

HELD: “special circumstances” within the meaning of s. 26 (3) were peculiar or abnormal circumstances experienced by persons engaged in a particular trade as the result of the working of some external force as distinct from the voluntary act of any individual trader; “the trade” in the sub-section meant the trade in which the proprietor of the trade mark was engaged—in the present case that of a foreign manufacturer of milking machines dealt in on the English market; it was not necessary that the “special circumstances” should be such as to afflict all traders equally, or all traders, equally or otherwise; and, therefore, the war conditions were “special circumstances in the trade” within the meaning of s. 26 (3) notwithstanding that they did not affect everyone in the trade in the same way, and the defendants were not entitled to rely on non-user arising therefrom for the purposes of s. 26 (1) (b).

[FOR THE TRADE MARKS ACT, 1938, s. 26 (1) (b) and (3), see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Vol. 31, pp. 772, 773.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Bowden Wire, Ltd. v. Bowden Brake Co., Ltd. (No. 1), Re Bowden Wire, Ltd.'s Trade Marks, (1913), 30 R.P.C. 580; on appeal, 31 R.P.C. 385; 43 Digest 195, 429.
- (2) Gledhill (G. H.) & Sons, Ltd. v. British Perforated Toilet Paper Co., (1911), 28 R.P.C. 714; affmg., 28 R.P.C. 429; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Columbia Graphophone Co., Ltd., (1932), 49 R.P.C. 621; Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Crean (James) & Son, Ltd.'s Trade Mark, (1921), 38 R.P.C. 155; 43 Digest 204, 499.

APPEAL by the defendants from an order of HARMAN, J., dated June 16, 1948.

Before the war the defendants had been the marketing agents in England for milking machines made by the plaintiffs, a Swedish company. Owing to war-time restrictions, the importation into England of the machines became impossible, and, by an agreement made between the parties on June 10, 1940, the defendants were licensed by the plaintiffs to manufacture the machines in England, and to continue to use the plaintiffs' registered trade mark "Manus" with the object of maintaining the plaintiffs' goodwill. The defendants having claimed the right to continue to apply the name "Manus" to machines of their own manufacture independently of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs brought this action for passing-off and infringement of their registered trade mark. The defendants contended that in this country the word "Manus" was never distinctive of the plaintiffs as the business origin of the milking machines. Alternatively, they said that, if it ever was distinctive of the plaintiffs, it had lost that distinctiveness by reason of subsequent events, and they counter-claimed that, by virtue of s. 26 (1) (b) of the Trade Marks Act, 1938, the trade mark should be removed from the register. HARMAN, J., granted an order restraining the defendants from passing-off their goods as and for those of the plaintiffs and from infringing the plaintiffs' trade mark. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal.

Beney, K.C., and Mould, K.C., for the defendants.

Arthian Davies, K.C., and P. Stuart Bevan for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 15. LORD GREENE, M.R., and SOMERVELL, L.J., intimated that they agreed with the judgment of EVERSLED, L.J.

EVERSHED, L.J. (read by SOMERVELL, L.J.): [HIS LORDSHIP dealt with the facts summarised above, and with the allegation of passing-off, and continued:] Beyond question the plaintiffs did not from the inception of the licence agreement of June 10, 1940, themselves use the mark. They say, however—and this is their substantial answer to the defendants' counterclaim—that such non-user was the direct result of the compelling circumstances of the second world war, and, particularly, of the war-time legislation both in Great Britain and Sweden which made the importation of their Swedish manufactured machines practically impossible, to which they add that their factory at Noorkoping was requisitioned by the Swedish government from 1941 to 1944. The plaintiffs rely on these circumstances as constituting "special circumstances in the trade" within the meaning of s. 26 (3) which so far as material is in the following language :

"An applicant shall not be entitled to rely for the purposes of para. (b) of sub-s. (1) . . . of this section on any non-use of a trade mark that is shown to have been due to special circumstances in the trade and not to any intention not to use or to abandon the trade mark in relation to the goods to which the application relates."

The language of the sub-section has, in the present case, given rise to two distinct questions. First, it is said on the defendants' behalf that the alleged special circumstances must be circumstances affecting (and, as I understand their argument, affecting disadvantageously to an equal or substantially equal degree) all persons engaged "in the trade" during the relevant period, or, at least, must not be circumstances peculiar to a particular trader. "The trade," according to the defendants' argument, must mean the trade of all manufacturers, whether British or foreign, of machines in fact marketed in England. It was not (so ran the argument) established that the war conditions operated even to prevent all foreign manufacturers from trading in England since some

A had or may have had subsidiary factories in England, and, in any case, the effect of the war was, in fact, to stimulate rather than to depress the business of the English manufacturers, among whom, notably, were the defendants themselves.

B It is, I think, clear that the words "the trade" in the sub-section must mean the trade in which the proprietor is engaged. I should, therefore, in the present case be disposed to define "the trade" as meaning that of foreign manufacturers of milking machines dealt in on the English market. But even if the word be extended so as to comprise also English manufacturers, I am unable to accept the defendants' argument, for though the phrase in question may or may not be apt to cover the case of a calamity suffered exclusively by a particular trader—e.g., if his factory were destroyed by fire or bombs—it is not, in my view, necessary that the "special circumstances" should be such as to afflict all traders equally, or, indeed, to afflict all of them equally or otherwise. It is important to my mind to note that the relevant phrase is used in contrast to that which immediately follows—"and not to any intention not to use or to abandon the trade mark." In that context it seems to me (without attempting any precise definition) that the words must be taken to refer to circumstances which are "special" in the sense of being peculiar or abnormal and which are experienced by persons engaged in a particular trade as the result of the working of some external forces as distinct from the voluntary acts of any individual trader. According to such a test no less than (in my view) the ordinary and common sense meaning of the words the impact of war conditions making impracticable the ordinary usages of international trade would amount to special circumstances in the trade, and, if the non-user of his mark by a particular trader was, in fact, due to the effect on his business of those conditions, then he would, in my view, be within the protection of sub-s. (3).

E The case was put by SOMERVELL, L.J., in the course of the argument of the imposition of prohibitive tariffs practically effective to keep out of England altogether machines manufactured abroad. It is clear that such a tariff would strike hardest at those manufacturers who had no means of manufacturing in England and would (as it would be intended to do) immensely benefit English manufacturers. Whether or not the words "the trade" be given their widest significance, the effect of such a tariff would, in my judgment, amount to "special circumstances in the trade."

G Counsel for the defendants relied strongly and naturally on a passage in Re Columbia Graphophone Co. Ltd. (3), from the judgment of LORD HANWORTH, M.R., where he said : (49 R.P.C. 628) :

H "SARGANT, J., points out in that case [Crean's case (4)], and we agree with him, that the non-user must be due to circumstances of the trade and not to special circumstances attaching to and belonging to the trader personally. It must be something of a wider nature than the latter ; it must be circumstances belonging to the trade as a whole."

Reference to the judgment of SARGANT, J., shows, I think, clearly that the MASTER OF THE ROLLS' paraphrase—particularly the last few words—went further than was justified by the language of the learned judge, and, if by those last few words LORD HANWORTH intended to express the view that special circumstances within the meaning of the sub-section must affect similarly every trader in the trade (a view which was unnecessary to the decision in the case before him) I respectfully think that it ought not to be followed.

In my judgment, therefore, HARMAN, J., came on this part of the case to a correct conclusion which he expressed shortly as follows :

"It was also urged that the war did not affect everyone in the trade in the same way, and, therefore, was not a special circumstance in the trade. It was said that the plaintiffs were so affected because they had not set up business in this country while other Swedish manufacturers of milking machines had done so. In my judgment, the war conditions were a special circumstance in the trade none the less because these circumstances bore more hardly on some than on others."

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Ernest Winterbotham & Co. (for the defendants) ; Evans Baker & Co. (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION v. SALVADORI AND OTHERS.

CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), November 29, 30, December 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 1948.]

Conspiracy—Procurement of breach of contract—Trade protection association—Covenant by purchaser not to re-sell at more than specified price—Purchase of article at higher price—Trade interest—Damages—Measure—Right of non-trading body to maintain action—Trade union.

The plaintiffs, a certified trade union, were an association, the main function of which was to protect the interests of the motor trade and the purchasing public by ensuring that list prices of cars were neither cut nor inflated. All British motor car manufacturers and their authorised dealers were members of the association and as such were bound to sell cars at the list prices. To effect this, on or before delivery of a new car the purchaser of the car executed a deed of covenant with the plaintiffs and the dealer who supplied the car not to re-sell it for the period of one year. The defendants, who were either not members of the association or were on a "stop list" as being persons with whom the members of the association were forbidden to trade, were members of a "ring" of dealers whose object was to obtain new or practically new cars for re-sale at prices greatly above the list prices. The usual method adopted was for a member of the ring to put up an ostensible purchaser (in fact, an agent of the operator) who was provided with sufficient funds to pay the list price and to reward himself and who signed the covenant. This agent then handed the car to the operator, and the car was sold to the public at a greatly enhanced price.

HELD : (i) each defendant was guilty of procuring breaches of contract, since any active step taken by a defendant having knowledge of the covenant by which he facilitated a breach of that covenant constituted the procuring of a breach of contract, and a defendant, by agreeing to buy, paying for, and taking delivery of a motor car known by him to be offered to him in breach of covenant, took active steps by which he facilitated such a breach, dictum of LORD MACNAGHTEN in Quinn v. Leathem ([1901] A.C. 510 ; 85 L.T. 291), applied. Even if a covenantor offered a car for sale, the element of inducement was present, since he was not ready unconditionally to break his covenant. He was willing to do so only if the price offered was high enough, and, accordingly, a defendant who offered such a price induced the seller to take the final steps towards breaking his covenant by making his willingness to sell unconditional.

(ii) the plaintiff association, although a certified trade union, were, nevertheless, entitled to maintain an action against the defendants for damages for conspiracy to procure breaches of contract and for injunctions without proof of specific damage.

Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co. ([1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 74 L.T. 83), and National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian ([1945] 2 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 81; 174 L.T. 8), applied.

(iii) the maintenance of fixed prices and the covenant system as an integral feature of that policy was a trade interest which the plaintiffs were entitled to protect against unlawful interferers, and the expenses incurred in detecting each separate breach by the defendants, although unable to be precisely quantified, were proveable as damage.

Thorne v. Motor Trade Association ([1937] 3 All E.R. 157; [1937] A.C. 797; 157 L.T. 399); and Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. New Garage and Motor Co., Ltd. ([1915] A.C. 79; 111 L.T. 862), applied.

[AS TO TORTS ARISING OUT OF THE OPERATIONS OF TRADE UNIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 516-524, paras. 813-822; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 112-120, Nos. 1171-1236.]

C Cases referred to :

(1) Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A.C. 495; 70 L.J.P.C. 76; 85 L.T. 289; 65 J.P. 708; 42 Digest 971, 30.

(2) Lumley v. Gye, (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L.J.Q.B. 463; 42 Digest 987, 169.

(3) Blake v. Lanyon, (1795), 6 Term Rep. 221; 34 Digest 170, 1331.

(4) De Francesco v. Barnum, (1890), 63 L.T. 514; 34 Digest 170, 1332.

(5) Wilkins (Fred) & Brothers, Ltd. v. Weaver, [1915] 2 Ch. 322; 84 L.J.Ch. 929; 34 Digest 1329.

(6) Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co., [1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 65 L.J.Q.B. 262; 74 L.T. 83; 60 J.P. 52; 42 Digest 988, 178.

(7) National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian, [1945] 2 All E.R. 593; [1946] K.B. 81; 115 L.J.K.B. 43; 174 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.

(8) Thorne v. Motor Trade Asscn., [1937] 3 All E.R. 157; [1937] A.C. 797; 106 L.J.K.B. 495; 157 L.T. 399; Digest Supp.

(9) Ware & De Freville, Ltd. v. Motor Trade Asscn., [1921] 3 K.B. 40; 90 L.J.K.B. 949; 125 L.T. 265; 42 Digest 984, 141.

(10) Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. New Garage & Motor Co., Ltd., [1915] A.C. 79; 83 L.J.K.B. 1574; 111 L.T. 862; 17 Digest 138, 426.

(11) Elphinstone (Lord) v. Monkland Iron & Coal Co., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 332; 17 Digest 146, 483.

ACTION by the plaintiffs claiming an injunction to restrain the defendants from procuring breaches of covenants made with the plaintiffs by the purchasers of new cars whereby those purchasers undertook not to re-sell the cars for a period of one year without the consent of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs further claimed damages for (1) conspiracy to procure breaches of contract; (2) procuring breaches of contract; (3) breach of contract. ROXBURGH, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs, granted an injunction, and ordered an inquiry as to damages.

Pritt, K.C., Aldous and J. Brewis for the plaintiffs.

Shelley, K.C., and Hunter-Brown for the defendants.

ROXBURGH, J.: The plaintiffs, a certified trade union, are an association of which all British motor car manufacturers and all their authorised distributors and dealers are members. No imported cars are available at present. Accordingly, no dealer who is not a member of the association can obtain from any manufacturer in the ordinary course of trade a new car for sale to the public. Every authorised distributor or dealer who obtains such a car is bound to sell at the list price. If he breaks this rule he is liable to be fined, and in the end he may be put on a stop list. The effect of this is that no member of the association is permitted to trade with him. All the defendants are either not members or on the stop list, and, accordingly, they cannot obtain a new car through an authorised dealer except by some device, such as corruption or impersonation. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts, referred to the "ring" in the market of which the defendants were members, and continued :—] The usual plan of operation is for one of the members or associates in this market to put up an ostensible purchaser to sign the covenant, providing him with enough notes to pay the list price for the car, reward himself handsomely, and, if necessary, grease a palm or two. Many of the transactions which I have investigated tend to conform to this pattern. While the ostensible purchaser is really an agent of the operator who supplies the money, he executes the deed in his own name and without power of attorney. Accordingly, he is alone liable on the covenant, and when his principal, in accordance with the bargain, calls on him to hand over the car, he procures a breach of covenant. This operator, however, does not in the normal case himself sell the car to the public. He sells to another trader. If that other trader is an independent operator, he cannot be sued for procuring breach of covenant, because the covenant does not run with the car, and, accordingly, the second operator is dealing not with the covenantor but with another operator who is not bound by the covenant. It would be otherwise if the first operator was the agent of the second operator. Sometimes, however, there is only one operator who finds an independent covenantor anxious and willing to sell.

This case necessitates a close investigation of the law relating to procurement of breaches of contract. In Quinn v. Leathem (1) LORD MACNAGHTEN, referring to the decision in Lumley v. Gye (2) said ([1901] A.C. 510) :

"Speaking for myself, I have no hesitation in saying that I think the decision was right, not on the ground of malicious intention—that was not, I think, the gist of the action—but on the ground that a violation of legal right committed knowingly is a cause of action, and that it is a violation of legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognised by law if there be no sufficient justification for the interference."

I have already said enough about the defendants and their activities to show that, if they interfere knowingly with contractual relations, they have no justification for doing so, but counsel for the defendants contends that it is no tort merely to make a price with a man who is offering a car for sale in breach of covenant, because a willing seller needs no inducement. The importance of the point is obvious, because, if it is well founded, the question whether a tort has been committed will depend on whether the buyer or the seller speaks the first word, and, as the buyer and the seller may both be hostile to the plaintiffs for obvious reasons, the plaintiffs are likely to be met with unchallengeable evidence that the seller took the initiative.

It is true that the tort is often spoken of as inducing or procuring breach of contract, but I shall adhere to LORD MACNAGHTEN'S word "interference," and I shall endeavour to interpret that word in the knowledge that LORD MACNAGHTEN, in using it, had Lumley v. Gye (2) in his mind. Lumley v. Gye (2) is, undoubtedly, a case in the direct line of descent of this principle of the common law, but Lumley v. Gye (2) had an earlier ancestry, and I feel that I shall not err if I interpret LORD MACNAGHTEN'S phrase in the light of those earlier cases. The first is Blake v. Lanyon (3). That decision was :

"An action will lie for continuing to employ the servant of another after notice without enticing him away. Here no fault could be imputed to the defendant for taking Hobbs into his service in the first instance because then he had no notice of Hobb's prior engagement with the plaintiff, but as soon as he had notice of that fact, he ought to have discharged him."

That case was followed in De Francesco v. Barnum (4), the headnote of which is :

"The plaintiff in May, 1889, entered into agreements with five girls whereby they agreed to perform in the ballet for the plaintiff during the following pantomime season at certain salaries. In October, 1889, Barnum, who had at that time no notice of these agreements, engaged the same girls to perform under his directions. The plaintiff, on discovering this engagement, gave notice to Barnum of the agreements of May, 1889, but notwithstanding this the girls continued to be employed by Barnum. The plaintiff sued Barnum for damages for continuing to employ the girls after notice of the agreements of May, 1889, and the girls for breach of those agreements. Held, following Blake v. Lanyon (3), that an action will lie against one who continues to employ the servant of another after notice of the prior contract of service, and that in order to maintain such an action it is not necessary that the employer and employed should stand in the strict relation of master and servant."

FRY, L.J., who was sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division, said (63 L.T. 515) :

"Then this further point arises : in Blake v. Lanyon (3) the case was one of master and servant, and not merely of employer and employed. It is suggested that the doctrine cannot be applied except in the strict case of master and servant. But it is to be observed in the case of Lumley v. Gye (2) the strict relation of master and servant did not exist, and the court nevertheless held that the doctrine of enticement did apply and was actionable, although the relation of master and servant might not have existed. It appears to me plainly to follow that, inasmuch as it has been now held that in the cases where it is not master and servant the doctrine of enticing will apply, the law is the same in the case of continuing in employment after notice, and has been settled to be this, that you can maintain an action either for enticing away a servant or person employed, or for continuing to employ a person, a servant, or employee after notice. I think, therefore, that the action lies."

I cannot doubt that LORD MACNAGHTEN, in using the word "interference," had such cases in mind. Indeed, it is possible that, in choosing that word for his statement of general principle, he intended to make some reduction in their ambit, for those cases seem to treat something akin to mere passivity as a tort and to require active dissociation from the breach of contract, and they are still of unimpaired authority in the circumstances to which they apply and have since been followed by JOYCE, J., in Wilkins (Fred) & Brothers, Ltd. v. Weaver (5). LORD MACNAGHTEN preferred the word "interference" for his statement of the doctrine, and this seems to me to predicate active association of some kind with the breach, but, in my judgment, any active step taken by a defendant, having knowledge of the covenant, by which he facilitates a breach of that covenant is enough. If this be so, a defendant, by agreeing to buy, paying for, and taking delivery of a motor car known by him to be offered to him in breach of covenant, takes active steps by which he facilitates a breach of covenant, and it is not seriously contended that in any of the cases with which I am concerned the defendant did not know of the existence of the covenant or thought that the covenantor had obtained a release. The plaintiffs will succeed even if I have construed the word "interference" too broadly, because, if a further element of inducement must be present, that further element can be found. The covenantor who offers a car for sale is not unconditionally ready to break his covenant. He is willing to do so only if the price offered is high enough, and, accordingly, a defendant who offers such a price induces the seller to take the final step towards breaking his covenant by making his willingness to sell unconditional. It is, of course, necessary for the tort of procurement of breach of contract to establish damage. I will postpone the consideration of that question until a later stage in my judgment.

[HIS LORDSHIP then referred to the evidence and found as a fact that there had been breaches or procurement of breaches of covenants by the defendants, and continued :] I now come to the question of damages, and I have to deal with it both in connection with the conspiracy and also in relation to the breaches of covenant. In Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co. (6), a decision of the Court of Appeal, the headnote is :

"In order to support an action for maliciously inducing persons to break their business contracts with the plaintiff proof of specific damage need not be given ; it is sufficient to prove facts from which it may properly be inferred that some damage must result to the plaintiff from the defendant's wrongful acts."

KAY, L.J., said (ibid., 155) :

"As to the third head, it was argued that the defendant was not bound by any contract with the plaintiffs, and that, in order to maintain an action against him for inducing subscribers to break their contracts with the plaintiffs, damage to the plaintiffs must be shown. I agree that the gist of the action would be damage ; but if a judge or jury could properly infer from the acts complained of that those acts must result in damage to the plaintiffs, that is enough. As I have already pointed out, if the defendant had not obtained the information fraudulently the only other way would have been to get it from the newspaper, which he must have bought. But further, what the defendant did was a direct interference with the plaintiffs' business. It was an obtaining of very valuable information, in respect of which the plaintiffs made profits by communicating it to a limited number of persons. It is obvious that what the defendant did could be done by others, and very few persons would become subscribers if the information could be got by inducing some person who had it as a subscriber to communicate to others in this way. The inference is irresistible that damage must accrue to the plaintiffs from such an act as the defendant has committed."

The Exchange Telegraph Company was a trading corporation and the plaintiff association is a certified trade union. Does that distinction stand in the way of the plaintiffs ? I think not. The headnote in National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian (7), a decision of the Court of Appeal, begins :

"A trade union can, in general, maintain an action in tort, and an action for libel is no exception to that rule."

SCOTT, L.J., dealing with this important matter and the Acts relating to trade unions, said ([1946] K.B. 86) :

"In my view, the true interpretation of the Acts is that a trade union is given all powers of a persona juridica except (a) those solely characteristic of a natural person, and (b) those which are expressly excepted by the creating or enabling statute. This conclusion is strongly supported by a consideration of what must have been in the mind of Parliament. The policy of the Act was to encourage collective bargaining by legalising the position of trade associations formed for purposes which, taken alone, were obnoxious to the common law as being in restraint of trade. The main feature of collective bargaining is to collect the members on each bargaining side into coherent units which can speak or make agreements for the side."

It is noticeable that SCOTT, L.J., says "each side." He continued (ibid.) :

- "Therefore, the more each side in an industry can be collected together so as to act with one mind, the better for the policy. Enthusiasm for joint action is the driving force, and disintegration of the union is the supreme danger. The men's union, more especially, must be able to protect itself against any form of attack calculated to arouse doubts and suspicions in the minds of members, and so to destroy the cohesion and will to act of the union. Against endeavours of this sort the union must have powers of defence; and the most effective power of all is the right of action in the King's courts. Indeed, that right seems to me vital, and
- A I cannot think that Parliament could possibly have intended not to confer it."
- B

It is strange how appropriately those words apply to the present case, once you make the transference which SCOTT, L.J., himself contemplates from a union of men to a union of masters. UTHWATT, J., said (ibid., 88) :

- "It is well established that in certain cases a trading corporation may bring a suit in respect of an imputation on its trading reputation, and I see no reason why a non-trading corporation should not have the same rights as respects imputations on the conduct by it of its activities. A trade union to my mind stands in the same position. It, too, has its reputation. Why should it not be protected? The social duty so to conduct the affairs of the union as not to invite well-founded criticism is hardly forwarded by a denial of the right to seek redress for an unjustified disparagement of its activities."
- C
- D

- The plaintiff association is a trade union having its trade interests which it is entitled to protect. In Thorne v. Motor Trade Association (8), LORD ROCHE, in a reference to Ware & De Freville Ltd. v. Motor Trade Association (9)—the
- E Motor Trade Association in those two cases being the same body as the present plaintiffs—said ([1937] 3 All E.R. 171) :

"The reason why procedure by way of stop list was there held not to be unlawful was that, though it was taken by persons acting in combination, the intent of the procedure was the protection of the defendants' trade interests."

- F I must hold, therefore, that the maintenance of fixed prices and the covenant system as an integral feature of that policy is a trade interest which the plaintiffs are entitled to protect against unlawful interferers. The present market is an organised counter attack on the covenant system. The defendants are a ring within that market which is counter attacking by
- G means of a conspiracy to procure breaches of contract and many overt acts have been proved. These counter attackers adopt every available means of covering up their tracks, and, as occasion requires, resort to false names, false addresses, and false documents. The plaintiffs are bound to react strongly against such a counter attack which imperils their very existence. I must recall what the plaintiffs' secretary said :

- H "There would be no manufacturers' prices if they were not maintained. It would be beyond human endurance to expect dealers to sell at a narrow margin when they saw their customers immediately obtain the price of three times that amount within a few minutes of sale . . . At the moment . . . all the functions of the association turn on the covenant system. . . . With the covenant scheme removed, in the present state of the market I can see no useful purpose that the association can perform."

I accept that evidence, and if, of course, the association could perform no useful purpose, I am prepared to infer that its membership would decline almost, if not quite, to the point of extinction. To resist such a counter attack, and also counter attacks from various other directions, the plaintiffs maintain a large investigation department, and the money actually expended in unravelling and detecting the unlawful machinations of the defendants which have been proved in this case before any proceedings could be taken must have been considerable. I can see no reason for not treating the expenses so incurred which could not be recovered as part of the costs of the action as directly attributable to their tort or torts. That these expenses cannot be precisely quantified is true, but it is also immaterial. The plaintiffs have proved the damage which is essential to the tort of conspiracy, and they are entitled to an inquiry.

Not all the overt acts are exclusively referable to the conspiracy. Two transactions, though forming no part of the conspiracy, represent breaches of covenant. Damages for each breach of covenant must be assessed separately, and great care must be taken to ensure that in no case are damages awarded twice over in respect of the same transaction. Counsel for the defendants, however, contended that this is not enough. He submits that there should be no inquiry as regards damages for breach of covenant, because, as he contends, only nominal damages are recoverable. I do not think so. I think that as regards each separate breach the Chancery master must estimate as best he can the pecuniary loss which the plaintiffs have suffered having regard to the circumstances in which it occurred and the difficulties which have confronted the plaintiffs in detecting and unravelling these transactions before they were in a position to take proceedings, and I shall direct an inquiry accordingly.

For these propositions I feel that I may legitimately derive some support from the speech of LORD DUNEDIN in Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. New Garage & Motor Co., Ltd. (10). The second part of the headnote, which I must read in order to explain the point of the case, is:

"The appellants, who were manufacturers of motor tyres, covers, and tubes, supplied these goods to the respondents, who were dealers, under an agreement whereby the respondents, in consideration of certain trade discounts, bound themselves not to tamper with the marks on the goods, not to sell or offer the goods to any private customers or to any co-operative society at less than the appellants' current list prices, not to supply to persons whose supplies the appellants had decided to suspend, not to exhibit or export without the consent of the appellants, and to pay the sum of £5 by way of liquidated damages for every tyre, cover, or tube sold or offered in breach of the agreement. The respondents sold a tyre cover to a co-operative society below the current list price. In an action for breach of contract, it was proved that substantially the whole of the appellants' business in these articles was done through the trade; that in order to prevent underselling the appellants insisted upon all their trade customers signing agreements of this nature; and that the probable effect of underselling by any particular trade customer was to force their other trade customers to deal elsewhere:—Held, assuming, without deciding, that the stipulated sum applied to all the preceding stipulations in the agreement, that it was liquidated damages."

LORD DUNEDIN said (ibid., 88):

"Turning now to the facts of the case, it is evident that the damage apprehended by the appellants owing to the breaking of the agreement was an indirect and not a direct damage. So long as they got their price from the respondents for each article sold, it could not matter to them directly what the respondents did with it. Indirectly it did. Accordingly, the agreement is headed 'Price Maintenance Agreement,' and the way in which the appellants would be damaged if prices were cut is clearly explained in evidence by Mr. Baisley, and no successful attempt is made to controvert that evidence. But though damage as a whole from such a practice would be certain, yet damage from any one sale would be impossible to forecast. It is just, therefore, one of those cases where it seems quite reasonable for parties to contract that they should estimate that damage at a certain figure, and provided that figure is not extravagant there would seem no reason to suspect that it is not truly a bargain to assess damages, but rather a penalty to be held in terrorem."

Then LORD DUNEDIN deals with certain cases, including Elphinstone (Lord) v. Monkland Iron and Coal Co. (11) and in a reference to Elphinstone's case (11) in the Court of Appeal, he says this (ibid., 89) :

"... if my view of the facts in the present case is correct, then RIGBY, L.J., would have agreed with me, for the last words of his judgment are as follows : 'On the other hand it is stated that, when the damages caused by a breach of contract are incapable of being ascertained, the sum made by the contract payable on such a breach is to be regarded as liquidated damages. The question arises, what is meant in this statement by the expression "incapable of being ascertained" ? In their proper sense the words appear to refer to a case where no rule or measure of damages is available for the guidance of a jury as to the amount of the damages, and a judge would have to tell them they must fix the amount as best they can.' To arrive at the indirect damage in this case, supposing no sum had been stipulated, that is just what a judge would, in my opinion, have had to do."

As the tort of conspiracy, accompanied by many overt acts, has been proved, I must grant an injunction to restrain the defendants and each of them by themselves, their servants, or agents, or otherwise, from buying, or facilitating the dealing with, a motor-car, including a chassis, offered for sale or other disposal by a person, or by the agent of a person, known by them to have executed a deed of covenant with the plaintiffs and to contemplate breaking such covenant.

Order accordingly. Defendants to pay costs.

Solicitors : Osmond, Bard & Westbrook (for the plaintiffs) ; S. Myers & Son (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E. & S. RUBEN, LTD. v. FAIRE BROS. & CO. LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), December 2, 3, 6, 1948.]

Sale of Goods—Sale by sample—Goods not in accordance with sample—Simple process necessary to make goods correspond with sample.

G Sale of Goods—Acceptance—Acts of ownership in relation to goods—Re-sale—Dispatch by seller direct to buyer's customer—Goods not in accordance with sample—Right of subsequent rejection—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 35.

H Vulcanised rubber material was sold under the description of "Linatex ... in 41 ft. rolls, 5 ft. wide," with a small sample consisting of a flat soft piece. The material supplied was not of the measurement specified and was crinkly and, in some cases, hard and folded, but evidence was given that these defects could have been corrected by warming the material and pressing out the crinkles. Following a request from the buyers, the sellers sent half of the material direct to a customer of the buyers to whom it had been re-sold by description and by the same sample. The customer rejected the material and the buyers purported to reject it. In an action by the sellers against the buyers for the price :—

HELD: (i) when goods were delivered requiring even a simple process to make them correspond with the sample, they were not supplied in accordance with the sample.

(ii) constructive delivery of the material took place when it was set aside against the contract, and delivery to the buyers' customers, being effected by the sellers as agents for the buyers, constituted acceptance of the material by the buyers within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 35, and, therefore, the buyers were debarred from rejecting it and could claim only on a breach of warranty.

A

[AS TO ACCEPTANCE OF GOODS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 145-150, paras. 183-192; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 29, pp. 583-594, Nos. 1854-1934.]

AS TO SALE OF GOODS BY DESCRIPTION AND SAMPLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 59-62, para. 71, and pp. 67-69, paras. 75, 76; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 432-438, Nos. 616-675, and pp. 451-457, Nos. 789-847.]

B

Case referred to:

(1) Hardy (E.) & Co. (London) v. Hillerns & Fowler, [1923] 2 K.B. 490; 92 L.J.K.B. 930; 129 L.T. 674; affg., [1923] 1 K.B. 658; 39 Digest 456, 831.

C

ACTION for the price of goods sold and delivered and for carriage, and counter-claim for loss of profit by reason of breach of contract.

By letter dated June 3, 1947, the plaintiffs offered to sell to the defendants "3/5 tons of Linatex, this is in 41 ft. rolls, 5 ft. wide, 6 oz. to the square yd. at 1s. 9d. per lb. We enclose a small sample showing what it is like. We sell this largely for making soles for slippers . . ." On June 5, in reply to a request from the defendants, they sent a larger sample and stated: "(a) This material does not age. It is government disposal stock. It is pure natural rubber of very high quality and is vulcanised on the plantation. (b) As regards colour, it is in the original natural and grey. It comes in rolls, and is not protected. The outside of the rolls may be slightly soiled, but the inside is all perfectly clean . . . (d) With reference to further supplies, we would like to say that the 25 tons would be the total quantity and there would be no more available." On June 17 the defendants' commercial traveller made an offer of the material by description and by the same sample to Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., of Skelmersdale, Lancashire, and obtained an order for "10 tons vulcanised rubber material, surplus government stock, grey, at 2s. 0½d. a lb." He informed his principals by telephone that he had received the order. The defendants' representative telephoned to the plaintiffs' representative, asking whether the plaintiffs would take an order for 10 tons, 5 tons for delivery at once and 5 tons to be held for delivery at a later date. He said that half would go direct to the customer to whom he had re-sold it and half would be delivered to him at Leicester. This was accepted on behalf of the plaintiffs. Confirming this arrangement, the defendants wrote a letter to the plaintiffs the same day saying: "With reference to our conversation with you this morning regarding the Linatex natural colour rubber material, we should like you to reserve for us 10 tons of this as our customer is definitely interested. Five tons will be required at once and 5 tons to be delivered in August. We should like to know whether you can send the 5 tons direct for us and whether you are prepared to hold the other 5 tons in stock until August when we can give you further delivery instructions or whether you would prefer us to have this latter quantity to Leicester. Naturally we would prefer you to hold it as it will save carriage charges . . . Our official order together with delivery instructions and labels, etc., will be sent in the course of post, most probably tomorrow." The official order when sent read as follows: "10 tons vulcanised rubber material. Grey. In rolls 5 ft. wide. Half at once direct to: Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd.,

D

E

F

G

H

Skelmersdale, Lancs. Half Sept. 1, delivery instructions to be given later.” No reference was made to samples or to the material being in 41 ft. rolls. Thereupon the defendants’ representative confirmed the re-sale to Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., accepting their order and sending off instructions for the labelling of the material to them. The following day he telephoned instructions to the plaintiffs to send the material for the defendants to the Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., in Lancashire. The plaintiffs sent it there as requested.

A Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., examined the material, and refused to accept it. The defendants informed the plaintiffs’ representative that the goods had been rejected by Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., whereupon the plaintiffs’ representative visited Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd., to inspect the goods. The defendants’ representative also inspected the goods, and on July 4 the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs, enclosing two cuttings and saying: “You will readily see that it is impossible to cut this material on a machine press, because it will not lie flat. When we quoted for the goods, we submitted a sample which you sent along, and quoted for the material in rolls. It is certainly not in rolls, but in a crinkled condition, which means it is impossible to cut it satisfactorily. Evidently Mr. Bolton” (a director of Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd.) “was right when he stated to Mrs. Ruben” (the plaintiffs’ representative) “that the material could not be cut on the press and was not worth 3d. per pound. Having received our representative’s report, we are now satisfied that the material is not as represented in your letter of June 3.” On July 11, Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd. wrote to the defendants, saying: “. . . there is not one piece anywhere near 41 ft. in length and 5 ft. in width, as offered. We are also inclosing a small piece which has gone hard.” On July 23 the defendants’ solicitors wrote to the plaintiffs’ solicitors: “According to the instructions which we received from our clients the goods supplied by your clients did not conform either to the description contained in your clients’ letter of June 3, 1947, nor to the sample on which the order was placed.”

Caplan for the plaintiffs.

E T. G. Roche for the defendants.

HILBERY, J., stated the facts and found as a fact that the order given on the telephone on June 17 was a contract for the purchase of the material and that the written order which followed was not intended to be an exhaustive statement of the contract in writing but was a confirmation of an order for material of the description and in accordance with the sample already supplied.

F He also found that the defendants were right in their contention that the material was not of the description contracted for. He held that the dispatch of the goods to the defendants’ customer was undertaken by the plaintiffs on behalf of the defendants as a matter of business courtesy and not as a matter of contractual obligation. He held further that the defendants purported to reject the goods. He continued: The next question that arises is: Had the

G defendants lost their right to reject? If they re-sold after making their contract with the plaintiffs and after delivery of the goods to them, even though it was merely a constructive delivery, there is strong evidence that they acted in a way which was inconsistent with the right to reject. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 35, provides:

H “The buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them, or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller . . .”

When the defendants’ representative intimated to the plaintiffs that he would take 10 tons of the article offered, 5 tons to be delivered then and 5 tons later, and asked the plaintiffs if they would send the goods direct to the buyer and the plaintiffs agreed to do so, the defendants’ representative was taking delivery constructively at the plaintiffs' premises. He was asking the plaintiffs to act for him in giving the goods to the carrier to take direct to the defendants' sub-purchaser. In his letter of June 17, he said: "We should like you to reserve for us 10 tons of this," i.e., in accordance with his conversation on the telephone, and he continued: "We should like to know whether you can send the 5 tons direct for us." In other words, he asked whether the plaintiffs would act for the defendants in the sending of the goods, which were the defendants' goods, to the defendants' buyer. That, in my opinion, shows that he had taken constructive delivery at the plaintiffs' premises when the plaintiffs set aside goods against the contract, and thereafter the plaintiffs were acting for him as his agents in dispatching the goods on their journey to Skelmersdale Shoe Co., Ltd. If that were so, then, as ATKIN, L.J., pointed out ([1923] 2 K.B. 498) in E. Hardy & Co. (London) v. Hillerns & Fowler (1):

"... we have here to face the problem whether the act of the buyers in re-selling and dispatching the goods was inconsistent with the ownership of the sellers. If it was, they must be deemed to have accepted them."

In reference to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 35, ATKIN, L.J., said (ibid.):

"... all the words of the section must have effect given to them. The words are: 'When the goods have been delivered to him'—that is to the buyer—'and he does any act' of the kind specified. That means that the buyer must have got delivery before he does the act."

In the present case, the defendants took delivery at the plaintiffs' premises of the goods when they were set aside against the contract, and, thereafter, the handling of the goods by passing them on to the carrier was an act done by the plaintiffs on behalf of the defendants with the defendants' goods. That being so, it appears to me that the defendants lost their right to reject, and must be driven to their plea of breach of warranty.

Having found, as I have, that the contract was for the goods which were offered by the plaintiffs, namely, Linatex in 41 ft. rolls, 5 ft. wide, at 1s. 9d. a lb, as per the small sample, I am satisfied that the goods were in rolls, in as much as they were rolled up in lengths, but they were not according to the measurements that were specified when the goods were described, and there is no doubt that the measurements given in this case were words of description. The goods were not in accordance with the description, but it is said that they were in accordance with the sample, although they were crinkly and folded in some cases, while the sample was flat and soft. The hardness of some of the pieces seems to me to be a matter which is incidental to the article, it being a rubber sheet article. A difference in temperature will cause it to go hard or relatively hard, and I am not satisfied that anyone in the trade who was dealing with a piece of this sheet rubber material would not expect there to be some variation in the nature of the hardness or pliability between sheets as they were when delivered to him rolled up and the sample, because the mere handling of the small sample piece, carrying it in, perhaps, warm conditions, will make it soft or extra soft, or pliable, but the folding of the material is a matter of considerable importance because, if the material is to be used by shoe manufacturers, as this article was, the flatness of the sheet is essential if it is to be put in a cutting machine and not into a clipping machine, because in a cutting machine, the sheet has to be lifted and brought up against the knives which are fixed, and the material has to be flat to make the cuts correct. It was unfortunate that so small a sample was used, because it was a perfectly flat sample, and the goods delivered were not flat.

In regard to the fact that the goods showed signs of folding, and were, in some respects, crinkly, it is said that that could have been corrected by warming them and pressing out the crinkles when the rubber was warm. It is not in compliance with a contractual obligation if an article is delivered which is not in accordance with the sample, but which can, by some simple process—no matter how simple the process is—be turned into an article which will be in accordance with the sample on which the contract was made. In the circumstances, I think that the goods were not in accordance with the description, nor were they according to the sample. While I think that the defendants did intend to convey to the plaintiffs that they rejected the goods, and the plaintiffs understood that the defendants were rejecting the goods, none the less I think, A for the reasons I have given, that the defendants have lost their right to reject and must treat the matter on the basis of breach of warranty. Therefore, on the claim, subject to the counterclaim and to the set-off of any amount that is due on the counterclaim, there must be judgment for the plaintiffs, and I think that the counterclaim can be dealt with, when particulars of the alleged damage B have been given, either by arrangement between the parties or by a master in the King's Bench Division.

Judgment for the plaintiffs on the claim with costs. Leave to the defendants to amend the counterclaim to ask for damages for breach of warranty and liberty to apply after damages determined. Costs on the counterclaim reserved.

Solicitors: Saunders, Sobell, Greenbury & Leigh (for the plaintiffs); McKenna & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DAY v. WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Singleton, L.JJ.), December 20, 21, 1948.]

D Practice—Pleading—Striking out—Affidavit evidence—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4. Gaming—Recovery of gambling debt—Competence of action—Account stated—Bookmakers' weekly statement—Balance in plaintiff's favour.

The plaintiff laid bets with the defendants, who were bookmakers, and on Feb. 7, 1948, he received from them a statement of his winnings and losses over a period of one week, showing a balance in his favour of £49 5s. 3d. which was described as being "carried forward." The plaintiff issued a writ against the defendants claiming (inter alia) payment of this amount. The statement of claim referred to the bookmakers' weekly statement of Feb. 7, 1948, as being an account stated, and the claim was based only on this document. On an application by the defendants for the statement of claim to be struck out under R.S.C., F Ord. 25, r. 4, the master accepted affidavit evidence in support of the defendants' contention, copies of documents referred to in the statement of claim being exhibited to the affidavit. On an appeal by the plaintiff to the Court of Appeal from an order of the judge confirming the master's order for the statement of claim to be struck out and the action to be dismissed, objection was taken by the plaintiff to the admission of affidavit evidence on a summons under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, and the Court of Appeal G gave leave to the defendants to amend the summons by striking out the words "under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4."

HELD: (i) if documents were referred to in a pleading, they became part of the pleading, and it was open to the court to look at them without the necessity for any affidavit exhibiting them.

H (ii) although the affidavit evidence was not admissible under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, the court could accept it in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction to strike out a pleading, or part of a pleading, as being an abuse of the process of the court.

(iii) the bookmakers' weekly statement, which showed a balance to be carried forward, was not such an absolute acknowledgment of indebtedness as was required to constitute an account stated; no cause of action was shown by the pleadings; and the statement of claim should be struck out.

[AS TO STRIKING OUT PLEADINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 253-256, paras. 419, 420; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 71-82, Nos. 623-687.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Siqueira v. Noronha, [1934] A.C. 332; 103 L.J.P.C. 63; 151 L.T. 6; Digest Supp.
- (2) Gugenheim v. Ladbrooke & Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 292; 177 L.T. 74; A 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Hyams v. Stuart King, [1908] 2 K.B. 696; 77 L.J.K.B. 794; 99 L.T. 424; 25 Digest 401, 58.
- (4) Evans (Joseph) & Co. v. Heathcote, [1918] 1 K.B. 418; 87 L.J.K.B. 593; 118 L.T. 556; 12 Digest 289, 2375.
- (5) Alberg v. Chandler, (1948), 64 T.L.R. 394.
- (6) Goodson v. Grierson, [1908] 1 K.B. 761; 77 L.J.K.B. 507; 98 L.T. 740; 25 Digest 402, 68.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of PRITCHARD, J., made in chambers and dated Nov. 24, 1948, confirming an order of the master striking out the plaintiff's statement of claim and ordering the action to be dismissed.

By the statement of claim the plaintiff claimed from the defendants (a) £49 5s. 3d., alleged to be due on an account stated, and (b) £695, alleged to be due under an agreement. The Court of Appeal now held (a) that the account referred to in the statement of claim in regard to the sum of £49 5s. 3d., was not an account stated, and (b) that no agreement was proved in regard to the sum of £695, and they dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of SINGLETON, L.J.

Caplan for the plaintiff.

Barry, K.C., and Wingate-Saul for the defendants.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I will ask SINGLETON, L.J., to give the first judgment.

SINGLETON, L.J. : This is the plaintiff's appeal from a judgment of PRITCHARD, J., in chambers. By the statement of claim the plaintiff claims from the defendants, who are bookmakers, (i) £49 5s. 3d., said to be due to him on an account stated and settled between the parties, and (ii) £695 15s., claimed to be due to him under an agreement between the parties contained in a letter written by the plaintiff and dated Feb. 9, 1948, accepting an offer made by the defendants dated Dec. 8, 1947, and a printed inclosure therewith. The defendants moved to strike out the statement of claim, and on Nov. 11, 1948, the master ordered that the action be dismissed with costs. The plaintiff appealed, and PRITCHARD, J., dismissed the appeal. Later, application was made by counsel for the plaintiff for leave to appeal to this court, and leave was granted.

Before considering the various points which are raised, it is well to look at the record before the court. The writ was issued on June 28, 1948. By it the plaintiff claimed the sum of £754 18s. 7d. "being the amount due and payable to the plaintiff by the defendants under and by virtue of an agreement made on Feb. 9, 1948." Then, by way of particulars : "Feb. 9, 1948. To amount due under and by virtue of an agreement aforesaid. £754 18s. 7d." The defendants asked for further and better particulars of that claim as follows :

"Of the alleged agreement, stating whether the same was oral or in writing. If oral, give the names of the parties thereto and the time and place of the making of such agreement, particularly the terms thereof. If in writing, identify the document and state as to how the sum of £754 18s. 7d. is arrived at."

The particulars given were these :

"The said agreement was in writing. It was contained in two documents received by the defendants on, respectively, Feb. 10 and 13, 1948, and the sum of £754 18s. 7d. is arrived at as to £695 in respect of the transaction referred to in the first of the said documents and as to the balance in respect of the transaction referred to in the second of the said documents."

- A At a later stage a statement of claim was delivered, in para. 1 there appears the first mention of a claim on an account stated. When the defendants applied to strike out the statement of claim, they supported their application by an affidavit sworn by the secretary of the company and with that affidavit were exhibited copies of the documents referred to in the statement of claim.
- B Some objection appears to have been taken to the admission of affidavit evidence on a summons under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, it being rightly contended that on such a summons one can only look at the statement of claim itself. It was pointed out by the master that, apart from the jurisdiction under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, there was inherent jurisdiction in the court to strike out a pleading or part of a pleading as an abuse of the process of the court, and in such cases affidavit evidence could be received. I am not sure that there was any necessity
- C for the affidavit sworn on behalf of the defendants. All that that affidavit did was to exhibit the documents referred to in the statement of claim. It should be clear that, if documents are referred to in a pleading, they become part of the pleading, and it is open to the court to look at them without the need of any affidavit exhibiting them. There is nothing to show that the summons was amended, but the indorsement of the master leads one to believe
- D that he intended to treat it as amended because he dealt with the application under the inherent jurisdiction of the court and ordered that it be dismissed with costs. Assuming it was necessary to make any amendment, I cannot see that anyone was prejudiced by that in any way. There was an appeal to PRITCHARD, J., who upheld the decision of the master.

- E A point was taken in this court that, both before the master and the learned judge, this was an application under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4. Counsel for the defendants accordingly applied, in case it be necessary, to amend the summons by striking out the words "under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4," and to add the further ground that the statement of claim was an abuse of the process of the court. That amendment was allowed, counsel for the plaintiff not raising any objection, but reserving questions which might arise thereon.

- F Paragraph 1 of the statement of claim alleges a debt of, or sets up a claim for, £49 5s. 3d., which was said to be "found to be due from the defendants to the plaintiff on accounts stated and settled between them and"—and I emphasise this—"contained in a written account to the plaintiff from the defendants upon their printed letterhead which was dated Feb. 7, 1948." It is on that document alone—a document which is said to be dated Feb. 7,
- G 1948, but which is, in fact, a bookmakers' account for the week ending Feb. 7, 1948—that the plaintiff bases his claim under para. 1. I propose to deal with that claim a little later. In para. 2 the debt of £695 15s. is said to arise under an agreement between the parties contained in letters of Dec. 8, 1947, and Feb. 9, 1948. Copies of those documents are before the court. That of Dec. 8, 1947, is a letter from the defendants, the bookmakers, to the plaintiff,
- H and it begins in this way :

"Dear Sir, We have pleasure in advising you that we have now added your name to our clients' register for a deposit account. We thank you for your remittance of £25, which has been placed to the credit of your account, and you are, therefore, now entitled to invest up to this or any amount which might be standing to your credit at the time of placing your commission."

In other words, the bookmakers accepted the plaintiff as a client who could and would make bets with them up to a certain amount. The other document has at the bottom of it "Date of races, Feb. 9, 1948," and there is another date upon it—"Feb. 10, 1948"—which is post-marked. At the bottom of it, too, there is "Total amount invested £10." The document itself has five columns, of which the three middle columns contained entries. The second column—"Stake"—shows the bets, the total stake being £10. The third column—"Name of selection"—gives these names: "Salvaged, Secret Service, Laurel Crown"—names of horses or dogs doubled and trebled. The "track or meeting" was Leicester, and the document is alleged to show that on these bets the plaintiff on that day won £718 8s. 9d. I cannot read into those documents an enforceable agreement by the defendants to pay to the plaintiff either £718 8s. 9d. or £695 15s., which is the amount sued. How the difference arises, we have not been told. The arrangement to accept bets or commissions was made, and the document of Feb. 9 appears to show the result of some bets made on one day. I regard this claim put forward in this way as an abuse of the process of the court, and the plaintiff's claim on this head should be rejected. Equally, para. 2 of the statement of claim, as it stands and read with the documents which are mentioned, discloses no cause of action.

It is said that para. 1 of the statement of claim shows what is prima facie a good claim on an account stated, and, that being so, the plaintiff is entitled to go to trial, and, further, that under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, either the whole statement of claim must be struck out or none of it. Attention, however, was drawn to the notes under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, in THE ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1948, p. 457, and it is clear that under the inherent jurisdiction of the court there is power to strike out part of an indorsement of a writ, and counsel for the plaintiff accepted that position this morning. Therefore, it is clear now that under the inherent jurisdiction of the court para. 2 of the statement of claim can be struck out, even if para. 1 stands.

I shall now deal with para. 1 itself. Can it be said that the document which is headed "For the week ending Feb. 7, 1948" constitutes an account stated between the parties? The document is headed "J. J. Day, Esq. Account of William Hill (Park Lane), Ltd. For the week ending Feb. 7, 1948." There are a number of entries which clearly are in respect of bets on either horses or dogs. No one seemed to know which! At the bottom of the account there is the figure of "£49 5s. 3d." with the letters "c.f." before it, which means "carried forward." That is a document between the parties which would appear to show that in respect of some bets in the week ending Feb. 7, 1948, the plaintiff was in credit to the extent of £49 5s. 3d., and that that amount was carried forward. Carried forward to what place, or to what account? Apparently, to some account which may have been in credit or may have been in debit. There is nothing to show. Can it be said that this, of itself, shows the balance actually due between the parties, or that it is an account stated in the sense in which that expression is normally used? We were referred to several authorities on this matter, and, in particular, to Siqueira v. Noronha (1) in which LORD ATKIN, in a case before the Privy Council, dealt with the question of accounts stated and said ([1934] A.C. 337):

"But on the other hand, there is another form of account stated which is a very usual form as between merchants in business in which the account stated is an account which contains entries on both sides, and in which the parties who have stated the account between them have agreed that the items on one side should be set against the items upon the other side and the balance only should be paid; the items on the smaller side are set off and deemed to be paid by the items on the larger side, and there is a promise for good consideration to pay the balance arising from the fact that the items have been so set off and paid in the way described."

Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that this account—a bookmakers' account showing some winning bets and some losing bets—was a good account stated within these words of LORD ATKIN, and he referred to Gugenheim v. Ladbrooke & Co., Ltd. (2) on which he relied in support of his argument that in circumstances such as these the court ought not to strike out the statement of claim or order that the action be dismissed.

A It is necessary to consider precisely what an account stated is. I take these words from the notes on p. 52 of BULLEN & LEAKE'S PRECEDENTS OF PLEADINGS, 3rd ed. :

B “An account stated is an admission of a sum of money being due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and may be charged in the above count as a distinct cause of action. The count lies upon an absolute acknowledgment made by the defendant to the plaintiff of a debt due from him to the plaintiff and payable at the time of action brought.”

C This is a bookmakers' weekly account which shows £49 5s. 3d. carried forward to some other place. Can it be said that that is an absolute acknowledgment made by the defendants to the plaintiff of a debt due from them to him and payable at the time of action brought? I think not. There is nothing to show what was to happen to the £49 5s. 3d. It is not an account stated in the ordinary sense, and, that being so, I am of opinion that the plaintiff's claim under para. 1 of the statement of claim is misconceived, and no cause of action is shown, and in those circumstances I do not think that it is right that the plaintiff should be allowed to proceed with this action.

D Counsel for the defendants submitted that, even if the weekly bookmakers' account could be said to be an account stated, still it was something on which an action could not succeed, and he referred us to certain words of FARWELL, L.J. ([1908] 2 K.B. 724) in the well-known case of Hyams v. Stuart King (3), and also to the judgment of PICKFORD, L.J. ([1918] 1 K.B. 426, 427) in Evans v. Heathcote (4) and to the words of the other Lords Justices in the same case. He also referred us to Alberg v. Chandler (5), a recent decision of STREATFIELD, J., on the subject. I do not think it is necessary to consider this submission in relation to this appeal. I am satisfied, for the reasons I have given, that E the appeal ought to be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree. The question which we have to decide is whether this is an action which is frivolous or vexatious or an abuse of the F process of the court. Counsel for the plaintiff referred us to Goodson v. Grierson (6). That was a case in the Court of Appeal, in an action commenced by a bookmaker issuing a specially indorsed writ for the sum alleged to be due on a stated account. The defendant pleaded in his defence that the debts were gambling debts. The plaintiff admitted that, but set up in his answer other considerations, namely, the plaintiff's forbearance to sue and his giving G time to the defendant, at the latter's request. The defendant then applied to have the action dismissed as frivolous and vexatious. The master and the judge dismissed the action, but the Court of Appeal reversed the decision, and on this point, FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., said ([1908] 1 K.B. 764) :

H “In order to support an application of this kind the defendant has to show that under no possibility could there be a good cause of action consistently with the pleadings and the facts in the case. But in this case counsel for the defendant is obliged to admit that there are cases where it has been held that, having regard to the serious social consequences which would ensue from an unsatisfied demand for a debt of this kind, there may be good consideration in such forbearance.”

I mention this because it seems to me clear that, when one is considering whether an action is frivolous or vexatious, one must look at the pleadings and nothing else. One cannot assume that possibly, when the case comes to trial, the plaintiff may be able to put forward some other and better reason for succeeding. Prima facie, these transactions are betting transactions pure and simple and, therefore, null and void under the Gaming Act, 1845, and the only way in which the plaintiff seeks to get out of that is by alleging that document No. 2 in the affidavit of the defendants' secretary, which was disclosed by the defendants, is an account stated. The letter of Dec. 8, 1947, from the defendants to the plaintiff, under which the plaintiff starting betting with the defendants and deposited £25, states:

"A statement of account will be rendered to you each week and a cheque inclosed for any amount over and above your deposit."

This so-called account rendered is merely a weekly statement made in accordance with that letter, and I notice, among other things, that, though it is said to be a complete statement of account, there is no reference to the £25 which has been deposited. "C.f." indicates "carried forward," and, in my view refers to its being carried forward to the next week. Counsel for the plaintiff was compelled to admit that, if the plaintiff had made one bet only in respect of any particular week and had received a weekly account showing that he had won, say, £100 on that bet, that could not be said to be an account stated on which an action would lie, but, on the other hand, he argued that, if he made two bets, won on the first bet and lost on the second, and the weekly account shows that there was a balance due to him, that would be an account stated and he could recover on it. That seems to me to be making the Gaming Act, 1845, valueless. This is an obvious attempt to get round that Act. In my view, it ought not to succeed and the order of the learned judge was right.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: William Foux & Co. (for the plaintiff); Hardcastle Sanders & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JOHN LAING AND SON, LTD. v. KINGSWOOD ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Asquith, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), November 30, December 1, 2, 20, 1948.]

Rating—Beneficial occupation—Site occupied for purpose of carrying out works contract—Temporary structures erected, and used, by contractors on site of aerodrome under construction.

By the general conditions of a contract for the construction of an aerodrome the work was to be carried out under the instructions and to the satisfaction of the superintending officer of the Secretary of State for Air who was empowered to inspect the works and any materials thereon and from time to time to issue further instructions in regard (inter alia) (a) removal from the site of materials brought there by the contractors, (b) removal or re-execution of any work, (c) hours of work, and (d) dismissal of any foreman or workman of lower grade. The issue of passes for admission to the site was under his control. Obligations in regard to (a) watching, lighting and protecting the works, (b) removing rubbish, and (c) preventing nuisance were on the contractors. The Secretary of State for Air was empowered to determine the contract at any time by notice in writing and to give directions for the removal of all plant, temporary buildings and equipment from the site. For the purpose of carrying out the contract the contractors erected on a part of the site a number of buildings and other structures, comprising office accommodation for a supervisory staff of 75-100 persons, a workmen's canteen (erected in compliance with the requirements of the contract), garages, carpenters' shop, transport and weigh-bridge huts and concrete mixing plants. The construction of the aerodrome started in June, 1946, and was not expected to be finished before March, 1948. The structures in question were erected in June to October, 1946, and were in use. It was contended by the contractors that, by reason of the extensive powers conferred on the superintending officer, they were not in rateable occupation of the hereditament comprised of the structures :—

HELD : the control exercised by the Secretary of State for Air was in regard to the performance of the contract and did not interfere with the exclusive occupation of the hereditament by the contractors for the purposes of their work ; the possession being for the purposes of their business, was beneficial to them, and, having lasted for over 2 years, it was not of too transient a nature ; and, therefore, the contractors were in rateable occupation of the hereditament.

Principles in Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assess. ment Authority and Smith & Son, Ltd. ([1936] 2 All E.R. 322 ; [1936] A.C. 511), sub nom. Southern Ry. Co.'s Appeals, (155 L.T. 33), applied.

Decision of the DIVISIONAL COURT ([1948] 1 All E.R. 943 ; [1948] 2 K.B. 116), affirmed.

[AS TO RATEABLE OCCUPATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 351-353, para. 782 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 426-450, Nos. 10-173.]

D Cases referred to :

(1) Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority and Smith & Son, Ltd., Westminster Corpn. & Kent Valuation Committee v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority & Pullman Car Co., Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 322 ; [1936] A.C. 511 ; 105 L.J.K.B. 537 ; sub nom. Re Southern Ry. Co.'s Appeals, 155 L.T. 33 ; 100 J.P. 327 ; Digest Supp.

(2) Cory v. Bristow, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 262 ; 46 L.J.M.C. 273 ; 36 L.T. 594 ; 41 J.P. 709 ; 38 Digest 451, 178.

(3) Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co., [1895] A.C. 117 ; 64 L.J.M.C. 113 ; 71 L.T. 818 ; 59 J.P. 566 ; 38 Digest 424, 7.

(4) Cleveland Bridge & Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Darlington Union Assessment Committee, (1923), 21 L.G.R. 511 ; 38 Digest 443, 138.

(5) Smith v. Lambeth Assessment Committee, (1882), 10 Q.B.D. 327 ; 52 L.J.M.C. 1 ; 48 L.T. 57 ; 47 J.P. 244 ; 38 Digest 446, 157.

APPEAL by the ratepayers from a decision of the Divisional Court (LORD GODDARD, C.J., HUMPHREYS and PRITCHARD, JJ.), dated Apr. 29, 1948, and reported ([1948] 1 All E.R. 943), on a Case stated by Gloucestershire Quarter Sessions.

On Feb. 21, 1947, Thornbury Rural District Council, as rating authority for their area, made a proposal for the amendment of the valuation list by adding a hereditament described as "contractors' offices, canteens, huts, structures, land, etc." to be assessed at £484 gross and £400 rateable value. The ratepayers, who were the contractors referred to, objected to the proposal, and on Mar. 21, 1947, Kingswood Assessment Committee considered the proposal and the objection and allowed the amendment to the valuation list. The contractors appealed to quarter sessions who, by consent of the parties and by order of BIRKETT, J., dated Mar. 5, 1948, stated a Case under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 11.

By a written contract, dated June 21, 1946, between the contractors and the Secretary of State for Air, the contractors undertook to execute works involving the strengthening, widening and lengthening of a runway, the preparation of the landing ground, and the demolition of buildings at Filton Aerodrome, Gloucestershire. The contract sum was, approximately, £1,250,000, and the work needed involved 850,000 cubic yards of excavation, 500,000 cubic yards of hardcore filling, 180,000 cubic yards of concrete paving, demolition of 24 separate properties, the preparation of 235 acres of landing ground, and the laying of 9 miles of storm water drainage. On June 26, 1946, a part of the site was handed over to the contractors for the assembly of plant and offices, and the remainder of the site, on which constructional work was to be carried out, was handed over in sections as it became available. The contract date for completion was May 26, 1947, but circumstances had arisen which entitled the contractors to an extension of time and at the time of the hearing by quarter sessions it was not expected that the works would be completed before the end of March, 1948, though sections might be handed over to the Secretary of State before then. The hereditament comprised the following structures: (a) office accommodation for a supervisory staff of 75-100 persons; (b) garages, erected in October, 1946, of tubular steel frame let into the ground; (c) weigh-bridge huts; (d) workmen's canteen; (e) carpenters' shop; (f) transport hut; and (g) concrete mixing plant. The office accommodation, which was provided for in the contract, included (a) a main building which had been requisitioned and handed over to the contractors and was constructed of 8 in. cavity walls, asbestos roof, and concrete floors, with water, electric lighting, main drainage and central heating, and (b) offices, erected by the contractors in August and September, 1946, of sectional wood frame bolted together, with concrete floors, electric light and stove heating. The workmen's canteen, also provided for in the contract, and erected by the contractors in July and August, 1946, was a temporary building in sectional form with electricity and water laid on and heating by coke stoves. The contractors were obliged to carry out and complete the execution of the work to the satisfaction of the superintending officer of the Secretary of State for Air who was empowered from time to time to issue further instructions in regard (inter alia) to (a) the addition, omission or substitution of any work, (b) the removal or re-execution of any work, (c) removal from the site of any materials brought there by the contractors, (d) the order of the execution of the work, (e) hours of work, (f) suspension of work, and (g) dismissal of any foreman or workman of lower grade. The Secretary of State for Air had not used any part of the site handed over to the contractors for any purpose except the execution of works by the contractors.

The question for the opinion of the Divisional Court was whether or not the contractors were in rateable occupation of all or any of the structures comprised in the hereditament. The contractors contended (i) that they were not the occupiers of the premises in that their use thereof was subject to the control and directions of the superintending officer and they had not paramount occupation; (ii) that, if they were the occupiers, the occupation was not beneficial because (a) land forming part of a site on which building and engineering works were being carried out was struck with sterility, (b) no benefit was derived from the occupation of the land for the purpose of carrying out such work, (c) payments received by the contractors in respect of carrying out of works were not a benefit derived from the occupation of the land, and (d) the premises were not capable of separate occupation apart from the carrying out of the works under the contract. The Divisional Court held that the contractors were in rateable occupation. The contractors appealed from this decision, but the Court of Appeal now dismissed their appeal.

Harold Williams, K.C., and Stewart-Brown for the ratepayers (the contractors).

Rowe, K.C., and Squibb for the assessment committee, the rating authority and Gloucestershire County Valuation Committee.

Cur. adv. vult.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of the Divisional Court on a Special Case stated under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (Baines' Act) with regard to the rateability of certain hereditaments which were being used by the contractors, John Laing & Son, Ltd., for the purposes of and in the course of the carrying out of a contract into which they had entered for the making and extension of certain works at Filton Aerodrome for the Air Ministry. The Divisional Court decided that the contractors were in rateable occupation of these hereditaments, and, accordingly, the Case was remitted to quarter sessions with the opinion of the court so expressed. LORD GODDARD, C.J., in the course of his judgment described the matter as follows ([1948] 1 All E.R. 945):

"The ratepayers, Messrs. John Laing & Son, Ltd., who are public works contractors, have undertaken a contract with the Secretary of State for Air for the construction of a runway, landing ground and other works at Filton aerodrome. The provisions of the contract require them to do certain things which necessitate the putting up of buildings. Whether these are huts, or whether they are made of breeze or brick, seems to me to be immaterial. No one suggests that the buildings are likely to be permanent, in the sense that they will remain after the work of construction has been done. The contract provides that at the end of the work of construction these buildings and other erections, some of which are foundations for mounting heavy machinery, are to be taken away, and, indeed, the supervising officer, who is in the service of the Crown, can order them to be taken away at any minute."

In para. 5 the Case sets out that the work, the nature of which is specified in the conditions of contract, the specification, and bills of quantities, involved:

"... the strengthening, widening and lengthening of the east-west runway and the preparation of the landing ground and demolition of buildings at Filton Aerodrome, in the county of Gloucester."

Paragraph 6 states:

"On June 26, 1946, a part of the site was handed over to the contractors for the assembly of plant and offices, and the remainder of the site on which constructional work is to be carried out under the said contract was handed over in sections as it became available. The contract date for completion was May 26, 1947 (being 11 months from June 26, 1946), but circumstances have arisen which entitled the contractors to an extension of time under the said contract and it is not expected that the works will be completed until the end of March, 1948, though sections of completed work may be handed over to the authority before that date."

Paragraph 7 describes the hereditaments in question. I need not refer to them all, but Reference Nos. 1, 2, 10, 12, 13 and 14 relate to offices, and No. 3 to garages, Nos. 4 and 11 are weigh-bridge huts, No. 5 is the workmen's canteen, No. 6 is the carpenters' shop, and Nos. 8, 9, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 18, 20, 23 and 22 are all to do with foundations or erections of some kind in connection with the concrete mixing plant.

The whole Case, as I read it, is stated on the assumption that these hereditaments are rateable hereditaments. There is nothing in it which would entitle us to draw any distinction between any one of them and another, except in so far as any distinction can be obtained from the contract. It may be open in other similar cases to argue that some of the hereditaments are of such a nature that, whatever their occupation, they are not capable of being rated, but no point is taken in the present case with regard to that. Nothing that I am deciding can be quoted as an authority for the proposition that anything which answers the description of some of the places or erections described in para. 7 is, as a matter of law, rateable in all circumstances.

The decision in this case primarily depends on the proper construction to be put on the general conditions (General Conditions of Government Contracts for Building and Civil Engineering Works) which form the contract between the parties. The point taken before us for the contractors is that which appears in para. 19(A) of the Case, viz. :

“They are not the occupiers of the said premises in that their use of the same is subject to the control and directions of the said superintending officer and they have not paramount occupation thereof.”

It would appear that that point had not figured, at any rate, prominently, in the argument in the court below, which had primarily been directed to the contentions which appear in para. 19(B), viz. :

“If they are occupiers of the said premises or any of them, such occupation is not beneficial” for the reasons which are then set out.

Counsel for the rating authorities has said that there are four necessary ingredients in rateable occupation, and I do not think there is any controversy with regard to those ingredients. First, there must be actual occupation; secondly, it must be exclusive for the particular purposes of the possessor; thirdly, the possession must be of some value or benefit to the possessor; and, fourthly, the possession must not be for too transient a period. The primary question here is whether the contractors are in actual and exclusive occupation of these hereditaments.

Counsel for the contractors argues that, on examination of the contract between the parties, it will be found that they are not in exclusive possession. Although at the outset this case was presented rather as one in which there were competing occupants, or persons who could be regarded as competing occupants, and the question was whose was the paramount occupancy, I think that the point is more accurately stated in the way in which counsel for the contractors put it in his final address, i.e., the question is not whether there are competing occupants, but whether there is any real occupation by the contractors, or whether the true position is not that they are really in occupation on behalf of someone else, viz., the Crown, for whose purpose (counsel says) they are on the site, carrying out the works in question. Counsel for the contractors says that this case is similar to the occupation of a servant rather than to that in such cases as Westminster Corpn. v. Southern Ry. Co., Railway Assessment Authority and Smith & Son, Ltd. (1) where the railway company were admittedly in occupation of the whole of Victoria Station, but certain portions of it were held to be in rateable occupation of other persons, either as tenants or licencees.

To solve this question it is necessary to look with care and in some detail at the contract. I do not propose to read all the conditions relied on, but in the abstract of particulars (in appendix I to the Case) which are to be read in conjunction with the general conditions of contract, it is provided :

“Date for completion shall be the date of the day after the expiration of a period of 11 months from the date on which possession of the site is given to the contractor.”

Paragraph 1 of the general conditions, the definition paragraph, provides :

“(2) (b) ‘The site’ shall mean the lands and/or other places on, into or through which work is to be executed under the contract or any adjacent land, path or street which may be allotted or used for the purpose of carrying out the contract.”

Condition 3 provides that all materials and equipment brought on to the site in connection with the contract, "shall become the property of and vest in the authority" [the Secretary of State for Air]. That condition, of course, deals with property, whereas we are concerned with occupation. Condition 6 provides :

- A "Possession of the site or the order to commence shall be given to the contractor by notice in writing, and the contractor shall thereupon commence the execution of the works and shall proceed with diligence . . ."

By condition 7 :

- B "(1) The contractor shall carry out and complete the execution of the works to the satisfaction of the superintending officer who may from time to time issue further drawings details and/or instructions directions and explanations (all of which are hereafter collectively referred to as 'the superintending officer's instructions')." "

Then there are enumerated a number of matters with regard to which he can give those instructions. They include :

- C "(c) The removal from the site of any materials . . . (d) The removal and/or re-execution of any work . . . (h) The dismissal of any foreman or person below that grade employed in connection with the contract . . . (l) The use of materials obtained from excavations on the site. (m) Any other matter as to which it is necessary or expedient for the superintending officer to give instructions, directions or explanations."

Condition 7 also provides :

- D "The decision of the superintending officer that any such instructions are necessary or expedient shall be final and conclusive . . ."

Condition 13 deals with materials and workmanship and provides :

- E "The superintending officer and his representative shall have power at any time to inspect and examine any part of the works or any materials intended to be used in or on the works either on the site or at any factory or workshop or other place where such parts or materials are being constructed or manufactured or at any place where the same are lying or from which they are being obtained, and the contractor shall give all such facilities as the superintending officer may require to be given for such inspection and examination."

- F Condition 16 deals with the hours of work and provides that they shall be subject to the approval of the superintending officer. Conditions 17, 18 and 19 deal with watching, lighting and protection of works, precautions to prevent nuisance, and the removal of rubbish. Those are all obligations put on the contractor. He is to provide all watchmen necessary for the protection of the site, take reasonable precautions to prevent nuisance or inconvenience to the owners, tenants or occupiers of other premises, and keep the site free from rubbish.

G Condition 26 provides :

- H "(1) All plant, temporary buildings, equipment and things on the site provided by or on behalf of the contractor for the construction of but not for incorporation in the works shall stand at the risk and be in the sole charge of the contractor, and the contractor shall be responsible for, and with all possible speed make good, any loss or damage thereto arising from any cause whatsoever, including the accepted risks."

By condition 33 :

"The contractor shall employ a competent agent to whom directions may be given by the superintending officer. The agent shall superintend the execution of the works generally with such assistance in each trade as the superintending officer may consider necessary."

Condition 36 gives the superintending officer power to require the contractor :

" . . . immediately to cease to employ . . . any foreman or person below that grade whose continued employment thereon is in the opinion of the superintending officer undesirable."

By condition 44 (1) the authority is empowered to determine the contract at any time by notice in writing, and condition 44 (2) (A), which is relied on, provides that the authority shall :

" . . . as soon as practicable, and in any case not later than the expiration of 3 months from the date of such notice or of the period up to the date for completion, whichever is the shorter, give directions (with which the contractor shall comply with all reasonable dispatch) as to all or any of the following matters . . . (iii) the removal of all plant, temporary buildings and equipment from the site."

It is to be observed, however, that this condition is dealing with something which is to happen on the determination of the contract and, in my view, accordingly, is not so material as some of the other conditions. Finally, condition 56 provides :

" The contractor shall take all reasonable steps to ensure that no alien, or person of dual nationality, unless the prior permission in writing of the authority has been obtained, shall be admitted to the site. The superintending officer shall have power to exclude from the site any person whose admission thereto may in his opinion be undesirable for any reason whatsoever."

Condition 57 deals with the issuing of passes, which is in the hands and under the authority of the superintending officer.

It is said by counsel for the contractors that the very extensive powers conferred on the superintending officer are such that the contractors cannot be regarded as being in exclusive occupation of this hereditament. He seeks to distinguish this case on its facts from the Southern Railway case (1). It is common ground that the principles to be applied to these facts are to be found in the Southern Railway case (1). Those principles were stated by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN ([1936] 2 All E.R. 326) :

" In the next place I would make a few general observations upon rateable occupation. Subject to special enactments, people are rated as occupiers of land, land being understood as including not only the surface of the earth but all strata above or below. The occupier, not the land, is rateable ; but, the occupier is rateable in respect of the land which he occupies. Occupation, however, is not synonymous with legal possession : the owner of an empty house has the legal possession, but he is not in rateable occupation. Rateable occupation, however, must include actual possession, and it must have some degree of permanence : a mere temporary holding of land will not constitute rateable occupation. Where there is no rival claimant to the occupancy, no difficulty can arise ; but in certain cases there may be a rival occupancy in some person who, to some extent, may have occupancy rights over the premises. The question in every such case must be one of fact, viz., whose position in relation to occupation is paramount, and whose position in relation to occupation is subordinate ; but, in my opinion, the question must be considered and answered in regard to the position and rights of the parties in the premises in question, and in regard to the purpose of the occupation of those premises. In other words, in the present case, the question must be, not who is in paramount occupation of the station, within whose confines the premises in question are situate, but who is in paramount occupation of the particular premises in question."

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN continued (ibid., 328) :

A "In truth the effect of the alleged control upon the question of rateable occupation must depend upon the facts in every case; and in my opinion in each case the degree of the control must be examined, and the examination must be directed to the extent to which its exercise would interfere with the enjoyment by the occupant of the premises in his possession for the purposes for which he occupies them, or would be inconsistent with his enjoyment of them to the substantial exclusion of all other persons."

I emphasise the words "would interfere with the enjoyment by the occupant of the premises in his possession for the purposes for which he occupies them." Later, LORD RUSSELL said (ibid., 329):

B "In my opinion the crucial question must always be what in fact is the occupation in respect of which someone is alleged to be rateable, and it is immaterial whether the title to occupy is attributable to a lease, a licence, or an easement."

LORD WRIGHT, M.R., referring to Cory v. Bristow (2) said ([1936] 2 All E.R. 343):

C "The decision is important as showing that a person no less occupies in the rating sense because he does so subject to regulations or by-laws or is liable to be turned out on short notice."

After quoting from Cory v. Bristow (2), LORD WRIGHT said (ibid.):

D "And further, LORD CAIRNS also refers to the fact that Messrs. Cory were to work to the satisfaction of the conservators under the inspection of the harbour master: he points out that Messrs. Cory were none the less in rateable occupation because they were required to obey the conservators' by-laws, and were to work to the satisfaction of the conservators and subject to definite limitations, and were liable to be ejected on notice."

LORD WRIGHT continued (ibid., 344):

E "The railway company have no doubt quite properly imposed such restrictions as seemed necessary for the proper working of the station as a whole. They have reserved the right to close the station each night, and also a special right to close temporarily in cases of emergency: but these are merely restrictions on the tenants' user and enjoyment, and do not change their character or make the occupation other than a sole and exclusive occupation. The tenant is still in sole occupation of his premises, and has full use of them to carry on his business. As one indication of this I may refer to the terms of the agreements which give the railway company limited rights of entering for specific purposes, e.g., to view the state of repair, and so forth. These terms indicate a possession in the tenant adverse to the landlord."

G After quoting from Holywell Union and Halkyn Parish v. Halkyn Drainage Co. (3) LORD WRIGHT said (ibid.):

H "As to the closing of the station at night, this is done outside business hours and as MACKINNON, J., shrewdly observes, is rather an advantage to the tenants, because it tends to obviate the risk of burglary to which lock-up shops in public thoroughfares are peculiarly exposed. It is obvious that the tenant's occupation is continuous, because at night he occupies by his goods. The tenant is the person entitled to exclude trespassers, e.g., from the bank or Boots' shop, or to bring ejectionment."

Those are the general principles which we have to endeavour to apply to the facts of this case. We have to ascertain what is the quality of the occupation. If the contractors are occupying these hereditaments for the sole purposes of their business and if the measure of control retained by the authority is not such as to alter the character and quality of their occupation, then, in my view, they are in rateable occupation. The measure of control by the authority in carrying out the contract is a different thing from a control interfering with the exclusive occupation of the hereditament. On reading the conditions in this contract and comparing this case with the Southern Railway case (1) and the principles there enunciated, the conclusion I have arrived at is that in this case the authority had not such control as to render the occupation of the contractors an occupation which is not rateable. In other words, I think the real control exercised by the authority was a control with regard to the performance of the contract and not a control which interfered with the exclusive occupation of the hereditament by the contractors for the purposes of their work.

Before passing from the Southern Railway case (1) it is necessary to say a word about the decision of the Divisional Court in Cleveland Bridge & Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Darlington Union Assessment Committee (4). That case was in many respects very similar to the present, but, when the judgments are examined, it is clear, I think, that they (or two of them, at any rate) are based, entirely, on the decision in Smith v. Lambeth Assessment Committee (5) which can no longer be regarded as binding since the decision of the House of Lords in the Southern Railway case (1). In the Darlington case (4) BRANSON, J., although he spoke of the undisputed principle of law which applied to that case—that undisputed principle appearing to be that laid down in Smith v. Lambeth Assessment Committee (5)—none the less based his judgment on the Holywell Union case (3), putting it on the basis of paramount and subordinate occupation. However that may be, the Darlington case (4) was cited to their Lordships in the Southern Railway case (1) and I think can no longer be regarded as good law. For these reasons, this appeal fails and must be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J. : I entirely agree and have nothing to add.

JENKINS, J. : Adopting the four factors or ingredients of rateability, as submitted by counsel for the rating authority, it is obvious on the facts here that the first is satisfied because the contractors were clearly in actual possession of the hereditaments claimed to be rateable. Secondly, I think that their possession was exclusively for the particular purpose for which they occupied the premises, viz., the carrying out of the contract. I think that the exclusive character of their possession appears if the distinction is kept clearly in mind between general control exercised by the superintending officer over the site as a whole and the general carrying out of the contract, on the one hand, and the position with regard to particular parts of the site alleged to be in the occupation of the contractors, on the other hand. So far as those particular parts of the site were concerned, it seems to me that their possession was none the less exclusive because they were subject to the general controlling authority of the superintending officer. Thirdly, it is said that the possession must be of some use or value or benefit to the possessor, but as to that it seems to me enough to say that the contractors occupied those premises for the purposes of their business and it is immaterial that their business consisted of the carrying out for reward of a particular constructional project. Fourthly, it is said that the possession must not be for too transient a period. I think that fourth requirement is met by the fact that the work has taken a matter of two years to carry out. All four tests, therefore, being satisfied, I agree that the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : R. L. Mason (for the ratepayers) ; Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Crossman & Co., Thornby (for the assessment committee and the rating authority), and for G. H. Davis, Gloucester (for the valuation committee).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SEMINI.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Lewis and Pritchard, JJ.), December 20, 1948, January 11, 1949.]

Criminal Law—Murder—Manslaughter—Chance-medley—Provocation—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 7.

A While walking with a woman, the applicant passed three men, one of whom made a remark about the woman which the applicant resented. He went back, knocked down one of the men, and, in the scuffle which followed, he killed another of them by stabbing him through the heart with a knife which he was carrying. On being charged with the murder of the deceased, he pleaded that the killing was by chance-medley and amounted to manslaughter and not to murder.

B HELD: (i) the doctrine of chance-medley had no longer any place in the law of homicide, having been finally abolished by the Offences against the Person Act, 1828, s. 10 (repealed and re-enacted by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 7).

C (ii) the rules to be followed in deciding whether there had been sufficient provocation to reduce a crime from murder to manslaughter were now laid down in Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1946] 2 All E.R. 124; [1946] A.C. 588; 175 L.T. 327).

(iii) on the facts, the applicant was guilty of murder.

D [AS TO JUSTIFIABLE AND EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 447, 448, paras. 763-766; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, pp. 812-814, Nos. 8814-8862.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Taylor, (1771), 5 Burr. 2793; 98 E.R. 466; 15 Digest 779, 8345.
 (2) R. v. Snow, (1776), 1 Leach, 151; 1 East, P.C. 244; 15 Digest 783, 8426.
 (3) R. v. Smith, (1837), 8 C. & P. 160; 15 Digest 783, 8408.
 E (4) Holmes v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1946] 2 All E.R. 124; [1946] A.C. 588; 115 L.J.K.B. 417; 175 L.T. 327; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (5) Mancini v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1941] 3 All E.R. 272; [1942] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.K.B. 84; 165 L.T. 353; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal against a conviction, at Stafford Assizes, before HALLETT, J., of murder.

F The applicant pleaded that the killing was by chance-medley, and he applied for leave to appeal on the ground of misdirection by the judge (a) on the subject of chance-medley, and (b) in regard to the evidence. The Court of Appeal held that there had been no misdirection and dismissed the application. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.

G Cartwright Sharp, K.C., and E. B. Gibbens for the applicant.
Sachs, K.C., and Norman Carr for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 11. LORD GODDARD C.J., read the following judgment of the court. The applicant, George Semini, was convicted before HALLETT, J., at the Stafford Assizes of the murder of Joseph Gibbons and was sentenced to death. On Dec. 20, 1948, this court dismissed the application for leave to H appeal, and we now proceed to give our reasons for so doing.

According to the evidence, the applicant, on the late evening of Friday, Oct. 10, 1948, was walking with a young woman, named Sheila Seabridge, past the Talbot Hotel at Newcastle-under-Lyme, when one of three men standing there made an observation about Miss Seabridge which the applicant resented. The three men were the deceased (Gibbons), Charles Stanley, and Robert Woodyatt. The applicant and Miss Seabridge had passed the three men when the observation was made, but the applicant went back to them and struck

Robert Woodyatt with his hand or fist, causing him to fall to the ground. The applicant admitted that this blow was the first to be struck. Thereafter, the order in which events followed is not easy to ascertain from the evidence, but it appears to be reasonably certain that the deceased incited Woodyatt to fight the applicant and that Woodyatt got up from the ground and began to take his coat off as though preparing for a fight. It is also clear that two unidentified by-standers restrained the applicant by holding his arms, and that the applicant, so held, was uttering threats to the deceased and Woodyatt. Then the applicant broke away from those who held him and, producing a knife, advanced on Woodyatt and the deceased, saying: "I'll get the two of them." In the scuffle which followed the deceased was stabbed through the heart, Woodyatt and Stanley also being wounded by the applicant's knife, which was not found after the killing. No one other than the applicant had any knife at any time during the affray. There was evidence that about three weeks prior to the affray the applicant showed to a man named Ashley a knife with a blade about 8 ins. long and said that he would use it if more than one person attacked him. There was medical evidence that the mortal wound inflicted on the deceased could have been caused by such a blade. The applicant was a native of Malta and had had some experience as a sparring partner to a professional boxer.

The first and main contention of counsel for the applicant was that there was here, on the facts, a case of killing by chance-medley, and that there was no proper direction and, indeed, actual misdirection on this subject. He contended that the summing-up amounted to a direction that, before the defence of chance-medley could be established, it must be proved that the provocation was such as would cause a reasonable man to lose control and that the act which caused the death was commensurate with the provocation received. This, he contended, does not apply to chance-medley, to which (he contended) the doctrines relating to provocation have no application.

The first and most important thing, then, is to understand what the expression "death by chance-medley" means. The contention was that, if two men quarrel and fight, and either or both of them are armed with a lethal weapon, and in the heat of the quarrel one draws and uses the weapon with fatal results, that is causing death by chance-medley and amounts to manslaughter, unless, and only unless, the jury find that, all along, the one intended to cause the death of the other and was armed for that purpose. In truth, this is not what was ever meant by the expression "death by chance-medley." If the finding of the jury established that the death was caused by chance-medley, the prisoner escaped any corporal penalty and was not convicted of manslaughter, but the expression, as we hope to show, has now no place or importance in the law relating to homicide. A reference to BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, bk. IV, p. 184, HALE'S PLEAS OF THE CROWN, vol. 1, p. 471, and HAWKINS'S PLEAS OF THE CROWN, 8th ed. (1824), pp. 83 and 89, makes it clear that this expression applied only where the killing was se defendendo, i.e., in defence of a man's person or property on some sudden affray, and, probably, also where the killing was per infortunium, and, in either case, where the law would attach some degree of blame for the killing but would excuse it. It was excusable, as opposed to justifiable, homicide. The latter includes cases of unavoidable necessity, such as a householder, attacked by an armed burglar, killing the latter as the only means of protection against the attack. It includes also killing in execution of sentence of death pronounced by a lawful court, or of rioters, if the riot cannot otherwise be suppressed, or in arresting a felon where resistance cannot otherwise be overcome. Where, however, the killing was the outcome of a quarrel or fight, it was excusable, though not justifiable, if the killer had not begun but had taken part in the fight, or if, having begun it, he endeavoured to decline any further struggle and retreated, but, being closely pressed, killed his antagonist to avoid himself being killed or maimed. This, in our opinion, is the result of the authorities to which we have referred. The expression seems also to have been applied to cases where the killing was due to misadventure in the performance of a lawful act and where there was no such negligence in its performance as would amount to manslaughter, but we need not explore the refinements of the old law regarding death per infortunium. The result was the same as in case of death se defendendo. It is obvious that at the present day there would, in such cases, be no room for any verdict but one of Not Guilty. Indeed, the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 7, expressly provides :

“No punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any person who shall kill another by misfortune or in his own defence, or in any other manner without felony.”

- B This section replaces and re-enacts the Offences against the Person Act, 1828, s. 10, and the appearance of the word “forfeiture” helps to solve any difficulty that may be felt in regard to the distinction which formerly existed between justifiable and excusable homicide. Some degree of blame attached to the man who killed another with whom he was fighting, though the killing was in his own defence, for he ought not to have engaged in a fight. He was excused
- C from suffering a penalty, but his goods were liable to be forfeited to the king, and, both in the case of death caused se defendendo and per infortunium, the thing by which the death was caused was forfeited as a deodand. It seems that where there was room for a verdict of chance-medley, the court directed the jury to find a special verdict, and, if on the facts found the court decided that it was a case of death by chance-medley, no corporal sentence on the
- D prisoner was passed, but forfeiture of his goods and the deodand was ordered. SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, who was the greatest and most authoritative writer on the criminal law of the last century, nowhere in his HISTORY OF THE CRIMINAL LAW OF ENGLAND or in his DIGEST OF THE CRIMINAL LAW refers to death by chance-medley as such. In his HISTORY OF THE CRIMINAL LAW OF ENGLAND, vol. III, he deals at length with death per infortunium and se
- E defendendo and gives a full review (ibid., 73-77) of FOSTER’S CROWN LAW, DISCOURSE OF HOMICIDE, as it refers to this matter. STEPHEN points out (ibid., 76, 77) that FOSTER implies that by his time—and his work was published in 1762—special verdicts finding justifiable or excusable homicide had fallen into disuse and the judges were taking general verdicts of acquittal in plain
- F cases of per infortunium and se defendendo. The learned author goes on to say (ibid., 77) that the law on this subject may be considered to have fallen into desuetude in the course of the 18th century, and it was finally abolished in 1828 by the Offences against the Person Act, 1828, to which we have already referred. Deodands, indeed, retained their legal existence till 1846 when they
- G were abolished by 9 and 10 Vict., c. 62. As a matter of some historical interest, it is probable that what led to the passing of the latter Act was that the London and Birmingham Railway Company had a year or two earlier been amerced in the sum of £2,000, representing the value of a railway engine that had run over and killed a man, thus becoming a deodand. It was, accordingly, necessary to adapt the law to modern conditions, and, as the law on the subject was too firmly established to be modified by judicial decision, the change had to be effected by statute.
- H Counsel for the applicant drew our attention to R. v. Taylor (1), R. v. Snow (2), and R. v. Smith (3), in support of his argument. In none of these cases was chance-medley mentioned by any of the judges who decided them. They are all cases which turn on whether there had been provocation enough to reduce the crime to manslaughter. No one doubts that blows, and, probably, threatening gestures, if near enough and serious enough to cause loss of control, may justify and, indeed, require the killing to be regarded as manslaughter only. At a time when society was less secure and less settled in its habits, when the carrying of swords was as common as the use of a walking stick at the present day, and when duelling was regarded as involving no moral stigma if fairly conducted, it is not surprising that the courts took a view more lenient towards provocation than is taken to-day when life and property are guarded by an efficient police force and social habits have changed. It is enough to say that Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecutions (4), affirming the decision of this court, lays down rules on the subject which are authoritative and are to be followed by all courts when the question of provocation becomes an issue in relation to killing as the outcome of a quarrel or a fight. The old learning, such as it was, with regard to chance-medley has long been obsolete and was finally laid to rest by the Offences against the Person Act, 1828. The doctrine has no longer any place in the law of homicide, and we may express the hope that it will no longer appear in ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE as though it were an existing doctrine. The cases cited under that heading are to be regarded as illustrations of what the courts have accepted as sufficient to reduce a killing from murder to manslaughter and all of them must now be read in the light of Holmes' case (4) and Mancini v. Director of Public Prosecutions (5), which preceded it.

The other matter on which counsel for the applicant relied as misdirection was that he contended that the learned judge on three or four occasions in his summing-up directed the jury that there was no evidence that the applicant had ever been struck. There are, no doubt, passages which do suggest that, in his opinion, the evidence did not disclose that any blows had actually been inflicted on the applicant before he stabbed the deceased. The evidence on that point, as generally is the case when there is a disturbance or brawl in a street, was somewhat obscure, but the direction on the law was both adequate and correct and the learned judge, not once, but twice, read the material evidence to the jury. What does seem to be beyond controversy is that the applicant struck the first blow, knocking down Woodyatt, and then struck the dead man in the face when he went to Woodyatt's assistance; that thereupon bystanders seized and held the applicant in an endeavour to prevent further trouble; that the applicant, who is, undoubtedly, a powerful man and a pugilist, wrenched himself free, drew his knife, and, saying, "I will get the two of them," made after Gibbons. Assuming that the latter turned and closed with the applicant, what possible excuse could there be for the applicant to use the terrible and deadly weapon that he had drawn and with which he stabbed Gibbons through the heart? It was a dreadful and cowardly act of revenge on a man who had assisted the applicant's first victim and was prepared to repel an attack on himself. There was no misdirection and, if there had been, there was only one verdict that a reasonable jury could have returned—the one they did return.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal (for the applicant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

STONE v. BOLTON AND OTHERS.

[MANCHESTER MICHAELMAS ASSIZES (Oliver, J.), December 15, 20, 1948.]

Nuisance—Negligence—Sport—Cricket—Injury from ball hit from ground into highway.

A During a cricket match a batsman hit a ball which struck and injured the plaintiff who was standing on the adjoining highway. At the point at which the ball left it the cricket field was protected by a fence rising to 17ft. above the cricket pitch, the distance from the striker to the fence being about 90yds. and that to the place where the plaintiff was hit being nearly 100yds. Matches had been regularly played on the ground since 1864 and no one had been injured before, and there was evidence that only very rarely was a ball hit over the fence during a match. The road on which the plaintiff was standing had been constructed in 1910. In an action against the cricket club for damages for negligence and nuisance,

B HELD : (i) there was no evidence of negligence.

(ii) the playing of cricket was not a non-natural user of the land, and, therefore, the principle laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) (L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 19 L.T. 220) did not apply.

C (iii) to constitute a nuisance, there must be a state of affairs, however temporary, and not merely an isolated happening, and the facts of the present case did not establish a nuisance.

D Quaere, whether, since the cricket ground was in constant use before the construction of the road on which the plaintiff was standing, she was in any better position than would have been users of the land as it originally was, and was subject to such obstructions and dangers as existed at the time of dedication.

[AS TO CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH AN ACT MAY CONSTITUTE A NUISANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 24, p. 22, para. 38; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, p. 159, Nos. 25-31.]

Cases referred to :

E (1) Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311.

(2) Castle v. St. Augustine's Links, Ltd., (1922), 38 T.L.R. 615; 36 Digest 186, 300.

(3) Dollman v. Hillman, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 355; 2nd Digest Supp.

F ACTION for damages for negligence and nuisance.

The plaintiff claimed damages for injuries received when she was struck by a cricket ball while standing in a road adjoining a cricket field occupied by the defendants. OLIVER, J., held that there was no evidence of negligence and that nuisance had not been established. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. Burton for the plaintiff.

G F. H. Dean for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20, 1948. OLIVER, J. : On Aug. 9, 1947, Miss Stone, the plaintiff, was struck and injured by a cricket ball while she was standing on the highway outside her house, 10, Beckenham Road, Cheetham Hill, Manchester. The ball was hit by a batsman playing in a match on the adjacent Cheetham Cricket Ground. She brings an action for damages against the committee and members of the club. The striker of the ball is not a defendant.

H The club has been in existence, and matches have been regularly played on this ground, since about 1864. Beckenham Road was constructed and built up in 1910. For the purpose of this work the contractors arranged with the club that a small strip of land at the Beckenham Road end of the ground should be exchanged for a strip at the other end. The match pitches have always been, and still are, kept along a line opposite the pavilion, i.e., along the midline of the original ground. The effect of the exchange in 1910 is that in the case of a straight drive—the hit in the case before me—Beckenham Road for some years has been a few yards nearer the batsmen than the opposite end. At the point at which the ball left it the cricket field is protected by a fence 7ft. high, but the upward slope of the ground towards the fence results in the top of the fence being some 17ft. above the cricket pitch. The distance from the striker to the fence is about 90yds., and to the place where the plaintiff was hit just under 100yds. The witness, Brownson, who lives in a house which is one of six at the end nearest the ground and opposite to the plaintiff, said that on five or six occasions during the last few years he had known balls hit his house or come into the yard, but it has to be observed that his house is substantially nearer the ground than the plaintiff's. Two members of the club, of over 30 years' standing, agreed that the hit with which we are here concerned was altogether exceptional and greater than anything previously seen on the ground. They also said—and I believe it—that it was only very rarely that a ball was hit over the fence during a match.

The case for the plaintiff is put on the ground (i) of negligence, and (ii) of nuisance. On the evidence before me I cannot find the defendants were negligent. In my opinion, this ground is quite large enough for all practical purposes of safety, particularly having regard to the height of the fence above the pitch. In 38 years' experience no-one has ever been injured before. Therefore, I acquit the defendants of negligence.

Some discussion took place on the doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (1). The short answer is that that doctrine only applies where land has been used in a non-natural manner. I hope it will never be said of cricket in this country that it is a non-natural use of land. Counsel for the plaintiff said the shortness of the boundary made the game non-natural, but I do not think that is compatible with the evidence which has been given.

Secondly, nuisance. An isolated act of hitting a cricket ball on to a road cannot, of course, amount to a nuisance. The very word connotes some continuity, some invasion of public as opposed to individual right. It seems strange, having regard to the prevalence of sport in this country, to find such a dearth of authority. The only case cited coming anywhere near the present case is Castle v. St. Augustine's Links, Ltd. (2), which was decided in 1922 by SANKEY, J. In that case, damages were awarded against a golf club at the suit of the user of a road who was injured by a golf ball. The decision was founded on nuisance, but there the facts were utterly different from the present. The tee in question was quite close to a much-frequented highway running nearly parallel with the course, and was so placed that any ball sliced or hit substantially off the line to the right passed on or over the highway. Such occurrences must have taken place every day, and many times a day. Such study of the cases as I have been able to make satisfies me that a nuisance must be a state of affairs, however temporary, and not merely an isolated happening. In Dollman v. Hillman, Ltd. (3) a piece of fat outside a butcher's shop, which caused damage to a passer-by, was held to be a nuisance. That was a state of affairs existing for the time being. Another example would be continual endangering of the public on a highway by splinters from a quarry. Cases could be multiplied. The matter has been accurately stated in HALSBURY, LAWS OF ENGLAND, Hailsham ed., vol. 24, p. 22, para. 38, where the text runs as follows :

"Whether such an act does constitute a nuisance must be determined, not merely by an abstract consideration of the act itself, but by reference to all the circumstances of the particular case, including, for example, the time of the commission of the act complained of; the place of its commission; the manner of committing it, that is, whether it is done wantonly or in the reasonable exercise of rights; and the effect of its commission, that is, whether those effects are transitory or permanent, occasional or continuous ; so that the question of nuisance or no nuisance is one of fact."

Applying those considerations to this case, in my opinion, no nuisance has been established.

A One more argument was put forward by counsel for the defendants. It is that the cricket-ground was in constant use before the construction of Beckenham Road in 1910, and, that being the case, those using the highway are in no better position than would have been the users of the land as it originally was, but are subject to such obstructions and dangers as existed at the time of dedication. This is another ground on which the defendants are, in my view, entitled to judgment.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

B Solicitors : Linder, Myers & Pariser, Manchester (for the plaintiff) ; Hall, Brydon & Chapman, Manchester (for the defendants).

[Reported by MISS M. D. CHORLTON, Barrister-at-Law.]

C RIPPINGTON v. HICKS & SON (OXFORD), LTD.
AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 13, 1949.]

D Summary Jurisdiction—Appeal—Case Stated—Case stated out of time—Illness of appellant's solicitor—Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915 (S.R. & O., 1915, No. 200), r. 52.

E By the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, r. 52, on an application to justices to state a Special Case : " The Case shall be stated within three . . . months after the date of the application . . ." On Feb. 17, 1948, the appellant applied to the justices to state a Case, but, owing to delay on the appellant's side caused by illness in the office of his solicitor, the Case was not stated until Sept. 9, 1948. No application was made for an extension of time.

F HELD : if the appellant was unable, for some good reason, to have the Case stated within the time required by r. 52, it was his duty to ask the court for an extension of time, and, as there had been a complete disregard of the rules, the Case would not be heard.

[AS TO LIMITATION OF TIME FOR SPECIAL CASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 725, 726, para. 1256 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, p. 414, No. 1241, and Supp.]

Case referred to :

G (1) Moore v. Hewitt, [1947] 2 All E.R. 270 ; [1947] K.B. 831 ; [1947] L.J.R. 1276 ; 177 L.T. 576 ; 111 J.P. 483 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by City of Oxford justices.

H On Feb. 10, 1948, an information preferred by the appellant against the respondents was dismissed. The appellant applied to the justices to state a Case, but, owing to delay on the appellant's side due to the illness of a solicitor, the Case was not stated until Sept. 9, 1948. The respondents took a preliminary objection before the Divisional Court that the Case was not stated within the time limited by the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, r. 52. The Divisional Court allowed the objection and dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Milmo for the appellant.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and King-Hamilton for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a Case stated by justices of Oxfordshire at the instance of the appellant, who is an inspector of the Ministry of Food. The justices gave their decision dismissing the information on Feb. 10, 1948. An application to state a Case was made to the justices by Feb. 17 or 18, i.e., within the time limited by the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, r. 52, and the justices were willing to do so. The Case was not sent by the appellant's solicitor, the Treasury Solicitor, to the respondents for agreement until May 1, the delay being due to the fact that the official of the Treasury Solicitor who was in charge of the matter was ill. The Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1915, r. 52, provides that an application to a court of summary jurisdiction to state a Case shall be made in writing within seven days from the date of the proceedings to be questioned and

A

"The Case shall be stated within three calendar months after the date of the application and after the recognisance shall have been entered into."

B

Therefore, the time limit laid down by the rules of 1915 had by then nearly expired. Considerable correspondence then took place, as usually happens in these matters, and the Case passed backwards and forwards between counsel. The Case was finally agreed by counsel by June 16, by which time the three months allowed by r. 52 had expired. It was then sent to the justices, who did not return the Case Stated until Sept. 9.

C

If the delay had been caused entirely by the action of the justices, a very different state of affairs would have arisen. In those circumstances, as this court said in Moore v. Hewitt (1), the court would regard the rule as directory and as giving them a discretion to enlarge the time. In this case, no application was made to enlarge the time and no step whatever was taken. It is said that the respondents ought to have told the appellant that they were going to object. I do not see why they should. If the appellant wants a Case Stated, it is for the appellant to abide by the rules of court. These rules of court are meant to be observed, and, if the time limit cannot be observed for some good reason, the duty of the appellant is to come before the court and ask for an extension of time. I attach importance to the observance of the rules because it is highly desirable that these cases, which are of a criminal nature, should be disposed of as promptly as possible. For the last two years or more, this court has been doing everything in its power to see that there is no undue delay in the hearing of these cases. Whether it be that an appellant is asking that the respondent should be convicted or whether he is asking that his conviction should be set aside, it is most desirable that criminal cases should be disposed of promptly and not left in abeyance and suspense for a long period. As a result of what has happened in this case, we are being asked to hear it more than eleven months after the conviction. The court is not going to do it. There has been a complete disregard of the rules of court, which ought to be observed, and, as the Case has not been stated within three months, this court is not going to hear it.

D

E

F

G

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

FINNEMORE, J. : I also agree.

Preliminary objection allowed. Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Treasury Solicitor (for the appellant) ; Trower, Still & Keeling, agents for Thomas Mallam, Grimsdale & Co., Oxford (for the respondents).

H

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GREENLY v. LAWRENCE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 12, 1949.]

Firearms—Certificate—Appeal to quarter sessions against refusal of police to grant or renew—Discretion of quarter sessions—Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), s. 2 (8).

A On an appeal under s. 2 (8) of the Firearms Act, 1937, against the refusal of a chief officer of police to grant a firearm certificate under s. 2 (2) of the Act quarter sessions must consider whether the applicant for the certificate has a good reason for having a firearm or ammunition in his possession and can be permitted to have it in his possession without danger to the public safety or to the peace. The question whether the certificate shall be granted is a matter solely for the discretion of quarter sessions, whose decision will not be set aside unless there is some error in law.

B [AS TO THE ISSUE OF FIREARM CERTIFICATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 361-363, paras. 591-593.

C For THE FIREARMS ACT, 1937, s. 2 (2) and (8), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, pp. 909, 910.]

CASE STATED by the Recorder of Reading.

At the general quarter sessions for the borough of Reading held on Jan. 29, 1948, Sir John Greenly, the owner of a pistol appealed under the Firearms Act, 1937, s. 2 (8), against the refusal of the chief constable of Reading to grant a renewal of a firearm certificate under s. 2 (2) of the Act authorising him to have in his possession 50 rounds of ammunition for a .25 Colt automatic pistol. The recorder found as a fact that the applicant for the certificate was not in any way unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm and that he had been a good shot with both rifles and revolvers. His residence stood in its own grounds and could easily be approached by an intruder from the south and west. He was aged 63 and kept a large number of valuable articles in his house. He wished to possess ammunition for the pistol to protect himself and his property by shooting if that became necessary in the event of attack by an armed intruder. The recorder held that this was a good reason for his having possession of the 50 rounds of ammunition and allowed the appeal.

E The Divisional Court dismissed the chief constable's appeal against this decision on the ground that it was a question for the recorder's discretion.

F Glazebrook for the appellants.

J. C. B. W. Leonard for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : Under the Firearms Act, 1937, s. 2, it is provided that a person may apply to the chief officer of police for the grant of a certificate enabling him to have in his possession a firearm and ammunition for it. By G s. 2 (2) :

H "The certificate shall be granted by the chief officer of police if he is satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for purchasing, acquiring, or having in his possession the firearm or ammunition in respect of which the application is made, and can be permitted to have in his possession that firearm or ammunition without danger to the public safety or to the peace . . ."

By sub-s. (8) :

"Any person aggrieved by a refusal of a chief officer of police to grant him a certificate under this section or to vary or renew a firearm certificate, or by the revocation of a firearm certificate under para. (a) of the last foregoing sub-section, may appeal—(a) in England, in accordance with so much of the provisions of sched. I to this Act as relates to appeals, to the court of quarter sessions having jurisdiction in the county, borough or place in which he resides . . .”

If the applicant does appeal, the recorder, if it is in a borough, as in this case (or a court of quarter sessions, if it is a county) must consider whether the applicant has a good reason for having in his possession a firearm or ammunition without danger to the public safety or to the peace. If quarter sessions comes to the conclusion that the reason advanced by the applicant is a good reason, the court is to grant him a licence. It is a mere matter for discretion. We do not sit in this matter as a court of appeal. We only sit to decide whether the recorder has gone wrong in law. We can find no reason for saying that he has gone wrong, and, therefore, this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

FINNEMORE, J. : I also agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Reaxworthy, Bonser & Wadkin, agents for Sheppard & Fullbrook, Reading (for the appellant) ; Crawley, Arnold & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. R. v. O./C. DEPOT BATTALION R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER. Ex parte ELLIOTT. Post, p. 373.

R. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR. Ex parte MARTYN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 11, 1949.]

Court Martial—Breach of procedural military law—Power of High Court—Non-compliance with rules of procedure—Certiorari—Rules of Procedure, 1926 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 989), r. 34 (c).

On Oct. 27, 1948, the applicant was brought before a court martial on a charge of desertion. He pleaded that he had never received calling-up papers. The plea was allowed, and on Nov. 29, 1948, a new court was convened. It was then proved that calling-up papers had been posted to the applicant, and he was convicted and sentenced. It was now admitted that at the material time the applicant was a soldier, but it was contended that the second court had no jurisdiction to deal with him because it was not convened “forthwith” in accordance with the Rules of Procedure, 1926, r. 34 (c).

HELD : the High Court could only interfere with military courts and matters of military law in so far as the civil rights of the soldier or other person with whom they dealt might be affected, and, therefore, if the court martial had not been convened in accordance with the Rules of Procedure, which was a matter of military law and procedure, the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere.

[AS TO JURISDICTION OF MILITARY COURTS MARTIAL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 8, pp. 641-643, paras. 1397-1400.]

Case referred to :

(1) Lee v. Thomas, (1946), unreported.

MOTION for certiorari to quash a decision of a district court martial on the ground that the court was not properly convened. The application was refused. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Flowers, K.C., and Jellinek (Pensotti with them) for the applicant.

H. L. Parker for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is an application made by leave of SLADE, J., for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash the decision of a district court martial which adjudged the applicant, James Martyn, to be a deserter and sentenced him to nine months' detention. There is a further application, which will only become material if the order for certiorari is granted, for a writ of habeas corpus.

A On Oct. 4, 1948, the applicant was arrested as an absentee or deserter from His Majesty's Forces, and he was brought before a court martial on Oct. 27. When before the court martial, he alleged that he had never received any calling-up papers. There being no evidence on the other side, the court held that the applicant was not subject to military law because he had not enlisted as a soldier and decided that the plea in bar, which had been raised to their jurisdiction, was good. By the Rules of Procedure, 1926, r. 34 (c) it is provided :

B "If the court allow the special plea, they shall record their decision and the reasons for it, and report it to the convening authority and adjourn; such a decision shall not require any confirmation, and the convening authority shall either forthwith convene another court for the trial of the accused, or order the accused to be released."

C Another court was convened, but not until more than a month had elapsed, and the point was then taken, before the members of the court were sworn and, therefore, before the court had become duly constituted, that they had no jurisdiction to try the case, because, it was said, the court had not been duly convened as it had not been convened "forthwith."

D On a consideration of the Rules of Procedure, it is clear that that plea was taken at the wrong time. It ought not to have been taken until the applicant had been brought before the court in accordance with r. 24, and when he was arraigned. It seems that this matter was discussed at some length, no evidence being given, and, as the judge advocate properly said, no evidence could then be given, because the members of the court, not yet being sworn, were not a court. Certain things were told the officers who would form the court, and they decided that they had jurisdiction. Thereupon, the applicant was arraigned before them and pleaded Not Guilty. Again his defence was that he had not received any calling-up papers, but it was then proved that those papers had been posted to him, and according to the National Service (Armed Forces) Act, 1939, s. 18, and the decision of this court in Lee v. Thomas (1), if papers have been sent to a man's last known place of abode he is deemed to be duly enlisted although he may never physically have received them. The court, therefore, found that he was a soldier and proceeded to find him guilty and sentence him.

F It is now suggested that we ought to bring up the order of this court martial and quash it on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to try the applicant. Once it is conceded, as it has been in this case, that he was a soldier, a court martial had jurisdiction to try him. If the court martial in the present case has not observed the proper rules of procedure, that is a matter for the convening officer, and, if necessary, the Judge Advocate General to deal with, but it is not a matter for this court, which can only interfere with military courts and matters of military law in so far as the civil rights of the soldier or other person with whom they deal may be affected. This application really amounts to asking us to decide that the members of the court martial were wrong in holding that they had been convened in accordance with the Rules of Procedure, but that is purely a matter of military law and procedure and not one to interfere with which this court has any jurisdiction. In my opinion, therefore, this application is wholly misconceived, and must be dismissed.

H HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

FINNEMORE, J. : I also agree.

Motion dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Joseph Mayorcas (for the applicant); Treasury Solicitor (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

ROUYER GUILLET ET COMPAGNIE v. ROUYER GUILLET & CO., LTD. ROUYER GUILLET v. JACKSON KNOWLAND & CO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell and Evershed, L.J.J.), November 30, December 1, 2, 3, 1948.]

Evidence — Foreign law — Foreign statute — Foreign private document — A Construction.

APPEALS by the applicants from orders of JENKINS, J., dated June 25, 1948, dismissing three interlocutory applications.

Each application had as its object the stopping of an action by a French company against an English one in which the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had passed-off goods as those of the plaintiffs which did not originate from the plaintiffs and claimed damages and an injunction. The applications turned on the construction of a French statute of Mar. 7, 1925, and of a document which was, in effect, the articles of association of the French company. The evidence given by the expert witnesses was conflicting, and, accordingly, the court, both as regards the private document and the statute, construed the text, deriving such assistance as it could from the evidence, and, in particular, from a decision of a French court. The appeals were dismissed. B C

The case only calls for report in respect of the statement made by LORD GREENE, M.R., with regard to the law relating to these matters (infra).

Rink for the applicants (the English company and Albert and William Rouyer Rouyer Guillet).

Arthian Davies, K.C., Milner Holland, K.C., and Rosselli for the French company and Louis Rouyer Guillet. D

J. A. Wolfe for the solicitors for the plaintiffs at the date of the issue of the writ.

LORD GREENE, M.R., in the course of his judgment, said: I must make it clear that the evidence of French law is subject to a certain differentiation as between the evidence of the meaning of the law of 1925 and the evidence of the meaning of the articles. As I understand the law of England, evidence as to the meaning of the statute is to be obtained from the evidence of expert French witnesses and the decisions of the French courts. On a matter of French law the decision of a French court would be most persuasive. On the other hand, evidence on the construction of a private document, such as articles of association, is admissible so far as it deals with French rules of construction or French rules of law or the explanation of French technical terms, but evidence as to its meaning after those aids have been taken into account is not admissible. It is for the court to construe the document, having fortified itself with the permissible evidence. I would add that when you come to the statute law itself, although it is right that prima facie what must be considered is the evidence of the experts and not the text of the law, when the experts differ as to its meaning an English court is entitled and, if it is to perform its function properly, is, indeed, bound, to apply its own mind, fortified by the opinion of the witnesses and giving what weight it thinks ought to be given to it, to the text itself and to examine it in order to make up its mind on the question of interpretation as between the two sets of witnesses. E F G

SOMERVELL, L.J., and EVERSLED, L.J., agreed, and in the result the appeals were dismissed. H

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Dehn & Lauderdale (for the English company and Albert and William Rouyer Rouyer Guillet); Daybell, Watts-Jones & Co. (for the French company and Louis Rouyer Guillet); Churchill, Clapham & Co.

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WHITEHEAD v. JAMES STOTT, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell and Singleton, L.JJ.), January 11, 1949.]

Factory—Lift—Construction of “sound material”—Latent defect—Absolute duty of occupiers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 22 (1).

A The Factories Act, 1937, s. 22, provides: “(1) Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained.”

B A lift-operator at a factory was injured by a blow on the head from falling metal when the lift in which he was travelling fell from a height owing to the breaking of shafting at the top of the lift shaft. The lift had been in operation for 25 years, and the accident was caused by a defect in the shafting which, though latent on ordinary inspection, could have been detected by modern methods.

C HELD: it was not sufficient for the purposes of s. 22 (1) that the lift should be of material which appeared to be sound for its purpose on reasonable inspection; the requirement of the section was an absolute one of soundness; and, therefore, the occupiers of the factory were in breach of the duty imposed on them by the sub-section.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937 (c. 67), s. 22, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, pp. 217-219.]

Case referred to:

D (1) Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 39; 88 L.J.K.B. 887; 121 L.T. 156; 83 J.P. 193; 24 Digest 908, 68.

E APPEAL by the occupiers of a factory from a judgment of MR. COMMISSIONER ORMEROD, at Salford Assizes, dated Mar. 8, 1948, in which he held them to be in breach of the duty imposed on them by the Factories Act, 1937, s. 22 (1), under which “Every hoist or lift shall be of . . . sound material.” The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Nield, K.C., and C. M. W. Elliott for the occupiers.
Gerrard, K.C., and Nahm for the workman.

F LORD GREENE, M.R.: The question raised by this appeal resolves itself into one of the true ambit of the Factories Act, 1937, s. 22 (1). The provisions of that section are new provisions making more rigorous the obligations of the occupiers of a factory in regard to lifts or hoists. The sub-section provides:

“Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained.”

G The workman, respondent in this appeal, whose duty it was to work the lift, met with an accident because the lift fell from a height in the lift shaft, and a piece of metal came down at the same time and hit him on the head. According to the findings of the learned commissioner, the electrical controls and safety devices were not out of order or inefficient, nor did they fail to operate, but a mechanical part of the apparatus consisting of a shafting at the top of H the lift shaft which carried the pulley wheels had broken. It broke owing to a latent defect which was not obvious from the outside, but which we are told could have been detected by modern means of testing by X-rays and so forth. The learned commissioner accepted the evidence that when this mechanism was installed it had this hidden defect in it. The lift worked satisfactorily for a great many years without the defect producing any ill results, but on this occasion the defect, so to speak, matured, the shafting broke, and the lift fell. That did not in itself cause the injury of which the workman complained. He was injured by the fall of metal from above owing to the fracture.

On that it is argued for the factory occupiers that the sub-section of the Factories Act which I have read did not impose any liability on them in respect of this accident. The sub-section imposes a liability to see that every hoist or lift shall be of sound material and adequate strength and properly maintained, but it is said generally that, in approaching the construction of that section, authorities which have found in other provisions of the Factories Act an absolute obligation to take this or that precaution must be construed as based on the presence of such phrases as "take effective measures to prevent," and that in the absence of some such phrase as that an absolute obligation must not be read into words such as we have here. At the outset (and this, of course, does not involve rejecting the appeal) I may say that I am completely unconvinced by that argument. No case has been cited to us which justifies the view that it is necessary to have some special form of words to create what has so frequently been referred to in these Factories Act cases as an absolute obligation. The well known decision of SALTER, J., in Davies v. Thomas Owen & Co., Ltd. (1), was referred to, but I see nothing in that judgment which suggests that the learned judge, in finding that there was an absolute obligation, relied on any special language. Here I can see no reason prima facie for limiting the construction of the words "sound material" to anything but sound material. The obligation is clearly expressed—"shall be of sound material."

That, however, is only on the threshold of the argument, because it is really to this effect. This shaft, it is said, complied with the obligation to provide sound material in that, when it was installed, it was sound for its purpose. Counsel for the occupiers explained that his argument involved that the material would be sound material if it appeared on reasonable inspection to be sound for its purpose. It is to be observed that that introduces a different test from the test of soundness in fact. It is appearance on reasonable inspection, and, therefore, may be consistent with unsoundness in fact. That appears to me to be the only logical way in which he could put his case, but I ask myself what justification there is for introducing that gloss on perfectly plain English words: "Every hoist or lift shall be of sound material." I can see no reason for writing on them a gloss which would, in my view, be quite inconsistent with the general objects of the Factories Act as explained in a great number of cases. It was argued that the sub-section fell into two parts, one relating to the original installation, and one to its maintenance. It was said that as regards the original installation it would be sufficient that the material appeared on reasonable inspection to be sound for its purpose. "Its purpose," when one starts to examine it, is a complex conception. It is partly composed of what I may call a mechanical factor—that is to say, its ability to raise or support the lift—and partly of a time factor—its ability to do it for some contemplated period of time. There is no evidence here of the contemplated life of a lift of this kind, but the factory occupiers used it for, it is said, 25 years, and at the end of that period this defect appeared.

My real reason for rejecting the formula put forward on behalf of the occupiers is that it introduces a qualification on the basis of reasonable inspection in the place of an absolute qualification of soundness. I cannot read the sub-section as referring to anything but an absolute test of soundness. I need not say anything on the subject of the meaning of "properly maintained." It was suggested that that merely imported the absence of negligence, a duty of reasonable care. I may say at once that I must not be taken as accepting that argument, but I do not find it necessary to discuss it. In my opinion, the learned commissioner was right when he decided that on the facts the material when the lift was installed was not sound material, and he properly instructed himself on the law when he held that that fact constituted an infringement of the provisions of the sub-section. The appeal must be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

SINGLETON, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

A Solicitors : Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for John Taylor & Co., Manchester (for the factory occupiers) ; Gibson & Weldon, agents for John Whittle, Robinson & Bailey, Manchester (for the workman).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Dictum of HODSON, J., at p. 250, explained. EDWARDS v. EDWARDS.
[1949] 2 All E.R. 145.

B BARKER v. BARKER.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Hodson, J.), December 14, 15, 1948.]

C Cruelty—Persistent cruelty—Summary proceedings by wife—Degree of cruelty necessary to be proved—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4.

D At least the same degree of cruelty must be proved to justify the making of a maintenance order by a court of summary jurisdiction in favour of a wife under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 4, as is required to substantiate a charge of cruelty in the Divorce Division of the High Court. On the facts, held, that a finding of cruelty was not justified, and the wife was not entitled to a maintenance order.

Observations of DENNING, J., in Perks v. Perks ([1945] 2 All E.R. 492), not approved.

E [AS TO PERSISTENT CRUELTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 838, para. 1339 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 556, 557, Nos. 6120-6123.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Perks v. Perks, [1945] 2 All E.R. 491 ; 109 J.P. 276 ; revsd. on other grounds, [1945] 2 All E.R. 580 ; [1946] P. 1 ; 115 L.J.P. 7 ; 173 L.T. 349 ; 110 J.P. 94 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

F (2) Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395 ; 66 L.J.P. 122 ; 77 L.T. 249 ; 61 J.P. 771 ; 27 Digest 291, 2661.

(3) Cornall v. Cornall, (1910), 74 J.P. 379 ; 27 Digest 557, 6123.

(4) S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Sagaporack, S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Durham Castle, [1927] A.C. 37 ; 95 L.J.P. 153 ; 136 L.T. 33 ; Digest Supp.

G (5) Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582 ; [1947] A.C. 484 ; 176 L.T. 498 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

H APPEAL by the husband from a decision of Tunstead and Happing (Norfolk) justices who had found the husband guilty of persistent cruelty and of wilful neglect to maintain his wife and made an order in her favour for payment of £1 a week. The Divisional Court found that there was insufficient evidence to justify a finding of cruelty and allowed the appeal.

H. S. Law for the husband.

Sleeman for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P. : This is a husband's appeal from a decision of the justices for the Tunstead and Happing petty sessional division of Norfolk sitting at North Walsham, whereby, on Aug. 20, 1948, they found that the husband had been guilty of persistent cruelty and of wilful neglect to maintain his wife, and made an order in her favour for £1 a week. I only wish to say one other thing before dealing with what is, to my mind, the real point of this case. There was also, as I have said, included in the summons a charge of wilful neglect to maintain. The justices have not dealt specifically with that in their reasons, but, apparently, the order was based on both grounds. A question has arisen whether it is possible to separate these two grounds, so that, even if the wife does not succeed on the charge of persistent cruelty, she may, nevertheless, succeed on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain. I think that on the facts of this case no such distinction falls to be drawn and the case stands or falls as a whole on the finding of persistent cruelty, and so I propose to deal with it on that basis.

This court is always impressed with the necessity of paying strict attention to the principles that have been laid down by the highest authority as to the impropriety of an appellate tribunal reversing those who have seen and heard the witnesses except on some real ground, and it is quite legitimate for counsel for the wife to press that point on us, as he has done. In the present case, no witness was called on either side except the wife and the husband. The wife called none of that evidence in corroboration of the charge of cruelty which courts are accustomed to demand, but I should not be prepared to dispose of the case on that ground, because the husband himself, in some slight decree, provided corroboration in respect of, at any rate, two incidents. The substance of the matter was that the husband alleged that the trouble which had arisen between himself and his wife was due to her preference for the society of another man, and the last two assaults, one only of which, as he admitted, was within the six months period of limitation in courts of summary jurisdiction, were both admittedly referable to his objection to her association with this man. He, in turn, called no evidence to bring this matter home to her, and, therefore, there was a conflict of evidence between these two spouses.

Our attention has been called to Perks v. Perks (1), in which it was held by DENNING, J., that "a court of summary jurisdiction sometimes acted on a lesser degree of cruelty than that required by the High Court since the relief granted might be temporary only and could be discharged subsequently on cause being shown," but, "on the facts there was a lesser degree of cruelty which was also found by the Divisional Court when the order was varied by deletion of the non-cohabitation clause. Therefore, the order of the justices for maintenance should be discharged." It is of the utmost importance that it should be understood beyond the slightest possibility of misapprehension that at least the same degree of cruelty is required to justify an order in the magistrate's court as in this Division. I use the words "at least" advisedly, because it is possible in the Divorce Division to pronounce a decree of divorce on a single act of cruelty, if that act comes within the well-known description of cruelty contained in Russell v. Russell (2), but in a court of summary jurisdiction the epithet "persistent" precedes the word "cruelty," and that epithet necessarily implies some degree of repetition. With that difference let it be plainly understood that this court has never given the slightest countenance to the suggestion that justices are entitled to find cruelty on anything less than proof of conduct satisfying the description of cruelty contained in Russell v. Russell (2), namely, conduct of such a nature as to cause danger to life, limb, or health, bodily or mental, or as to give rise to a reasonable apprehension of such danger. I do not think that DENNING, J., in Perks v. Perks (1) meant to lay down any different test, but there is a passage of the report which lends some colour to the passage in the headnote to which I have called attention. He said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 492):

"So the court of summary jurisdiction is dealing, so to speak, with temporary relief whereas the High Court is dealing with permanent relief, and this difference does sometimes result in a court of summary jurisdiction acting on a lesser degree of cruelty than the High Court would."

If he was intending to say that that was legitimate I should profoundly dissent from it, but at the end of his judgment he said (ibid., 493) :

“I desire to add that in these cases, on the wording of the statutes, I see no reason why the courts of summary jurisdiction should not require cruelty to be proved of the same gravity and degree as the High Court does.”

- A While agreeing with that statement, I would prefer to put it the other way and to say that I see every reason why they should, and, indeed, in Cornall v. Cornall (3), which was cited in the argument for another purpose, SIR SAMUEL EVANS, P., said that, in his opinion, the word “cruelty” in s. 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, meant the same thing as cruelty had always meant in the Divorce Court, but there had been inserted into the
- B section the word “persistent,” and “persistent cruelty” meant something more than “cruelty.” I have not troubled to turn up more recent cases, but I am quite satisfied that in them the same sort of language has been used. I remember very well that there was a time, not so very long ago, when it was highly necessary to remind magistrates how serious an issue was raised by the charge of cruelty.
- C I propose to approach the present case from the point of view of an enquiry whether there is evidence which justifies a finding of conduct on the part of the husband of such a nature as to have caused danger to life, limb or health, bodily or mental, or to have given rise to a reasonable apprehension of such danger. I have referred to the principles on which appellate tribunals, considering evidence on paper, should be guided. I do not propose to read out at length
- D the statement of that principle by LORD SUMNER in S.S. Hontestroom v. S.S. Sagaporack (4), or the more recent pronouncement by LORD THANKERTON in Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas (5), in which he said that divorce cases, or consistorial cases as they are called in Scotland, were a particularly clear example of the principle, but it is plain that, if the inferior court has misdirected itself (and in that I include a misdirection as to the nature of the evidence required
- E to constitute the particular offence), or if it has acted on evidence which the appellate court does not think justifies the finding, the appellate court is, not merely entitled, but bound to interfere. That does not involve any estimate of the credibility of the witnesses by those who have not seen the witnesses. It assumes that everything which the justices have found is to be upheld, while at the same time considering whether that ought to have been held to satisfy
- F the legal test.

- [HIS LORDSHIP referred to the various acts of cruelty alleged and continued :] If there is what may be fairly described as a course of conduct of cruelty extending over years, the mere fact that only one comparatively slight incident occurs within the statutory six months is irrelevant. It is enough to give the justices jurisdiction. A much more important point is whether there is anything
- G here which could satisfy a court that anything which the husband did caused the wife danger to life, limb, or health, bodily or mental, or gave rise to a reasonable apprehension of such danger. Taking this evidence at its full value, giving all possible weight to the fact that the justices have seen these parties, and accepting as the basis of my judgment that the justices have preferred the wife's account to the husband's account, I cannot bring myself to hold that there
- H is anything here which justifies a finding of cruelty. There was not a shred of evidence that the wife suffered injury or reasonable apprehension of injury. The justices have not properly directed their minds to the elements which it is necessary to find before they are justified in arriving at the serious finding of cruelty, and I think this appeal must be allowed and the order set aside.

HODSON, J.: The decision of the justices was based not only on persistent cruelty, but also on wilful neglect to maintain, and it has been argued that something less than the degree of cruelty required in the Divorce Court may be sufficient to support a charge before justices on one or other footing. I think that is wrong. It is clear that the word "cruelty," which has been used in many statutes, always carries the same meaning. As my Lord has said, it has been judicially determined in many cases, including Cornall v. Cornall (3), to which he referred. I do not think that there can be any doubt that cruelty, whether dealt with by justices or by the High Court, is always the same, namely, conduct of the nature which falls within the definition in Russell v. Russell (2). A footnote in STONE'S JUSTICES' MANUAL, 80th ed., vol. 1, p. 1041, contains references to a large number of cases under the heading of persistent cruelty, and in nearly all those cases decisions of the High Court are referred to as illustrating actions or classes of conduct which have from time to time been held to be cruelty. The observations of DENNING, J., in Perks v. Perks (1), although they were calculated to lead the learned reporter to state in the headnote that a court of summary jurisdiction sometimes acts on a lesser degree of cruelty than that required by the High Court since the relief granted might be temporary only and might be discharged subsequently on cause being shown, do not, I think, justify that conclusion. His judgment was not a considered judgment, and if that case was intended to be authority for the proposition that it is sufficient for a lesser standard of cruelty to be proved before justices than before the High Court, I confess I cannot think it is consistent with established authority. As my Lord has pointed out, DENNING, J., did, at the end of his judgment, whatever he may have said in the earlier part, express the view that he could see no reason why courts of summary jurisdiction should not require cruelty to be proved with the same gravity of degree as the High Court. So it appears that by the time the judgment was concluded, at any rate, that was the opinion of DENNING, J., as it has been of all other judges who have, so far as I know, dealt with this particular topic.

On the other branch of this case, namely, wilful neglect to maintain, counsel for the wife argued that something less than cruelty would justify a wife remaining apart from her husband. I think that is an unsound proposition. It will not do to say that because a grave and weighty matter will justify one spouse in leaving the other, therefore something less than cruelty will do. The grave and weighty matter which justifies one spouse in leaving the other is very often something different from cruelty, something which may even be regarded as more calculated to disrupt family life, such as the persistence in a false allegation of a criminal charge which was the subject of the decision in Russell v. Russell (2). Many people might regard this as something worse than cruelty involving the mere infliction of a physical injury causing injury to health. The existence of cruelty depends not on the magnitude but rather on the consequence of the offence, actual or apprehended, and, dealing with conduct which is either cruelty or not cruelty, it is, in my view, not open to any court to say: "This is not cruelty, but it is so near it that it amounts to a grave and weighty matter justifying separation." There being, in my opinion, no other matter apart from persistent cruelty which justifies the wife in remaining away from her husband in this case so as to put her in a position to claim separate maintenance, that ground of the order also fails, and the husband's appeal should succeed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard, agents for Hill & Perks, Norwich (for the husband); Butt & Bowyer, agents for Daynes, Keefe & Co., Norwich (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BARCOCK v. BRIGHTON CORPORATION.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hilbery, J.), December 8, 9, 1948.]

Master and Servant—Safe system of working—Delegation of duty to servant—Servant's attention drawn to statutory regulations—Contributory negligence—Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O., 1908, No. 1312), reg. 18 (d) (as amended by Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 739)).

The workman entered the employment of the defendant electricity undertakers as a labourer and after about 4 years became a fitter. He acquired a certain amount of knowledge in electrical matters, but was not given any training or tuition. In 1935 he became the assistant of a skilled electrician, the superintendent in the sub-station department of the employers' undertaking, and helped to prepare the equipment for the tests which the superintendent performed at sub-stations. In carrying out these tests the superintendent did not follow the instructions laid down by the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908, reg. 18 (d) (as amended by the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944). He adopted a method which involved some danger, but, he considered, was more expeditious. By a departmental letter, dated Oct. 21, 1944, the workman was appointed an "authorised person" within the meaning of the Electricity Regulations to carry out without supervision the duties performed by the superintendent, and he was instructed to make himself conversant with a memorandum on the Electricity Regulations. On Nov. 21, 1946, while the workman was carrying out a test at the switchboard, an explosion occurred and he was injured. He brought an action against the employers claiming damages (a) at common law, for failure to provide and maintain a safe system of work, and (b) for breach of statutory duty in failing to comply with the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 and 1944. The employers denied negligence and pleaded that they had complied with the regulations by providing a safe system of work and that they had expressly delegated their statutory duty to the workman. They also pleaded contributory negligence.

HELD : (i) the workman was not entitled to recover damages for breach of statutory duty since the duty of doing the test without supervision had been expressly delegated to him and he himself had committed a breach of the regulations.

Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 531), applied.

(ii) the employers had not discharged their common law duty to provide a safe system of work by merely instructing the workman to read and comply with the requirements specified in the regulations as disclosed by the memorandum, and, further, if they had at one time provided a safe system, it had been disregarded by long usage.

(iii) as the workman was not a skilled electrician and had never been instructed in the correct way of doing the work, but had always seen his superior officers doing it in a manner that involved some risk, he was not guilty of contributory negligence in carrying out the work in the same manner.

[AS TO MASTER'S DUTY TO PROVIDE A SAFE SYSTEM OF WORK, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 22, pp. 187, 188, para. 314, and p. 190, para. 318; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 196-198, Nos. 1602-1623.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 531; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Vincent v. Southern Ry. Co., [1927] A.C. 430; 96 L.J.K.B. 597; 136 L.T. 513; Digest Supp.

(3) Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone), Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 389; [1947] K.B. 641; 177 L.T. 92; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION to recover damages for personal injuries.

The plaintiff, an electrical fitter employed by the defendants, electricity undertakers, was injured in an explosion which occurred while he was about to carry out a test at a switchboard in connection with the high-pressure electrical system at one of the defendants' sub-stations. Following the example of his superior officers, the plaintiff, before starting to carry out the test, removed a safety device in the shape of a permanent screen, consisting of a lid with shutters, which, in compliance with the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908, reg. 18 (d) (as amended by the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944), separated the part of the apparatus on which he would be working from the parts of the apparatus that were "live." The plaintiff claimed that the defendants were liable (i) at common law, and (ii) for breach of statutory duty. The defendants denied negligence and claimed that the duty of complying with the regulations had been delegated to the plaintiff, and they pleaded contributory negligence on his part. HILBERY, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff on his claim at common law and held that he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Beney, K.C., and Marven Everett for the workman.

Granville Sharp, K.C., and Michael Maxwell for the employers.

HILBERY, J. : In this case a workman, injured in the course of his employment, is claiming damages at common law and for breach of statutory duty by the employers in respect of accidental injuries sustained by him in the course of his work. [After reciting the facts, HIS LORDSHIP proceeded :] The workman alleges that there was a breach by the employers of the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O., 1908, No. 1312), made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and amended by the Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 739), governing the places where there takes place the generation, transformation, distribution and use of electrical energy in premises under the Factory and Workshop Acts. The opening words of the regulations of 1908, under the heading "Duties," are :

"It shall be the duty of the occupier to comply with these regulations. And it shall be the duty of all agents, workmen, and persons employed to conduct their work in accordance with these regulations."

The workman relies on regs. 1 and 3, which provide :

"1. All apparatus and conductors shall be sufficient in size and power for the work they are called upon to do, and so constructed, installed, protected, worked and maintained as to prevent danger so far as is reasonably practicable. 3. Every switch, switch fuse, circuit-breaker, and isolating link shall be :—(a) so constructed, placed, or protected as to prevent danger . . ."

He also relies on reg. 18 (d), as amended by the regulations of 1944 :

"When any work is done on any switchboard for high pressure or extra high pressure the switchboard shall be made dead unless (1) the section of the switchboard on which the work is done (hereinafter referred to as 'the relevant section') is made dead and every other section which is live is either (i) so separated from the relevant section by permanent or removable divisions or screens as not to be a source of danger to persons working on the relevant section, or (ii) in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe as if so separated as aforesaid . . ."

In this case the section of the switchboard on which the work was to be done, viz., the feeder socket, was made dead, but it is to be observed that the regulation goes on to say :

“ . . . and every other section which is live is either (i) so separated from the relevant section by permanent or removable divisions or screens as not to be a source of danger to persons working on the relevant section . . . ”

A [His LORDSHIP dealt with the evidence and found (a) that the “ relevant section,” i.e., the section on which the workman was engaged at the time of the accident, was provided with a permanent screen (consisting of a lid with shutters) which, had it been kept in place as, to the workman's knowledge, it was intended to be, would have been in compliance with reg. 18 (d) (1) (i), and (b) that the apparatus as a whole, thus fitted, complied with reg. 1.

B His LORDSHIP continued:] The workman contends that the employers were responsible for the fact that the screen was not in place at the time of the accident, and, therefore, they were liable for non-compliance with reg. 18 (d).

The employers contend that there was a compliance with the regulation when the safety device of the shuttered lid was in place, and, if it was not in place at the time, it was because the workman had removed it by his own deliberate act; he was the person to whom they had delegated the duty of performing this test; and he had been expressly ordered to make himself acquainted with the regulations at the time and by the terms of his appointment as their delegate to do this piece of work. That contention gives rise to the question what the situation is where an experienced man is supposed to have had expressly delegated to him the statutory duty which it is incumbent on the employer to perform, and he sustains an accident by reason of his not performing the duty. It is not easy to reconcile the judgment of LORD GODDARD

D in Smith v. Bayestock & Co., Ltd. (1) and the decision in the House of Lords in Vincent v. Southern Railway Co. (2) with the decision in Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone), Ltd. (3), but that they are reconcilable, I am sure. In Smith v. Bayestock & Co., Ltd. (1), which was a case of an accident with a circular saw, LORD GODDARD said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 534):

“ The plaintiff adjusted the guard at what he considered was a suitable height to enable him to cut through this plank which was of varying or irregular thickness without stopping the machine. For myself I should have thought, provided, of course, that he had not left a wholly unnecessary gap, that he would put an adjustment on the guard which, in the circumstances, was practicable. But in any case it seems to me that the delegated duty had been put on him to adjust this guard and if he did not adjust the guard in such a way as was safe, it seems to be pretty clear—and that was the foundation of the decision in Vincent v. Southern Ry. (2)—that he cannot complain of it. He cannot take advantage of his own wrong and say to his employer ‘ Although you left me to adjust it and I did not adjust it, therefore I am going to claim damages against you ’.”

It is that judgment in those terms which the employers say should be applied in this case as against the workman.

There are one or two other facts and circumstances which I think must be looked at in considering this matter. The workman joined the employers as a labourer after leaving the navy, where he had received some instruction in the electrical work and apparatus which commonly is to be found in one of His Majesty's ships, but otherwise he had no skill or experience as an electrician. After being in the navy for 12 years, he joined the firm of Metropolitan-Vickers after his demobilisation and there became a fitter's mate and learned a certain amount about wiring. He then went as a labourer to the electricity undertaking of the Brighton Corporation (the employers). After being a labourer for about six months, he became a fitter's mate, and after three or four years he became a fitter. He was not given any training or tuition, but he picked up a certain amount of knowledge. About 1935 he became an assistant to Mr. Bousfield, a skilled electrician, who was the superintendent in the sub-station department. The workman acted as the assistant to Mr. Bousfield in getting ready all the equipment when Mr. Bousfield did the same sort of test as the workman was doing at the time he met with his accident. He used to see Mr. Bousfield doing the test, and Mr. Bousfield invariably facilitated the doing of it by the removal altogether of this safety device which was part and parcel of the apparatus, namely, this lid with its shutters, by unscrewing the four screws and taking it away so that the whole of the porcelain block in which were the two rows of sockets was exposed for him to work on. The first time the workman saw that done, he said to Mr. Bousfield: "Is not that rather dangerous?" or some words to that effect. Mr. Bousfield, he says, replied: "Yes, but if you did not take the risks, you would never get anything done." From that time onwards the workman attended this skilled superior, who represented the employers as head of the workman's department, and was accustomed to seeing this superior do this particular test in the same way. When Mr. Bousfield had to retire on the ground of ill-health, a Mr. Tidy succeeded to his position. The workman performed the same duties as assistant to Mr. Tidey, and Mr. Tidey continued to do the work in the same way. On Oct. 21, 1944, the workman was handed a paper called a "departmental letter," addressed to him from the engineer and manager, and headed: "Authorisation for Switching." The letter was in these terms:

"Until further notice you will be required to carry out, without supervision, the routine testing of switchgear, protective and earthing systems, together with oil sampling and testing and in respect of these additional responsibilities you will be paid 1½d. per hour above the rate for that of electrical fitter and this increase will be retrospective to Aug. 22, 1944. For the purpose of the duties which will be required of you in connection with switching operations on the high voltage system you will be considered an authorised person within the meaning of the Electricity Regulations issued in accordance with the provisions of the Factories Act, 1937. You must make yourself conversant with the memorandum by the Senior Electrical Inspector of Factories on the Electricity Regulations, a copy of which will be made available to you on application to your superintendent, Mr. Carr. Will you please observe that any switching you undertake on the high voltage system (a) at the power station, must be done only with the authority of the power station charge engineers; (b) on any part of the system outside the power station, only with the authority of the North Road charge engineers."

The workman was acting on those instructions in doing the work that he was doing on the day of his accident, and he had with him a Mr. Wingham to perform the duties which he had formerly fulfilled for Mr. Bousfield and Mr. Tidey.

It is said with great force that, so far as any breach of the regulations is concerned, this case is similar to Smith v. Baveystock & Co., Ltd. (1), because by the authorisation of Oct. 21, 1944, the workman was told that until further notice he would be required to carry out the routine testing of switchgear without supervision, i.e., he would be the person responsible for the doing of that work, and must make himself conversant with the memorandum by the Senior Electrical Inspector of Factories on the Electricity Regulations. The workman said that he could not remember having asked for that memorandum, but he felt sure that he had seen it at some time and read it so as to make himself conversant with the regulations, but he could not actually say that he recalled it.

It seems to me that it is very difficult to say in these circumstances that, so far as there was a breach of the regulations, the breach was not committed by the workman himself as the person to whom the duty of doing the test without supervision was expressly delegated. In the face of the decisions and the facts, I should feel very great difficulty in finding in the workman's favour if his case rested solely on breach of the statutory regulations, but I do not think that his case does depend entirely on breach of the statutory regulations. His case is also put on the common law duty of the employers, and, in my

- A opinion, he has established a breach of common law duty by the employers, unless he is wholly or partly answered by the plea of contributory negligence. I ask myself: What system of work had the employers provided for doing this work? The employers had 70 sub-stations, and the test was done almost daily. It was, therefore, a matter which called for some system of work devised and decided on by the employers. They had a duty to provide a
- B reasonably safe system of work. The employers contend that they had provided a safe system of work by ordering the workman to read and follow the memorandum on the regulations, but I do not think that one devises a system of work by saying to a workman: "Read the regulations, and do not break them." In my view, that is not devising a system of work. I think also that in this case no responsible person on behalf of the employers
- C had devised any system for doing this work, and it is the particular work which is in hand for which a reasonably safe system has to be devised and used. If, however, it is contended that the employers had devised a system, then, in my opinion, by a long usage that system had in practice been utterly disregarded, and it seems to me to be no use for a master to attempt to say in a court: "I discharged my common law duty because I put down on paper
- D a safe system and gave it into the workman's hands," if for years they showed him, by the action of those who were his superiors, that the work was not done in the specified way, need not be done in that way, and could be done in another way which involved danger. Those are the circumstances here. I should have thought that, instead of providing a safe system of work, the employers had, in fact, provided throughout the years an unsafe system of
- E work as the system which it was expected should be employed, notwithstanding that it involved risk, because, in the view as expressed by Mr. Bousfield, "If you did not take risks, you would never get anything done."

The last question is: Is the workman's common law claim answered by the allegation that he was guilty in the circumstances of contributory negligence?

- F The bare statement that he removed the safety device that was there to prevent an accident, and did so as an experienced man in charge of the work, looks, barely stated, a formidable proposition, but I have already related the circumstances which led to his doing the work in this way. In considering whether he was negligent in doing the work in this way, I think it is highly appropriate to bear in mind, first holding, as I do, that the employers provided
- G no system for doing this particular work, that the workman was left to his own devices as to how it should be done. He himself had had no tuition or instruction. He joined this undertaking as a labourer, advancing himself by his intelligence and, I suppose, his diligence to the higher grades, until at last he became what is called "an authorised person" under this appointment, but during all that time there was no interference by the higher authorities in his course of conduct. He had seen all his superiors whom he had worked
- H under do the work in this way, treating the matter as one which could and should be so done, and regarding it, although some risk was involved, as a negligible risk which should be undertaken to get the work done. In view of these circumstances, the question is: Was the workman guilty of contributory negligence because he did not break away from that system and devise some other system for himself? I find myself incapable of so holding. As a matter of justice and common sense, trying to put myself in his position, I can only think that I should not have considered myself wanting in reasonable care if I accepted to a certain extent such risk as there seemed to be in doing the work in the way in which I had always seen it done. I do not think that that is contributory negligence which would debar him of his remedy or make him fractionally responsible for it under the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945. That he did not use another device, e.g., rubber gloves, is not pleaded as an act of contributory negligence. That he did not use a covered copper bar instead of an uncovered one is certainly an act of contributory negligence, but, in my view, it was never brought to his notice that such a covered or insulated bar was available. In the circumstances, I think he recovers at common law.

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the question of damages, and awarded the workman £3,000 as compensation for the loss of his hand and £767 for loss of earnings, etc.]

Judgment for the plaintiff for £3,767 and costs.

Solicitors: Rowley, Ashworth & Co. (for the workman); William Charles Crocker (for the employers).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL v. JOFFE AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Humphreys, J.), January 14 1949.]

Street Trading—Licence—Revocation—Appeal—Powers of magistrate—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlvii), s. 25 (1).

By s. 25 (1) of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947: "Any person aggrieved by the refusal of a borough council to . . . grant or renew an annual [street trader's] licence . . . or by the revocation or variation by a borough council of an annual licence . . . may appeal to a petty sessional court and on any such appeal the court may confirm reverse or vary the decision of the borough council and may award costs."

The respondents were street traders who had been granted annual licences to engage in street trading in various foodstuffs in the metropolitan borough of S. All three respondents having been convicted of acquiring or selling food contrary to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, the borough council decided that they were unsuitable to hold licences and the licences were revoked. A metropolitan magistrate allowed appeals, by the respondents. The borough council now appealed against his decision contending that he was not empowered to substitute his opinion for that of the borough council in deciding whether or not the respondents were unsuitable to hold licences, but that his jurisdiction was limited to considering whether there was evidence on which the council could come to that conclusion.

HELD: appeals under s. 25 (1) were unrestricted and not confined to considerations of questions of law, and, therefore, the magistrate came to a right conclusion in holding that he had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal on any ground that seemed right to him.

[AS TO LICENCING OF STREET TRADERS IN THE METROPOLIS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, p. 693, para. 1019; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supplement, Vol. 26, pp. 36, 37, Nos. 1435a-1435k.]

Case referred to:

(1) Fulham Borough Council v. Santilli, [1933] 2 K.B. 357; 102 L.J.K.B. 728; 149 L.T. 452; 97 J.P. 174; Digest Supp.

CASES STATED by a metropolitan magistrate.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at the Thames Magistrate's Court, the three respondents, who were street traders, appealed under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947, s. 25 (1), against decisions of the Stepney Borough Council who had revoked their licences to engage in street trading on the ground that, in the opinion of the council, they were unsuitable to hold such licences. The council now appealed, contending that the magistrate was not empowered to review the merits of the cases generally, but was limited to considering whether there was any material on which the council could reasonably have arrived at their decisions. The Divisional Court held that the magistrate had power to act as he did and dismissed the appeals.

Havers, K.C., and Sebah Shaw for the borough council.

Ahern for the respondent Joffe.

Lester for the respondents, Diamond and White.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : These are three Cases stated by a metropolitan magistrate who reversed on appeal three decisions of the Stepney Borough Council revoking the licences of certain street traders, the respondents. The question is obviously one of importance.

Under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947, s. 21, it is provided :

“(1) A person requiring an annual [street trader's] licence or the renewal of an annual licence shall make application in writing to the borough council and shall in such application state . . . (2) As soon as reasonably practicable after the receipt of an application under this section the borough council shall . . . grant or renew an annual licence to the applicant. (3) A borough council may refuse to grant or renew an annual licence or may at any time revoke or vary an annual licence granted by them if—(a) the applicant or the licensee is on account of misconduct or for any other sufficient reason in their opinion unsuitable to hold such licence; or (b) the space available in the street or streets to which the application relates or which is or are prescribed by the licence is at the date of such application or becomes at any time after the grant of such licence insufficient to permit of the applicant or licensee engaging therein in any street trading or in the particular street trading proposed to be or actually carried on by him without causing undue interference with or inconvenience to traffic in such street or streets; or (c) the street or streets to which the application relates is or are not a designated street or designated streets . . .”

Paragraph (d) relates to :

“. . . a designated street or designated streets in relation to which the borough council have by resolution specified a class or classes of articles or things which or other than which they will not prescribe in any street trading licences granted by them in respect of that street or those streets . . .”

In other words, the borough council can say to an applicant in respect of certain streets: “We can grant you a licence to carry on street trading in certain articles, but not in other articles.” By para. (e) the borough council may revoke a licence if

“. . . the applicant or licensee has persistently refused or neglected to pay any charges due from him to the borough council under this Part of this Act or the byelaws made thereunder”; and para. (f) supplies another ground—if

“. . . the licensee has for a period of not less than four weeks not exercised or not fully exercised his rights under the licence.”

By s. 25 (1) :

"Any person aggrieved by the refusal of a borough council to register him as a registered street trader or to grant or renew an annual licence or by the cancellation by a borough council of his registration as a registered street trader or by the revocation or variation by a borough council of an annual licence or by any prescription made by a borough council under s. 21 (5) (annual licences) of this Act may appeal to a petty sessional court and on any such appeal the court may confirm reverse or vary the decision of the borough council and may award costs."

A proviso regulates the time within which an appeal is to be brought, and another proviso prohibits an appeal if the licence has been refused or revoked under s. 21 (3) (c) and (d). Parliament has recognised that in those matters the opinion of the borough council is to be final.

It is said that the reason why the borough council refused licences to these street traders was because they had been convicted under the regulations which deal with the sale of food at maximum prices of charging too much and the council took the view that persons who had been convicted of those offences were unsuitable to hold such licences. It is argued that on an appeal against a refusal on the ground of misconduct or for any other sufficient reason rendering the applicant unsuitable to hold such a licence, the magistrate is not entitled to substitute his opinion for that of the borough council, but all he can decide is whether there was evidence on which the council could come to that conclusion. I find myself unable to accept that argument. If it be right, the right of appeal which is given, at any rate against a refusal on any ground mentioned in s. 21 (3) (a), would be purely illusory. It would, I suppose, as HUMPHREYS, J., pointed out during the argument, really be an appeal on the question of law whether there was any evidence on which the borough council could form an opinion. If their decision is to be a mere matter of opinion and their opinion is to be conclusive, I do not know what evidence the council would be obliged to have. They could simply say : "In our opinion, this man or this woman is unsuitable for holding a licence," and give any reason they liked. I do not know how a court could say on appeal whether that was a sufficient reason. If the reason is to be one which is sufficient in their opinion, it is difficult to see how any court of appeal could set aside their decision.

On the other hand, there is given here an unrestricted right of appeal, and, if there is an unrestricted right of appeal, it is for the court of appeal, in this case the metropolitan magistrate, to substitute its opinion for the opinion of the borough council. That does not mean to say that the court of appeal ought not to pay great attention to the fact that the duly constituted and elected local authority have come to an opinion on the matter and ought not lightly to reverse their opinion. It is constantly said (although I am not sure that it is always sufficiently remembered) that the function of a court of appeal is to exercise its powers where it is satisfied that the judgment below is wrong, not merely because it is not satisfied that the judgment was right. In the present case the words are very wide. The magistrate is given power to "confirm reverse or vary the decision of the borough council," and it seems to me that once the applicant appeals to him, he is bound to form an opinion on the matter and "confirm reverse or vary the decision of the borough council" according to the judgment which he forms. There is no doubt that the magistrate had power to do what he did.

My opinion is fortified by the decision in Fulham Borough Council v. Santilli (1). It is true that the provisions of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1927, which were under consideration there have been to some extent modified because the Act of 1947 has taken away the particular right of appeal which was then in question. That shows that this question of appeal was before Parliament when the Act of 1947 was passed. If Parliament had intended that the very wide appeal, which is prima facie given by s. 25, should be limited in the way which it is now contended it ought to be limited, without doubt they would have put in words so limiting it. It is, perhaps, not without importance to notice that by s. 64 of the Act from the magistrate's decision a further appeal is given to quarter sessions, which would certainly enable the trader, though not, I think, the borough council, to appeal. Therefore it seems that Parliament attaches great importance to the right of a trader, whose livelihood may be taken away by the action of the borough council, to have not merely one appeal but two appeals. For the reasons I have endeavoured to express, I think the magistrate came to a right conclusion.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion. Considerable weight must be given to the fact, if it be a fact, that the argument of counsel for the borough council, if accepted, would result in our deciding that the only appeal to the magistrate given by s. 25 is an appeal on a question of law. Not only is there nothing in the section itself to indicate that such is the intention of Parliament, but it seems to me that that construction would be quite contrary to the language of the section. I see no reason to withdraw or to differ from what was said by the court, including myself, in Fulham Borough Council v. Santilli (1), namely, that it is a matter of common knowledge that a right of appeal is a right to a re-hearing of the whole matter in dispute unless there are words to the contrary, and the appellate tribunal is not confined to the reasons which have been given by the court below as the ground of its decision. I think the fact that "on any such appeal the court may confirm reverse or vary the decision of the borough council" indicates, as strongly as possible, that the court has the fullest possible power to deal with the appeal from every point of view. Why should it be given a power to vary the language of the decision if the only matter before it is the question of law whether there was any evidence on which the council could come to the conclusion at which it arrived. I think the words "on account of misconduct or for any other sufficient reason in their opinion" are not nearly strong enough to take away the general right of appeal which is given to a person who has been refused what, in effect, under this section means a right to carry on his living in the way that he has been accustomed and to substitute merely a right to appeal to a magistrate on a question of law. Further, as my Lord has pointed out, there is a further right of appeal. Why should there be a right of appeal to quarter sessions on a pure question of law from the magistrate? If a right of appeal is given on a question of law, it is generally to the High Court by means of a Case Stated as in the present case. I feel no doubt that the decision of the magistrate was one to which he had power to come.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: J. E. Arnold James, town clerk, Stepney (for the borough council); Scott & Son (for the respondent Joffe); Harry Baker (for the respondent Diamond); Conway & Conway (for the respondent White).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. KINGSTON-UPON-HULL RENT TRIBUNAL.Ex parte BLACK.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 13, 1949.]

Certiorari—Costs—Payment by rent tribunal—Application for certiorari opposed by tribunal—Tribunal appearing by counsel.

An application by a landlord for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash an order of a rent tribunal reducing the rent of certain premises without hearing evidence on behalf of the landlord was resisted by the tribunal, who appeared by counsel to oppose the application. On the order being granted, the landlord asked for costs against the tribunal.

HELD: as the tribunal had appeared by counsel and contested the case, the landlord should be awarded costs against the tribunal.

MOTION by the landlord for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash an order of the Kingston-upon Hull Rent Tribunal whereby they reduced the rent of certain premises without hearing evidence on the point. The Divisional Court held that there had been a complete failure of justice and granted the order.

Peter Lewis, for the landlord: I ask for costs against the tribunal. By the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, s. 1, and the schedule, the tribunal are paid out of moneys provided by Parliament.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: In the absence of misconduct on the part of the tribunal I do not think we can order the members of the tribunal to pay the costs.

Lewis: It will work great hardship on my client, who is a very poor woman. This is the only property she has. She is an old woman and she exists almost entirely on the rent from this property. The tribunal is represented here by counsel.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: In cases where justices appear and oppose, costs are sometimes given against them. They can file an affidavit, and, if they only file an affidavit and do not appear, we do not give costs against them. In this case, however, the tribunal has appeared and made itself a party to this lis.

J. H. L. Royle for the tribunal. That is so, my Lord, but in unreported cases the principle has been laid down that there must be perverseness on the part of the tribunal. It is submitted that there has been no perverseness here.

Lewis: My friend need not have been instructed to appear here. The tribunal might have read our affidavit and not opposed our application.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: We decide this case on the ground that the landlord had to come here, at considerable expense to herself, to have the decision of the tribunal quashed, and the tribunal have appeared by counsel and have disputed her right to have an order for certiorari. On the whole, as the tribunal have appeared here and have contested this case, we think the landlord ought to have her costs.

Royle: The Solicitor to the Ministry of Health acts in these cases as a matter of convenience. He is not instructed by the Minister.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: I suppose he has a retainer from somebody.

Royle: From the tribunal.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Then there is all the more reason why the tribunal should pay. If there had been no appearance by the tribunal, of course, we should not have given costs in this case.

Certiorari granted, with costs against the tribunal.

Solicitors: Smith & Hudson, agents for Gosschalk & Austin, Hull (for the landlord); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TOOTAL BROADHURST LEE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), November 29, 30, 1948, January 20, 1949.]

A Excess Profits Tax—"Income received from investments"—Royalty received from licence of patented invention—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1).

B A company, trading as manufacturers and merchants of cotton, linen, woollen and other goods, in the course of manufacture used patents covering inventions and processes which had for the most part been developed in its own research department. From time to time the company granted non-exclusive licences of a number of these patents to other manufacturers, and royalties in respect thereof were received by the company both in the standard period for excess profits tax purposes and during the chargeable accounting period, July 1, 1939, to June 30, 1940. The Crown claimed excess profits tax in respect of the royalties received in that accounting period from licences granted in respect of three patents :—(1) a crease resisting process developed in the company's research department. The company did not itself employ this process, but the cloth produced by the company was treated in accordance with the process either by a subsidiary of its own or by licensee finishers. (2) A process to prevent felting in woollen goods, the patent rights in respect of which the company bought in 1939 from the original patentees, taking over the burden and benefit of existing licences. The company had granted further licences, and the process was used in the manufacture of its own goods. (3) Controlling devices on stentering machines, invented by a person connected with the company. A joint application for a patent in respect of this device was made by the company and the inventor at the same time as an application by a second company which had produced a similar device. The company and the inventor assigned their interest to the second company in return for a royalty. On the question whether the patent royalties were "income received from investments" within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), for the purposes of excess profits tax,

F HELD : the income in question arose from a series of commercial agreements, exploiting certain proprietary rights or claims, which were entered into by the company in the active prosecution of its trade or business, and, therefore, was not "income received from investments" for the purpose of para. 6 (1).

G Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd. ([1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162) and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon) Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 609), approved.

Decision of COURT OF APPEAL ([1947] 2 All E.R. 409), affirmed.

[FOR THE FINANCE (No. 2) ACT, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, p. 1220.]

Cases referred to :

- H (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162; 2nd Digest Supp.
(2) Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1923] A.C. 723; 92 L.J.K.B. 665; sub nom., Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd., 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.
(3) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Rolls-Royce, Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 340; 171 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.

(4) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 609; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the taxpayers, Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd., from a decision of the Court of Appeal ([1947] 2 All E.R. 409), who held that no part of the royalties received in respect of three patents was "income received from investments" within the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), and that the royalties should, therefore, be included in the computation of the taxpayers' profits for the purpose of excess profits tax.

The Special Commissioners of Income Tax decided that the income arising was entirely income from investments, but stated a Case which was heard by ATKINSON, J., who held that the royalties in respect of the first two patents were not income from investments, but affirmed the Special Commissioners as regards the third. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal of the taxpayers as regards the first two patents and allowed the cross-appeal of the Crown in respect of the third patent. The House of Lords now dismissed the taxpayers' appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD SIMONDS and are summarised in the headnote.

J. Millard Tucker, K.C., Donovan, K.C., and Graham-Dixon for the taxpayers. Cyril King, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

Jan. 20. LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the question raised in this appeal relates to an assessment to excess profits tax made on the appellants for the chargeable accounting period ending on June 30, 1940, in respect of the profits of their trade or business. Shortly stated, it is whether in the computation of those profits certain sums received in respect of so-called patent rights belonging to the appellants, or in which they were interested, ought to be included. If, as the appellants contend, such sums were "income" from investments received within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, para. 6, then they ought not to be included. Excess profits tax was first imposed by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, pt. III, in respect of a certain excess of the profits arising from a trade or business over the standard profits as therein defined. It is in this context that your Lordships have to consider the meaning of the words "income received from investments."

It is convenient to set out, or state the effect of, the relevant sections of the Act that I have mentioned. By s. 12 (2) of the Act, the trades and businesses to which the tax applies are all trades or businesses of any description carried on in the United Kingdom, or carried on, whether personally or through an agent, by persons ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom. Section 12 (4) of the Act is as follows:—

"Where the functions of a company or society incorporated by or under any enactment consist wholly or mainly in the holding of investments or other property, the holding of the investments or property shall be deemed for the purpose of this section to be a business carried on by the company or society."

By s. 14 of the Act it is provided that the profits from a trade or business shall be computed on income tax principles as adapted in accordance with the provisions of pt. I of sched. VII to the Act. Part I of sched. VII to the Act is headed "Adaptations of income tax principles as to computation of profits" and it is provided in para. 6 thereof as follows:—

"(1) Income received from investments shall be included in the profits in the cases and to the extent provided in sub-para. (2) of this paragraph and not otherwise. (2) In the case of the business of a building society, or of a banking business, assurance business or business consisting wholly or mainly in the dealing in or holding of investments, the profits shall include all income received from investments, being income to which the persons carrying on the business are beneficially entitled."

The appellants do not carry on any of the businesses mentioned in para. 6 (2).

The facts, so far as they are material, are succinctly set out in three paragraphs of the Case stated by the commissioners. They are thus stated:—

A "3.—The company carries on trade as manufacturers and merchants of cotton, linen, woollen and other goods. In the course of manufacture the company (together with its subsidiaries) uses patents covering inventions
B and processes which have been mostly developed in its own research department which has been in operation for 20 years. The staff of this research department is permanent and is employed largely for the purpose of perfecting old processes and devising new. The company has from time to time granted non-exclusive licences of a number of such patents to other manufacturers and finishers both in the United Kingdom and abroad at a royalty. Royalties from such licences were received by the company in the standard period and in the chargeable accounting period in question.

C 4.—The royalties the subject of this appeal were received in respect of three groups of patents:—(A) Crease-resisting Process. This process was developed by the company's research department, and is patented in many countries abroad. The company itself does not employ this process, but the cloth it produces is treated either by a subsidiary of its own or by licensee finishers. A specimen of the licences granted is annexed hereto, marked "A" and forms part of this Case. (B) Process to Prevent Felting in Woollen Goods. In 1939 the company bought the patent rights in respect of this process from the original patentees taking over the benefit and burden of existing licences. The company has since granted further licences, and the process is also used in the manufacture of its own goods. A specimen of the licences granted is annexed hereto marked "B" and forms part of this Case. (C) Controlling Devices on Stentering Machines. These devices govern the transit of cloth on conveyor belts on drying machines. They were invented by a person connected with the company; a joint application by the company and this person was made almost simultaneously with an application by another company (hereinafter called "the assignees") which had produced a somewhat similar device. By an agreement made on Mar. 12, 1940, the company and the person connected with it transferred their interest to the assignees in return for a royalty, and the assignees took out a consolidated patent under the two applications. The royalties received under this agreement in the year in question amounted to about £150; the royalties received under (A) and (B) of this paragraph in the year in question amounted to about £100,000. The agreement made on Mar. 12, 1940, is annexed hereto marked 'C' and forms part of this Case.

G 5.—None of the licences granted as referred to in para. 4 above is exclusive, nor for the whole term of the patent. The company owns patents other than those mentioned in para. 4 hereof, but no licences have been granted in respect of them. The negotiation of the licences gives the company a fairly substantial amount of trouble and expense, but once a licence is granted little is involved except collecting the royalty."

H On the form of the licences and the agreement of Mar. 12, 1940, I will make some observations at a later stage. For the licences originally annexed to the Case others were afterwards substituted, but nothing turns on this.

On these facts, the commissioners expressed the opinion that "patents which had been exploited by licensing them out at a royalty fall within the term 'investments'" and that the sums in question should, therefore, be excluded from the assessment. From this determination the Crown appealed by way of Case Stated to the High Court, and, after some interlocutory proceedings to which I need not refer, ATKINSON, J., decided that the patents in groups (A) and (B) were not, but that the patents in group (c) were, investments. There was an appeal and cross appeal from his decision, and the Court of Appeal unanimously held that none of the patents was an investment, and, accordingly, that the whole of the sums in question must be included in the computation of profits for the purpose of assessment.

My Lords, I entertain no doubt that the decision of the Court of Appeal, which was founded on and followed an earlier decision of the same court, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd. (1), was correct. I do not propose to attempt an exhaustive definition of the word "investments." It is a word of which the meaning may vary according to its context. I hesitate to say, as was said by MACKINNON, L.J., in the Desoutter case (1) ([1946] 1 All E.R. 63), that it is to be construed as "a word of current vernacular." It is, for instance, a popular use of the word to say that a good education is a good investment. Here the meaning is limited by the context, and the context is one in which a distinction has to be made between the income of investments and the other profits of a trade or business. This does not mean that, if the assets (to use a neutral word), as to which the question arises, would necessarily be described as investments in any context, they can be anything but investments for the purpose of para. 6. This was long since determined in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2), a case decided on the strictly comparable language of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915, sched. IV, pt. I, para. 8, which was much pressed on this House. There the question was whether certain shares, which were admittedly investments, were investments within the paragraph, the then appellant company contending for an implied qualification to the effect that to be within the paragraph the investment must be made outside the operations for which the business of the company was constituted, but, as VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., said ([1943] A.C. 730), there was nothing in the Act which compelled or admitted of such a limitation of the meaning of the word. Your Lordships will, I think, get no assistance from this case and I mention it only because, first and last, learned counsel for the taxpayers asserted its relevance.

The problem, my Lords, is a different one—whether these assets, being investments, are within the paragraph, but whether they are "investments" at all, and, as I have already said, that is a word whose scope will depend on its context. It appears to me that the problem may be solved in this way. I would take a schedule of the assets of the trading company concerned and, omitting assets such as stocks and shares to which, in view of the decision in the Gas Lighting Improvement Co. case (2), the title of investments can in no circumstances be denied, would ask of each other asset: "Is this an asset which the company has acquired and holds for the purpose of earning profits in, or otherwise for the promotion of, its particular trade or business?" There might be borderline cases in which the answer would be uncertain, but I do not doubt that in the vast majority of cases the answer would be clear cut. If it was in the affirmative, the asset would not be an investment within the paragraph. It is possible, as was pointed out in the Desoutter case (1) by LORD GREENE, M.R., that a particular kind of asset might in the hands of one trader be, and in the hands of another not be, an investment, though a less likely form of investment for any trader to make than a patent cannot readily be imagined.

Applying this test to the facts of the present appeal, I cannot believe that any business man (who may be regarded as the touchstone in such a case) would describe the patent rights here in question as investments of the taxpayers or the payments received by them under the licences or agreement as income of their investments. On the contrary, the elaborate character of the so-called licences, which are designed to further the commercial interests of the taxpayers and are directly related to their own particular trade, indicates clearly enough that these are assets of a kind which a trader carrying on such a business as that of the taxpayers might be expected to own, but are assets such as no company carrying on a different trade would be likely to acquire. The agreement of March, 1940, need not be particularly examined. It serves to emphasise the distinction that I have made. It is not from such a source as this that a trader would seek to derive an income, unless it was an integral part of, or at least, closely associated with, the trade he carried on.

I should finally say a word about the cases that were cited to this House. I need say no more about the Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. case (2). I have, I hope, given full weight to it in the opinion that I have formed. In Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Rolls-Royce, Ltd. (3) MACNAGHTEN, J., decided that income derived from the patent licences there in question was not income from an investment. He partly, at least, founded his decision on the view that, before there can be anything properly called an investment, money must be laid out to acquire it or bring it into existence. This test, though it was not accepted by LORD GREENE, M.R., in the Desoutter case (1), may, I think, have an element of considerable value. It is not decisive, but it would, at least, be easier to describe an asset as an investment if it had been purchased out of funds not needed for the immediate purposes of the business. In Desoutter's case (1), to which I have more than once referred, the facts were similar to those in the present case, and it was held that the royalties derived from certain patents were not income from investments. The judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., in that case, which has been followed and applied in the courts below in the present case, is, in effect, now under review. I shrink, as he did, from attempting to lay down any general rule. The question is, as he pointed out, largely one of fact in each case. If for the purpose of drawing the right inference of fact I have suggested a certain test, I do not seek to depart from or to qualify what he said. Finally, reference was made to Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd. (4). There the court held that, applying the principle of Desoutter's case (1), it was impossible to say that the commissioners had erred in law in concluding that the transaction there in question had resulted in an investment. I am content without further investigation to accept the case as correctly decided on that ground. In the result, my Lords, I am satisfied that the decision of the Court of Appeal was correct, and move that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, the question in this appeal is whether income described as royalties received by the appellant company under three separate agreements relating to patent rights, and admittedly part of the appellant's business profits, is also "income from investments" within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6.

The meaning of "investment" is its meaning, not in the vernacular of the man in the street, but in the vernacular of the business man. It is a form of income yielding property which the business man, looking at the total assets of the company, would single out as an investment. It certainly does not include all the property of the company, and I am unable to accede to the proposition of counsel for the taxpayers that every item of the company's property is an investment, and that while the company uses those items itself the profit it derives from them is a profit of trade, but, if it hands one of them over to others to use in return for a periodic payment, it begins to receive an income from an investment. The business man would not limit income from investments to income from the kinds of securities which are quoted on the stock exchange, and he would, I think, regard as income from investment a profitable rent from a sub-lease of office premises or the like surplus to the company's requirements : Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd. (4) ; but he would regard income from an asset in which a company might reasonably have invested its cash reserves in order to have them ready to hand if it needed to employ them in its business as the typical income from an investment. In Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd. (1) LORD GREENE, M.R., gave as a possible example of an income from an investment the royalties passively received by a barrister who exploited a patent inherited or acquired by him by granting licences. I think that a business man would find no difficulty in taking the same view. In these cases the investment is made when the lease or licence is granted, and it seems the preferable view that it is the lease or the licence which is the investment. It is conceivable that an ordinary trading company as well as an individual might enjoy an income from investments in the form of royalties under patent licences, but it would be a rare occurrence, and a company claiming to be in the enjoyment of such an income must satisfy the income tax commissioners, or the court on appeal, that it is not merely a profit of the business but truly of the nature of an income from investment.

The taxpayers carry on trade as manufacturers and merchants of cotton, linen, woollen and other goods. The company has for 20 years maintained a research department for the purpose of perfecting old processes and devising new processes used in its business or for finishing the products. It grants from time to time non-exclusive licences to other manufacturers and finishers. Exhibit A1 is an example of an agreement granting a licence to use a patented process developed in the company's research department. The process is used in finishing. The company itself does not finish its own goods, which are, in fact, finished by the other parties to the agreement, who are bound to treat the materials of third parties at prices not less than minimum prices prescribed by the taxpayers, not to sell or allow to be sold materials treated by the process at less than minimum prices fixed by the taxpayers, to keep accounts and to allow the taxpayers' accountants to inspect their books, accounts, receipts and other documents, to mark as prescribed by the taxpayers all materials sold or treated under the licences, and in other respects to conduct their business of finishing goods under the licence in a manner advantageous to the business of the taxpayers. I am of opinion that no business man would classify the royalties received under this agreement as anything but the profits accruing from the company's business of manufacturing, finishing and marketing treated goods. Exhibit B1 is another agreement. It is used when licences are granted by the taxpayers to use a patent purchased by them from the original patentees. The patented invention is for a process to prevent felting in woollen goods, and this process is used by the company in the manufacture of its own goods. The material clauses in this agreement resemble that in A1 to which I have made reference, and no distinction between the two can be drawn. Both are trade agreements entered into as a means of promoting the taxpayers' business and increasing trade profits. Neither is an investment. Exhibit C deals with devices which control the transit of cloth on conveyor belts on drying machines. These devices were invented by Mr. Laurie who is connected with the taxpayers. There had been a joint application for a patent by him and the taxpayers and almost simultaneously an application by another company which had produced a similar invention. The parties came to a compromise agreement, embodied in Exhibit C, by which the taxpayers and Mr. Laurie assigned their rights in their application to the other company in return for royalties. I am unable to find in this compromise arrangement anything that a business man would describe as an investment. I think that it also was a means of promoting the trade and increasing the business profits of the taxpayers, or, to put it no higher, that the taxpayers have failed to show that it was more than that. I am, therefore, for dismissing the appeal.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON : My Lords, the royalties to which this appeal relates admittedly form part of the profits arising from the business of the taxpayers, within the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 12 (1), and the question to be decided is whether or not these royalties are "income received from investments" within para. 6 of pt. I of sched. VII to the Act. If they are, they must be excluded from the computation of the taxpayers' profits for the purpose of excess profits tax.

A I agree with the views expressed by LORD GREENE, M.R., in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd. (1) that the word "investment" in this context is not a word of art, and that the question whether or not a particular piece of income is "income received from an investment" must be decided on the facts of each case. I think that the question must be approached from the standpoint of an intelligent man of business, and, in my view, such a man, being informed of the facts set out in paras. 3, 4 (A) and 5 of the Stated Case, and being shown the agreement which is exhibit A, would not think that the royalties received under that agreement were aptly described as "income received from investments." I think he would rightly say that the royalties were income received from a commercial agreement, conferring advantages on each of the parties to it, and entered into as a part of the company's business. By that agreement the taxpayers grant to the finishers a non-exclusive licence, in a specified territory, to make, use and sell certain materials manufactured or treated under the patents therein mentioned, at such factory or factories of the finishers as shall from time to time be nominated by the finishers to the taxpayers and not elsewhere, for the period commencing on Aug. 1, 1937, and terminable at any time by six months' previous notice in writing given by either party to the other. Clause 5 provides for the payment of royalties by the finishers to the taxpayers, and other clauses provide for various commercial advantages to the taxpayers, and for a substantial measure of control to be exercised by the taxpayers over the business of the finishers. It is contended, on behalf of the taxpayers, (i) that the royalties payable under the agreement are income received "from" the patents therein mentioned; (ii) that these patents are an "investment" within para. 6 of pt. I of sched. VII. As to the first contention, I think it can more accurately be said that the royalties are income received "from" the agreement A, but I shall assume for the moment that the taxpayers are right on this point. Making this assumption, I cannot regard the patents described in para. 4 (A) of the Stated Case, used as they were being used at the relevant time, as being an "investment" within para. 6. I need not further elaborate my reasons for this view, as they are in substance the same as the reasons about to be expressed by my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT.

F As to the process mentioned in para. 4 (B) of the Stated Case, I do not overlook the fact that the patent rights in respect of this process were bought by the taxpayers, whereas the process mentioned in para. 4 (A) was developed by the taxpayers' own research department, but I do not think that this fact is sufficient to distinguish, for income tax purposes, the royalties payable under the exhibit B from the royalties payable under the exhibit A. The royalties payable under the agreement of Mar. 12, 1940, mentioned in para. 4 (C) of the Stated Case are, in my view, still further removed from being "income received from an investment," and I agree with the comment of SOMERVELL, L.J. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 413): "I am not sure what the suggested investment is." However, I need not pursue this matter, as counsel for the taxpayers felt themselves unable to press his argument under this head. I would dismiss the appeal.

H LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed and only wish to add a brief statement of the reasoning which has led me to that conclusion.

The income here in question arose under a series of agreements made by the taxpayers in the course of carrying on their business whereby the taxpayers used their rights as proprietors of several patents or (in the case of the agreement of Mar. 12, 1940) their claim to become such proprietors, to obtain certain advantages, pecuniary and otherwise, in the way of their trade. My Lords, I do not think any business man would describe the income so obtained as "income received from investments." He would be bound to admit that the purpose of the agreements was a trade purpose, but I do not think he would look on this alone as conclusive against so describing the income, and in that, I apprehend, he would be right, having regard to the decision of this House in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2). He would, no doubt, find difficulty in giving a precise definition of "investments" as the word is used in the relevant enactment, but I think he would be prepared to go the length of saying something like this: "If, in the course of carrying on my business, I make active use of a business asset—be it my factory building, a piece of machinery, a patent, or my working capital—that asset is not an investment. Whatever else a business investment may have to be, it is an asset for the time being held intentionally aloof from the active work of the business. It is none the less an asset of the business and may have great business value. For instance, it may enable me to survive bad times and take advantage of good, or it may help me to control supplies or competition. And if it produces income that is income of the business. But I do not earn that income by my business efforts. The part I play there is essentially passive. I cannot, of course, afford to neglect my investment. I may have to preserve it and, on occasion, change its form, but normally I just hold it and receive what it brings in." The question then arises whether that view of the matter accords with the use of the word "investments" in the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6. In my opinion, it does. The term as there employed obviously relates to investments of the trade or business, for the income therefrom will be part of the profits unless excluded under s. 14 and para. 6, but it does not necessarily extend to all the assets of the trade or business. Section 12 (4), it may be observed, speaks of "investments or other property," a phrase which is studiously avoided in para. 6, and, apart from this, such an extended meaning would undermine the whole purpose of Part III of the Act. It is plain, therefore, that "investments" refers to some assets and not to others. The statute, however, does not lay down any method of segregation for its purposes, and, in the absence of such provision, the proper test must, in my opinion, be related to the limited sphere of trade or business with which the Act is here dealing and founded, accordingly, on the meaning of the word for the man engaged in trade or business rather than for the man in the street. Beyond this broad consideration the language of the enactment affords little help, but I think the special inclusion of "holding" companies and societies by s. 12 (4) and the expression "income received from investments" in para. 6 (1) go to support the distinction which, as it seems to me, a business man would draw. Having arrived at this conclusion it becomes unnecessary to attempt a definition of "investments" or to consider whether particular forms of property, such as patents, are capable of being brought within the term. On the facts of the present case it is enough to say that the income in question cannot be income from investments for the purposes of the statute because it arose from a series of commercial agreements, exploiting certain proprietary rights or claims, which were entered into by the taxpayers in the active prosecution of their trade or business. The rights concerned played their part, so to speak, in the arena and not from the grand-stand. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal fails and that the income must be included in the computation of profits.

LORD REID : My Lords, I concur with your lordships.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Ellis, Peirs & Co., agents for Slater, Heelis & Co., Manchester (for the taxpayer); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

COMPTOIR D'ACHAT ET DE VENTE DU BOERENBOND
BELGE S.A. v. LUIS DE RIDDER, LIMITADA.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord du Parcq, Lord Normand and Lord MacDermott), November 8, 9, 10, 15, 1948, January 19, 1949.]

Contract—Failure of consideration—Recovery of money paid—Sale of goods—
A Provision for payment against delivery order—Property in the goods remaining in the sellers—Delivery rendered impossible owing to enemy occupation of place of delivery.

By a contract dated Apr. 24, 1940, a Belgian company agreed to buy a quantity of rye to be delivered at Antwerp. The contract, which was expressed to be on c.i.f. terms, provided that payment was to be against
B bill of lading and/or delivery order, and policy and/or certificate and/or letter of insurance, at Antwerp. It further provided (a) that the sellers were to pay for any deficiency in bill of lading weight, (b) that they guaranteed the condition of the grain on arrival, and (c) that all average should be for sellers' account. On Apr. 30, 1940, in accordance with the usual practice between the parties during a long period, the purchase
C price was paid by the buyers on receiving a delivery order addressed to the cargo agents of the sellers by other agents of the sellers at the port of delivery. This delivery order contained, inter alia, (a) a statement that the bearer had been given a share in a certificate of insurance covering a certain quantity of rye ("war and S.R. and C.C. risks clause included") and (b) an undertaking by the sellers' agents to D honour the delivery order according to the terms of the bill of lading.

The goods, however, could not be actually delivered until the captain's release had been obtained, and the property in the goods would not pass to the buyers until such time as the goods should be delivered in Antwerp. Owing to the German invasion of Belgium, the ship carrying the rye did not proceed to Antwerp, but, by arrangement between her owners and the E sellers, as charterers, and without notice to the buyers, she was diverted while at sea to Lisbon, where the cargo was sold by the sellers. The buyers claimed from the sellers the return of the amount paid by them on the ground that the consideration for the payment had wholly failed. The sellers denied that the consideration had wholly failed.

HELD : the fact that the sellers were entitled to demand payment against presentation of the delivery order did not mean that they had then fully performed their contract, nor was there a part performance of the contract, because the practice between the parties showed that the payment was made, not for the delivery order, but as an advance payment for a contract afterwards to be performed, the delivery order having no effect on the property or possession of the goods which remained in the sellers until delivery
G at Antwerp; there was no evidence that the delivery order tendered to the buyers had any commercial value, it being merely an instruction by one agent of the sellers to another, and the sellers' agents had undertaken no personal liability by their indorsement thereon; and, therefore, on the facts and on a true construction of the terms of the contract, it was not a c.i.f. contract although so described, but was a contract to deliver at H Antwerp, and there was a frustration of the adventure, the consideration had wholly failed, and the buyers were entitled to recover the money which they had paid.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., and CROOM-JOHNSON, J., ASQUITH, L.J., dissenting), ([1947] 2 All E.R. 443; 177 L.T. 648), reversed.

[AS TO FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn.,

Vol. 7, pp. 283, 284, para. 394; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 224-233, Nos. 1859-1925.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) The Parchim, [1918] A.C. 157; 87 L.J.P. 18; 117 L.T. 738; 39 Digest 517, 1344.
- (2) Law & Bonar, Ltd. v. British American Tobacco Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 K.B. 605; 85 L.J.K.B. 1714; 115 L.T. 612; 39 Digest 582, 1848. A
- (3) Inglis v. Stock, (1885), 10 App. Cas. 263; 54 L.J.Q.B. 582; 52 L.T. 821; 39 Digest 530, 1433.
- (4) Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 78; 92 L.J.K.B. 331; 128 L.T. 402; 39 Digest 529, 1421.
- (5) Castle v. Playford, (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 98; 41 L.J.Ex. 44; 26 L.T. 315; 39 Digest 528, 1416. B
- (6) Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 122; [1943] A.C. 32; 111 L.J.K.B. 433; 167 L.T. 101; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Hansen v. Craig & Rose, (1859), 21 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 432; 31 Sc. Jur. 236; 39 Digest 391, 263vi.
- (8) Rowland v. Divall, [1923] 2 K.B. 500; 92 L.J.K.B. 1041; 129 L.T. 757; 39 Digest 431, 608. C

APPEAL by the buyers from a decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., and CROOM-JOHNSON, J., ASQUITH, L.J., dissenting), dated July 31, 1947, and reported [1947] 2 All E.R. 443, affirming a judgment of MORRIS, J., dated Dec. 13, 1946, and reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 118, on a Special Case stated by an umpire. D

The buyers claimed the refund of the purchase price paid by them under a contract on the ground that the consideration had wholly failed. The sellers denied that the consideration had wholly failed. MORRIS, J., upheld the award of the umpire that the buyers were not entitled to recover the sum paid, and his decision was affirmed by the majority of the Court of Appeal. The House of Lords now held that there had been no part performance of the contract and that the consideration had wholly failed and allowed the buyers' appeal. The facts and the relevant clauses of the contract appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER. E

Sir William McNair, K.C., and E. W. Roskill for the buyers.
Le Quesne, K.C., and Naisby, K.C., for the sellers. F

The House took time for consideration.

Jan. 19. LORD PORTER : My Lords, this is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal affirming by a majority the judgment of MORRIS, J., who upheld an award of an umpire stated in the form of a Special Case under the Arbitration Acts, 1889 to 1934. The arbitration arose out of a contract for the sale of rye by the respondents to the appellants. The appellants, who were the claimants in the arbitration, asked for the refund of the purchase price paid by them under the contract on the ground that the consideration had wholly failed. The question for your Lordships' consideration is whether there was such total failure of consideration. G

The appellants were the buyers and the respondents were the sellers under a written contract dated Apr. 24, 1940, the terms of which, so far as material, are as follows : H

"Belgische Boerenbond Antwerp Apr. 24, 1940 Apr. 27, 1940—Antwerpen Messrs. Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S.A. Antwerp.
 DEAR SIR(s),

"We herewith confirm having sold to you this day
 (quantity) ab. 500 (five hundred) tons of 1000 kilos (description) of Plate rye

Faq rye terms crop 1939/40, of a nat. weight of 72/73 kilos per hect. guar. at disch. as per clause at the back, for shipment per steamer/s &/or power vessel/s 'Julia' afloat as per bill or bills of lading dated or to be dated accordingly at the price of $4.025 per 100 kilos c.i.f. Antwerp on the terms, conditions and rules contained in Form No. 41 of the London Corn Trade Association, and the details above and on the back given shall be taken as having been written into such form in their appropriate place.

A Any special condition applying hereto shall be treated as if written on such form.

Yours truly,

p.p. LUIS DE RIDDER LIMITADA.

p.p. BELGIAN GRAIN & PRODUCE CO. LTD.

B Payment to be made by nett cash on first presentation of and in exchange for first arriving copy/ies of bill/s of lading and/or delivery order/s and policy/ies and/or certificate/s and/or letter/s of insurance at Antwerp by first rate cable transfer on New York, unless the vessel carrying the goods arrives before the said time, in which case payment is to be made on arrival of vessel at port of discharge. Buyers to remain responsible for the payment of the cable. Insurance: Losses to be paid in currency of this contract.

C War Deviation Clause.—Buyers agree to accept documents containing the Chamber of Shipping War Deviation Clause and/or any other recognised official war risk clause.

Any expenses for covering L.C.T. Association's war risk and strike risk exceeding one half per cent. to be for account of buyers.

D The rate of insurance not to exceed the rate obtainable in London on the date of bill of lading or date of steamer's sailing from last loading port for which bill or bills of lading are issued, whichever may be definitely adopted by underwriters.

E Condition guaranteed on arrival (subject to any country damaged grain in the fair average quality of the season's crop) but in the event of the grain arriving out of condition, due allowance to be made for any delay whatsoever occurring after loading of the goods, any such delay to be taken into consideration by arbitrators.

The natural weight to be ascertained and determined at port of discharge at the Chambre Arbitrale et de Conciliation pour Grains et Graines by liter scale within 28 days from discharging. Fees to be divided between buyers and sellers.

F Allowance of 1 per cent. per kilo shortage or fractions in proportion."

According to Form 41 of the London Corn Trade Association, the goods were bought and sold at a price per so many kilos shipped including freight and insurance to the port of destination. The freight was payable on discharge and payment was to be made in

G "... cash in exchange for shipping documents. If shipping documents had not been sighted at time of vessel's arrival at port of discharge seller must provide documents entitling buyer to obtain delivery of the grain and payment must be made in exchange for same, such payment to be made without prejudice to buyer's rights under the contract."

H The seller was to give all policies and/or certificates of insurance for not less than 2 per cent. over the invoice amounts, and, in the event of a certificate being supplied, it was agreed that it should be exchanged by the seller for a duly stamped policy if and when required. The grain was to be weighed and seller and buyer were to have the right of supervision over both weighing and delivery, the seller to pay for any deficiency and the buyer for any overweight. The seller guaranteed the condition on arrival and for that purpose samples were to be taken and sealed by the agents of the shippers and the holders of the bill of lading or shippers' delivery order.

Before they made the contract, the sellers had entered into a charter-party under which the steamer Julia was to load at Bahia Blanca a full cargo of wheat and/or maize and/or rye for carriage to and delivery at Antwerp. That steamer duly loaded a cargo which included about 1,120 tons of rye in bulk, in respect of which the master, on Apr. 18, 1940, signed a bill of lading which acknowledged shipment by the sellers, and provided for delivery at Antwerp to the order of the Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd. (who were the sellers' agents there), on payment of freight in accordance with the charter-party. On Apr. 29, 1940, the Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd., as agents for the sellers, sent to the buyers a provisional invoice (No. 5362) dated, in Antwerp, Apr. 29, 1940, requesting payment by the buyers by cable transfer to New York of the sum of 4,999.33 United States dollars. This sum was arrived at by charging the price of 500,000 kilos at $4.025 per 100 kilos, deducting the freightage $15,250, and adding marine insurance for 2 per cent. over the contract price and war risk insurance, amounting in all to $124.33. By a marginal note to this document it was provided :

"C.I.F. Business

Your share in the insurance is limited to 2 per cent. over the net amount of the invoice."

On Apr. 30, 1940, the same agents sent a delivery order (No. 600) dated, in Antwerp, Apr. 30, 1940, addressed to F. Van Bree S.A. of Antwerp, who were also agents for the sellers there, instructing them to release to the buyers or to the bearer 500,000 kilos rye in bulk ex-bill of lading for 1,120,000 kilos rye in bulk shipped by the sellers in the steamship Julia to be received according to the clauses and conditions of the bill of lading dated Bahia Blanca Apr. 18, 1940. This delivery order was transmitted to the buyers after indorsement by F. Van Bree S.A. with an undertaking to honour it according to the clauses and conditions of the bill of lading and to give to the bearer all rights and obligations of the original document held by F. Van Bree S.A. for his inspection. The delivery order also contained a statement which, as translated, read :

"We give a share to the bearer of the present delivery order of $4,973 in a certificate of insurance for $7,117 covering 700,000 kilos rye in bulk (War and S.R. & C.C. Risks Clause included)."

and stated in a footnote that it should be presented on arrival of the steamer at Messrs. F. Van Bree S.A., Antwerp, for signature and release after payment of the freight of $15,250 (being the amount of freight shown payable by the provisional invoice) at the offices of the Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd. The buyers accepted the provisional invoice and delivery order, and on Apr. 30, 1940, paid the sum of 4,999.33 United States dollars. The sterling equivalent of 4,999.33 United States dollars is £1,243 12s. 2d. and this is the sum claimed by the buyers in the arbitration. On or about the same day, the sellers delivered to F. Van Bree S.A., Antwerp, two certificates of insurance (one in respect of marine risks and the other in respect of war risks) signed by Outshoorn and Landau, insurance brokers, certifying that insurance had been effected for the account of the sellers in the sum of $7,117 on 700,000 kilos rye in bulk on bill of lading dated Bahia Blanca Apr. 18, 1940, so valued, per S.S. Julia from Bahia Blanca to Antwerp. Each of the certificates stated that it represented the original policies and conveyed all the rights of the original policy holder for the purpose of collecting any loss or claim and that it might be exchanged for a duly stamped policy if and when required. Each certificate also contained a note stating : "This certificate not valid unless countersigned by Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd." There was no evidence that it was, in fact, so countersigned.

On or about May 10, 1940, while the Julia was at sea in the course of her chartered voyage, Belgium was invaded by the Germans and shortly afterwards

Antwerp was occupied by the German forces. Thereupon, by an arrangement made between the owners of the Julia and the sellers (as charterers), but without the knowledge or consent of the buyers, the Julia was directed to Lisbon and, the bill of lading, covering 700,000 kilos rye, together with the certificates of insurance, having, without the authority of the buyers, been taken from Antwerp to Bordeaux by one of the managers of F. Van Bree A.S., in May, 1940, new bills of lading were signed by the master in respect of the rye, showing Lisbon as the destination. On these new bills of lading the rye was delivered at Lisbon and there sold by the sellers, without informing the buyers, ex ship for a price less than the sum which the buyers had paid. By letter dated Sept. 14, 1940, the sellers offered to account to the buyers for the sum which they had received, but the buyers refused this offer, and claimed re-imbursement in full of the sums paid under the contract. The dispute was thereupon submitted to arbitration.

The buyers alleged that the sellers had wholly failed to deliver or cause to be delivered to them at Antwerp the 500 tons of rye and that in those circumstances the consideration for which they had paid to the sellers the sum of $4,999.33 had wholly failed. They further alleged that, as, by reason of the occupation of Antwerp by the German forces, it became impossible for the Julia to proceed to Antwerp or for the sellers to deliver the rye at Antwerp, the contract was frustrated and the consideration for which the buyers had paid the sum of $4,999.33 to the sellers had wholly failed. The sellers, on their part, denied that the consideration for which the buyers made the payment of $4,999.33 had wholly failed, but admitted that, if it was their duty to deliver the goods in Antwerp, the contract was frustrated.

The contract in question was one of a long series of dealings between the parties amounting to about 900 in all, under which, as the arbitrator found, the practice was as follows. On the arrival of the vessel, the buyers would hand the delivery order, together with a cheque for the "freight" shown due by the provisional invoice, to a firm named Carga S.A., who were the buyers' cargo superintendents at Antwerp. Thereupon Carga S.A. would hand the cheque and the delivery order to Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd., who would then sign the note at the foot of the delivery order acknowledging the receipt of the freight. When this was done Carga S.A. would present the delivery order to Van Bree who would retain it and issue against it a release or laissez suivre addressed to themselves, authorising the delivery to Carga S.A. of the parcel or the required quantity ex bulk. But, before physical delivery of the goods to Carga S.A. could be obtained, it would be necessary for Van Bree to have received from the ship's agent a further release, known as the "captain's laissez suivre." This would not be issued until the chartered freight had been paid by the sellers, as charterers, to the agents of the ship, or until the ship's agents were satisfied that the chartered freight would be paid concurrently with discharge. The captain's laissez suivre was the effective document on which Van Bree obtained physical possession of the goods. The umpire further found that, if the Julia had arrived at Antwerp and the usual procedure which would have been adopted by the parties in implementing the contract of sale had been followed, the property in the goods would not pass to the buyers until, after its discharge from the ship, it had been weighed in the elevator, until which time the sellers would have retained control of the goods, and at no time would the buyers, or any agent on their behalf, have had in their possession a document of title entitling them to demand delivery of the goods from the ship or an insurance document on which, in the event of any claim having arisen under the policies, they could have sued the underwriters. He found, however, that on two occasions when a ship carrying goods sold by the sellers to the buyers had been torpedoed during the late war, the sellers had collected and paid to the buyers the sum insured which would cover the loss plus 2 per cent., and the buyers had accepted the sum.

In these circumstances the question stated by the umpire for the opinion of the court was :

" Whether upon the facts as found and upon a true construction of the contract the buyers are entitled to recover from the sellers the sum of £1,243 12s. 2d. together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from Apr. 30, 1940."

He himself, subject to the decision of the court, answered the question of law A in the negative, but, in para. 19 of the Special Case, made an alternative award in favour of the buyers to take effect should the court decide the question of law set out above in the affirmative. His decision was affirmed by MORRIS, J., and by a majority of the Court of Appeal consisting of LORD GREENE, M.R., and CROOM-JOHNSON, J., ASQUITH, L.J., dissenting. The learned judge, in agreement with the umpire, as I understand him, regarded the contract as a B c.i.f. contract, modified to some extent, but not altered in its essential characteristics. The buyers had, in his view, entered into a contract for the purchase of documents or, more accurately, for the purchase of a parcel of rye, the fulfilment C of which was to be implemented by the handing over of documents. The documents, he considered, might be varied at the option of the sellers who would fulfil their contract if they chose to tender a delivery order instead of a bill of lading and a certificate instead of a policy of insurance. Even the stringency of these obligations he regarded as reduced by the practice of the parties, with the result that delivery order meant an instruction to their own agents (counter-signed, it is true, by those agents) and a certificate of insurance which was never tendered to, or held on behalf or at the disposal of, the buyers. The D delivery order, MORRIS, J., considered ([1947] 1 All E.R. 123), " doubtless possessed commercial value." In other words, the buyers were purchasers of documents and had received that for which they stipulated, i.e., the usual delivery order and a certificate of insurance which would compel or incite the sellers to recover any loss from underwriters and pay it over to the buyers. CROOM-JOHNSON, J., took much the same view, but LORD GREENE, M.R., E thought it unnecessary to decide these points since, in his opinion, the consideration had not wholly failed in as much as Van Bree had, by countersigning the delivery order, added their personal undertaking to the instructions which it contained and to that extent implemented the contract. The dissenting judgment of ASQUITH, L.J., turned largely on a criticism of the action of the sellers in diverting the ship, in their capacity of charterers and bill of lading F holders, to a different port without consulting the buyers. Your Lordships have been told by the sellers that this last criticism is not a matter for your consideration as it was not before the arbitrator and forms no part of the award, and I propose to disregard it as a substantive claim. Nevertheless, the contention that a contract puts it in the power of a seller to change the destination of a vessel containing goods which he has shipped or contracted to sell, thereby G leaving no remedy in the hands of the purchaser either against the ship or against underwriters, is a matter which cannot be neglected in determining whether the contract is, or is not, concluded on c.i.f. terms.

My Lords, the obligation imposed on a seller under a c.i.f. contract are well known, and in the ordinary case include the tender of a bill of lading covering the goods contracted to be sold and no others, coupled with an insurance policy in the normal form and accompanied by an invoice which shows the price and, as in this case, usually contains a deduction of the freight which the buyer H pays before delivery at the port of discharge. Against tender of these documents the purchaser must pay the price. In such a case the property may pass either on shipment or on tender, the risk generally passes on shipment or as from shipment, but possession does not pass until the documents which represent the goods are handed over in exchange for the price. In the result, the buyer, after receipt of the documents, can claim against the ship for breach of the contract of carriage and against the underwriters for any loss covered by the policy. The strict form of c.i.f. contract may, however, be modified. A provision that a delivery order may be substituted for a bill of lading or a certificate of insurance for a policy would not, I think, make the contract be concluded on something other than c.i.f. terms, but, in deciding whether it comes within that category or not, all the permutations and combinations of provision and circumstance must be taken into consideration. Not every contract which is expressed to be a c.i.f. contract is such. Sometimes, as in The Parchim (1), terms are introduced into contracts so described which conflict with c.i.f. provisions. In the present case, therefore, it is not as if a usual form of delivery order had been given and accepted or an insurance certificate covering the parcel was in the hands of Messrs. Van Bree as agents for the buyers, nor can a solution be found in the mere designation of the contract as c.i.f. This is not a case in which the over-riding provision is the term c.i.f., under which antagonistic terms can be neglected on the ground that they are repugnant to the transaction, as was done by ROWLATT, J., in Law and Bonar, Ltd. v. British American Tobacco Co., Ltd. (2). The true effect of all its terms must be taken into account, though, of course, the description c.i.f. must not be neglected.

It is true, no doubt, to say that some steps had been taken towards the performance of this contract, e.g., the goods had been shipped, an invoice sent, the customary so-called delivery order had been transmitted and that delivery order, among its provisions, contained a declaration by the sellers' agents, Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd., that they gave a share to the bearer of the present delivery order of $4,973 in a certificate of insurance. But the taking of steps towards performance is not necessarily a part performance of a contract. The question is whether the purchaser has got what he is entitled to in return for the price. Of course, if the buyers paid the sum claimed in order to obtain the delivery order and the share purported to be given by it in the certificate of insurance, the contract would have been performed in part at least, but I do not so construe the contract even when illuminated by the practice adopted by the parties. That practice seems to me rather to show that the payment was made, not for the documents, but as an advance payment for a contract afterwards to be performed. With all due respect to the learned judge and the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, I can see no sufficient reason for supposing either that the delivery order had some commercial value or that Messrs. Van Bree undertook a personal liability by their indorsement of the document. There was no evidence of commercial value and the document itself was merely an instruction by one agent of the sellers to another. In my view, if the Belgian Grain and Produce Co. were sued on the document, they would rightly, reply that they were acting only as agents and Van Bree could make the same defence. The document appears to me to be no more than an indication that a promise already made by the sellers would be carried out in due course, but it in no way increases their obligations or adds to the security of the buyers.

In my opinion, the method by which the contract was customarily carried out supports this view. No doubt, the contract could have been so performed as to make it subject to the ordinary principles which apply to a c.i.f. contract. The tender of a bill of lading, or even of a delivery order on the ship, at any rate if attorned to by the master, and a policy or a certificate of insurance delivered to or even held for the buyers, might well put it in that category, but the type of delivery order tendered in the present case was a preliminary step only. A complicated procedure had to be followed before the goods would be released. The buyers had to hand the sum due for freight to their agents; those agents would then pay the freight and present the delivery order to the Belgian Grain and Produce Co., who would sign a note on it acknowledging receipt of the freight; the agents, thereupon, would hand the delivery order to Van Bree who would retain it and issue a laissez suivre, or release to themselves, authorising delivery to the agents. Before physical delivery of the goods could take place, however, Van Bree must have received a captain's laissez suivre authorising delivery to them. As the umpire says :

"It was thus the effective document upon which Van Bree obtained physical possession of the goods ; it was issued to Van Bree and was never physically in the buyer's hands."

Similarly, the insurance certificates, as the umpire also finds,

"were received by Van Bree from the Belgian Grain and Produce Co. and would not have passed through the hands of or even have been seen by the buyers."

He further finds that Van Bree were

"at no time and in no respect agents of the buyers and that the sellers did not, by delivering the certificates to Van Bree, constructively deliver them to the buyers nor did Van Bree at any time hold the certificates (whether countersigned by the Belgian Grain and Produce Co. or not) at the disposal of the buyers."

In these circumstances, the fact that the sellers twice collected the insurance money for a total loss and handed it to the buyers does not lead very far. It was a convenient method of settling accounts between the parties, and, despite the extra two per cent., is in substance no more than a repayment of the money given for the goods.

My Lords, the object and the result of a c.i.f. contract is to enable sellers and buyers to deal with cargoes or parcels afloat and to transfer them freely from hand to hand by giving constructive possession of the goods which are being dealt with. Undoubtedly, the practice of shipping and insuring produce in bulk is to make the process more difficult, but a ship's delivery order and a certificate of insurance transferred to or held for a buyer still leave it possible for some, though less satisfactory, dealing with the goods while at sea to take place. The practice adopted between buyers and sellers in the present case renders such dealing well nigh impossible. The buyer gets neither property nor possession until the goods are delivered to him at Antwerp, and the certificate of insurance, if it enures to his benefit at all, except on the journey from ship to warehouse, has never been held for or delivered to him. Indeed, it is difficult to see how a parcel is at the buyer's risk when he has neither property nor possession, except in such cases as Inglis v. Stock (3) and Sterns, Ltd. v. Tickers, Ltd. (4), where the purchaser had an interest in an undivided part of a bulk parcel on board a ship, or elsewhere, obtained by attornment of the bailee to him. The vital question in the present case, as I see it, is whether the buyers paid for the documents as representing the goods or for the delivery of the goods themselves. The time and place of payment are elements to be considered, but are by no means conclusive of the question. Such considerations may, on the one hand, indicate a payment in advance, or, on the other, they may show a payment postponed until the arrival of the ship, though the property in the goods or the risk has passed to the buyer while the goods are still at sea, as in Castle v. Playford (5). But the whole circumstances have to be looked at and where, as, in my opinion, is the case here, no further security beyond that contained in the original contract passed to the buyer as a result of payment, where the property and possession both remained in the seller until delivery in Antwerp, where the seller was to pay for deficiency in bill of lading weight, guaranteed condition on arrival, and made himself responsible for all averages, the true view, I think, is that it is not a c.i.f. contract, even in a modified form, but a contract to deliver at Antwerp. Nor do I think it matters that payment is said to be not only on presentation but "in exchange for" documents. There are many ways of carrying out the contract to which that expression would apply, but, in truth, whether the payment is described as made on presentation of or in exchange for a document, the document was not a fulfilment, or even a partial fulfilment, of the contract. It was but a step on the way. What the buyer wanted was delivery of the goods in Antwerp. What the seller wanted was payment of the price before that date and the delivery of the documents furnished the date for payment, but had no effect on the property or possession of the goods or the buyer's rights against the vendor. If this be the true view, there was plainly a frustration of the adventure—indeed, the sellers admit so much in their pleadings, and no part performance, and the consideration had wholly failed. The buyers are, accordingly, entitled to recover the money which they have paid. I should allow the appeal and pronounce for the alternative award with costs in your Lordships' House and in the courts below.

B LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the facts relevant to this appeal are fully set out in the Special Case stated by the umpire and have been re-stated by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack. I will not repeat them. The short question for your Lordships' determination is whether the consideration for which the buyers, on Apr. 30, 1940, paid to the sellers the sum of 4,999.83 United States dollars (the sterling equivalent of which was agreed to be £1,243

C 12s. 2d.) wholly failed so that the buyers are entitled to recover that sum from the sellers. This question was answered by MORRIS, J., in the negative. I hope that I do no injustice to the careful judgment of the learned judge if I summarise it by saying that, in his view, there was not a total failure of consideration because, whatever may have been the legal value of the delivery orders which the buyers were accustomed to accept, such delivery orders D possessed some commercial value. This decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal. The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS took the view ([1947] 2 All E.R. 447) that, by virtue of the handing over of the delivery order, the buyers

"obtained something that they did not have before, namely, the personal obligation of the sellers' local agent [Van Bree]—obviously a thing of value to them."

E He further held, and here, I think, is the crux of the matter, that

"the delivery order was, not a mere piece of machinery, but an implementation of the sellers' obligation to produce what was, in effect, an undertaking and a guarantee of the buyers' rights by Van Bree."

F CROOM-JOHNSON, J., took substantially the same view. He said (ibid., 454):

"The buyers got at least a part of what they contracted to pay for."

ASQUITH, L.J., on the other hand, would have allowed the appeal, accepting the buyers' argument that the consideration had wholly failed and holding that the receipt of the delivery order was not the consideration for the payment, the delivery order being "a mere cog-wheel in the machinery." The argument G before your Lordships ranged over a wide field; much of it being directed to considering whether the contract between the parties was, or was to be regarded as, or was of the type of, or partook of the nature of, a c.i.f. contract. I prefer, without giving the contract a label, to see what the parties respectively agreed to do and then to consider what is the legal effect of failure of performance.

H My Lords, it appears to me plain that here there was a contract for the sale of goods, viz., 500 tons of rye, and that that contract could be performed by either the physical or the symbolical delivery of the goods in accordance with its terms. It is common ground that there was not physical delivery. Was there then symbolical delivery? Certainly there was not. Again, it is common ground that the property in the goods did not pass to the buyers. There was not, and, indeed, could not have been, any tender of a bill of lading, and I do not understand it to have been contended that the handing over of the delivery order in this case amounted to symbolical delivery. If it was so contended, the contention is, in my opinion, baseless. The contract, then, being for the sale of goods and the goods, though paid for, not having been actually or symbolically delivered, how do the sellers justify their contention that the consideration did not wholly fail? Departing, as it appears to me, from the reasoning which found favour with the majority of the Court of Appeal, counsel for the sellers urged in the terms of the second of the formal reasons in their Case that "at the time of payment the sellers had performed all that they were required to do under the contract of sale." My Lords, this seems to me an astonishing proposition. The contract entitled the sellers to require payment on first presentation of and in exchange for first arriving copies of bills of lading and/or delivery orders and policies and/or certificates and/or letters of insurance at Antwerp, etc. Therefore, it was urged, the sellers had done all, and I emphasise the word "all," they were bound to do if and when they handed over a delivery order and certificates of insurance. I do not pause to examine the factual basis of this contention, for it seems to me to be wholly unsound in law. The fact that a seller at a certain stage in the carrying out of his contract is entitled by its terms to demand payment does not mean that at that stage he has fully performed his contract. Confusion, as I think, has arisen from the fact that, had the sellers been in a position and elected to tender shipping documents by virtue of which the property in the goods passed to the buyers, then the latter could not have contended that there had been failure of consideration, but this result would have ensued, not because a clause in the contract provided for payment against documents, but because in law there cannot be failure of consideration if the property has passed. It is, in fact, as ASQUITH, L.J., pointed out, a part of the machinery by which the contract is carried out that payment should be made against, e.g., a delivery order, and it is as little relevant to the question whether there has been failure of consideration as would be a provision that payment should be made, e.g., on notification that the ship had left New York or had arrived at Cherbourg.

But then, it was said, assuming that the sellers did not perform all that they were required to do under the contract, yet they performed at least a part of what they were required to do. This contention had, I think, two slightly different aspects. In the first place, it was said that there could not be total failure of consideration if the sellers had done something towards carrying out this contract and that they had done something, viz., handed over a delivery order. In the second place, it was said that that something was itself of value, and, therefore, there was not a total failure of consideration. In its first aspect this contention appears to suffer from the same fallacy as that which I have already tried to expose. It is a confusion of the consideration for the contract with the mode in which it is to be carried out, but in its second aspect it demands closer attention, for here it has the support of the learned judges in the courts below. My Lords, there is, in my opinion, no finding of fact by the umpire which would justify your Lordships in holding that the delivery order which was handed to the buyers had any commercial value in the ordinary sense. That it was not a document of title by itself entitling the buyers to delivery of the goods was expressly found. It is a matter of conjecture whether in these circumstances it had any commercial value, and your Lordships cannot found on conjecture. The case is, however, put not only on the general commercial value of such a document but on the special value which is said to have accrued to the buyers from its terms. This is the view which was taken by the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS, whose words I have already cited.

At this stage I would remind your Lordships that, as was pointed out by VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in Fibrosa Spolka Akcyjna v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd. (6) ([1943] A.C. 48):

"... when one is considering the law of failure of consideration and of the quasi-contractual right to recover money on that ground, it is, generally speaking, not the promise which is referred to as the consideration, but the performance of the promise."

To this I would add that the receipt by the promisee of something which the promisor did not promise will not prevent a total failure of consideration. The valuable consideration which the MASTER OF THE ROLLS thought the buyers received was a personal undertaking and guarantee by Van Bree, the local agents at Antwerp of the sellers, which was to be found in their indorsement of the delivery note with the words :

"Nous nous engageons à honorer le présent Delivery Note aux clauses et conditions du connaissance et le porteur a tous les droits et obligations du document original que nous tenons à son inspection."

I cannot accept this view. It is, I think, reasonably clear that the words I have cited can give rise to no independent contractual rights against Van Bree. There is nothing in the umpire's award to suggest that Van Bree were acting in any other capacity than as agents for the sellers. If they were, in fact, acting or purporting to act as principals in respect of their indorsement of the delivery note, then, if, as I assume to be the case in the absence of evidence to the contrary, Belgian law is the same as English law, the buyers acquired against them no enforceable rights, for, so far as they, at least, were concerned there was no consideration for their engagement. But, as I have said, in my view, Van Bree were acting throughout as agents, and, seen in its true perspective, their undertaking indorsed on the delivery note was not "a part of what they (the buyers) contracted to pay for," but a part of the machinery by which the sellers were to carry out their bargain. What the buyers bought was 500 tons of rye, not an indorsement on a piece of paper which brought them not a step nearer their rye until the ship arrived at Antwerp.

I come, then, to the conclusion that the sellers performed neither all nor, in any material sense, a part of what they were required to do under the contract and that the buyers obtained no part of that which they had contracted to buy. There was, therefore, total failure of consideration. There is, however, one other matter to which I would briefly refer. The sellers, all else failing them, urged that the risk in the goods had passed to the buyers even if the property had not, and that the insurance contract made by the sellers was available for the buyers. Assuming, without deciding, that these propositions are well-founded, I am unable to see how they assist the sellers. If the contract is, as I hold it is, a contract for the sale of rye to be performed by its physical or symbolical delivery, what relevance has it that the sellers say at a certain stage that the risk has passed and that insurance is available? It may well be that, if there is any validity in these propositions, the sellers, recovering on the insurance policies, would hold the proceeds for the benefit of the buyers, but this does not seem to me to touch the question whether there has been a total failure of consideration. It is, I think, probable that the insistence by the learned counsel for the sellers on this aspect of the case was bound up with the reiterated plea that this was a c.i.f. contract. As I have ventured to point out, it is immaterial what the contract may be called or to what category of contract it is nearest akin, if it lacks that salient characteristic, which alone is relevant, namely, that the property in the goods not only may, but must, pass by delivery of the documents against which payment is made. I would allow this appeal with costs here and below.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, the parties to the contract which your Lordships have the task of construing certainly cannot be said to have expressed their meaning in lucid or readily intelligible terms, and I do not find it surprising that the dispute between them has led to a difference of judicial opinion. But, though I hesitate to say that there is no room for doubt, I have come to the conclusion that the appeal should be allowed for the reasons given by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, the issue in the appeal is whether as a result of the frustration of the contract there was a total failure of the consideration for the sum of $4,999.33 paid by the buyers on Apr. 30, 1940. The contract was an agreement to sell a quantity of rye and the sum paid was part of the stipulated price, as brought out in the provisional invoice. It follows that, unless there are in the contract terms modifying the ordinary incidents of a sale of goods, the transfer of the property in the rye was the consideration for which the sum now sued for was paid. For the full implement of the contract two things remained at the date of frustration, the payment of the remainder of the price by the buyers and the delivery of the rye by the sellers. Neither of these things could have been done before the arrival of the ship at Antwerp. Symbolical delivery was never intended, nor was symbolical delivery by bill of lading possible in the circumstances. The rye purchased by the buyers was part of a full cargo afloat and the bill of lading which had been taken covered the undivided bulk. That bill of lading was not one which the buyers would have been bound to accept. The delivery order presented to the buyers by the sellers' agents was not a document of title and was ineffectual to pass the property. Without physical delivery on arrival, there could be no transfer of the property. It is found as a fact that the property was not transferred, but, if that finding had not been made, it would have been the necessary inference from the circumstances already stated. There is also a finding that if the ship had arrived at Antwerp the buyers would never have had in their possession any document of title enabling them to demand delivery of the goods.

What, then, is the basis of the contention that the buyers received consideration for the part of the price paid by them? The main proposition advanced by the sellers was that the delivery order must be treated as equivalent to the goods, though neither the property nor the risk passed, because the contract so provides. But there were independent and subsidiary contentions that the risk of marine loss had passed to the buyers, and, failing all else, that the delivery order was valuable consideration on one of two grounds, either that it was a document of commercial value or that it contained a promise by Van Bree that they personally would honour the delivery order in accordance with the terms of the bill of lading which they held for the inspection of the bearer. I propose to consider first whether these subordinate contentions have any validity and relevance.

Whether the passing of the marine risk under the contract would be relevant to the issue in the appeal may well be doubted. The agreement of parties that the buyers should bear the risk of a loss against which the insurance was provided for by the contract is not evidence of an intention that the buyers were also to take the risk of a frustration which was not within the contemplation of the contract. I have also difficulty in attaching any intelligible meaning in this case to the proposition that the marine risk passed though the property did not pass. The rule res perit domino "is generally an unbending rule of law, arising from the very nature of property." I quote from a judgment delivered by LORD INGLIS (Lord Justice-Clerk) (21 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 438) in Hansen v. Craig (7) in which he had to consider the civil law. The rule periculum rei venditae nondum traditae est emptoris was an exception allowed by the civil law, but it was an exception more apparent than real. It was but an equitable recognition that, when the price was certain and the subject of the sale specific, the substantial interest passed to the buyer though the property remained in the seller till delivery in accordance with the rule traditionibus non nudis pactis dominia rerum transferuntur. In the law of England, though these difficulties were avoided, it has been found necessary to provide for the passing of the risk to the buyer before the property passes to him, if the parties so agree. It may be conceded that the parties can agree to some purely artificial allocation of the risk and, if they express that agreement in suitable language in the contract, effect must somehow be given to it. But the parties to commercial contracts are practical people and, in those cases in which it has been held that the risk without the property has passed to the buyer, it has been because the buyer rather than the seller was seen to have an immediate and practical interest in the goods, as, for instance, when he has an immediate right under the storekeeper's delivery warrant to the delivery of a portion of an undivided bulk in store or an immediate right under several contracts with different persons to the whole of a bulk not yet appropriated to the several contracts. In the present case, however, the buyers had no more than a promise to deliver a part of the bulk cargo and the case is typically one for the general rule res perit domino. The sellers' practical and real interest in the goods at risk is also evidenced by clauses in the contract by which they assumed liability for deficiency at discharge on bill of lading weight and guaranteed condition on arrival, and by a clause providing that all average should be for sellers' account. Nor is it immaterial to observe that, if the contract had been completely performed, the buyers would never have had in their hands any document entitling them to sue underwriters. The fact that, on two occasions when there was a total loss, the sellers collected the insurance value and remitted it to the buyers, less a small charge for collection, is of no importance, because that was done without the buyers' instructions and, since the sum remitted was not less than the price paid, the buyers had no interest to question the sellers' conduct. The clause obliging the sellers to give to the buyers all policies and certificates of insurance and, if and when called on for the purpose of claiming on underwriters, to give a letter certifying that there were no other insurances effected by them and to exchange certificates of insurance for duly stamped policies is not in harmony with a contract intended to be performed as this contract was. It seems, indeed, that this clause, and, perhaps, some others, though appropriate where it was intended that the sale should be implemented by tender of shipping documents or by tender of a delivery order accepted by one in physical possession of the goods, and by a policy or certificate of insurance, do not fit the course of dealing by the parties which, by imposing a special meaning on "delivery order," required the buyers to accept a document which was not in law a symbol of the goods.

It is not necessary to deny all effect to the clause dealing with policies of insurance and certificates. The buyers had a double interest in the insurance. First, the cost of the premiums was a component of the price and they, therefore, had an interest to know that proper insurance had been effected and at what cost. Secondly, the marine risk policies would cover the risk from the time the rye was delivered to them by the ship until it reached their warehouse. Beyond these two interests I think that the buyers had no concern with the insurance, unless it is established by other terms of the contract that the parties were agreed that the delivery order was to be inter se equivalent to delivery of the goods. The other subsidiary arguments for the sellers all depend on the attribution of some value to the delivery order. I again question the relevance of the line of argument. It is agreed that the delivery order was not the equivalent of the goods in the sense that its possession conferred on the holder the right of property in the goods valid against all the world. But the consideration for the price is nothing less than that right, unless there are special terms in the contract. If the delivery order had some value otherwise than as the equivalent of the goods, the fact has not been proved, and, if proved, it would be without relevance. If, as is, I think, plain on the facts found, the delivery order is merely a cog-wheel in the machinery for enabling the sellers to transfer the property, it cannot be treated as to any extent consideration for the price, for the consideration for the price is not what the seller does in order to effect the transfer but the actual transfer of the property itself. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider whether van Bree intended to bind themselves personally by their signature to any of the undertakings contained in the delivery order, but I can find no evidence of such an intention and I can find no consideration moving from the buyers to van Bree.

These subsidiary arguments by themselves, therefore, avail nothing, and the sellers must rely on their contention that the contract by its special terms provides that, between the seller and the buyer, the delivery order shall be treated as equivalent to the goods. The sellers laid weight on the description of the price as a c.i.f. price and on the description of the business as c.i.f. business. They also founded on the clause dealing with payment which, they said, treated the delivery order as the equivalent of the bill of lading and the price as paid for it. I think, however, that the explanation of the description c.i.f. in relation to the price and the business carried on by these two parties is that the contract stipulates for a price the components of which were cost, insurance and freight, and that the printed form of the contract used was one which was suitable for an orthodox c.i.f. transaction though also for other transactions not conforming to the c.i.f. model. The use of the label "c.i.f." was, therefore, not significant, and I agree with ASQUITH, L.J., that the question is not whether the label was appropriate but what was the effect of the terms of the contract when it was not intended or possible to perform it as an orthodox c.i.f. contract is performed. The stipulation that the price or part of it was to be paid in exchange for a bill of lading and a policy, or in exchange for a delivery order and a certificate, does not carry with it the implication that, in relation to the rights of the parties inter se, the delivery order is to have the effect of a bill of lading, and I can see no reason for reading into the words "in exchange for" anything more than their literal meaning or to read "payment in exchange for the delivery order" as meaning "payment for the delivery order." But I think that if the words "delivery order" had had to be construed without the aid of the previous course of dealing, it would have been held to mean a document addressed to and accepted by one in physical possession of the goods. The sellers would then have been bound to tender a document which was, in fact, the legal equivalent of the goods. The effect of the course of dealing was to release the sellers from that obligation and to entitle them to payment on tender of a document which contains no more than a personal obligation. I do not find evidence in the contract that the parties have undertaken to treat this document as a document of title as between themselves. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, with costs, both here and in the courts below.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, in this appeal the question for determination is whether there has been a total failure of consideration. The construction of the contract and its classification as a commercial document were discussed widely in the course of the argument, but these matters are relevant only in so far as they bear on that question and it is unnecessary to explore them exhaustively. In a buyer's claim for repayment of the price which is based on a total failure of consideration, what has to be regarded, as VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., pointed out ([1943] A.C. 48) in the Fibrosa case (6), is the performance of the seller's promise rather than the promise itself. Moreover, what the seller has done in order to be able to fulfil his obligation is in itself beside the point. To avoid a failure of consideration, his performance, be it complete or partial, must, so to speak, have reached the buyer. If the seller's promise is simply to deliver goods as ordered, it will avail him nothing to say that he has grown or manufactured or procured the goods if there has been no delivery of them. Nor will it justify his retention of the price if he shows that the buyer has got something under the contract which was not reckoned in the price. If, for example, tea is bought and paid for at so much a pound, the delivery of an empty tea chest will not, in the absence of some special stipulation, amount for this purpose to a partial performance of the seller's promise. In such event the buyer has not received anything for which he paid, and the fact that part of the machinery of fulfilment or some incidental benefit has come to his hands is by the way. These considerations, though important, are not, I think, really in dispute. They may be summed up in the words of ATKIN, L.J., in Rowland v. Divall (8) where he describes a total failure of consideration in a sale of goods case thus ([1923] 2 K.B. 506):

“ . . . that is to say . . . the buyer has not got any part of that for which A he paid the purchase money.”

My Lords, whatever the intent of the present contract may be in other respects, it is, at least, clear that it was an agreement for the sale of a specified quantity of rye “at the price of $4.025 per 100 kilos c.i.f. Antwerp.” It is also clear that the goods were never separated from bulk or appropriated to the contract and that, in fact, the buyers did not obtain physical delivery of B an ear of the grain they had ordered. What they did get, in addition to the invoice, which in itself is not a material document for present purposes, was a delivery order, signed by the sellers’ Antwerp agents, Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd., and addressed, not to the ship, but to F. Van Bree S.A., a firm of cargo superintendents who were employed on behalf of the sellers to handle the shipment but were not at any time, or in any respect, the agents of the buyers.
C The contract permitted the sellers to substitute a delivery order for a bill of lading in the documents to be presented and I shall assume, having regard to the previous course of business between the parties, that the form of delivery order tendered, and accepted in this instance was that contemplated by the contract.

It is plain that in law the handing over of this order did not amount to symbolic delivery and did not pass the property in the goods which remained in the sellers’ throughout. But it was contended, none the less, that on the true construction of the contract the sellers’ performance was as complete as if they had tendered the bill of lading and other documents due to be presented under a normal c.i.f. contract and, accordingly, that the consideration had not failed at all. I cannot accede to that contention. Whatever might have been
E the position had the sellers delivered a bill of lading (and leaving out of account any point about policies or certificates of insurance), I am unable to read the agreed terms as binding the buyers to treat the documents they got as a complete fulfilment of the sellers’ obligations. It may be competent for a buyer to agree to accept performance which stops short of delivery, actual or symbolic, but, in my opinion, that has not occurred here. No doubt, the contract contains much
F that is equivocal so far as its commercial classification is concerned. Some stipulations point to it being an arrival contract; others, such as those relating to insurance, suggest a c.i.f. contract. The terms employed, as well as the practice of the parties, afford some indication that it was intended as a dual purpose document and that its mixed nature is the result. But, however
G this may be, I think its terms contemplate quite clearly delivery of the goods by the sellers to the buyers; and, if that is not symbolic, it must be physical; and, if physical, it must be ex ship. The sellers’ contention would leave delivery so to speak, in the air, and cannot be said to echo the intention of the parties. To my mind, neither the provisions as to insurance nor the words “in exchange for” suffice to outweigh this consideration. The former are not incompatible with a promise to deliver, and the latter do not necessarily indicate the quid pro quo.
H An omnibus fare is given in exchange for a ticket, but what it buys is the journey. I, therefore, conclude that the handing over of the delivery order was not the performance of the contract but, at most, a step towards performance.

It remains to inquire whether the failure of consideration was partial. On this the sellers advanced several submissions. First, it was said that the delivery order had some commercial value. This is not found, but, assuming such value to have existed, the point cannot prevail unless the value was reckoned in the price. I do not think it was. Apart from the elements of insurance and freight, the cost was based on the weight of the commodity purchased and that was the grain and nothing else. Then it was submitted that, far from being a mere piece of machinery, the delivery order gave the buyers rights which they had not had before but which were contemplated by the contract, viz., those flowing from what the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS described as "a personal undertaking and a guarantee by the local agents of the sellers"—i.e., by Van Bree. I need not set out again the terms of this undertaking as signed by Van Bree and appearing in print at the head of the delivery order. Even if it can be regarded as a personal undertaking, I doubt very much if it was paid for by the buyers or if it makes the delivery order more than a cog-wheel in the machinery of delivery. But, apart from that, I do not think the findings warrant the assumption that it was a personal undertaking given by Van Bree to the buyers. It may have been given, as a matter of internal arrangement, to the Belgian Grain and Produce Co., Ltd., as agents for the sellers; or, if addressed to the buyers, it may have been given by Van Bree on behalf of the sellers. The last is, in my opinion, the most likely view, and, if it is right, the sellers' assurance of due performance cannot take their case further.

The next point raised on this aspect of the matter was based on the somewhat vague contention that the risk had passed to the buyers. Of course, if a buyer does not get what he has paid for because of some risk which he has agreed to accept, he cannot recover the price. But that is not the case here, and the contention under discussion is not, as I understand it, concerned with more than the risk of the goods being lost or damaged. As a matter of stipulation a buyer, who has got neither delivery nor ownership, may, no doubt, be made to bear a risk of this kind, but this will not in itself give him something of that which he has bought. What the position would be if, pursuant to his contract, the seller had taken due steps not only to insure against such risk but also to enable the buyer to recover against the underwriters in the event of the loss thus covered is a question which does not arise for determination here, as, even assuming that the risk passed, no insurance documents were tendered. The buyers did not get them. Van Bree did, but, as to that, the arbitrator finds:

" . . . the sellers did not, by delivering to F. Van Bree S.A. certificates of insurance in respect of these goods, constructively deliver the said certificates to the buyers, nor did F. Van Bree S.A. at any time hold the said certificates of insurance . . . at the disposal of the buyers."

That finding has not been disputed and must be accepted.

On these grounds, I am of opinion that the failure of consideration was not partial, but total. I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed with costs here and in the courts below.

Solicitors: Richards, Butler & Co. (for the buyers); Thomas Cooper & Co. (for the sellers).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE.

S. v. S.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hodson, J.), December 8, 1948.]

Child—Custody—Declaration that divorced parent not fit to have custody—Desirability of making declaration—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 7—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 4 (1) (2).

A APPLICATION by the wife for a declaration that the husband was unfit to have the custody of the children of the marriage, and for an interim order for their custody.

B The wife had petitioned for a decree of divorce on the ground of the husband's cruelty. HODSON, J., in his judgment, held that the husband had compelled the wife to submit to sexual practices of a gross and debased character, and, in consequence, her health had suffered. The wife had established her allegation of cruelty and the court would exercise its discretion in favour of the wife with regard to the wife's misconduct with a party cited. The court was then cleared while the question of the custody of the children was discussed.

C The Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, s. 7, provides: "In any case where a decree . . . either nisi or absolute for divorce, shall be pronounced, the court pronouncing such decree may thereby declare the parent by reason of whose misconduct such decree is made to be a person unfit to have the custody of the children (if any) of the marriage; and, in such case, the parent so declared to be unfit shall not, upon the death of the other parent, be entitled as of right to the custody or guardianship of such children."

D [AS TO DECLARATION OF UNFITNESS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 753, para. 1182; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 461, Nos. 4794-4802.]

Case referred to:

(1) Cliff v. Cliff, [1948] 2 All E.R. 760; [1948] W.N. 380.

E Beyfus, K.C., and Hollins for the wife.
Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Victor Russell for the husband.
J. Stirling and Beezley for a party cited.

The court having been re-opened,

F HODSON, J.: I pronounce a decree nisi in this case. The other matters with which I have to deal relate to the children, of whom there are three—a girl born in 1934, a girl born in 1938, and a boy born in 1942. I have been asked to make a declaration under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, s. 7, that the father is unfit to have the custody of the children. That application is based solely on the facts which I have found in my judgment.

G I think that the declaration ought to be made. The application is opposed first, on the ground that it should not be made without hearing other evidence which may be put forward by the husband in relation to the children, but I do not think that that objection is well founded. The other evidence which he may put forward may well have a bearing on the future of these children, but it would not, in my judgment, be relevant to the question which I have been asked to decide. The application is opposed, secondly, on the ground
H that such a declaration ought not to be made in the circumstances of this case. I do not propose to add anything to what I have said in my judgment. The third ground of opposition is that the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, s. 7, is really now obsolete. I have considered that point carefully because I have felt difficulty having regard to the observations of LORD MORTON in Cliff v. Cliff (1), where he said that the latter part of s. 7 of the Act of 1886 no longer had any application because a parent was no longer entitled to the custody of the children as of right on the death of the other parent.

That matter was not argued before the Court of Appeal, but I do not desire to shelter myself behind any statement that the observation was obiter. If I thought LORD MORTON was really dealing with the point, I should regard his observation as one which I ought to follow, but I do not think he was. Moreover, he had not considered the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 4, which provides that, on the death of the parent of an infant, the other parent, if surviving, shall be guardian of the infant, either alone or jointly with any guardian appointed by the deceased parent. The section further provides that, if the deceased parent has appointed no guardian, or if the guardian appointed by that parent is dead or refuses to act, the court may appoint a guardian to act jointly with the surviving parent. That, of course, is the position which is envisaged by an application for a declaration of this kind. It is said that, even if s. 7 of the Act of 1886 is not obsolete, the making of a declaration under s. 7 is valueless. I am not satisfied about that. I think it is desirable in a case of this kind for a court to record the view (if it takes such a view) that a particular parent is unfit to have the custody of the children. Accordingly, I make the declaration.

With regard to the question of custody, I appreciate the force of the argument of counsel for the husband that the question of the future of these children should not be determined in the absence of all the material which can be made available. By what I am going to do, I do not intend to prejudice anything which may be done in the future, but something must be done now. Until some more permanent order is made, I think it is necessary to make an interim order for custody by the wife.

Declaration and order accordingly.

Solicitors: Evelyn Jones & Co., agents for Jackson & Sons, Ringwood (for the wife); Vertue, Son & Churcher (for the husband); Withers & Co. (for a party cited).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HAM RIVER GRIT CO., LTD. v. RICHMOND RATING AUTHORITY AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finemore, JJ.), January 13, 1949.]

Rating—Derating—Industrial hereditament—Apportionment of net annual value—Site used for gravel pit and for rubbish tip—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (4)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 4 (2).

A company used a certain site for the quarrying of sand and gravel and also as a tip for rubble and rubbish to fill the excavations caused by the quarrying. The rating authority claimed to apportion the net annual value between the part of the hereditament used for quarrying and the part used as a tip.

HELD: the tip was a defined and ascertainable "place" within s. 149 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, solely used for a purpose other than the quarrying process on the other part of the site, and, therefore, it was not "occupied and used for industrial purposes" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, and the rating authority's claim should be upheld.

Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd., (1904) (91 L.T. 377), and Cox v. S. Cutler & Sons, Ltd. and Hampton Court Gas Co., ([1948] 2 All E.R. 665), applied.

[AS TO DERATING OF INDUSTRIAL HEREDITAMENT, see HALSBURY, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 27, pp. 439-459, paras. 876-887; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 569, 570; Nos. 1071-1078, and Supplement.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd., (1904), 91 L.T. 377 ; 68 J.P. 323 ; 24 Digest 898, 4.
- (2) Cox v. S. Cutler & Sons, Ltd. and Hampton Court Gas Co., [1948] 2 All E.R. 665.

CASE STATED by the Rating Appeals Committee of the Surrey Quarter Sessions under the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 31 (5). Quarter sessions allowed an appeal by the Ham River Grit Co., Ltd., from a decision of the Assessment Committee of the Surrey North-Eastern Assessment Area by which the committee determined to amend the valuation list as proposed by the rating authority, i.e., by increasing the net annual value of the company's premises and apportioning such value between that part of the hereditament used for quarrying and that part used as a tip for rubble and rubbish. The rating authority and valuation committee were dissatisfied with the decision of quarter sessions and applied to have a Case stated for the opinion of the King's Bench Division. The Divisional Court held that quarter sessions had erred in law. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Simes, K.C., and Geoffrey Lawrence for the rating authority and valuation committee.

Rowe, K.C., and Squibb for the company.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This Case Stated relates to the rating of a hereditament adjoining Teddington Lock on the River Thames which is owned by the Ham River Grit Co., Ltd., and is used, and has been used, no doubt, for many years, as an area from which sand and gravel is excavated and sold to contractors and the public. As always happens in gravel pits, as the gravel and sand is excavated water forms in the excavations so that the area of the pits varies from year to year according, first, to the amount of excavation, and, secondly, to the amount of rainfall. The pits in question here are used as tips for rubbish and rubble. In the last few years there has been a great demand for tips, more especially for the disposal of the rubble and debris in the metropolitan area caused by the bombing and the excavations for new buildings consequent on the reconstruction of London. The ratepayers' property is, therefore, valuable because not only do they obtain sand and gravel which they can sell, but they also have large areas which can be used as tips. In fact, the area in question may be said to consist of three different sites. Part has already been filled up, i.e., the excavated area has been filled with rubble, rubbish and other material so that the surface of the land is restored so far as its depth or height is concerned and it is as if there had been no excavation. There is still left a considerable area which is covered by water, and in one place the work of quarrying or winning sand and gravel is proceeding. There are one or two other sites from which it will, no doubt, be possible in the future to excavate and obtain sand and gravel.

The question which arises is whether in the rating and valuation of this hereditament the assessment committee were entitled to apportion the rating between the part which was being used as a sand and gravel quarry and that which was being used as a tip. The rating appeals committee of quarter sessions reversed the decision of the assessment committee, and allowed an appeal by the ratepayers subject to the Case which they stated, giving as their reason that the excavating and filling in of the excavations were one process. Counsel for the company has said he does not rely on that finding of the appeals committee. He agrees that it was wrong and it clearly is wrong. The quarrying of sand and gravel and the tipping or dumping of rubbish into the hole which the sand and gravel previously occupied, is not one operation, but two different things altogether.

The question which does arise turns on the true construction of a section in the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, but it is the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, which provides for the apportionment of the net annual value between that part of a hereditament which is industrial and that part which is non-industrial. The industrial part of the hereditament gets what is commonly called the advantage of derating, while the non-industrial portion does not get that advantage. Section 4 of the Act of 1928 provides :

"(1) In every valuation list every industrial hereditament occupied and used wholly for industrial purposes shall be shown as being so occupied and used, and as respects every such hereditament occupied and used partly for industrial purposes, the net annual value thereof shall be shown, in the prescribed manner, as being apportioned between the occupation and user of the hereditament for industrial purposes, and the occupation and user thereof for other purposes. (2) For the purpose of determining in what proportions an industrial hereditament is occupied and used for industrial purposes and for other purposes respectively, the following provisions shall have effect :—(a) The hereditament shall be deemed to be occupied and used for industrial purposes except in so far as any part thereof is, under this Act or under the enactments relating to the regulation of mines, factories and workshops, to be deemed neither to be, nor to form part of, a mine, factory or workshop."

Therefore, the task is to find whether any part of the hereditament which prima facie is an industrial hereditament forms no part of a mine, factory or workshop. To discover what principles to apply to determine that question, we have to consider the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, under sched. VI to which, among the places which are to be deemed to be factories, are :

" ' Quarries ' that is to say, any place, not being a mine, in which persons work in getting slate, stone, coprolites or other minerals."

*This area is for that purpose a quarry. Section 149 provides :

"(4) Where a place situate within the close, curtilage or precincts forming a factory or workshop is solely used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process or handicraft carried on in the factory or workshop, that place shall not be deemed to form part of the factory or workshop for the purposes of this Act, but shall, if otherwise it would be a factory or workshop, be deemed to be a separate factory or workshop and be regulated accordingly."

That shows that the test is whether there is a place used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process. For this purpose we may use the words "quarrying process carried on" and for the word "factory" we can say "quarry." It seems to me there is no difficulty here in determining that the tip is a place separate from the quarry in the sense that no part of the quarrying is carried on where the process of tipping is carried on. No one suggests that the process of tipping is a manufacturing process or a quarrying process. It is no part of the quarryman's work to tip rubbish into the excavated land, though it may be a convenient and profitable thing to allow other people to tip into it.

When the case was before quarter sessions it was agreed

"... between the parties to the said appeal and we were so informed that the said hereditament was an 'industrial' hereditament within the meaning of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, and that the issue between the parties was whether the part of the net annual value of the said hereditament attributable to the tipping of material should be apportioned as 'industrial' or 'non-industrial' in accordance with the provisions of s. 4 of the said Act."

The rating appeals committee do not seem to have applied their minds to the point which counsel for the company maintains, and I think counsel for the rating authority agrees, was the real point which ought to have been decided. They decided that the tipping was part of the quarrying operation, which it is not contended now was right. The company can uphold the decision of quarter sessions on any ground which is open to them, and they seek to uphold the decision on the ground that the tip was not a "place" within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149. I cannot take that view. I think that there is no difficulty in saying which part of this hereditament was

A being used as a tip and which part as a quarry, and, indeed, our attention has been called to valuations which have been made by the valuers, and, apparently, agreed, in which there does not seem to have been any difficulty in the valuers apportioning their valuation between the two in the way in which the Act of 1928 provides.

B Counsel for the company has suggested that one reason which prevents the court holding that the tip is "a place" is that it is a shifting place in the sense that as the material is tipped into it the space into which tipping takes place gets smaller or gradually nearer to the face of the quarry where the quarrying is being done. If the cubic content that is tipped greatly exceeds the cubic content that is being quarried, no doubt, at some time or other the tipping face, if that is the right expression, will get very near the working face. It

C seems to me that the material question is what was the position of things on Mar. 25 when the proposal was made. At that date it does not seem to me there was any difficulty in ascertaining the difference between the two places. I see no reason, therefore, why the tipping face should not be regarded as a place. I think that would be in accordance with the decision of this court in

D Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd. (1). I think this is as defined and ascertainable a place as was the place in that case. There the question arose whether a certain site was used as a factory. An accident occurred on that part of the hereditament where a new mill was to be constructed and the machinery which was there being used was not fenced. It was within the curtilage of the original factory. The court held that the site came within the words of s. 149 because

E it was an ascertainable place, and, therefore, there was no obligation on the occupiers to fence because it was outside the factory. That case was approved by the Court of Appeal in Cox v. S. Culler & Sons, Ltd. and Hampton Court Gas Co. (2), and, in my opinion, the present case is covered by those two cases. Accordingly, in my opinion, the appeals committee came to a wrong decision in point of law and this appeal must be allowed.

F HUMPHREYS, J. : I am of the same opinion. I am inclined to think that the rating appeals committee of quarter sessions were right in thinking that the only ground on which they could allow the appeal was that which they stated—that the hereditament should be treated as occupied and used wholly for industrial purposes because the excavating and filling in of the excavations formed one process. If that view were correct, it would have been right for the

G appeals committee to have allowed the appeal, but, in fact, there is no evidence to support it. The evidence is all the other way, and the company agreed that the decision of the appeals committee could not be supported on that ground. Counsel for the company then argued that it was impossible to say

H that there was any land here which could be allocated to the non-industrial part of the hereditament, but the answer to that appears in the Case Stated where we are told that the issue between the parties was whether the part of the net annual value of the hereditament attributable to the tipping of the material should be treated as worth so much, and the figure is given, or whether the whole hereditament should be treated as industrial, and therefore, deratable.

There is no difficulty in the law in this case. The statute seems to me to be tolerably plain. The Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 4, in effect states, that where the hereditament is mainly used for industrial purposes it shall be deemed to be occupied for that purpose "except in so far as any part thereof is, under this Act or under the enactments relating to the regulations of mines, factories and workshops, to be deemed neither to be, nor to form part of, a mine, factory, or workshop."

That takes us to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (4), which provides that a place situate within the precincts forming a factory and solely used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process or handicraft carried on in the factory is not to be deemed to form part of the factory. That leaves the simple question, which seems to me to be much more one of fact than one of law, whether this process of tipping was one for which it can be said that some part of this otherwise industrial hereditament was used. I think the evidence is conclusive that the tipping of rubbish and the process of winning gravel or sand are two quite separate processes. The fact that they are carried on on the same ground raises no difficulty. I agree with the result proposed by my Lord.

FINNEMORE, J.: I agree that this appeal should be allowed and for the reasons which have already been given. Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Wyatt & Co., agents for Dudley Auckland, Kingston-on-Thames (for the rating authority and valuation committee); William Charles Crocker (for the company).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. C.A. [1949] 2 All E.R. 34.

MACRAE v. MACRAE.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY (Lord Merriman, P., and Hodson, J.), December 14, 1948.]

Maintenance—Jurisdiction—Husband ordinarily resident in Scotland—Wife resident in England—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 4.

In June, 1948, the parties were living in Manchester where the husband had been working for three years. He then refused to continue living there, gave up his work, and went to his parents' house in Inverness. The wife thereupon took out a summons before the Manchester justices, alleging desertion. This summons was served on the husband in Inverness, and on July 22, 1948, the justices made an order against the husband.

HELD: the husband being ordinarily resident out of the jurisdiction, the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order against him.

Forsyth v. Forsyth ([1947] 2 All E.R. 623; [1948] P. 125; 177 L.T. 617), explained and applied.

[AS TO SUMMARY JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES IN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 834-848, paras. 1336-1354; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 554-568, Nos. 6081-6264.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Forsyth v. Forsyth, [1947] 2 All E.R. 623; [1948] P. 125; [1948] L.J.R. 487; 177 L.T. 617; revsq., [1947] 1 All E.R. 406; 176 L.T. 507; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Berkeley v. Thompson, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 45; 54 L.J.M.C. 57; 52 L.T. 1; 49 J.P. 276; 3 Digest 393, 312.
- (3) M'Queen v. M'Queen, [1920] 2 Sc.L.T. 405.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of the Manchester City justices.

On July 22, 1948, the husband having left his wife in Manchester and returned to his parents in Inverness, the justices made an order against him on the ground of desertion. On appeal, the Divisional Court held that, the husband being resident in Scotland, the justices had no jurisdiction and allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P.

Harris Walker for the husband.

H. Clifford Mcrtimer for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P. : This is an appeal by a husband from a decision by Manchester City justices who, on July 22, 1948, made an order against him on the ground that he had deserted his wife. The case, which is not an unimportant one, turns solely on the question of jurisdiction.

- A Attempts were made to serve the husband in Manchester, where the wife was living. Those attempts failed, and he was served in Inverness. It is said that both at the time when the wife issued her summons in the Manchester City justices' court and at the time when that summons was served on the husband there was no jurisdiction to issue or serve it, because the husband was not amenable to the jurisdiction. In one respect it is clear that there was
- B jurisdiction to issue a summons, always assuming that the husband was amenable to jurisdiction. In June, 1948, the parties were living in Manchester, at the house of the wife's parents. The husband had been working in Manchester since his demobilisation in October, 1945, and they resided in Manchester from that date until June, 1948. Then, for reasons which I will assume had no justification (in other words, I am assuming that the wife was rightly found to have
- C a grievance against her husband), the husband refused to go on living there, gave up his work, and, having made it clear that he intended to return to his parents in Inverness, he collected his things and left Manchester. After the issue of the summons he wrote from Inverness, to say that he was living with his parents and that he had secured in their house a separate flat, and he offered his wife accommodation there.
- D It seems throughout the whole case (including the statement prepared by the husband in Scotland, and read out by a solicitor to the justices at Manchester) to have been accepted as common ground that before the issue of this summons the husband had severed his connection with Manchester and had returned to his parents' home in Inverness, and I propose to deal with this point of jurisdiction on that basis. It is said that in the circumstances the justices
- E had no jurisdiction to issue this summons, to have the summons served, or to make an order. Whether there was jurisdiction, depends on a recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Forsyth v. Forsyth (1) overruling a decision of this court. The facts are not precisely the same, and I shall have to refer shortly to a certain doubt which is raised by this difference between the facts in the two cases, but the decision of the Court of Appeal is succinctly and correctly
- F summarised in the headnote, which I will read :

- "A wife complained to justices that her husband, who was domiciled and resident in Scotland had deserted her there by remaining there after she had come to England on the understanding that he would follow her. There was no evidence that the husband was ever in England at any material time. The justices' summons, issued on the wife's complaint, was served
- G on the husband in Scotland under the Summary Jurisdiction (Process) Act, 1881. The husband was represented before the justices by a solicitor who objected to their jurisdiction. The solicitor also put to the wife, while cross-examining her, certain questions not limited to the question of jurisdiction. Held: (1) that since the husband was not shown to have been in England at any material time the justices had no jurisdiction to entertain
- H the wife's complaint, in as much as the principle enunciated by LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Berkeley v. Thompson (2), that there must be a cause of action of which the tribunal could take cognisance and also a defendant subject to its jurisdiction, remained unaffected by the combined operation of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 1, the Summary Jurisdiction (Process) Act, 1881, s. 4, and the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 4; (2) that the husband's appearance before the justices by his solicitor did not debar him from challenging their jurisdiction on appeal, since neither that Act nor any act of the parties could confer on the justices a jurisdiction which they did not possess."

In the present case, we have no concrete evidence about the husband's domicile. I think we may assume that his domicile of origin was Scotland. We know that his parents are still alive and living in Inverness, but we have no evidence whether he acquired a domicile of choice in England. There remains the question of residence. Undoubtedly, up to the date in June when he left Manchester he might well have been said to have been ordinarily resident in Manchester, but from the moment he travelled to Inverness on the day after he left his wife all the evidence tends to show that he was ordinarily resident in Scotland, and I think this case must be decided on that basis. The question, therefore, is whether we are or are not bound by the decision in Forsyth v. Forsyth (1). Counsel for the wife has argued that we are not bound by it. First, he said that the decision appears to go much too far, and that, taken literally, it means that, if an English husband happens to be over the Border for business or other reasons for a few days or hours at a time, which happens to coincide with the issue of the summons, the whole proceeding is void ab initio. I do not take that view. I cannot see anything in the decision which goes anywhere near that. On the contrary, one of the material facts on which that decision is based, as, indeed, the headnote shows, is that there was no evidence whatever to show that the husband had any English connection at all. It was not even shown that he had ever been in England, and it could only be said that the offence arose partially within the jurisdiction because there was evidence that he had suggested to his wife that she should go to England, had paid her fare on the basis that he intended to join her there, and it was his very failure to join her in England which was the suggested desertion. There was no evidence that he had ever been present in this country or connected with it in any way other than that.

In my opinion, the only doubt which is created by Forsyth v. Forsyth (1) is that raised by counsel's second argument, which is that the decision was based on Scottish domicile, as distinct from residence or ordinary residence, and I am bound to say that there is a certain difficulty in knowing precisely what was decided in that respect by Forsyth v. Forsyth (1). In the Divisional Court, over which I happened to preside, I said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 408):

"At the hearing on Sept. 12 the husband was represented by a solicitor, who objected to the jurisdiction on the ground that the husband was a domiciled Scotsman, and relied on M'Queen v. M'Queen (3). He called no evidence in support of this submission. The husband's counsel admitted that, as things stand, the point can be put no higher than that the wife called no evidence to show that the husband was a domiciled Englishman. It must, I think, be taken for the purposes of the case that he is shown to be ordinarily resident in Scotland."

I then set out the facts from which the court drew that inference. In the Court of Appeal the leading judgment was delivered by BUCKNILL, L.J., who stated the proposition thus ([1947] 2 All E.R. 625):

"The only point taken on behalf of the husband before the Divisional Court, and the main point argued before this court, was that the residence in England of the husband as well as the wife was a condition precedent to the exercise by the justices of their jurisdiction in this case."

Later, he said (ibid., 626):

"I doubt whether in a case like the present it is necessary to prove that the husband was ordinarily resident in the jurisdiction at the time when the summons was issued and I am disposed to think that mere presence therein is sufficient, but it is unnecessary to decide the point because in this case not only was the husband ordinarily resident in Scotland, but there is no evidence that he was ever in England."

I hope I shall be corrected if I am wrong in saying that I find no reference whatever to domicile in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J. TUCKER, L.J., who expressed his general concurrence with that judgment, stated (ibid., 624) the issue as being :

A " . . . the jurisdiction of the justices to make an order against the husband under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, on the ground of desertion, he having, at all material times, been resident and domiciled in Scotland, having been served with the summons in Scotland and not having been personally present within the jurisdiction when the summons was issued or when the order was made."

He then dealt specifically with the first submission of counsel—"that there was nothing to show that the husband was resident or domiciled in Scotland," and said :

B "There was no evidence that he had ever resided in England, and the only inference that could properly be drawn from the evidence is that he was at all times domiciled and resident in Scotland."

This differs as to domicile from BUCKNILL, L.J.'s acceptance of the finding of the Divisional Court in this respect. COHEN, L.J., agreed with both the other
C Lords Justices. It is, therefore, a little difficult to know whether the decision was based on domicile or ordinary residence or both, but I think that the substance of the matter is that their Lordships were dealing with ordinary residence in Scotland, coupled, no doubt, with the fact that there was nothing to show that the husband had ever been in England. On those facts they held that there was no jurisdiction to issue a summons, and, therefore, no jurisdiction
D to serve it under the process provided by the Summary Jurisdiction (Process) Act, 1881.

In my opinion, it is impossible to distinguish this case from Forsyth v. Forsyth (1), and, therefore, in my opinion, we are bound to allow this appeal and to say that the Manchester City justices had no jurisdiction to issue a summons against this Scottish husband, or to cause him to be served, or to E sit in judgment on him. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed.

HODSON, J. : In my opinion, this case is covered by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Forsyth v. Forsyth (1). The husband was at the material times ordinarily resident in Scotland, and that is the footing on which I want to make it plain that I am dealing with the matter. It has been argued that Forsyth v. Forsyth (1) may be only really conclusive in the case of a man who is F domiciled and not merely resident out of the jurisdiction, but I do not think that argument can be sustained. The Divisional Court in Forsyth's case (1) made it clear that they were approaching the problem on the footing that the husband was ordinarily resident in Scotland, and in the Court of Appeal BUCKNILL, L.J., who gave the only judgment on the main question of jurisdiction, dealt with the matter on the same footing. COHEN, L.J., agreed with
G him, and TUCKER, L.J., said that he entirely agreed with the conclusions which BUCKNILL, L.J., had reached and the reasoning whereby he had reached them, so there was a clear concurrence of opinion that the jurisdiction was ousted by the lack of residence alone, and it is not really possible, therefore, to draw any conclusion or get any assistance in favour of the husband in this appeal from the independent conclusion of TUCKER, L.J., that the husband in Forsyth
H v. Forsyth (1) was not only resident but also domiciled in Scotland. For these reasons and the reasons which my Lord has given, I think there was no jurisdiction in the justices to make the order, and, therefore, the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Mackrell, Ward & Knight (for the husband) ; Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for Boote, Edgar & Co., Manchester (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMMISSIONERS v. ARMEMENT ANVERSOIS SOCIETE ANONYME. THE BRABO.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord du Pareq, Lord Normand and Lord MacDermott), November 3, 4, 8, 1948, January 19, 1949.]

Constitutional Law—Action against Minister of Crown—Competency—Minister of Supply—Privileges and immunities inherent in Crown—Action by conservancy authority against Minister as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wrecked ship—War Department Stores Act, 1867 (c. 128), s. 20—Ministry of Supply Act, 1939 (c. 38), s. 2 (3)—Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877).

Writ — Service — Service out of the jurisdiction — Action “properly brought” against defendants within jurisdiction—Action by conservancy authority against shipowners and Minister of Supply as cargo owner to recover expenditure incurred in removing wreck—Shipowners outside jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g).

A conservancy authority incurred heavy expenditure in clearing the obstruction caused by the wreck of a Belgian ship and its cargo consisting of ordnance stores which were the property of the Crown. Under the War Department Stores Act, 1867, s. 20, as adapted by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939, the Minister of Supply was empowered to institute or defend any action in regard to these stores, but a proviso to s. 20 retained the privileges and prerogatives of the Crown and gave the Minister the right in any action to exercise such privileges and prerogatives as if the Crown were a party to such action. By the conservancy authority's special Act (the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, s. 42), the authority could recover from the shipowners and cargo owners the expenses incurred in removing a wreck, but the rights of the Crown had been expressly reserved under the Tyne Improvement Act, 1934, s. 81, and other relevant Acts. In an action against the shipowners and the Minister of Supply to recover the expenditure incurred, the conservancy authority asked for leave to serve notice of a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction on the shipowners, who were a Belgian company, registered and resident in Belgium.

HELD : (i) in determining whether or not leave should be granted under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), where the law was plain and all the facts necessary for a decision were set out and uncontradicted, the court should decide on the hearing of the summons whether the plaintiffs would succeed against the defendants within the jurisdiction, and, if it decided that the action against the English defendants was bound to fail, it must conclude that the action against them was not “properly brought,” within the meaning of the rule and refuse leave to serve out of the jurisdiction. An action could not be said to be “properly brought” merely because it was brought bona fide: observation of LINDLEY, L.J., in Witted v. Galbraith ([1893] 1 Q.B. 579) explained, and observation of HAWKINS, J., ([1893] 1 Q.B. 434), not approved. The right to bring a foreigner before the British courts should be sparingly used, and care should be taken in interpreting the rule and in exercising the discretion which arose when a case was brought within it.

(ii) the effect of the War Department Stores Act, 1867, s. 20 (as adapted by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the order made thereunder) was to enable the Minister to be sued without the necessity of a petition of right, but it did not debar him from the protection which the Crown itself would have had in the particular case.

Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. ([1943] 1 All E.R. 615; [1943] K.B. 478; 168 L.T. 389), explained.

(iii) as the Crown itself was clearly free from any liability to the conservancy authority, the action against the Minister, who was acting as the agent of the Crown, was bound to fail, and, therefore, it was not "an action properly brought," within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), and service out of the jurisdiction on the shipowners could not be allowed.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL ([1947] 2 All E.R. 363; [1948] P. 33), affirmed.

A [AS TO SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 31-33, para. 44; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 355-362, Nos. 690-741.

AS TO LEGAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE CROWN AND ITS SERVANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, pp. 486-491, paras. 599-603, and Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, pp. 523, 524, Nos. 284-293.]

B Cases referred to:

(1) The Hagen, [1908] P. 189; 77 L.J.P. 124; 98 L.T. 891; Digest Practice 340, 579.

(2) Russell (John) & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd., [1916] 2 A.C. 298; 85 L.J.K.B. 1152; 115 L.T. 86; Digest Practice 362, 739.

C (3) Flower v. Rose, (1891), 7 T.L.R. 280; Digest Practice 361, 731.

(4) Witted v. Galbraith, [1893] 1 Q.B. 577; 62 L.J.Q.B. 248; sub nom., Witted v. Pembroke Galbraith & Co., 68 L.T. 421; Digest Practice 357, 705; revsq., [1893] 1 Q.B. 431.

(5) Massey v. Heynes, (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 330; 57 L.J.Q.B. 468; 59 L.T. 470; Digest Practice 356, 701.

D (6) Societe Generale de Paris v. Dreyfus Bros., (1887), 37 Ch.D. 215; 57 L.J.Ch. 276; 58 L.T. 573; Digest Practice 339, 574; revsq., (1885) 29 Ch.D. 239.

(7) Bloomfield v. Serenyi, [1945] 2 All E.R. 646; 173 L.T. 391; 2nd Digest Supp.

(8) Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co., Frankfurter Bank A.-G., and Metallgesellschaft A.-G., [1939] 4 All E.R. 16; Digest Supp.

E (9) Johnson v. Taylor Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1920] A.C. 144; 89 L.J.K.B. 227; 122 L.T. 130; Digest Practice 340, 581.

(10) Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corpn., [1947] A.C. 58; [1947] L.J.R. 380; 2nd Digest Supp.

(11) Hornsey Urban Council v. Hennell, [1902] 2 K.B. 73; 71 L.J.K.B. 479; 86 L.T. 423; 66 J.P. 613; 42 Digest 690, 1051.

F (12) Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 615; [1943] K.B. 478; 112 L.J.K.B. 520; 168 L.T. 389; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiffs, the Tyne Improvement Commissioners, from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (SCOTT, BUCKNILL and WROTTESELEY, L.J.J.), dated July 16, 1947, and reported [1947] 2 All E.R. 363, reversing a judgment of PILCHER, J.

G To recover expenditure incurred by them in clearing the wreckage of the Brabo, the plaintiffs, a conservancy authority, brought an action against the shipowners (the first defendants), the Minister of Supply (the second defendant) as owner on behalf of the Crown of the cargo consisting of ordnance stores, and the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd. (the third defendants), as agents of the cargo owner. On learning that the shipowners were a Belgian company, registered and resident in Belgium, the conservancy authority, on June 6, 1946, obtained ex parte leave from PILCHER, J., to serve on them notice of a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction. On an application by the shipowners to set aside service of notice out of the jurisdiction, PILCHER, J., held, by his order of Jan. 27, 1947, that they were a "necessary or proper party" within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), as co-defendants to the action brought against the Minister and the Steel Corporation and that the action was "properly brought" against the last two defendants, and he refused to set aside the notice. On an appeal by the shipowners from this decision, the Court of Appeal held that the action against the Minister and the corporation could not be regarded as one that was "properly brought," within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), because, on the correct view of the law as applied to the admitted facts, the Minister and the corporation were not liable to the conservancy authority, and they allowed the appeal. Their decision was now upheld by the House of Lords. The facts appear in the opinions of LORD PORTER and LORD SIMONDS.

Carpmael, K.C., and A. J. Hodgson for the appellants.

Sir William McNair, K.C., and Mocatta for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Jan. 19. The following opinions were read.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, this is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal which reversed a judgment of PILCHER, J., who had given leave to the appellants under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), to issue a concurrent writ for service out of the jurisdiction on the respondents as necessary and proper parties to an action properly brought against the Minister of Supply in this country and the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd., which is an English company and is hereafter referred to as "the company." The Court of Appeal withdrew that leave, but granted leave to the appellants to appeal to your Lordships' House. The argument on which the appellants claimed that leave should be granted turns on the true application of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), to the facts of this case. That rule is contained in the following terms :

"1. Service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons or notice of a writ of summons may be allowed by the court or a judge whenever . . .
(g) Any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action properly brought against some other person duly served within the jurisdiction."

The questions for your Lordships are : (i) Whether the action was properly brought against the other two defendants, and (ii) Whether the respondents are necessary or proper parties to an action brought against either of the two other defendants.

These questions arise in the following circumstances. (i) The appellants are the conservancy authority for the River Tyne and the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and the respondents were, in March, 1942, owners of the Belgian ship Brabo. (ii) On Mar. 14 that ship was in collision off the entry to the Tyne and in respect of that collision her owners were held 70 per cent. to blame. (ii) After the collision she was towed into the River Tyne, but sank and became an obstruction. She was loaded with a cargo of wood pulp and steel billets and slabs consigned to the Minister of Supply and to the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd., and, as she constituted an obstruction in the appellants' undertaking, they took steps under their statutory powers to save such portions of the wreck and cargo as were salvable and to disperse the rest. It is difficult to compute what the cost of dispersion may amount to, but it is already a very large sum and may ultimately reach a figure of £250,000. I need not state the exact nature of the proceedings taken below which led up to the judgment of the Court of Appeal. No complaint is made of them but only of the result arrived at in the present decision. It is enough to say that on Mar. 20, 1946, the appellants issued a writ against the respondents, the Minister and the corporation, claiming against each judgment for the charges incurred and to be incurred in raising and removing the Brabo and the cargo. After failing in an attempt to serve the respondents personally, the appellants obtained leave ex parte to serve a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction, and have now had that leave withdrawn.

The facts, so far as they are known, are to be found in an affidavit by Mr. Fenwick, the solicitor to the respondents, and, so far as they are relevant to the present appeal, are contained in paras. 7 and 8 of that document and read as follows :

A " 7. In so far as the second-named defendant is concerned I submit that the writ and the said affidavit disclose no good cause of action in that the Minister of Supply was dealing with the said cargo on behalf of the Crown under his powers conferred by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and that the Minister of Supply was not at any material time owner of the said or any part of the said cargo. Alternatively, I submit that B any remedy which the plaintiffs may have must be by way of petition of right.

C 8. In so far as the third-named defendants are concerned I am informed and verily believe that the bill of lading for the part cargo of steel on board this vessel at the material time shows the British Purchasing Commission as the shippers and the said third-named defendants as the consignees and that the said third-named defendants were merely the agents of the Ministry of Supply and were at no material time the owners of such cargo, and that, accordingly, the plaintiffs have no good cause of action against the third-named defendants."

D This affidavit is, it is true, technically defective in that it does not state the sources of information relied on, and it is in very condensed form, but no objection was taken on either ground at the original hearing and, therefore, in my view, full effect must be given to its contents.

E In these circumstances, it is said on behalf of the respondents that they are not necessary or proper parties to an action properly brought in England because the action against the two parties domiciled in England must fail. It is, therefore, not properly brought against those two parties within the meaning of the rule. For the appellants it is urged that no facts are established such as to show that the action must fail and, in any case, an action may be properly brought though its success is uncertain, whether that uncertainty is due to a doubt as to the law or to the facts in dispute. Indeed, they go further and maintain that, if the claim was brought bona fide, that is enough, and its chances of success or failure are irrelevant. As a further contention they submitted F that, if the possibility of success or failure was material at all, it was not the objective possibility which had to be determined. The chances, they asserted, must be judged solely from a consideration of the plaintiffs' knowledge of the facts at the date of the issue of the summons to serve the concurrent writ and not at some later date, such as the date of Mr. Fenwick's affidavit or the hearing of the summons.

G My Lords, the earlier contentions raise questions of some difficulty which will have to be considered later, but I cannot accept the last two suggestions.
If the bona fides of the applicant were the only test, then the less competent the advice he received and the less his capacity of judging accurately for himself, the greater would be his opportunity of obtaining leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction, and, if his knowledge at the date of the issue of a summons for H leave is the vital question, then the greater his ignorance, the better his chances of success. Both these considerations, in my view, point to the fact that neither bona fides nor personal knowledge is the true criterion. Some chance of success, at least, seems to be necessary, and a knowledge of the true facts, so far as ascertainable, must, I think, be required. The tribunal should not be confined to a consideration of the facts as known to one party only, whether at the date of the issue of the summons or at the time when it was heard. The criterion must be objective, not subjective.

This view, however, still leaves open the difficult question : What cases can be said to be properly brought within the jurisdiction ? Is it enough that there is a reasonable doubt either in law or in fact as to what the result of the case against the defendants within the jurisdiction may be, or must the court decide on the hearing of the summons whether the plaintiffs will succeed against them or not ? My Lords, where all the facts necessary for a decision are set out by one side or the other and not contradicted, I think that the tribunal must make up its mind on the hearing of the summons, at any rate, where the law is plain. A

Primarily the jurisdiction of the courts in this country is territorial in the sense that the contract or tort sued on must have some connection with this country or the defendant must be served here. To this principle R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g) is an exception and enables foreigners domiciled abroad to be impleaded in this country, provided an action is properly brought against someone duly served within the jurisdiction and the party outside the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to that action. The rule is not only an exception to, but also an enlargement of, the ordinary jurisdiction of the court and should not, in my opinion, be given an unduly extended meaning. The observation of FARWELL, L.J. ([1908] P. 201) in The Hagen (1) and of LORD SUMNER ([1916] 2 A.C. 304) in John Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2) (both quoted by SCOTT, L.J.) point out the care which should be taken before the jurisdiction is exercised. No doubt, it is in some circumstances desirable that persons not usually subject to the jurisdiction should be brought before our courts in order that a case may be fairly and fully disposed of, but the right to add the foreigner should be sparingly used, more particularly in a case where the party within the jurisdiction may not be subject to any liability, and, therefore, the action would fail as against the only person or persons who could be sued here were it not for the rule. In theory this objection has as great force where the law is in dispute as it has where the facts in respect of which liability is asserted are in issue, inasmuch as the defendant within the jurisdiction may in either case be held to be blameless, but in practice the position differs, since the latter involves what may be a long and complicated consideration of the weight of evidence after the examination of a larger or smaller number of witnesses, whereas the former, if, as in the present case, the facts are ascertained, can often be decided as well at the hearing of a summons as it can in a formal trial. These seem to me to be the general considerations which should guide your Lordships in coming to a decision, but a body of authority has been cited and it has still to be determined what effect it has on the principle at issue. B C D E F

It is not in dispute that, if in substance those within the jurisdiction are made parties without a plausible cause of action, merely that their presence may be used to support an application to issue a writ against persons without the jurisdiction, leave will not be granted. Flower v. Rose (3) and Witted v. Galbraith (4) are illustrations of this attitude. But there are cases in which leave has been given where there is a genuine and substantial doubt whether the parties within the jurisdiction are liable or not. Massey v. Heynes (5), in which those within the jurisdiction were sued for breach of warranty of authority and those without on the alternative plea that they had, in fact, authorised the contract said to be unwarranted, is, perhaps, as good an example as can be chosen, since in that case, the claims being alternative, it was impossible that the action should succeed against the one unless it failed against the other. Nevertheless, as was pointed out in Société Générale de Paris v. Dreyfus Bros. (6), it is not enough that the form of action and the nature of the relief sought bring it within R.S.C., Ord. 11. The plaintiff must show to the satisfaction of the court that he has a probable cause of action. Bloomfield v. Serenyi (7) goes further and distinguishes between cases where the facts are ascertained G H and the only issue is one of law and those which involve the determination of facts. SCOTT, L.J., said that the court, without trying to determine the merits of the action, would consider all the relevant documents, even though this might involve some investigation. MACKINNON, L.J., was even more explicit. His words were ([1945] 2 All E.R. 649):

- A "It has been rightly said in some of these cases that on such an application as this the court cannot try the merits of the action. That is quite true, but I think that means trying and determining disputed facts. Where on such an application the court considers the admittedly relevant documents without the necessity of deciding disputed matters, I do not think that is trying the merits of the action within the meaning of the warning not to do so."
- B It is, no doubt, true that in certain cases where no question as to the exact limitation of the court's powers have come in issue, expressions have been used tending to show a very wide discretion in the judge, e.g., in Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co., Frankfurter Bank A.-G. and Metall Gesellschaft A.-G. (8), MORTON, J., said ([1939] 4 All E.R. 22):
- C "I do not think it is part of the function of the court, in considering whether an action is 'properly brought' against a party within the jurisdiction, to arrive at a conclusion as to whether the plaintiff will or will not succeed against that party. It is enough if the court is satisfied that there is a real issue between the plaintiff and that party which the plaintiff may reasonably ask the court to try."
- D So, too, in Massey v. Heynes (5), LORD ESHER, M.R. (21 Q.B.D. 338) uses as his test: Supposing both parties had been within the jurisdiction, would they both have been proper parties to the action?, and WILLS, J. [in the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division], speaks to the like effect.
- E My Lords, the language used in each case was, no doubt, sufficiently accurate in regard to the circumstances in connection with which it was used, but I cannot myself subscribe to the wide interpretation which is sought to be derived from it in reference to all cases. One may say generally that serious disputes of fact cannot as a rule be decided on a summons, whereas questions of law can, except, perhaps, in exceptional and complicated cases. Ultimately, I think that the granting or withholding of leave must be a matter of discretion, but in exercising it the considerations, which I have dealt with, must be borne
- F in mind. It is not enough to say that there is an arguable point of law because, as in the present case, a series of legislative enactments has to be considered and collated. The question is whether the law is plain as a result of comparing them and analysing their effect. If after a careful scrutiny the law is plain, this House will interfere with the judge's discretion, as it did in Johnson v. Taylor Bros. & Co., Ltd. (9).
- G What, then, is the legal position in the present instance? PILCHER, J., thought, in my opinion rightly, that the action against the defendants within the jurisdiction would fail, but held the view that, where the inquiry involved a consideration of an interwoven series of provisions in Acts of Parliament, there would, as a rule, be sufficient doubt, and there was in this case sufficient doubt, to warrant the giving of leave. In my opinion, these circumstances
- H do not constitute a sufficient ground for granting leave. Where there is a substantial question of fact in issue, no doubt, leave should be given. It may even be that the existence of an exceptionally difficult and doubtful point of law would of itself be enough. In the present case, however, when the various Acts and provisions are collated, the answer is clear enough. The cause of action is statutory only. The right of the appellants to charge the shipowners with the expense of dispersing the wreck is to be found in the various Tyne Improvement Acts, but I need only quote from the Act of 1890, since it contains in substance the material provisions with which your Lordships are concerned. The principle section is s. 42. The material words are :

“ . . . the commissioners may . . . sell break up or otherwise dispose of or may cause to be sold broken up or otherwise disposed of any wreck or any vessel or thing sunk stranded or abandoned or any obstruction within the port and may recover and receive the moneys . . . arising therefrom and may retain out of such moneys any expenses incurred by them . . . in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever in respect or on account of such wreck vessel thing or obstruction or any part thereof . . . rendering the balance (if any) to the person who was the owner of such wreck vessel thing or obstruction immediately before it became a wreck or obstruction . . . and if there be no such moneys or if any such moneys be insufficient to cover all of such expenses and charges the commissioners may recover such expenses and charges or the unsatisfied balance thereof from such person . . . ”

By s. 3 of the same Act :

“ . . . ‘ owner ’ when used in relation to goods unless there be in the subject or context something repugnant to or inconsistent with such construction shall include as the case may be the consignor consignee importer shipper exporter receiver broker or agent for sale or custody . . . ”

I need not quote further from the several Acts, whether successive or supplemental, dealing with the same matter. The section quoted, in my opinion, sufficiently raises the questions at issue.

In the appellants’ contention the Minister and the corporation must come within one of the classes included in the definition of owner and are, therefore, properly the subjects of an action brought against them after due service within the jurisdiction. If no question arose as to the position of these two parties as agents for the Crown, the claim would be incontrovertible, but the claim is, in my view, in substance against the parties as agents for the Crown and not against them personally. The Minister plainly is such agent and, though Mr. Fenwick’s affidavit is, perhaps, a little reticent in the matter, I think it sufficiently emerges that the Minister and the corporation dealt with and held the property as agents of His Majesty and in no other capacity. It was sought to be contended that the position of the Minister had been altered by the provisions of s. 20 of the War Department Stores Act, 1867, in conjunction with s. 2 (3) of the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939. Those provisions in the case of the Minister of Supply provide that he may bring or defend in his own name any action concerning any stores belonging to or supplied by or for the purposes of the Minister, but the original section [s. 20 of the Act of 1867] contains the proviso, commonly found in Acts which may affect the Crown, retaining its privileges and prerogatives. The result of this saving of His Majesty’s right is, as I think, to enable the Minister to be sued without the necessity of a petition of right, but not to debar him from the protection which in the particular case the Crown itself would have had.

That the Crown itself would have been free from liability is, in my opinion, abundantly plain. The local Acts conferring powers on the appellants preserve the privileges of the Crown throughout. Section 99 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, which is incorporated in the Tyne Improvement Acts up to 1934 by the Tyne Improvement Act, 1934, s. 3 (1), and s. 81 of the latter Act make this clear, but, indeed, the general principles of the law of this country would produce the same effect, and in this connection I need only refer to Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corporation (10).

My Lords, in these circumstances it is immaterial that in the relevant statutes the word “ owner ” is given an extended meaning. The Crown still is not bound by the extension and, even if it were, is under no obligation to pay the charges. I am not myself fully persuaded in any case that the extended meaning given to "owner" applies to the case of those against whom the Acts give a right to recover the cost of dispersion of a wreck or its cargo. The answer to that question may well await a case in which such a claim must be decided. In this case, however, the action against the two parties within the jurisdiction must plainly fail, and in those circumstances I cannot think that the action is properly brought against them within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g). I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, this appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal, which reversed a judgment of PILCHER, J., dismissing a motion by the respondents for an order to set aside an order made by the same learned judge by which he gave leave to the appellants to issue a concurrent writ for service out of the jurisdiction and to serve notice thereof on the respondents in Belgium, raises a procedural question of some difficulty.

The relevant facts can be shortly stated and it must be said at once that they cannot be regarded as seriously in dispute. The appellants are the conservancy authority for the River Tyne and the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The respondents were, in March, 1942, the owners of S.S. Brabo. In that month she was in collision off the entrance to the Tyne and thereafter was towed into the River Tyne where she sank and became an obstruction. She was loaded at the time with a cargo of wood pulp and steel billets and slabs which were consigned to the Minister of Supply and the British Iron and Steel Corporation. The vessel and her cargo constituting an obstruction in their undertaking, the appellants took steps under their statutory powers to salve and recover such portions of them as could be saved and to disperse the remainder. This work was expensive and difficult. Its cost may amount to about £250,000. On Mar. 20, 1946, a writ was issued by the appellants against the respondents and against the Minister of Supply and the British Iron and Steel Corporation, to whom I will refer as the second and third defendants, claiming from the defendants and each of them the unsatisfied balance of the charges and expenses incurred by them in relation to the wreck and the cargo taken thereon. The Treasury Solicitor accepted service on behalf of the second and third defendants and entered an appearance for them without protest. The respondents being resident in Belgium, the writ was served on a Mr. Aragon, one of their directors, who was then in this country, but on motion by the respondents this service was set aside by PILCHER, J., who, nevertheless, allowed the writ to be amended by substituting for the address in this country at which Mr. Aragon had been served the address of the respondents in Belgium. The appellants then made an ex parte application, supported by an affidavit of Mr. V. H. Smith, a managing clerk in the firm of solicitors acting for the appellants, to the assistant registrar in the Admiralty Division for leave to serve the respondents out of the jurisdiction. This application was refused on the ground that the respondents were not a necessary or proper party to the action brought against the second or third defendants. The appellants appealed to PILCHER, J., ex parte and on June 6, 1946, he allowed the appeal. He thought that the respondents were a necessary or proper party to the action and gave leave to issue a concurrent writ out of the jurisdiction and to serve notice thereof on the respondents at Antwerp. It will be observed that at this stage the question which has been so much debated in this House whether the action was "properly brought" against the second and third defendants had not yet emerged, but it was about to emerge and it is convenient to remind your Lordships that leave to serve out of the jurisdiction was given under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), which provides :

"1. Service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons or notice of a writ of summons may be allowed by the court or a judge whenever . . .

(g) Any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action properly brought against some other person duly served within the jurisdiction."

On Aug. 22, 1946, the respondents entered a conditional appearance to the writ and at a later date moved to set aside the order of June 6, 1946, on the grounds (a) that they were not a "necessary or proper party" to the action, and (b) that the action against the second and third defendants had not been "properly brought" against them. They supported their application by an affidavit of Mr. E. A. Fenwick, the senior partner in the firm of solicitors acting for the respondents, in which he submitted that, in so far as the second defendant was concerned, the writ and the affidavit of Mr. V. H. Smith disclosed no good cause of action in that the Minister of Supply was dealing with the cargo on behalf of the Crown under his powers conferred by the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and that the Minister of Supply was not at any material time owner of any part of the cargo, and that, in so far as the third defendants were concerned, the bill of lading for the part cargo of steel on board the vessel showed the British Purchasing Commission as the shippers and the third defendants as the consignees and that the third defendants were merely the agents of the Minister of Supply and were at no material time the owners of such cargo, and that, accordingly, the appellants had no good cause of action against them. I cannot, my Lords, deny that this affidavit both in form and substance leaves something to be desired, but it was not challenged and I do not think your Lordships would be justified in coming to any other conclusion than that the whole of the cargo was the property of the Crown vested in the second or third defendants for the purposes of the Crown. If there was any doubt on this matter, which I do not think there was, it should have been cleared up by the appellants, whose duty it was on an application for leave to serve out of the jurisdiction to place all relevant facts before the court.

The question then was, and is, whether on these facts the appellants bring their case within the terms of the rule, and further, whether, if they do, the court should exercise its discretion in their favour. On this question PILCHER, J., decided in favour of the appellants and dismissed the respondents' motion, but the Court of Appeal (SCOTT, BUCKNILL and WROTTESELEY, L.JJ.) unanimously reversed his decision, holding that the action was not "properly brought" against the second or third defendants, and that, accordingly, the conditions of the rule had not been satisfied.

On the respondents' first ground of objection I do not think it necessary to say more than that, if I thought that the second ground of objection failed and that the action was properly brought against the second or third defendants, I should hesitate to say that the respondents were not at least a proper party to the action. It was on the second ground of objection that the Court of Appeal founded their decision and I find myself in agreement with them. I do not propose to attempt an exhaustive definition of the words "action properly brought." To do so would probably lead to the use of words which would themselves require elucidation, but, in considering whether in any particular case an action can be regarded as "properly brought," within the meaning of the rule, I keep in mind the principles (to which SCOTT, L.J., has referred) laid down, not for the first time, by FARWELL, L.J. ([1908] P. 201), in The Hagen (1). What, then, is here the basis of the respondents' objection to being served with process out of the jurisdiction? It is simply that on the facts, which cannot fairly be regarded as in dispute, the action against the second and third defendants is not sustainable in law and is bound to fail, and that, if so, it cannot be regarded as properly brought against them.

My Lords, I will first briefly examine the contention that the appellants' action against the second and third defendants is bound to fail—briefly, because I think it is so clear as not to require elaboration. The appellants' claim is based on their statutory powers and, in particular, the provisions of s. 42 of the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890. Since on the facts, which I hold to be undisputed, the cargo here in question is the property of the Crown vested in its servants or agents, the appellants' claim, so far as it relates to such cargo, can only succeed if they can establish that the Crown is bound by the statutory provisions on which they rely, but not only is the Crown bound neither by express mention nor by necessary implication, but, in addition, in every relevant Act the rights of the Crown are expressly preserved. I need do no more than mention s. 99 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, which, by s. 3 of the Tyne Improvement Act, 1934, is deemed to be incorporated with each of the Tyne Improvement Acts, 1850 to 1934, and s. 81 of the Act of 1934 itself. From such a conclusion, which is supported by abundant authority (I will refer only to Hornsey Urban Council v. Hennell (11), and the recent case of Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corporation (10)), the appellants seek to escape by pointing to s. 20 of the War Department Stores Act, 1867, as applied to the Minister of Supply by s. 2 (3) of the Ministry of Supply Act, 1939, and the Ministry of Supply (Transfer of Powers) (No. 1) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 877). This section, as adapted to the Minister of Supply, provides, in effect, that he may in his own name bring or defend any action concerning any stores belonging to or supplied by or for the purposes of the Minister. It has its own significant proviso which (as adapted) provides that :

“ Nothing herein shall take away or abridge in or in relation to any such action, suit, or proceeding any legal right, privilege, or prerogative of the Crown ; and in all such actions, suits, and proceedings, and in all matters and proceedings connected therewith, the Minister of Supply may exercise and enjoy all such rights, privileges, and prerogatives as are for the time being exercised and enjoyed in any proceeding in any court of law or equity by the Crown, as if the Crown were actually a party to such action, suit, or proceeding.”

I can see no justification for the suggestion that, in an action brought against the Minister of Supply, he is debarred from asserting the immunity of the Crown from claims brought under a statute which not only does not purport to bind the Crown but expressly exempts it. Nor, on an examination in their context of the observations of MACKINNON, L.J., and GODDARD, L.J., in Minister of Supply v. British Thomson-Houston Co., Ltd. (12), do I think that those learned judges intended to cast any doubt on the question. If they did, such observations must be regarded as obiter and per incuriam. All that was decided in that case was that the Minister of Supply could be sued by way of counter-claim for breach of contract. I must mention briefly one further contention of the appellants. It was, as I understand the argument, urged that, whether or not the Crown was the owner of the cargo in question, yet by virtue of an extended definition of the word “ owner ” to be found in s. 3 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, and s. 3 of the Tyne Improvement Act, 1890, the second and third defendants (or, at any rate, the third defendant) were to be regarded as “ owners ” within the ambit of s. 42 of the Act of 1890. I am by no means satisfied that this initial step is made good, but, whether it is or not, inasmuch as the Act does not bind the Crown, it does not affect the right of its servants and agents, by whatever name the Act may choose to call them, to assert its and their immunity.

I come then to the conclusion that this action is bound to fail against the second and third defendants, and it appears to me that, once a court has come to that conclusion, it cannot say that none the less the action is “ properly brought ” against them so as to permit service of a writ out of the jurisdiction on another party. I am, as I have already said, very conscious of the difficulties that arise from any attempt at exhaustive definition, but I think that certain propositions may fairly be laid down. (i) I would dismiss the contention that the action is "properly brought" if it is brought bona fide. As my noble and learned friend, LORD MACDERMOTT, observed in the course of the argument, the rule is not designed to place a premium on folly or ignorance. The test cannot be a subjective one. But I agree that, if it were brought mala fide, that would be fatal. (ii) I do not think that the court ought to assume that the defendants within the jurisdiction would not avail themselves of any defence open to them. In this case it was suggested that the second and third defendants might not assert the immunity of the Crown, but if one valid line of defence is assumed to be abandoned, so might another, until at last any action may be deemed to be properly brought because the defendants might throw down their arms and run away. Such an argument is inconsistent with the principle laid down in this House by LORD SUMNER ([1916] 2 A.C. 304), in John Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2), that the phrase "properly brought" enures to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction whom it is proposed to serve with process. (iii) I do not accede to the suggestion that the court, which has to consider whether leave to serve out of the jurisdiction should be given, or, alternatively, to consider whether an order giving such leave should be set aside, is concerned only with the facts or, indeed, the law as they existed or were assumed to be at the date of the issue of the writ or of service of the writ on the defendants within the jurisdiction. It is, in my view, consistent with the international comity, which must be observed in the application of this order, that the court should have regard to the facts and the law as at the date of hearing: see Société Générale de Paris v. Dreyfus Bros. (6). (iv) If on the available materials the court comes to the conclusion that the action against the defendants within the jurisdiction must fail, it must equally conclude that the action is not properly brought. Here arises the difficulty. For at once the question will be asked: "Is the court at this stage compelled to come to any conclusion at all? Cannot it say that there is a serious and difficult question to be argued and that the action is properly brought for the purpose of arguing it?" This was, in effect, the contention of the appellants which found favour with PILCHER, J., in this case. I would not deny that there might be cases, particularly where issues of fact are involved, in which the court would be justified in taking such a view, and I do not invite your Lordships to decide that, whenever the defendant out of the jurisdiction takes on himself the burden of showing that the action must fail against the defendants within the jurisdiction, the court is bound to make an adjudication which in any case cannot be final as between the plaintiff and the latter defendants, but I would say at least negatively that, where the defendant out of the jurisdiction does take on himself that burden, the court should not easily be deterred by any apparent difficulty or complexity of subject-matter from considering, and, if it can do so at that stage, forming an opinion on, the question whether the action is bound to fail against the defendants within the jurisdiction. If, having done so, the court answers that question in the affirmative, then it must conclude that the action is not "properly brought." That I conceive to be the position in this case and I would affirm the order under appeal accordingly.

I should finally observe on some of the cases which have been cited. In Witted v. Galbraith (4) the Court of Appeal, overruling a decision of the Divisional Court, set aside an order for service out of the jurisdiction and in the course of his judgment LINDLEY, L.J., said ([1893] 1 Q.B. 579):

"... there is no plausible cause of action against the brokers... It is not a bona fide case of an action properly brought against a person who has been served within the jurisdiction."

On this it was urged that, assuming bona fides, the test of an action properly brought was whether there was a "plausible" cause of action. It is, I think, sufficient to say that LINDLEY, L.J., was not considering the problem which now faces your Lordships and that it is unnecessary to speculate whether he would have thought a cause of action plausible which was demonstrated to be bad in law. In the Divisional Court in the same case HAWKINS, J., had said ([1893] 1 Q.B. 434):

- A “I think that, if a plaintiff, who is acting bona fide, has anything like a semblance of a cause of action against a person who is within the jurisdiction, he is entitled to issue a writ against that person and serve it on him, and may then obtain leave to serve any person out of the jurisdiction who is a necessary or proper party to such action.”

This statement is, I think, far too wide, but it must in any case be qualified by saying that, if leave is so granted, it must be rescinded when the defendant out of the jurisdiction has shown that it is but a semblance and that the action is bound to fail. In Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co. (8) MORTON, J., thought ([1939] 4 All E.R. 22) that the condition of the rule was satisfied if there was “a real issue” to be tried. I cannot accept this test if it means that the defendant out of the jurisdiction is to be denied the opportunity of showing that the issue can as a matter of law be resolved in one way only. It may well be that, where there is conflicting evidence of fact, it is only at the trial of the action that the issue can be determined. That may be the misfortune of the defendant out of the jurisdiction, but if, the only real issue being an issue of law, he can satisfy the court what the answer must be, then he is entitled to say that he cannot be brought to trial in a jurisdiction to which he is not generally subject.

- I have so far considered only the question what is the meaning of the words “action properly brought” where they occur in the rule, but there still remains the question how, assuming the action to be properly brought, the discretionary jurisdiction should be exercised. The two questions will often be found to interlock. For instance, if it were the true view that an action is properly brought if the plaintiff brings it bona fide and there is a “plausible cause of action” or “a real issue” to be tried, yet the court may and, as I think, should as a rule allow the defendant out of the jurisdiction to try to show that the case against the defendants must fail and, if he succeeds in doing so, then in its discretion set aside the order of service. Thus, in this case, whatever view I took of the construction of the rule, I should have no hesitation in saying that on the materials adduced by the respondents the court should in the exercise of its discretion set aside the order. I will conclude by saying that, whether in considering the interpretation of the rule or in exercising the discretion that arises when a case is brought within it, the underlying and guiding principle is that which was long ago stated by PEARSON, J. (29 Ch.D. 242), in Société Générale de Paris v. Dreyfus Bros. (6):

- G “. . . it . . . ought always to be considered a very serious question . . . whether this court ought to put a foreigner, who owes no allegiance here, to the inconvenience and annoyance of being brought to contest his rights in this country . . .”

LORD DU PARCQ: My Lords, it is correctly stated in the appellant’s case that:

- H “. . . the short point in this appeal is whether the action was ‘properly brought’ against the second and third defendants, the Minister of Supply and the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd.”

At first sight the point so stated has a pleasing appearance of simplicity. It is, perhaps, less simple than it looks, but it may be true to say that no words or phrases long retain their simplicity when they are exposed to a process of delicate, prolonged and remorseless dissection. Before I deal with the narrow question which is presented to your Lordships, I would add that it is necessary to keep in mind two further matters which are at once elementary and important—first, that those applying for leave are under an obligation to make the fullest disclosure of all relevant facts to the court, and, secondly, that, even if they are able to bring their application within the strict terms of the rule, the granting of leave is discretionary, and there may be grounds which will justify the court in refusing it.

My Lords, I have no intention of paraphrasing in my own language the apparently simple words "properly brought." One is unlikely to find other words which are precisely synonymous with them, and it is useless to substitute for them words which may have a slightly different meaning. I will confine myself to considering what effect ought to be given to these precise words, in their context, with reference to the case before the House. There is, I think, general agreement that the context makes the purpose of the introduction of the words plain enough. The foreigner is not to be brought before our courts, and so under a jurisdiction to which he is not normally subject, unless certain provisions are satisfied. If he is a necessary or proper party to an action brought against a defendant who is subject to the jurisdiction, there is obviously something to be said, on the ground of convenience, for allowing service on him. There would, however, be no sufficient safeguard for the foreigner, if the claim made against the resident defendant were not open to the scrutiny of the court, and if the mere making of a claim were enough. The words "properly brought" are introduced to provide such a safeguard. In construing them, it is permissible and, indeed, necessary to remember that this is their object. It is easy to state extreme cases in which it is plain that the provision is, or is not, satisfied. On the one hand, no one would say that an action was properly brought if it could be shown to be (in the language of R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4) "frivolous or vexatious." On the other hand, an action may well be "properly brought" although no one can be sure that the facts which must be established if the action is to succeed will certainly be proved. Between these two extremes there is a considerable field in which the problem is less clear-cut. In the present case the argument proceeded mainly on the assumption that the facts, at any rate so far as they had been elucidated, were not in dispute. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that they had at least reasonable ground for confidence that the law was on their side, and on behalf of the respondents that the court must decide the point of law at this stage, and that on a correct view of the law the decision must be adverse to the appellants' claim.

My Lords, I am anxious to give full weight to the manifest object of a provision which protects the foreigner, but I am unable to construe the phrase "properly brought" as ruling out an action founded on a legal proposition, which, though it may not commend itself to the court hearing the application, expresses a possible and reasonable opinion on a point which is one of difficulty, and is open to doubt. I am conscious that I am here making an assumption which, in the submission of the respondents, is wholly illegitimate. The law, they say, is always certain. There are no doubtful points. There is only one right answer to any question. If an action is founded on a wrong view of the law and could succeed only if that view were accepted, then it is not "properly brought." Therefore, in order to decide whether or not an action is "properly brought," the court must make up its mind about the law, however difficult and doubtful the point involved may seem. In support of his thesis counsel for the respondents emphasised, very rightly, the injustice that would result if a foreigner were joined as a defendant in proceedings in which it ultimately appeared that there was no cause of action against the resident defendants. Regrettable though it may be that a foreigner should ever be haled before our courts, and, perhaps, suffer judgment, though no action lay against his co-defendants, the fact must be faced that this risk is hardly to be avoided on any view of the rule. Let it be granted that the law is always certain. It must, nevertheless, be acknowledged that practitioners, and even judges, sometimes have to find the best way they can through an obscure and difficult field of law, illuminated only by conflicting decisions. There may be a period, sometimes a long period, during which the truth, which is in its nature certain, has not been finally revealed to a perplexed world. At such a time it may happen that a judge, compelled to express a definite opinion, will accept, by an excusable error, a plaintiff's incorrect view of the law. The foreigner may not be disposed to welcome the suggestion that he should take the matter further, possibly even as far as your Lordships' House. He may not be anxious to fight the battle of the other defendant, and may think that as a series of appeals might after all prove to be nothing better than a preliminary skirmish, he will be wise to reserve himself, and keep his money, for the main engagement. Should he take this prudent course, it may turn out in the end, after the action has been heard and finally disposed of, that the judge who permitted service on him was wrong, that there was no case against the resident defendant, and that, therefore, the foreigner ought never to have been joined, but, if the foreigner has rightly been held liable, the fact that he was wrongly joined will avail him nothing. He will not get his money back, or be freed from the judgment given against him. If the doubt is about the facts rather than the law, it is admittedly inevitable that after the trial and any appeals which follow it are over, the foreigner may be found to have been brought before the court on a false assumption.

For these reasons I am of opinion that those who framed the rule cannot have hoped, or intended, that a foreigner should never be joined as a "necessary and proper party" to an action which was wrongly brought against his English co-defendants in the sense that, on a true view of the law, it could not succeed against them. I think that the dictum of MORTON, J. ([1939] 4 All E.R. 22), in Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co. (8), on which the appellants relied, was substantially correct. Further support for this view may be found in the decision in Massey v. Heynes (5), where the action was bound to fail against the English defendants if it succeeded against the foreign defendants. In the Court of Appeal, LORD ESHER, M.R., said (21 Q.B.D. 338):

"To what period of time does the rule in question apply? It must certainly apply to the time of the service of the writ or notice of the writ. How can the court deal with the case then? Not according to the result of the trial of the action; they cannot take into account what may be the result of the trial, or they could never decide who would be a 'proper party' to the action until the trial was over."

My Lords, the construction of the rule which commends itself to me, as it has, I think, long commended itself to the courts, is criticised on the ground that the rule, so interpreted, supplies only a vague and uncertain criterion. I think it must be admitted that the rule, as I understand it, does not supply a touchstone so certain that there is no room left for difference of opinion among judges, but this defect, if it be a defect, is, I think, inherent in the words which those who framed the rule have chosen, and it is not for the courts to impose a more rigid test. Moreover, it does not seem to me to be at all surprising that the rule should leave some latitude to the judge. A judge is frequently set the task of deciding whether there was "reasonable and probable cause" for an action, and I have heard no complaint that the question is too vague to be answered with accuracy. Indeed, if the question be asked whether in this country one is likely to find a rigid rule laid down rather than one which has some elasticity, I suppose that few English lawyers would say that rigid rules form a marked feature of our system of law. It may be added that there is something to be said for a construction which avoids the result that a question of law vitally affecting an English defendant is tried and determined in his absence. It is true that, if the court decides that there is no case against him, he will have no cause to complain. His position will be less happy if, on the assumption that the facts are not in dispute, it is held in his absence that he can have no answer in law to the claim. It has been suggested that he would be entitled to join in the argument even at this preliminary stage. If that is right, the procedure would be costly and cumbrous, and I find it difficult to believe that the rule contemplates proceedings in which the liability of one defendant is to be determined before the trial begins.

My Lords, I apologise for this lengthy preamble, but it seems to me important that the judges who have to observe the rule should be left in no doubt as to its true effect. For myself, I do not differ from the view expressed by the Court of Appeal ([1947] 2 All E.R. 365), that, assuming all the facts to be admitted, an action is not properly brought if "on those facts it is apparent that the plaintiffs cannot succeed against the defendants served within the jurisdiction," and I think that they correctly stated the question for decision as being whether "it can be reasonably argued" that those defendants are liable to the plaintiffs. I cannot follow them to the length of accepting without qualification, as in one passage of the judgment they seem to do, the proposition for which the respondents' counsel contended. It cannot be said of every legal problem that the correctness of one of two conflicting views is "apparent," or that the opposing contention is not reasonably arguable. I agree, however, with my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack that it would be wrong to say that there was an arguable point of law merely because a series of enactments had to be considered and collated, and also with my noble and learned friend LORD SIMONDS that difficulty or complexity of subject-matter ought not to deter the court from qualifying itself to answer the question: "Is this action bound to fail?"

I now turn to the facts, which have been said by PILCHER, J., and the Court of Appeal not to be in dispute. It is at this point that it is essential to remember that it is for the plaintiffs (the appellants in this case) to satisfy the court that the demands of the rule are satisfied, and that, in their own interests, as well as in pursuance of their duty, it is for them to see that all relevant facts known to them are before the court. It cannot be said of the present appellants that they have been generous with their information. Such as it is, it is contained in the affidavit of Mr. Smith, a managing clerk of the appellants' solicitors. He tells us that the appellants are advised, and that he (Mr. Smith) verily believes, that they have a good cause of action against all the defendants. He adds that an action has already been begun against the second and third defendants, as owners of part of the cargo of the Brabo, and this action, he says, he is advised and verily believes to have been "properly brought" against them. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to accept this evidence, and to regard it as disposing of any charge of bad faith against the appellants. They believe in their case. That is really all that Mr. Smith told the court. Paragraph 7 of his affidavit suggests that he could, if he would, have told a good deal more, for he refers to "documents and information" in the possession of his firm, from which his means of knowledge and information are derived. At this stage it may have been thought unnecessary further to enlighten the court. Later, perhaps, more might have been revealed with advantage. The affidavit of the respondents' solicitor, though irregular in form, since the source of his information is not stated, asserts plainly (i) that the Minister of Supply was dealing with the cargo on behalf of the Crown, and (ii) that the third defendants were "merely the agents of the Minister of Supply." If these words are given their ordinary meaning, the facts which they state seem to me to rule out the possibility of a successful action by the appellants against the second and third defendants, or either of them. As to this, I find myself substantially in agreement with the Court of Appeal. The statutes to which your Lordships were referred do not bind the Crown. The Minister of Supply, acting as the agent of the Crown, cannot be sued successfully under a statute which does not bind the Crown. This is, in general, equally true of any person who is acting as A "a mere agent" of the Crown. Counsel for the appellants submitted, as one branch of his argument, that the facts were not sufficiently ascertained, on the information before the courts, to make it possible to say whether the action could succeed against the second and third defendants, and he suggested that, so far as the third defendants were concerned, it was consistent with the evidence that the appellants had dealt with them as principals, but, as I have said, it was for the appellants to satisfy the court that they had a claim against the second and third defendants which brought them within the rule. If they were in a position to prove, or to allege on reasonable grounds, any facts from which it could be argued that the other defendants, although they were agents of the Crown, might still be liable, it was for them to bring to the notice of the court such evidence of those facts as they possessed. The "documents and information" which, as we know from Mr. Smith's affidavit, are in the possession of the appellants' solicitors, would in all probability have furnished the necessary information. On the evidence available I do not think that it can be said that there is secure ground for a belief that the action is "properly brought" against the English defendants. The statements contained in the affidavit sworn on behalf of the respondents remain unchallenged, and I think it a legitimate inference that the appellants are in no position to swear to any facts which would weaken their effect. Even assuming, therefore, that the appellants might succeed against the third defendants if they did not know them to be "mere agents" of the Crown, it would be wrong, in my opinion, to deal with the case on the footing that the appellants had not that knowledge. I have thus reached the conclusion that the Court of Appeal rightly decided that, on a fair reading of the available evidence, it was apparent that the appellants' claim against the second and third defendants could not succeed and that it was, therefore, not properly brought. It was contended for the appellants that the Crown might (as it was put) waive the defence that it was not bound by the appellants' statutes. I think, with respect, that this is an idle contention. If the Crown is not bound by a statute, it cannot owe a debt by reason of the terms of that statute. If there is no debt owing, an action for debt cannot be properly brought.

E It may be that the reticence of the appellants has left the courts in the dark as to some material fact, and that this action will still proceed against the English defendants. If it does, it is conceivable that those defendants may have evidence to produce which will throw a new light on the case, and even that they may wish to submit that the respondents should be brought in as third parties.

F In that, perhaps, not very likely event, the position of the second and third defendants would not be prejudiced, and it would be open to them to apply to the court under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 8A. I say this, not to encourage such proceedings, but to make it clear that the dismissal of this appeal cannot, in my opinion, injuriously affect the rights of parties who were not before the courts or this House. On the view I take, no question arises about the proper exercise of discretion. I would dismiss the appeal.

G

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, as this appeal raises a question of the English law of procedure, I would have wished merely to express my concurrence in the conclusion which has been arrived at unanimously, but there is a difference of opinion whether leave to serve out of the jurisdiction should have been refused because the action was not "properly brought" (R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g)), or because the granting of leave was not a proper exercise of the judicial discretion, and it, therefore, becomes necessary that I should state the view which I have reached. The jurisdiction conferred by service out of the jurisdiction is anomalous, and the very words which describe it betray that it is a departure from the jurisdiction recognised by the comity of nations and an invasion of the sovereignty of the state within which leave to serve is granted. The rules laid down by FARWELL, L.J., in The Hagen (1) emphasise the court's duty of caution when it is asked to allow service out of the jurisdiction, and the duty of the party applying for leave to make a full and fair disclosure. In Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2) LORD SUMNER pointed out ([1916] 2 A.C. 304) :

H

“The words ‘properly brought’ enure to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction whom it is proposed to serve with process. His protection is not to be found exclusively in the words ‘a necessary or proper party.’”

Their function is, therefore, to restrain within proper limits a power made mainly for the convenience of English plaintiffs, though it is also advantageous in many cases to the English defendant and in some even to the foreign defendant. The words “properly brought,” if narrowly construed, would not afford to the foreign defendant the protection to which he is entitled, and I think they are wide enough to oblige the court, whether it be the court to which the original application is made or any court reviewing the order made by that court, to refuse the application when, on all the material before it, it comes to the conclusion that the action as laid against the English defendants cannot succeed, either because the plaintiff has failed to state a valid ground of action or because on the facts established by admissions or by uncontradicted affidavits the English defendants have a valid defence.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, while I agree that this appeal should be dismissed, I prefer to relate my conclusion to the discretion exerciseable under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 4, rather than to the test which was adopted by the Court of Appeal and which appears to mean that an action must be regarded as not “properly brought” within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord 11, r. 1 (g), if, on the relevant facts being admitted, the court decides that in law it cannot succeed.

My Lords, in themselves the words “an action properly brought” do not suggest the ultimate result as a criterion and there is nothing that I can find in their context to indicate the contrary. I think; indeed, that r. 8A (a) of R.S.C., Ord. 11, rather points the other way, for it makes r. 1 (g) applicable to originating summonses, and the nature of proceedings so initiated may well be such as to make it inapt, when the legal issues are determined, to speak of the plaintiff as having either succeeded or failed against particular defendants. It must be borne in mind, of course, that the words under discussion “enure to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction whom it is proposed to serve with process,” as LORD SUMNER put it ([1916] 2 A.C. 304) in John Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd. (2). That consideration, however, seems to me to fall far short of supporting the view adopted here by the Court of Appeal, and it is to be observed in this connection that in the case just cited LORD WRENBURY said (ibid., 306), with reference to the expression in question :

“My Lords, those words, to my mind, do not mean founded upon a good cause of action.”

I confess that, for my part, I do not see why an action with the object of resolving some vexed question of law should not be “properly brought” irrespective of the decision to be obtained, or why the expression as used in R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), should be given the highly artificial meaning necessary to make a test of success or failure in the suit applicable. Whatever the theory may be, points of law are in practice often highly debatable and hard to settle, as well as being less easily laid to rest than questions of fact, and I find it difficult to construe these particular words as inviting the court, on an interlocutory application made in the earliest stages of the litigation, to embark, in the absence of any factual dispute, on an adjudication as to the ultimate rights of the parties within the jurisdiction. I respectfully agree with the opinion of MORTON, J., in Ellinger v. Guinness, Mahon & Co. (8), when he says ([1939] 4 All E.R. 22) :

"I do not think it is part of the function of the court, in considering whether an action is 'properly brought' against a party within the jurisdiction, to arrive at a conclusion as to whether the plaintiff will or will not succeed against that party. It is enough if the court is satisfied that there is a real issue between the plaintiff and that party which the plaintiff may reasonably ask the court to try."

- A Here, I think, the issue between the plaintiffs and the defendants in the jurisdiction was real in the sense in which I take MORTON, J., to have used the term. The claim was not made vexatiously or mala fide. It was of a nature known to the law and arose, undoubtedly, from a genuine dispute as to where liability for the grave loss which had been incurred should rest. I think also that the issue was one which the plaintiffs were reasonable in asking
- B the court to try. It was raised with due regard to the rules of procedure. It was substantial and important. It was, moreover, triable in the sense that the questions of law which emerged invited close argument from both sides and a careful exposition of the relevant enactments. That this process was followed before the frailty of the plaintiffs' case was judicially exposed is more important than the exposure itself as respects the point now under discussion. To my
- C mind, PILCHER, J., was right on this aspect of the matter, and, with him, I would hold that the action was "properly brought."

- But this view does not, in my opinion, mean that the probable outcome of an action is necessarily irrelevant to the question whether leave should be given under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g). If the facts are settled, or are to be taken as settled, and the applicable law is thought by the court to be so much against
- D the plaintiff that his chances of success are negligible, that may on occasion be ground for saying that the foreigner should not be subjected to process in this jurisdiction, and is, at least, a matter to be taken into account in exercising the discretion conferred by the order. This is apart from any question of mala fides. It is, of course, well settled that an action brought against a party within the jurisdiction without any hope of success and merely in order to found
- E an application under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), is not "properly brought," but from the standpoint of the foreigner the motive in suing those within the jurisdiction may well matter less than the circumstance that the proceedings in which it is sought to involve him have no real weight against those already served. If the proceedings are of that kind, there exists an element which can hardly be left out of consideration, however "properly brought" the suit
- F may be.

- On this view two questions remain: Had the present action any chance of success against one or other of the defendants served in England? And, if not, was the discretion properly exercised? My Lords, on the first of these questions I agree that all matters of defence or objection to the claim may be regarded as open, and I also agree, for the reasons already stated by your
- G Lordships, that the second defendant, the Minister of Supply, is entitled to the immunity enjoyed by the Crown in respect of the statutes sued on and which, it is clear, do not bind it. As regards the third defendant, the British Iron and Steel Corporation, Ltd., I have experienced some difficulty because the affidavit of Mr. E. A. Fenwick gives little information as to the nature of this defendant's agency, and I do not think it can be said with safety that any agent of the Crown
- H is, irrespective of the terms of the agency, entitled to rely on this immunity. On consideration, however, I feel that the affidavit which, though vague and unsatisfactory in some respects, has not been challenged, makes it impossible to distinguish between the position of the second and third defendants—at least, for the purposes of the present application. I, accordingly, reach the conclusion that in law, and assuming the defence of immunity to be taken, the plaintiffs would not succeed against either of these defendants. As it is, on the view I have taken, unnecessary to decide whether the statutory definitions of "owner" include the consignees, I express no opinion on the point. On the question of discretion I do not read the careful judgment of PILCHER, J., as indicating that he took into account the weak character of the suit as against the English defendants in relation to the exercise of his discretion. For that reason I think the learned judge's conclusion on this branch of the case may properly be regarded as open to review. On all the facts and circumstances, including the exceptional nature of the claim and its futility as against the second and third defendants, I do not think the respondents should be brought to court in this jurisdiction. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless, agents for Bramwell, Clayton and Clayton, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (for the appellants); Holman, Fenwick & Willan (for the respondents).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. SIDNEY TRADING CO., LTD.
v. FINSBURY B.C. [1952] 1 All E.R. 460.

ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Denning, L.J.J., and Roxburgh, J.), January 12, 1949.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—"Rent"—Lease of flat—Agreement in contemporaneous document to pay annual sums for decorative alterations and cost of management—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. I).

Before the coming into operation of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, a flat was let on a yearly tenancy at a rent of £175, but contemporaneously with the lease the parties executed a deed, described in the endorsement as a supplemental agreement, under which the tenant and any person in whom the lease at any time might be vested covenanted to pay an additional £40 a year in consideration of decorative and other works carried out by the landlords and a further £60 a year towards the cost of the management of the building in which the flat was situated, the second agreement to run concurrently with the lease and to determine with it and the sum payable thereunder to be paid together with the rent and to be recoverable "by distress or otherwise as for rent in arrear." The flat came within the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts on the coming into operation of the Act of 1939.

HELD: the extra payment of £100 per annum was part of the monetary compensation payable by the tenant in consideration for what had been granted to him by the landlord under the two documents taken together, and also it formed part of the contractual monetary obligation payable under the two agreements taken together and relating to the demised premises, and, therefore, the standard rent consisted of the sum of the amounts payable under the two documents.

Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark ([1948] 1 All E.R. 165; [1948] 1 K.B. 630), applied.

White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. ([1944] 1 All E.R. 689; [1944] K.B. 576; 171 L.T. 41), distinguished.

Decision of SLADE, J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 224; [1948] 2 K.B. 464), affirmed.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-315, paras. 369, 370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 559-561, 563-565, Nos. 7068-7084, 7111-7127.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark, [1948] 1 All E.R. 165 ; [1948] 1 K.B. 630 ; [1948] L.J.R. 1066.
- (2) Wilkes v. Goodwin, [1923] 2 K.B. 86 ; 92 L.J.K.B. 580 ; 129 L.T. 44 ; 31 Digest 560, 7030.
- (3) Nye v. Davis, [1922] 2 K.B. 56 ; 91 L.J.K.B. 545 ; 126 L.T. 537 ; 31 Digest 560, 7072.
- A (4) White v. Richmond Court, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 689 ; [1944] K.B. 576 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 497 ; 171 L.T. 41 ; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Bell Property Trust, Ltd. v. Hampstead Borough Assessment Committee, [1940] 3 All E.R. 640 ; [1940] 2 K.B. 543 ; 109 L.J.K.B. 792 ; 163 L.T. 292 ; 104 J.P. 411 ; 2nd Digest Supp.
- B (6) Bryanston Property Co., Ltd. v. Edwards, [1943] 2 All E.R. 646 ; [1944] K.B. 32 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 161 ; 169 L.T. 362 ; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Tedman v. Whicker, [1944] 1 All E.R. 26 ; [1944] K.B. 112 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 166 ; 170 L.T. 51 ; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Conqueror Property Trust, Ltd. v. Barnes Corpn., [1944] 1 All E.R. 34 ; [1944] K.B. 96 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 30 ; 170 L.T. 54 ; 108 J.P. 28 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

C APPEAL by the tenant from an order of SLADE, J., dated June 15, 1948, reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 224, whereby the landlords were awarded judgment for £115 2s. 2d., arrears of rent. The decision turned on the amount of the standard rent of the demised premises, which SLADE, J., found to be the aggregate of the amount of the rent reserved in the lease and periodic sums agreed to be paid in a contemporaneous deed in respect of decorative and other works and as a contribution to management costs. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Michael Hoare and T. H. K. Berry for the tenant.

Lionel Blundell and Plume for the landlords.

E TUCKER, L.J. : This is an appeal from a judgment of SLADE, J., in which he decided the issue between the parties in favour of the landlords. There was a claim and counterclaim, and it is common ground that the only issue is whether the standard rent of the property in question is £175 per annum or £275 per annum.

F By a lease of May 23, 1944, made between the plaintiffs (the landlords) and the defendant, the defendant became the tenant of flat No. 12 on the fifth floor of Weymouth Court for a term from June 7, 1944, at a rent of £300 per annum payable quarterly. By a memorandum endorsed on the lease and dated May 7, 1947, the parties agreed that the term should be extended for a further seven years, the rent to be increased to £325 per annum as from June 7, 1948. It is common ground that the sums fixed by that lease and memorandum are in excess of the standard rent and the landlords do not contend otherwise. They G say that the standard rent is £275 and the tenant says it is £175. It is agreed that in 1934 the premises in question were outside the scope of the Rent Restrictions Acts, but that they came within the Acts by virtue of the Act of 1939. Accordingly, by s. 12 (1) (a) of the Rent Restrictions Act, 1920 (as amended) the standard rent for the present purpose is the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1, 1939.

H The only question is at what rent was this dwelling-house let on Sept. 1, 1939 ? On May 31, 1934, the landlords had granted a lease to a Mr. Denham of these premises for seven years from June 24, 1934, for a term thereafter mentioned, at the rent of £175. That document was a lease complete in itself. It required no addition to constitute an effective letting. It contained in cl. 15, and this is much relied on by the tenant, a proviso for re-entry if the rent reserved or any part thereof should be in arrear or unpaid for 21 days after the same became due whether legally demanded or not. On the same day, May 31, 1934, there was also executed by the landlords and Mr. Denham another agreement, also under seal, and described on its back as a supplemental agreement relating to flat No. 12, Weymouth Court. It is necessary to refer to this agreement in some detail. After stating the parties—who are referred to as the lessors and the lessee—the agreement goes on :

“Whereas the lessors have this day granted unto the lessee a lease in respect of a flat known as 12, Weymouth Court, No. 1, Weymouth Street in the parish of Saint Marylebone in the county of London And whereas the lessors have made considerable decorative and other alterations to the premises And whereas it has been agreed between the parties that the lessee in consideration thereof shall contribute the sum of £10 per quarter, i.e., £40 per annum during the period of his lease towards the cost of the aforesaid alterations in addition to the sum of £60 per annum towards the cost of the management of the building Now it is hereby agreed as follows namely :—
 (1) The lessee shall pay to the lessors the sum of £25 on each of the four quarter days in each year during the period of his lease together with and as the rent reserved by the said lease becomes due. (2) This agreement shall run concurrently with the said lease and shall be deemed at an end as and when the said lease is terminated. (3) All amounts payable hereunder shall be recoverable by distress or otherwise as for rent in arrear. This agreement shall be binding on the person or persons in whom the lease is for the time being vested.”

The question is whether for the purposes of s. 12 of the Act of 1920 (as amended) the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1, 1939, is the aggregate of the sums provided for by those two agreements, or whether it is confined to the sum of £175 described as the rent in the lease. It is to be observed (and, in my view, this is the strongest point in favour of the tenant's contention) that the proviso for re-entry in the event of non-payment does not extend to this sum of £100 per annum payable under the supplemental agreement. That is a matter which it is, no doubt, right and proper to take into consideration in deciding whether the rent includes this extra £100 or not.

The case which has been principally relied on and referred to by both sides is the recent case in this court of Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark (1). The effect of that case was, in substance, to approve of the dictum of YOUNGER, L.J., in Wilkes v. Goodwin (2), where he had in dealing with this question used this language ([1923] 2 K.B. 105) :

“... the word ‘rent’ in this exception surely means not rent in the strict sense but the total payment under the instrument of letting. The exception assumes that ‘rent’ so called may include for example ‘board’ payment of which is not rent. I am here paraphrasing the statement of SHEARMAN, J., in Nye v. Davis (3), with which I agree. And the second consideration is that the exception contemplates separate ‘payments’ for any of the three things it specifies—namely, board, attendance, use of furniture, the plural ‘payments’ being in striking contrast with the singular ‘payment’ in s. 9, where only one of these three things, namely, use of furniture, is being dealt with. In my judgment so far from the exception contemplating primarily a tenancy in which rent strictly so called is with these other payments or one of them lumped together under one composite payment designated rent, the contrary is the case. Such a composite payment may indeed be within the exception; but separate payments are within its more immediate contemplation.”

The gist of the dictum is contained in the opening sentence, that the word “rent” surely means not rent in the strict sense but the total payment under the instrument of letting. EVERSLED, L.J., in his judgment in the Property Holding Co. case (1), although in substance accepting and adopting what

YOUNGER, L.J., had said (which had also been accepted by ASQUITH, L.J.), observed that the language might require some slight modification, because he said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 174):

A "It is possible that the paraphrase suggested by YOUNGER, L.J., 'the total payment under the instrument of letting' may be somewhat too widely stated, for, in a contract of tenancy, there may be included separate and collateral bargains, the payments to be made in respect of such bargains being in substance and reality distinct from the 'rent' as I have defined it. Thus, a contract for the tenancy of a dwelling-house might include a term that, on paying the sum of, say, 10s. a week, the tenant might, during the tenancy or for some different period, have the privilege of garaging his car in the landlord's garage, no part of which was included in the demise."

B With that modification, the language of YOUNGER, L.J., was accepted, I think, by all the members of the court. In Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark (1) the court was dealing only with one document. The rights of the parties, whatever they might be, were to be found in one agreement, and the language used by the Lords Justices must be read in those circumstances. The judgments all emphasise the necessity of arriving at the substance and reality of the matter as distinct from the formal and precise language used. SCOTT, L.J., said (ibid., 169):

C "It is the substance that matters, and I am satisfied that in this case the £30 a year was a part of the rent within the meaning of the Rent Restrictions Acts."

D EVERSLED, L.J., said (ibid., 174):

"Looking, therefore, at the substance of the matter, I conclude that the 'rent' within the meaning of the Act under the lease of 1934 was £140 per annum and not £110 per annum."

E In a later passage he emphasises the necessity of looking at the substance of the matter.

I think, therefore, that to ascertain whether the rent is £175 or £275—to ascertain the reality and substance of this transaction—we must look at both documents and see what results from the two read together. Counsel for the tenant argues that in the judgment of EVERSLED, L.J., in Property Holding Co. v. Clark (1), a test is laid down as to what constitutes rent for this purpose, and he says the facts of the present case do not come within either suggested definition. EVERSLED, L.J., said (ibid., 173):

G "In my judgment, the question in each case is to determine what in substance is the subject-matter of the tenancy granted to the tenant by the contract. Prima facie the rent is the monetary compensation payable by the tenant in consideration for the grant, however it be described or allocated. Alternatively, it may be described (as SCOTT, L.J., has described it) as the contractual monetary obligation the payment of which is the condition of the right to enjoy the property granted."

H Taking the first limb, "the rent is the monetary compensation payable by the tenant in consideration for the grant, however it be described or allocated," counsel for the tenant says the £100 is not monetary compensation payable for the grant because the grant had already been made by the lease and there was nothing more to grant. I would emphasise, as I have already stated, that EVERSLED, L.J., was dealing not with two documents, but with only one document, but I think the way in which he approached the question is applicable to the present case. I think that the £100 here was part of the monetary compensation payable by the tenant in consideration for that which had been granted to him by the landlord under these two documents taken together.

Under the second limb it is said that this £100 does not come under the definition which was suggested by SCOTT, L.J.—the contractual monetary obligation the payment of which is a condition of the right to enjoy the property granted. In Property Holding Co. v. Clark (1), there being a proviso for re-entry in the case of non-payment both of the rent and of the sum which was called the additional payment, it is true that the payment of both sums was a condition of the right to continue to enjoy the property, because on non-payment of either of them the landlord could forfeit. I think that is why the word “condition” appears, but I can find nothing in the judgments as a whole to indicate that the view of the court would have been otherwise if there had not been a proviso for re-entry. It is true that SCOTT, L.J., emphasises the existence of this condition and says that he regards it as conclusive, but, none the less, one frequently gets a lease where a sum is payable which nobody could describe as anything other than rent and there is no proviso for any re-entry on non-payment. In those circumstances it is not accurate to say that the payment of the rent is a condition of the continued enjoyment of the property, but all the same it is rent, and, in my view, this extra payment of £100, being payment expressly made in consideration for decorative and other alterations to the premises and as a contribution towards the management of the building, was a payment made in respect of the enjoyment of the demised premises. It was part of the contractual monetary obligation payable under these two agreements taken together and relating to the premises demised. It, therefore, appears to me that, unless there is some authority which forces me to a contrary view, the common sense view of this matter is that the rent payable on Sept. 1, 1939, in respect of these premises was £275 and not £175, and that that is the standard rent of these premises.

I should have mentioned that by Sept. 1, 1939, Mr. Denham, the original tenant, was no longer holding under these agreements. It is common ground that by that date he was holding as a yearly tenant on the terms of the tenancy existing, whatever that may have been, on May 18, 1937. I think the terms of that tenancy should be ascertained by reference to the two documents to which I have referred.

It only remains for me to say that I agree with the view expressed by SLADE, J., that no assistance is to be derived for present purposes from White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (4), because that case dealt with the second limb of the definition of standard rent in the case of houses which were not let on a certain date, the standard rent of which had to be ascertained on the basis of the rent at which the premises were first let after the named date. In White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (4) the question was at what rent the dwelling-house was first let within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. The court held that, a complete lease having been entered into on Mar. 24, 1941, fixing the rent, that was the document which constituted the first letting and the fact that a few hours or a few moments later a separate agreement was entered into varying the first could not alter the fact that the first agreement constituted the first letting. It seems to me that White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (4) is distinguishable from the present case and affords no assistance in the determination of the present question. I find myself in complete agreement with the conclusions arrived at by SLADE, J., and I think the appeal fails.

DENNING L.J. : I agree. It seems to me that the cases relating to the standard rent of flats fall into two groups. First, where a flat was let before Sept. 1, 1939, the courts have determined the standard rent by reference to the total amount payable at Sept. 1, 1939, for the physical hereditament and the services that go with it, such as central heating, hot water, lift and so forth, and including also board, attendance and use of furniture where those are not of sufficient value to take the case out of the Act. It is common knowledge that the landlords of flats often divide the total payment into two parts, one part to represent the value of the physical hereditament, the other part to represent the value of the services. The reason is because for rating purposes the value of the flat is fixed without taking the services into account: see Bell Property Trust, Ltd. v. Assessment Committee for the Borough of Hampstead (5). As GODDARD, L.J., pointed out in that case, this division of the total payment is sometimes made in one document, namely, the lease itself, as in Property Holding Co. v. Clark (1), and sometimes in two documents, as in this case, but howsoever the total payment is split up in the documents the court will ascertain the standard rent by taking the total amount payable for the physical hereditament and the services that go with it.

Secondly, when a flat is let after Sept. 1, 1939, the standard rent is the rent at which it was first let, ascertained again by reference to the total amount payable, but the courts have had regard to the conditions produced by the war. At the end of 1940 and the beginning of 1941 everyone who could do so left London. The rents obtainable for flats were much below the 1939 figure. In that situation some landlords, who did not wish to be saddled permanently with a low standard rent, adopted the device of letting the flat on a lease which on its face stated as the rent the figure which was intended to apply in the post-war period, but containing provisions by which the landlord agreed for the time being to accept a lower rent. This device was sometimes made in one document, namely, the lease itself, as in Bryanston Property Co., Ltd. v. Edwards (6), and Tedman v. Whicker (7), and sometimes in two documents as in White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (4), but, however it was done, the court determined the standard rent, not by reference to the sum in fact first paid, but by reference to the higher figure stated in the lease, provided it was a real figure. This device was, however, obviously open to abuse, because the landlord might insert in the lease a fictitious figure simply to establish the standard rent at a figure which was higher than was fair or reasonable, as in Conqueror Property Trust, Ltd. v. Barnes Corpn. (8). The device has, therefore, so far as I know, never been held to be good, except in the very special class of case where war-time conditions prevented the flat being let at a fair rent, and even in these cases, if the figure stated in the lease is not a reality, the court will reject it and have regard to the rent in fact paid.

These two groups of cases show that the courts endeavour as far as possible to ascertain the standard rent on a realistic and fair basis. The present case falls clearly within the first group. The amount payable in 1939 for the physical hereditament and for the services was £275. The present tenant has the same benefit and should pay the same sum. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

ROXBURGH J. : I agree. If the tenant, Mr. Denham, did not agree to make the recurrent quarterly payments of £25 each in consideration of the demise of the premises, I cannot think why he agreed to make them.

Appeal dismissed with costs.
Solicitors: Bernard Shaffer (for the tenant); Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the landlords).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

DUCK v. PEACOCK.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., and Humphreys, J.), January 14, 1949.]

Street Traffic—Motor vehicle—Driving while under the influence of drink—Disqualification for holding licence—"Special reasons" for not disqualifying—Driver fit when commencing journey—Stopping car on feeling effects of drink A —Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 15 (2).

After drinking a quantity of intoxicating liquor, a motorist entered and drove his car. Ten minutes later he felt dizzy, stopped his car, and fell asleep. He was convicted of being in charge of a motor-vehicle while under the influence of drink so that he was incapable of having proper control of it, but he was not disqualified for driving. On a Case stated B by the magistrate, HELD : the fact that as soon as the incapacity made itself felt the motorist stopped his car was not a "special reason" under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 15 (2) why he should not be disqualified.

Rennison v. Knowler ([1947] 1 All E.R. 302), sub nom. Knowler v. Rennison ([1947] K.B. 488; 176 L.T. 271), applied. C

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 15, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, pp. 622-623.]

Case referred to :

- (1) Rennison v. Knowler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 302; [1947] L.J.R. 555; 111 J.P. 171; sub nom. Knowler v. Rennison, [1947] K.B. 488; 176 D L.T. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by a metropolitan magistrate.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Marlborough Street, London, on July 16, 1948, the respondent was charged by the appellant, an officer of the Metropolitan Police Force, with having been, while in charge of a motor vehicle on a road, Lowndes Square, London, S.W.1, under the influence of drink to such an extent as to be incapable of having proper control of the vehicle, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 15 (1). The magistrate convicted E the respondent and ordered him to pay a fine of £10 and £10 10s. costs. The magistrate also ordered that the respondent should not be disqualified for holding or obtaining a driving licence on the ground that he had been fit to drive when he began his journey and stopped when he realised that, owing to F being in the open air or for some other reason, he was no longer fit to drive. He held that these facts constituted "special reasons" within the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 15 (2). The appellant now appealed against the decision not to disqualify, and the court allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Vernon Gattie for the appellant.

T. Springer for the respondent. G

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : The learned magistrate convicted the respondent, but he found special reasons for not ordering disqualification. The respondent left Berkeley Street at 10.20 p.m. and drove to Hyde Park Corner accompanied by a friend, who alighted there. The magistrate finds : H

"He drove on towards Sloane Street, and at about 10.30 p.m., on turning into Lowndes Square, he stopped his car because he felt dizzy. He then fell asleep and remembered nothing more until he was awakened by the police at 11.45 p.m."

He had, therefore, been asleep for an hour and a quarter. The magistrate says :

"I was of the opinion that the fact that the respondent was fit to drive when he began his journey and stopped when he realised that, owing to being in the open air or for some other reason, he was no longer fit to drive was a 'special reason' within s. 15 (2)."

The respondent obviously was not fit to drive when he left Berkeley Street. The position was simply that the effect of the drink had not fully disclosed itself. That he was under the influence of drink is clear because nothing happened in between the time he had his last drink and when he was found to be under the influence of drink.

We said in Rennison v. Knowler (1) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 304):

"We are in agreement with decisions given in Scotland that the question whether, on facts found by the court, it is open to the court to hold that special reasons exist is one of law."

Therefore, we have to look at the facts found by the learned magistrate here, and say whether as a matter of law he could hold that a special reason existed.

This is a question, not of driving, but of being in charge of a car. If what is suggested here were a special reason, it would mean that a man who had taken too much to drink so that he was unfit to manage the car or be in charge of it could escape the penalty of disqualification merely by stopping and going to sleep in the car. The court is not going to give any countenance to such a reason as that. The moment when the unfitness shows itself is neither here nor there. The man is under the influence of drink, and he is not any the less under the influence of drink because the symptoms do not show themselves at the moment he starts his journey. In my opinion, on the facts found by the magistrate there was no ground for saying that any special reason existed for not imposing the disqualification which Parliament has decreed shall otherwise be imposed. Therefore, this case must be remitted to the magistrate with an intimation that we think he was wrong in law, and the respondent must be disqualified for the statutory period.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Solicitor for the Metropolitan Police (for the appellant); Arthur Robson (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

F GALASHIELS GAS CO., LTD., v. O'DONNELL (OR MILLAR).

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), December 6, 7, 1948, January 20, 1949.]

Factory—Lift—"Properly maintained"—Unexplained failure of mechanism—Absolute obligation of occupier—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 22 (1), 152 (1).

By s. 22 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937: "Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained." By s. 152 (1): "'maintained' means maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

On Oct. 1, 1945, M., who was employed as a stoker in the appellants' gas works, was using an electrically operated lift to carry coke to a screening plant on the first floor. Having reached the first floor with a bogie full of coke, he switched off the power, opened the lift gates and ran the bogie out, leaving the gates open. He then emptied the bogie and ran it back into the lift shaft, but, owing to a failure of the brakes to operate, the lift cage had moved up in the shaft, with the result that both M. and the bogie fell to the bottom of the shaft and M. was killed. After the accident the mechanism was dismantled and examined by experts, but nothing was discovered to account for the failure and it was found that the appellants had taken every practical step to ensure that the lift mechanism worked properly and was safe to use. In an action by the respondent, M.'s widow, for damages in respect of his death the appellants contended that they were only bound to take such steps as would ensure that the lift was in efficient working order, and that, in the absence of proof of the nature of the defect which caused the accident, the respondent could not succeed.

HELD: the words "shall be . . . properly maintained" in s. 22 (1), read with the definition of "maintained" in s. 152 (1), were imperative and imposed on the occupiers of a factory an absolute and continuing obligation, and there was nothing in the context or the general intention of the Act which could lead to the inference that there should be any qualification of that obligation; to succeed the respondent need only prove that the mechanism of the lift had failed to work efficiently and the failure had caused the accident; and that burden she had discharged.

Dictum of MACNAGHTEN, J., in Cole v. Blackstone & Co., Ltd. ([1943] K.B. 616, 617), approved.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, ss. 22 (1), 152 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, pp. 217, 298.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 381; [1940] A.C. 242; 109 L.J.K.B. 134; 163 L.T. 9; 104 J.P. 51; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Potts (or Riddell) v. Reid, [1942] 2 All E.R. 161; [1943] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.P.C. 65; 167 L.T. 301; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Carroll v. Barclay (Andrew) & Sons, [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490.
- (4) Cole v. Blackstone & Co., Ltd., [1943] K.B. 615; 112 L.J.K.B. 510; 107 J.P. 209; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Wilson & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628; [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; Digest Supp.
- (6) Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Reilly v. Beardmore & Co., [1947] S.C. 275; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Lewis v. Denye, [1940] 3 All E.R. 299; [1940] A.C. 921; 109 L.J.K.B. 817; 163 L.T. 249; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. M'Mullan, [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; Digest Supp.

APPEAL from an interlocutor of the Second Division of the Court of Session (LORD MACKAY dissentiente), dated Feb. 6, 1948, affirming an interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, dated June 13, 1947, in an action by a widow for damages in respect of the death of her husband, George Danse Millar, who died as the result of injuries sustained while working as a stoker in the appellants' gas works.

The accident was due to the failure of a lift on which Millar was working, as the result of which he fell down the lift shaft. The House of Lords held that the appellants, the occupiers of the factory, were under an absolute duty to see that the lift was properly maintained and dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD REID.

Guest, K.C., and J. O. M. Hunter for the appellants.

James Walker, K.C., R. S. Johnston (both of the Scottish Bar) and Vincent for the respondent.

The House took time for consideration.

Jan 20. The following opinions were read.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in print the speeches which my noble and learned friends are about to deliver,

A and I find myself in complete agreement with them. The facts will be dealt with by my noble and learned friend, LORD REID. I desire only to emphasise that no new principle and no extension of any principle already recognised is involved in the conclusion that the appellants are liable to the respondent for breach of the duty imposed on them by s. 22 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. The only question of law in the case is the proper construction of the obligation imposed by s. 22 (1) as controlled by the definition of "maintained" in s. 152 (1), and on that I wish to add nothing.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON : My Lords, Section 22 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, is in the following terms :

"Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained."

B The statutory duty which, it is alleged, the appellants have failed to discharge is contained in the words, "Every hoist or lift shall be . . . properly maintained" in s. 22 (1) read in conjunction with the definition of "maintained" in s. 152 (1) :

C " 'Maintained' means maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

D There can be no doubt that this sub-section imposes a continuous obligation on the appellants. I shall shortly consider the precise nature of that obligation. Equally there can be no doubt, in view of the findings of fact of the Lord Ordinary (LORD BLADES), that the brake of the lift in question was not in efficient working order at the time when the accident happened, though it would appear to have worked efficiently during the periods before and after the accident.

E The contention of the respondent, which has so far succeeded, is that she has established a breach of statutory duty by the appellants simply by proving that the brake was not in efficient working order at that time. If this contention is sound, the appeal must fail, for contributory negligence by the deceased workman has been negatived and there can be no doubt that the failure of the brake to operate efficiently caused the death of the deceased. The appellants contend that no breach of statutory duty has been proved. They contend that their statutory duty is to take such active steps as will ensure that the lift is in efficient working order, and that the respondent cannot succeed unless she can point to some particular step which the appellants omitted to take and which would have prevented the accident. They say truly that the respondent cannot point to any such step and failed to prove any specific cause for the failure of the brake to operate. They rely strongly on the following passages in the judgment of the Lord Ordinary ([1948] S.L.T. 284) :

G "I am satisfied that the defenders took every practical step to ensure that the lift mechanism worked properly and was safe to use. I am equally satisfied that the failure of the brake was one which, apparently, nobody could have anticipated or, after the event, explain. (Ibid., 285) . . . that the defenders took all reasonable steps to provide a suitable lift and to maintain it properly is to my mind established beyond doubt."

My Lords, in my view, the Lord Ordinary supplied the correct answer to the whole of this argument when he said (ibid., 285) :

H "... in my opinion, there is imposed on the defenders an absolute and continuing obligation binding upon them which is not discharged if at any time their lift mechanism, in this case the brake, is not maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

The words in the sub-section "shall be properly maintained," are imperative, and I can find nothing in the context or in the general intention of the Act, read as a whole, which should lead your Lordships to infer any qualification on that absolute obligation. It is quite true that the sub-section, so read, imposes a heavy burden on employers, but the object of this group of sections is to protect the workman. I think the sub-section must have been so worded in order to relieve the injured workman from the burden of proving that there was some particular step which the employers could have taken and did not take. This would often be a difficult matter, more especially if the cause of the failure of the mechanism to operate could not be ascertained. The statute renders the task of the injured workman easier by saying: "You need only prove that the mechanism failed to work efficiently and that this failure caused the accident."

Counsel for the appellants contended that a decision against him "would go further than any decided case." I do not agree, but even if I did agree I should not be unduly perturbed. Your Lordships were not referred to any decision on this particular sub-section, but there are other statutory provisions for the protection of workmen which have been held to impose an absolute and continuing obligation on employers: see Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. (1), Riddell v. Reid (2) and Carroll v. Barclay (3). In the last-mentioned case this House had to decide a question as to the nature of the fencing which was required under s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, but no member of the House doubted that the obligation as to fencing was absolute and continuous. LORD NORMAND observed ([1948] 2 All E.R. 391):

"The sub-section imposes an absolute obligation in the sense that the obligation, whatever its meaning and effect, must be actually fulfilled and not merely that the occupier of the factory must do his best to fulfil it . . ."

Counsel for the appellants relied on the word "properly" in s. 22 (1) and contended that the presence of this word indicates that the obligation of the employers is limited. I cannot agree. If the word "maintain" alone imposes on the employers the absolute obligation, I cannot see that the addition of the word "properly" can lessen their obligation. In Cole v. Blackstone & Co., Ltd. (4), MACNAGHTEN, J., had to consider s. 25 (4) of the same Act which provides that "all ladders shall be soundly constructed and properly maintained." The facts were that when a workman, named Cole, was ascending a ladder a rung gave way, with the result that he fell to the ground and received injuries from which he died. The ladder was subsequently taken to pieces and examined. The strings were made of deal and the rungs of coppice oak, and both the strings and all the rungs, including that which had given way, were found to be in perfect condition. The rungs were screwed to the strings with three-inch steel screws, and it was found that those which had held the rung which had given way had broken in half at a point between the rung and the string, and that the fractures were due to corrosion. All the other screws were in perfect condition. A few weeks before the accident happened the ladder had been inspected by a "safety first" committee appointed by the defendants, to which the workmen elected their own representatives, and nothing had been found requiring attention. Cole, who used the ladder several times a day, had never made any complaint about it. Cole's widow was successful in an action alleging breach of the statutory obligation imposed by s. 25 (4) and MACNAGHTEN, J. ([1943] K.B. 617), said, in regard to the words "properly maintained":

"Mr. Marshall, for the defendants, submitted that the statutory duty to keep the ladder in an efficient state and in good repair is not an absolute duty, and that the words of the Act must be qualified to this extent that, if the employer took all reasonable steps to see that the ladder was in an efficient state and in good repair, he would have discharged his duty. In support of this contention he relied on the observations of LORD WRIGHT in Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co. v. English (5), while Mr. Dixon, on the other hand, relied on the observations made in Potts (or Riddell) v. Reid (2). I see no ground for qualifying the words of s. 25 (4) of the Factories Act, 1937. The duty to keep all ladders in an efficient state and in good repair appears to me to be as absolute as the duty imposed by the Act to fence all dangerous parts of machinery. It is true that the defendants took great care for the safety of their men, and that this particular failure was one which, apparently, nobody could have anticipated."

A Later, the learned judge added (ibid.):

"... the ladder was not in fact in an efficient state or in good repair on the morning of the accident. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to recover compensation..."

B I agree with the reasoning and with the conclusion of MACNAGHTEN, J., and, in my view, a similar construction should be placed on the same phrase "properly maintained" where it appears in s. 22 (1). I have carefully considered all the other sections of the Act which were mentioned in the course of the argument on the present appeal, but I can find nothing in them which throws doubt on this view. Counsel sought to rely on the observation of LORD ATKIN in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (6) ([1939] 3 All E.R. 729):

C "The statute does not in terms create a statutory cause of action. It does not, for instance, make the employer an insurer."

That observation does not assist the appellants when it is read in its context. LORD ATKIN went on to say:

D "The person who is injured, as in all cases where damage is the gist of the action, must show not only a breach of duty but that his hurt was due to the breach."

So, in the present case the respondent would have failed in her action if the Lord Ordinary had held that there was a breach of duty, but that such breach of duty was not the cause of the fatal accident. Finally, counsel sought to derive assistance from certain observations of the Lord President (LORD COOPER) in Reilly v. William Beardmore & Co. (7). In that case the First Division had to consider s. 23 (1) (a) of the Act, which provides:

E "No chain, rope or lifting tackle shall be used unless it is of good construction, sound material, adequate strength and free from patent defect."

F The last five words are not present in the section now under consideration, and, in my view, the Lord President's observations, properly construed, contain nothing which is inconsistent with the views which I have already expressed as to the absolute duty imposed by s. 22 (1). For these reasons, which are in substance the same as the reasons advanced by the majority of the Second Division of the Court of Session, I would dismiss the appeal.

G LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, two questions remain for determination in this appeal. The first is the nature of the duty imposed by sub-s. (1) of s. 22 of the Factories Act, 1937; the second is whether the respondent has proved a breach of the duty arising under that sub-section.

Section 22 (1) of the Act of 1937 provides:

H "Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained."

To this must be added the following definition from s. 152 (1):

"'Maintained' means maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

Leaving out of these provisions the words which are not immediately material the terms of the obligation are: "Every... lift shall be... properly maintained... in efficient working order..."

My Lords, if this means that every lift shall be kept continuously—or at least while it is available for use as a lift—in efficient working order the nature of the obligation is clear. It then falls into a category long recognised and firmly established by authority; it is a strict or absolute duty and neither intention nor lack of care need be shown in order to prove a breach of it. This was not, indeed, disputed, but counsel for the appellants submitted that on the true construction of the sub-section such was not its meaning. He contended that, in this context, “maintained” did not connote the continuance of a state and he relied strongly on the adverb “properly” as introducing something less than an absolute standard. If, he said, the appellants had done all that was reasonable and proper to “maintain” the lift and its mechanism they had not fallen short of what the statute requires. My Lords, the word “maintain,” when used in relation to the state or condition of things, is not always used in the same sense. It may be used to indicate the continuance of a particular state or condition, as when one says of someone that “he maintains his buildings just as they were,” but on occasion it takes colour from the work of maintenance and is used in reference to the acts done or requisite to be done in the course of maintenance, as when one says of another that “he maintains his buildings methodically.” This latter use gives the word “maintained” in relation to machinery rather the meaning of “serviced” or “looked after” or “attended to”—I doubt if there is an exact synonym—and it was in this sense, according to the appellants’ argument, that the word ought to be read in s. 22 (1). If that argument prevails the appeal should succeed as the Lord Ordinary has found that the appellants took “every practical step to ensure that the lift mechanism worked properly and was safe to use, [and, again that] the failure of the brake was one which, apparently, nobody could have anticipated or, after the event, explain.”

My Lords, had the legislature thought fit not to define “maintained” the submission of counsel for the appellants on this aspect of the case would have encountered less difficulty, but when the terms of the definition are regarded the meaning for which he has contended is, in my opinion, at once displaced. To my mind, they indicate conclusively that in s. 22 (1) “maintained” is employed to denote the continuance of a state of working efficiency. In the ordinary use of language one cannot be said to maintain a piece of machinery in efficient working order over a given period if, on occasion within that period, the machinery, whatever the reason, is not in efficient working order. In short, the definition describes a result to be achieved rather than the means of achieving it. I do not think the use of the word “properly” weakens or detracts from the compelling effect of this definition. Why exactly “properly” was inserted is, perhaps, a matter of speculation as the Act does not appear to furnish any very obvious explanation. However this may be, the word is certainly not incompatible with the duty in question being absolute in character. There may be more than one way of discharging such a duty, and I do not see that the quality of the duty need be affected by an additional obligation to discharge it in a proper manner.

I turn now to the second question. Did the respondent prove the breach alleged? The point made against her was that she had failed to do so because the cause of the failure in the lift mechanism had not been discovered and remains a mystery. In my opinion, this point has no substance. There was abundant proof that the mechanism had failed and that that failure resulted in the death of the respondent’s husband. Once the absolute nature of the duty imposed by the statute is established that is proof enough. The obligation was to have the lift “in efficient working order” at the time of the accident, as well as at other times, and the breach of that obligation has been clearly shown. For these reasons I am of opinion that the view taken by the courts in Scotland was right. I would, therefore, affirm the interlocutors and dismiss the appeal.

LORD REID : My Lords, the pursuer and respondent is the widow of George Danse Millar who died as a result of injuries sustained while working as a stoker in the appellants' Gas Works. Coke is discharged from retorts on the ground floor of the gas works into bogies each of which holds about 15 cwt. When each bogie is filled it is run into a lift, taken up to the first floor, run out of the lift along a gantry to a point where it is emptied into a screening plant, then run back into the lift and brought down to be re-filled. At about 9 p.m. on Oct. 1, 1945, the deceased George Millar was engaged in this work. He took a full bogie up in the lift and some time later he was found seriously injured lying with an empty bogie at the bottom of the lift shaft, and the lift was found to be at the top of the lift shaft. He died on the following day as a result of these injuries. The lift was electrically operated. There are gates on the lift and also gates at each floor level. The electric circuit of the power which operates the lift runs through these gates so that if any one of the gates is open the circuit is broken and the power cannot be applied. The lift is attached to wire ropes which pass over a hoist drum at the top of the shaft to a counter balance weight which moves up as the lift moves down, and down as the lift moves up. Power is applied to rotate the hoist drum and so move the lift up or down according to the direction of rotation of the drum. When power is not being applied the drum is held by a brake. The brake shoes are held against the drum by strong springs and the brake can only be taken off by withdrawing the shoes against the pressure of the springs. The force necessary to withdraw the brake shoes is provided by a solenoid which is part of the electric power circuit. When this circuit is closed the flow of the power current magnetises the solenoid with the result that a plunger attached to the brake shoes is moved by magnetic force so as to withdraw the brake shoes from the hoist drum against the pressure of the springs. The hoist drum is then free to rotate. Immediately the power current ceases to flow the solenoid is de-magnetised and the pressure of the springs forces the brake shoes back into position against the hoist drum so that it cannot rotate and therefore the lift cannot move. Accordingly, if this mechanism is in efficient working order it is impossible for the lift to move while any one of the gates is open. What must have happened immediately before the accident to the deceased George Millar is that Millar switched off the power with the lever in the lift cage when he reached the first floor and opened the gates. He then ran the bogie out to the point of discharge, leaving the gates open. He then emptied the bogie, and ran it back to the lift shaft. By this time the lift cage had moved upwards in the shaft. Millar did not see that this had happened and ran the bogie into the lift shaft. The lift not being in place, he and the bogie fell to the bottom of the shaft. It is not now maintained that Millar was guilty of contributory negligence in doing this. Immediately after Millar was discovered the lift was examined. It was found that the liftway gates on the first floor were open and that the lift was at the top of the shaft. The hoist drum and brake shoes were examined but not touched. It was seen that the brake shoes were not gripping the hoist drum. They had not returned to their proper position when Millar switched off the power current in stopping the lift at the first floor. The counterbalance weight is heavier than the empty lift cage and in the absence of a brake this difference of weight moved the lift up and away from the first floor while Millar was unloading the bogie. The next day the appellants asked a firm of lift engineers to carry out a thorough examination. The fitters who were sent to do this found that although the current was off the solenoid plunger had remained in the "energised" position, and, therefore, the brake shoes were clear of the hoist drum. As soon as one of the fitters touched the plunger it moved to the off position and the brake shoes gripped the drum. Every effort was made to find out what had caused the plunger to stick when the solenoid was de-magnetised. The whole mechanism was dismantled and carefully examined, but nothing was found to account for the failure. The mechanism was then re-assembled and it worked perfectly. It has continued to work perfectly since the accident and no repairs or renewals have been necessary. For at least nine years before the accident the brake had never been known to fail on any occasion. No satisfactory explanation of this isolated failure has since been found. I agree with the Lord Ordinary in saying :

"I am satisfied that the defenders took every practical step to ensure that the lift mechanism worked properly and was safe to use. I am equally satisfied that the failure of the brake was one which, apparently, nobody could have anticipated or, after the event, explain."

The question at issue in this case is the nature and extent of the duty imposed on employers by s. 22 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. That sub-section requires that :

"Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be properly maintained."

The word "maintained" is defined in s. 152 as meaning "maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair." It has been held by the Lord Ordinary and by the learned judges of the Second Division, LORD MACKAY dissenting, that this section imposed on the appellants an absolute duty to have the lift in efficient working order, that the accident was caused by its not being in efficient working order, and that, therefore, the respondent is entitled to damages. The appellants' case is that s. 22 (1) of the Act does not impose an absolute duty to keep lifts in efficient working order and that a pursuer cannot succeed without averring and proving the nature of the defect which prevented the lift from being in efficient working order. It was argued that the requirement is, not that the lift shall be in efficient working order, but that the employer shall take all necessary steps to ensure that it is so, and, therefore, that a pursuer must show what it was that the employer could have done to prevent the accident but did not do. It is clear, as the appellants' counsel properly admitted, that the employer's duty under the section goes beyond a duty to take care. It was admitted that the employer is liable in damages where the defect could not have been discovered before the accident by any examination which any reasonable man would have undertaken and even where the defect was a latent defect which could not have been discovered by examination before the accident of the defective part of the mechanism. In such cases it would have been physically possible to prevent the accident. In the present case, as no one has discovered the cause of the defect, the respondent cannot show whether or how the accident could have been prevented, and, therefore, it is said, cannot establish any breach of duty by the appellants.

My Lords, I can understand a duty to exercise a high degree of care and I can understand an absolute duty under which the mere fact that a machine is not in efficient working order entails liability, if that is the cause of injury to a workman, but I find it hard to understand the nature of a duty which falls short of an absolute duty, but yet cannot be discharged even by the highest degree of care, and equally hard to understand what practical object could be achieved by enacting a duty of this character. The result would be that the pursuer would have to undertake an investigation of the precise nature of the defect which would often be difficult and expensive. Where this investigation was successful it would be no defence for the employer to show that he could not by any exercise of care have prevented the accident, but where this investigation failed, as it did in this case, the employer would be under no liability. I think that clear words would be necessary before it could be held that such was the intention of the legislature. Much stress was laid by the appellants' counsel on the word "properly" in s. 22 (1). It was argued that the introduction of this word must be held to have some effect—that, if the section without this word would have imposed an absolute duty, the insertion of the word could not increase the obligation on the employer, so it must have been intended to reduce that obligation. "Properly" must refer to the conduct of the employer so that the section requires, not that the mechanism shall always be in efficient working order, but that the employer shall take such active steps as are necessary to ensure that it is in efficient working order. It follows that, if a pursuer cannot specify any step which could have been taken by the employer to avoid the accident, he cannot show that the employer was in breach of the statutory duty, and, as the present respondent has not proved the cause of the accident, she cannot point to any particular step which could have been taken to avoid it. My Lords, I cannot attribute any such effect to the use of this word. I think that there may be a much simpler explanation of its use. If the definition of "maintained" in s. 152 had been written into s. 22 (1) there would have been no need to insert the word "properly."

The relevant part of the sub-section would then have read :

"Every hoist or lift shall . . . be maintained in an efficient state, in efficient working order, and in good repair."

But if the definition were not written in and the word "properly" omitted, the result—

"Every hoist or lift shall be of good mechanical construction, sound material and adequate strength, and be maintained"

—would have been so bald as to be misleading. I doubt whether the word "properly" was inserted for any purpose beyond rounding off the sentence.

In any event, it does not appear to me to alter the sense of the sentence. If the duty is proper maintenance, and maintenance is defined as maintenance in efficient working order, then, once it is established that the duty goes beyond a duty to exercise care, the fact that on a particular occasion the mechanism was not in efficient working order shows that there had not been proper maintenance. Reference was made to a number of sections of the Act where the word "maintained" occurs, and, particularly, to ss. 24 and 25 where the phrase "properly maintained" is used, but I do not think that a comparison of these sections with s. 22 assists materially the decision of the present case.

A number of previous decisions was canvassed in argument. In Cole v. Blackstone & Co. (4) the accident was caused by the rung of a ladder giving way. The rungs were held in place by steel screws. It was found after the accident that all but one of the screws were in good order, but one screw was badly corroded. That screw broke when the injured workman stepped on the rung which it held. The case was laid on a breach of s. 25 (4) of the Factories Act, 1937, which provides that "all ladders shall be soundly constructed and properly maintained." MACNAGHTEN, J., having held that the ladder was soundly constructed said ([1943] K.B. 616) :

"On the question whether the ladder was in an 'efficient state' and in 'good repair' on the morning of the accident, the fact that the rung gave way establishes, to my mind, beyond question, that the ladder was not in an efficient state and was not in good repair at that time. Mr. Marshall, for the defendants, submitted that the statutory duty to keep the ladder in an efficient state and in good repair is not an absolute duty, and that the words of the Act must be qualified to this extent that, if the employer took all reasonable steps to see that the ladder was in an efficient state and in good repair, he would have discharged his duty. In support of this contention he relied on the observations of LORD WRIGHT in Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co. v. English (5), while Mr. Dixon, on the other hand, relied on the observations made in Riddell v. Reid (2). I see no ground for qualifying the words of s. 25 (4) of the Factories Act, 1937. The duty to keep all ladders in an efficient state and in good repair appears to me to be as absolute as the duty imposed by the Act to fence all dangerous parts of machinery."

The appellants' counsel sought to displace this interpretation by referring to a number of dicta. He was unable to cite any decision which was inconsistent with it. In Lewis v. Denye (8), VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., quoting from a speech of LORD ATKIN in Caswell's case (6), said ([1940] 3 All E.R. 304):

“The statute does not in terms create a statutory cause of action. It does not, for instance, make the employer an insurer. The person who is injured, as in all cases where damage is the gist of the action, must show not only a breach of duty but that his hurt was due to the breach.”

That does not appear to me to help the appellants. It is entirely consistent with the existence of an absolute duty. However absolute the duty may be, a pursuer cannot succeed unless he proves that his injury was caused by a breach of that duty. In Lewis v. Denye (8) there had been a breach of absolute duty, but the plaintiff's action failed because the cause of his injury was held to be, not that breach of duty, but his own negligence in failing to use a safety device with which he had been furnished. It was, accordingly, appropriate to re-state that such a duty does not make the employer an insurer. If in the present case the appellants had proved that George Millar's death was due to his own negligence and not to their breach of duty they would have succeeded. In Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. (1) LORD ATKIN ([1939] 4 All E.R. 390) said:

“It is precisely in the absolute obligation imposed by statute to perform or forbear from performing a specified activity that a breach of statutory duty differs from the obligation imposed by common law, which is to take reasonable care to avoid injuring another.”

It was argued that LORD ATKIN's reference to a “specified activity” means that the pursuer must specify the act, the doing or neglect of which led to the plant not being safe. I do not so read the words. In that case the Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931, made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, provided that “all staging shall be securely constructed of sound and substantial material and shall be maintained in such condition as to ensure the safety of all persons employed.” A workman fell and received injuries as a result of there being a defect in staging, but no point was made in the case about the precise nature of the defect. I think that LORD ATKIN was referring to an activity specified in the statute or regulation: he cannot have meant that there was an absolute obligation to perform or forbear from performing some activity not so specified. Reference was also made to a passage in the speech of LORD WARRINGTON OF CLYFFE in Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. M'Mullan (9) ([1934] A.C. 13), quoted by LORD THANKERTON in Riddell v. Reid (2) ([1942] 2 All E.R. 165), beginning with the words: “If the obligation is to do or abstain from doing a particular thing”, and it was argued that the particular thing which it was the obligation of the respondents to do in the present case to avoid the accident had not been discovered. I do not agree. The obligation of the respondents was that which is expressed in the Act—to maintain the hoist in efficient working order. That is the particular thing which they were under a duty to do. How they did it or how they failed to do it was their concern. It was not the concern of the workman and is not the concern of the respondent. None of the other authorities cited appears to me to have any direct bearing on the present case or to aid in its decision. I agree with the opinions of the majority of the judges of the Second Division and I would dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: J. K. Edmondson & Co., agents for J. Gibson Kerr, Edinburgh (for the appellants); Henry Polak & Co., agents for Frederick Robinson, Edinburgh (for the respondent).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK LTD. v. MEYRICK
REDMAYNE FARMS, LTD.
SAME v. M. R. DRIERS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, L.J., and Birkett, J.), January 17, 18, 1949.]

Courts Emergency Powers—Enforcement of remedy—Appointment of receiver—
A “Circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war”—Contract made after cessation of active hostilities—Onus of proof—Business impeded by fuel difficulties and shortage of supplies—Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943 (c. 19), s. 1 (2) (a) (iii), (4) ; s. 2 (3).

On Nov. 6, 1944, a farm company was incorporated with a view to growing large quantities of lucerne which was to be dried by a drying company incorporated on July 25, 1945. The companies incurred heavy debts by way of overdraft with a bank, to secure which, on Oct. 28, 1946, they executed mortgages on the whole of their assets. The state of the companies appeared unsatisfactory, and as the overdraft continued to grow, the bank sought leave under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, s. 1 (2) (a) (iii), to appoint a receiver under the mortgage.

The difficulties experienced by the companies fell into four groups :
fuel permits, fuel cuts, electric load shedding, and shortage of supplies.
As regards fuel permits the evidence was that in 1944, before the contract for the drying plant was placed, a licence to use anthracite French nuts for firing boilers was obtained, but in 1946, when, after delays due to difficulty in obtaining delivery of the plant, the plant was started up, none was available, and the boilers had to be run on coke which was not satisfactory. Shortly afterwards the drying company was advised to convert its apparatus to burn oil, and at first was able to obtain a permit for diesel oil but later had to use heavy oil the use of which was in an experimental state for the purpose in question. In consequence, delays and heavy expenses were incurred. Fuel cuts caused delay in producing the apparatus to convert the furnaces to each new type of fuel. Electric load shedding, which commenced early in 1947, on occasion caused complete break-down of the apparatus, and destruction of large quantities of lucerne. The shortage of supplies caused prolonged delay in securing parts of the apparatus, and various expedients had to be resorted to.
It was argued by the companies that their inability immediately to discharge their indebtedness was occasioned by circumstances “directly or indirectly attributable to any way in which His Majesty may be engaged,” within s. 1 (4) of the Act.

HELD : (i) although the drawing of each cheque created a fresh relationship of debtor and creditor, for the purposes of s. 2 (3) of the Act, the contract between the parties was the obligation created by the mortgages of Oct. 28, 1946.

(ii) it was not necessary that the contract should be one made while hostilities were actively proceeding, but it was sufficient to entitle the court, under s. 1 (4), to refuse leave to exercise a remedy under if the circumstances relied on could be traced to be directly or indirectly attributable to the active period of hostilities of any war.

(iii) the onus of proving that the circumstances relied on were attributable to the war was on the companies, and, as there was nothing in the evidence to raise the necessary inference that their difficulties were so attributable, the onus had not been discharged.

Observations on the exercise by the court of the discretion, given it by s. 1 (4) of the Act, to refuse leave for the exercise of a right or remedy.

[FOR THE COURTS (EMERGENCY POWERS) ACT, 1943, ss. 1 and 2, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, pp. 465-471.]

APPEAL by two companies against orders of WYNN-PARRY, J., dated Dec. 3, 1948, granting leave under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, s. 1 (2) (a) (iii), to a mortgagee bank to exercise any remedy which was available to it by way of the appointment of a receiver under two mortgages and general charges, dated Oct. 28, 1946, and made between the companies and the bank. WYNN-PARRY, J., refused to accept the companies' argument that their inability to discharge their liabilities was due to "circumstances attributable to any war" within s. 1 (4) of the Act, and he was now upheld by the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

A

Pascoe Hayward, K.C., and R. W. Goff for the companies.

P. J. Sykes for the bank.

TUCKER, L.J. : These are two appeals from orders made by WYNN-PARRY, J., under summonses under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, taken out by the National Provincial Bank. To one, the appellants, Meyrick Redmayne Farms, Ltd., were respondents (they have been referred to throughout as the "farm company"), and to the other, the appellants, M. R. Driers, Ltd. (and they have been referred to throughout as the "drying company"), were respondents. In each summons the bank asks for leave to exercise any power they have to appoint a receiver under two mortgages and general charges, each dated Oct. 28, 1946, and made between the bank and each of these companies respectively. The necessity for asking for leave to exercise these powers arises under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, s. 1, which provides :

B

C

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a person shall not be entitled, except with the leave of the appropriate court, to proceed to execution on, or otherwise to the enforcement of, any judgment or order of any court (whether given or made before or after the commencement of this Act) for the payment or recovery of a sum of money. (2) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a person shall not be entitled, except with the leave of the appropriate court—(a) to proceed to exercise any remedy which is available to him by way of— . . . (iii) the appointment of a receiver of any property . . . (v) the realisation of any security . . . (4) If, on any application for such leave as is required under this section for the exercise of any of the rights and remedies mentioned in sub-ss. (1), (2) and (3) of this section, the appropriate court is of opinion that the person liable to satisfy the judgment or order, or to pay the rent or other debt, or to perform the obligation, in question is unable immediately to do so by reason of circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war in which His Majesty may be engaged, the court may, subject to the provisions of this Act, refuse leave for the exercise of that right or remedy, or give leave therefor subject to such restrictions and conditions as the court thinks proper."

D

E

F

G

Section 2 provides :

"(3) Where an application is made by any person under the foregoing section for leave to exercise or take any of the remedies or proceedings mentioned in sub-s. (2) of that section (other than those mentioned in the proviso to that sub-section) which are available to him in consequence of any default in the payment of a debt or the performance of an obligation, being a debt or obligation arising by virtue of a contract made after the commencement of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1939, the appropriate court shall not, subject to the provisions of this Act relating to mortgaged dwelling-houses, exercise its powers under sub-s. (4) of that section unless it is satisfied that the circumstances referred to in that sub-section arose after the contract was made."

H

Two questions have been raised with regard to the proper construction of those two sections, and I propose to deal with them at the outset. Before doing so it is necessary just to state in outline how the questions arise. The mortgages and general charges in question, dated Oct. 28, 1946, are under seal, and provide in cl. 1 :

- A "The mortgagor covenants with the bank that the mortgagor will on demand pay to the bank all such sums of money as now are or as shall from time to time be owing by the mortgagor or by the mortgagor jointly with any other or others in partnership or otherwise and whether as principal or surety to the bank anywhere upon banking account or upon any discount or other account or for any other matter or thing whatsoever including interest discount commission and all other banking charges."
- B The total sum of money which is now due from these two companies under those documents is some £166,700, the indebtedness of the drying company being £65,970 and of the farm company £100,744. The debts were demanded of these companies on Sept. 24, 1948, and the summonses which were issued in the present proceedings are entitled: "In the matter of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, and in the matter of a Mortgage and General Charge dated the 28th day of October, 1946." In my view, the contract in question for the purposes of s. 2 (3) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1943, is the contract which arises out of these mortgages and general charges by reason of the covenant in cl. 1 by the mortgagor to pay the bank on demand "all such sums of money as now are or as shall from time to time be owing."

- D It is said by counsel for the bank that the true view of the matter is that, as these companies had considerable overdrafts at the bank, each drawing created a fresh relationship of debtor and creditor, and as the accounts were never in credit there was a continuous series of contracts, some of which may have been created after the circumstances attributable to the war which are relied on, and some of which may have preceded them. He says that it is the duty of the companies to dissect these accounts and show to the court the circumstances which have affected each particular contract, and then show that those circumstances are attributable to the war. On the other hand, counsel for the companies contends that, although, no doubt, it is perfectly true that in a relationship between banker and customer each drawing of a cheque creates a relationship of debtor and creditor, none the less in this particular case the bank have elected to proceed under these documents, they have called in the sums of money pursuant to their rights under cl. 1 of the mortgages, and they are bringing these proceedings seeking to obtain leave to enforce the remedies given to them by the documents. In my view, the submission of counsel for the companies is the correct one, and I think for the purposes of this sub-section we have to regard the contract between the parties as the obligation created by cl. 1 of these mortgages and general charges of Oct. 28, 1946. That is a view which I think WYNN-PARRY, J., was disposed to take, but he did not find it necessary to express a final view on the matter.

- G That being so, the companies rely on a series of matters which arose after October, 1946, and which, they say, are attributable directly or indirectly to the war. That brings me to the second point of construction, which arises under s. 1 (4). It relates to the words: "by reason of circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to any war in which His Majesty may be engaged." Reading those words in reference to the concluding words of s. 2 (3), "unless it is satisfied that the circumstances referred to in that sub-section arose after the contract was made," counsel for the bank submits that the contract there referred to must have been made during a period when His Majesty was actively engaged in war. He concedes that on Oct. 28, 1946, a state of war was still in existence, but he says it was not actively proceeding, and, therefore, it would not be correct to say that His Majesty was then engaged in a war.

I am unable to accept that construction of these sections. The circumstances relied on must, of course, occur after the contract, but, in my view, it is sufficient if those circumstances are proved, and can be traced, to be directly or indirectly attributable to any war, that is to say, any war which may have been previously existing but which does not necessarily exist at the time of the contract. However, I agree, and I think counsel for the companies agrees, that, in applying these sections, it is necessary to show that the circumstances relied on are directly or indirectly attributable to the active period of hostilities. Counsel for the companies contends that he can fulfil those requirements in the present case. He says that he has a contract made in October, 1946, that circumstances exist which have affected the ability of his clients to pay, and that he must then go on to show that those circumstances are directly attributable to the conditions prevailing at the time of the actual hostilities, which he can do. Any other construction would be impossible. I, therefore, proceed to deal with the facts of the case on the footing that these contentions are correct.

The circumstances in which the companies contend that the bank should not be given leave to proceed are as follows. These two companies were incorporated in 1944 and 1945 respectively. They are closely inter-connected. The shareholders are identical and the directors of each are the same, with the exception that the wife of one of the directors is a director of one company, and not of the other. At the time when these mortgages and general charges were executed the companies had previously had their account with the Westminster Bank, and the position was that the drying company were overdrawn some £4,000 and the farm company some £65,000, making a total of £69,000 as against the present indebtedness of considerably over £166,000. The National Provincial Bank took over those accounts and these deeds were executed. The scheme was that the farm company should cultivate lucerne for the purpose principally of cattle feeding, together with other crops, and that the drying company should dry the lucerne before it was put on the market to render it suitable for use as a feeding stuff. Shortly, the case for the companies was that in October, 1946, when they entered into these deeds, they expected that the necessary plant which would be required for drying purposes would be ready in May, 1947, but they say that, in fact, it was not ready until September, 1948, and even then it had not the full capacity which was originally anticipated. They say that the reason why the plant was not ready by May, 1946, was owing to circumstances which were attributable directly or indirectly to the war. In the affidavit of Mr. Allen-Meyrick, the managing director, he says that the circumstances fall to be dealt with under four heads: fuel permits, fuel cuts, electric load shedding and shortage of supplies. With regard to fuel permits, he says:

"In 1944 before the contract for the plant was placed the drying company obtained licence from the Ministry of Fuel and Power to use anthracite French nuts for firing the furnaces. In 1946, when the plant was started up, none was available, and the furnaces had to be run on coke which was not satisfactory. Major Ramsay Green, therefore, advised shortly after the date of the mortgage that while reconstructing the plant it should be converted to burn oil and a licence to use diesel oil was applied for in or about December, 1946, or January, 1947. The Ministry, however, would only give a temporary permit allowing diesel oil to be used for 1947 to give time for adaptation of the plant for burning heavy oil and subject thereto required the drying company to use heavy oil. Such oil can only be used if pre-heated. It, therefore, became necessary to obtain additional plant for this purpose. Moreover, while diesel oil has long since been used for heating this type of plant, the use of heavy oil for such a purpose had not, before 1948, been put to commercial use on any appreciable scale and was in an experimental stage. The result was that the drying company was put to considerable expense in obtaining the additional plant required and production in 1948 was much hampered while experiments were made in the use of heavy oil. In particular, it was found that heavy oil requires a much larger intake of secondary air than diesel oil and that the secondary air inlets were not large enough and production was seriously hampered for about six weeks while they were altered."

The court is asked to infer that those circumstances were due directly or indirectly to the war. There is no direct evidence given to that effect, and, in my view, the dominating circumstance appears to have been the inability to procure these anthracite French nuts for firing furnaces. It is not clear from the affidavit the precise moment of time when it became apparent that that source of fuel would not be available, but I think it is clear that that was appreciated before these mortgages were executed. Furthermore, this matter has been referred to more than once as due to a shortage of diesel oil. As I think counsel for the bank rightly points out, there is really nothing in these paragraphs to show that there was, in fact, a shortage of diesel oil or that that shortage, if it existed, was attributable to the war, directly or indirectly. This is one of the instances in which the whole thing depends on inference. WYNN-PARRY, J., came to the conclusion that in all these matters the companies had failed to discharge the burden that lay on them of proving that the circumstances on which they relied can really and truly be said to be attributable directly or indirectly to the war. With regard to this question of fuel permits I find myself in agreement with the view arrived at by the learned judge.

The next matter is with regard to fuel cuts. In his affidavit Mr. Allen-Meyrick says :

"The tremendous fuel cuts which occurred in January, 1947, completely stopped the work of the contractor and sub-contractors who were engaged on the work of converting the plant to an oil burning unit with the result that instead of the plant being ready on Mar. 20, 1947, it was not possible to use it even for a trial run until May 25, 1947, and only one furnace could be used at all throughout 1947 as the fuel cuts had so delayed production that it was impossible in that year to obtain all the requisite apparatus to convert the other."

Similarly, with regard to these fuel cuts, I think that this affidavit does not contain material to enable the court to conclude by necessary inference that these cuts were due to the war. The shortage may have been due to numerous circumstances, and I think it is incumbent in a case of this kind for the party who is relying on such a matter as this to show its direct connection with matters which have arisen during the war and not simply to ask the court to infer that every difficulty in the post-war life of this country is necessarily due to some circumstance which arose during the war.

The next matter is the electric load shedding. Counsel for the companies says, whatever the position may be with regard to the other circumstances, that he has a strong case with regard to electric load shedding. The affidavit on that point says :

"Load shedding of electric current is carried out on the instructions of the generation division of the British Electricity Authority and I have made inquiries and am informed by Mr. Whitely of the local electric board (formerly the East Anglian Electric Supply Co.) and verily believe that it commenced early in 1947 but was not much resorted to in that year and that there has been very considerable load shedding since April, 1948."

Then there is exhibited a circular from the Bury St. Edmunds and District Electricity Committee dated Nov. 22, 1947, showing that "arbitrary cutting off of supply was then apprehended and that the position was brought about by the shortage of electricity generating plant throughout the country." The deponent goes on to explain that the heat of the furnaces is controlled by fans operated by electrically driven motors which also work throwers passing the product through the drying chambers. He explains that when there is load shedding the machinery is adversely affected and it was only after they had experienced the difficulties resulting from load shedding that they were able to take the necessary steps to minimise the effects by fitting to the mains volt meters which registered the load shedding and enabled immediate adjustments to be made, but that they had to wait six weeks after placing their order before delivery could be obtained. There is no explanation given here of the reasons for the shortage of electricity generating plant throughout the country. It is said that we must infer that that was due to the war to the exclusion of other possible causes. Counsel for the bank says that for all we know it may have been due to local conditions or to the need to export the necessary plant, and he further points out—and I think this is, perhaps, his best point—that the necessity for load shedding may have been due to the increased demand for electricity in this country. Counsel says that the mere fact that that may be a possibility is sufficient for his purpose and this court cannot infer that but for the war those shortages would have been made good to such an extent that there would have been no load shedding in this part of England. It seems to me that the argument of counsel for the bank on that point is unanswerable, and I certainly accede to it.

Finally, we come to the question of the shortage of supplies. Here, again, the matter is put in very general and very vague terms. Mr. Allen-Meyrick says :

"Owing to shortage of supplies much of the work of reconstruction contemplated when the mortgage was entered into had to be carried out with materials not up to specification which has caused repeated troubles involving loss of production and expensive replacements of which the following are notable examples. In or about May, 1948, to replace unsatisfactory ones, new worm conveyors were installed for carrying the produce from the drying chambers. These were made of lighter steel than specified by the engineers with the result that they quickly bent. Temporary repairs were effected, but the proper steel to enable a permanent replacement to be made was not obtainable for several weeks . . . The self feeder requires a variable speed gear box. One known to be too light had to be fitted in May, 1947, with the result that it broke down completely in or about May, 1948. It was then replaced with a fixed speed gear box which during the months of May, June, or July, 1948, repeatedly became overheated and caused the self feeder to break down again. A proper variable speed gear box could not be purchased until June, 1948, when a second-hand one was secured and the necessary adjustments and installation could not be effected before July. To make the plant properly effective it required a brattice elevator, which is a highly specialised plant for teasing out the material to secure an even flow, largely used in the textile industry. The experts in the manufacture of this apparatus are Petrie and MacNaught of Rochdale and early in 1947 they were asked to quote for the construction of a brattice elevator, but they were unable to undertake it at all owing largely to the post-war export drive. A less experienced firm had, therefore, to be instructed. They made a brattice elevator, but it was not sufficiently robust. In the winter of 1947, Messrs. Petrie and MacNaught being still not available, a new and stronger brattice elevator was constructed by the same firm as before. This, however, required chains known as Renolds chains, but these were quite unobtainable and the contractors had to make the tools to make some substitute chains themselves. Much trouble was also experienced with a new cooling conveyor belt installed early in 1948, but it was impossible to obtain the right type of belting owing to the demands of the Ministry of Fuel and Power for the coal mines. These troubles have now been largely overcome and the plant is working perfectly except that we still have to hand feed it and this prevents us from using both units at the same time."

- A Those paragraphs show that there were a series of troubles—what may possibly be described as teething troubles with a machine of this kind—which required adjustments and replacements, but, in my view, those paragraphs greatly lack the kind of evidence which is necessary to establish that the troubles were attributable directly or indirectly to the war. Much more
- B detailed evidence showing the precise connection with the war is, in my view, necessary before a case of this kind can be made out, and I find myself entirely in agreement with the view expressed by WYNN-PARRY, J., that, the further you get from the period of the cessation of hostilities, the more necessary it becomes to have clear and cogent evidence showing that the troubles that are being experienced are in truth and in fact attributable to
- C the war, and showing the precise connection between those troubles and the war conditions which are relied on. My criticism of the whole of the affidavit is that it is far too vague and general in its terms to afford the court the assistance which it would require before coming to the conclusion that a case had been made out under this Act, a case precluding the parties to a contract freely entered into from enforcing the rights given to them under such a contract.
- D Therefore, I come to the conclusion that the decision of WYNN-PARRY, J., that the companies had not discharged the onus which lay on them of proving that the circumstances they relied on were attributable directly or indirectly to the war is right.

- That would be sufficient to dispose of the case, and that was the ground on which the learned judge primarily dealt with it, but I think it is necessary
- E and desirable to refer to the exercise of the court's discretion. If I had come to a contrary view with regard to these matters and had thought that the companies had just brought themselves within the four corners of the language of this Act of Parliament, what would have been the position then? In my view, in a case of this kind there are matters which it would be very material to consider in deciding the manner in which the court should exercise its
- F discretion. First, assuming, as I say, that the immediate circumstances, namely, the behaviour of this machine, to use a convenient phrase, due to all these causes, could be attributed to the war, none the less I think it is most material, with regard to the exercise of the discretion, to bear in mind the conditions which existed at the time the contract was entered into. The general post-war world position and the difficulties with regard to
- G trade and fuel and all those matters had already taken place in October, 1946. The active war had come to an end and people who entered into obligations of this kind did so with their eyes open with regard to many of the existing post-war difficulties resulting from the war. Although in a case of this kind it may be right to say that it is the ultimate immediate circumstance which brings the company within the Act, none the less I think it most
- H material, with regard to the exercise of the discretion, to bear in mind the general conditions which prevailed at the time the contract was entered into. From first to last these companies have never produced any audited accounts at all. It is, furthermore, a fact that they did not keep proper books. Those are statutory requirements and it would ill become them to come to court and seek to rely on the special provisions of the Act of 1943 when they had shown complete disregard of every statutory obligation put on them. Apart from that, I think it is most material to the court, in order to assess the prospects of these companies and the extent to which their inability to pay is due to the matters of which they complain, that the court should have properly audited accounts before it can decide whether the discretion should be exercised. These companies have deliberately refrained from producing these accounts although they have been requested to do so from time to time. The excuses which have been put forward are very unconvincing, and it is not suggested that any proper audited accounts are forthcoming.

Looking at the case as a whole, I think that the companies have not discharged the onus which lies on them of showing that the circumstances on which they rely were attributable directly or indirectly to the war. Furthermore, on the material before me, speaking for myself, I am by no means satisfied that the optimistic view which was taken—I will assume genuinely taken—with regard to the prospects of these companies would have been realised even if these difficulties had not arisen. I am by no means satisfied on the material before me that the companies would have been in a position to discharge and meet the whole of this heavy liability even if things had gone as well for them as those connected with them expected in their most optimistic moments. Finally, if the view I have taken with regard to the onus of proof were wrong, or should be held to be wrong, none the less, for the reasons I have indicated, this is not a case in which, if I had to exercise my discretion I should exercise it in favour of the companies. For all those reasons I think those appeals fail.

BIRKETT, J.: I am of the same opinion as my Lord that for the purpose of the Act of 1943, the date of the contract is to be taken as Oct. 28, 1946. With regard to the construction of the Act I desire to add nothing further to what my Lord has said, save to say that I agree with the construction which my Lord has placed on it.

The whole conflict has taken place on the question whether the companies have discharged the onus of proof which rests on them to show that their inability to meet their obligations under the document of Oct. 28 arises from circumstances directly or indirectly attributable to the war. With regard to the fuel permits, the more that matter is examined the more difficult it is to draw the inference which counsel for the companies asks us to draw, namely, that those difficulties were directly or indirectly attributable to the war. It is plain that the first difficulty was the shortage of the anthracite French nuts. The companies had proceeded on the basis that anthracite French nuts would be used, and it was found that no supplies were available. There came the suggestion of the use of diesel oil and the temporary permit for its use. After that came the treatment of the heavy oil, because the licence for the diesel oil could not be prolonged. All those things clearly followed from the failure of the supplies of the anthracite French nuts, but how it can be said that it is a matter of necessary inference that the shortage of anthracite French nuts was a circumstance to be attributed directly or even indirectly to the war it is very difficult to see. It may have been indirectly attributable or it may not.

With regard to the fuel cuts, I gather that the real complaint was that they were of such a nature that they delayed the work of the contractor and so necessary machinery for the drying company was delayed with the consequence of loss, but nothing more than that mere statement is before us. Again I find it difficult to draw the necessary inference that those difficulties were directly or indirectly attributable to the war.

The electric load shedding was a matter on which counsel for the companies spent some considerable time. The circular which was exhibited to the affidavit began: "Owing to the shortage of electricity generating plant throughout the country . . .", and we were asked to say that there were no two possible inferences about that—it must be due to the war, directly or indirectly, because during the war all our efforts were directed elsewhere, there was no money or labour to devote to these matters, and, therefore, generating plant became obsolete and in need of repair. Of course, that may have been the source of the trouble, but equally it may not. All through the circular there is the suggestion that by co-operation the evils which necessarily arise may be minimised, but it by no means states that the lack of generating plant is due to the circumstances of the war. The inference that one would draw from that circular was that, whatever the state of the generating plant, the industrial use of electricity was on such a scale that the generating plant itself was not capable of dealing with it. I find it impossible to draw the necessary inference that the shedding of the load which is complained of in this case was directly or indirectly attributable to the war. Similarly with regard to the shortage of supplies, in my view, the onus of proving those matters being on the companies, they have failed to discharge it.

Without going any further into the case, I should just like to say also that, had it been a matter in which the exercise of discretion had been called for, for the reasons given by my Lord I should also have been of the opinion that the discretion ought not to be exercised in the companies' favour. For those reasons I am of the same opinion as my Lord, that these appeals ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed. An order for costs was not asked for.

Solicitors: Brown, Turner, Compton Carr & Co. (for the companies); Wilde, Sapte & Co. (for the bank).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MUNDAY v. METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Pritchard, J.), January 20, 1949.]

Riot—Damage—Compensation—Invasion of private property by crowd wishing to see football match—Riot (Damages) Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2 (1).

On the closing of a football ground because it was full to capacity, a crowd waiting to see the match invaded the garden of a neighbouring house, the property of the plaintiff, by bursting through the gates, and some 40 or 50 persons climbed by ladders on to the garage roof. The plaintiff's gardener was knocked down, and, when trying to recover the ladder, he was struck and threatened. The plaintiff's daughter tried to keep people out by holding the gates, but two men held her against the wall and prevented her doing so. She and others were frightened, and the property was damaged.

HELD: the execution of a common purpose by more than three persons with an intent to help each other, by force, if necessary, against any person opposing them and the causing of alarm to at least one person of reasonable firmness and courage having been proved, there had been a riot, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation under the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, s. 2 (1) in respect of the damage to his property.

Principle in Ford v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver ([1921] 2 K.B. 344; 125 L.T. 18) and Field v. Metropolitan Police Receiver ([1907] 2 K.B. 853; 97 L.T. 639), applied.

[AS TO COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE BY RIOT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 359-361, paras. 604-609; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 190-192, Nos. 105-124.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Ford v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver, [1921] 2 K.B. 344; 125 L.T. 18; 37 Digest 190, 109.

(2) Field v. Metropolitan Police Receiver, [1907] 2 K.B. 853; 97 L.T. 639; 71 J.P. 494; 37 Digest 190, 111.

ACTION for compensation under the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, ss. 2 (1) and 4 (1).

The plaintiff was a householder whose property was damaged by the intrusion of a crowd intent on seeing a football match on a neighbouring football ground, the gates of the ground having been closed when the ground was filled with spectators. The issue was whether the action of the crowd constituted a riot and so entitled the householder to recover compensation for the damage from the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District under the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, s. 2 (1). PRITCHARD, J., found for the plaintiff. The facts appear in the judgment.

Stephen Chapman for the plaintiff.

Elwes for the defendant.

PRITCHARD, J. : The plaintiff, Mr. John Robert Munday, sues the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District under the terms of the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, alleging that, as a result of what is called a riot on Nov. 13, 1945, some property which was owned by him and is adjacent to the Stamford Bridge Athletic Ground, the ground of the Chelsea Association Football Club, was damaged by the persons said to have taken part in the riot.

The Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, s. 2 (1) provides :

“Where a house, shop, or building in any police district has been injured or destroyed, or the property therein has been injured, stolen, or destroyed, by any persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together, such compensation as hereinafter mentioned shall be paid out of the police rate of such district to any person who has sustained loss by such injury, stealing, or destruction . . .

Section 3 of the Act provides a mode of awarding compensation, and s. 4 (1) provides :

“Where a claim to compensation has been made in accordance with the regulations, and the claimant is aggrieved by the refusal or failure of the police authority to fix compensation upon such claim, or by the amount of compensation fixed, he may bring an action against the police authority to recover compensation in respect of all or any of the matters mentioned in such claim . . .”

It is admitted that all the preliminary steps have been properly taken which are conditions precedent to the plaintiff bringing this action. By the defendant it is admitted that the only point of the case is whether or not, on the facts which are proved what happened on Nov. 13, 1945, constituted a riot.

It is laid down in Ford v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver (1) and Field v. Metropolitan Police Receiver (2) what facts must be proved to constitute a riot. From those cases it is clear that there are five necessary elements : (1) The number of persons concerned must be at least three ; (2) they must have a common purpose ; (3) the execution or inception of that common purpose must be proved ; (4) there must also be proved an intent on the part of the persons in question to help one another, by force if necessary, against any person who may oppose them in the execution of that common purpose ; and (5) there must be proved force or violence, not merely used in and about the common purpose, but displayed in such a manner as to alarm at least one person of reasonable firmness and courage. I find each one of these elements proved. There were many more than three persons concerned. They had a common purpose. The execution or inception of the common purpose is clear. I think the persons engaged had the intent to help one another, by force if necessary, against any person who opposed them in the execution of the common purpose, and I find that not only was there force or violence used for demolishing property, but it was also displayed in such a manner as to alarm at least one person of reasonable firmness and courage.

The matter arose in this way. On Nov. 13, 1945, the Chelsea Football Club were due to play a match on their own ground against a team called the Moscow Dynamos, which at that time was visiting this country from Russia. The match caused considerable excitement among people who followed football, and there was an enormous crowd eager to see it. Some time before the kick-off the gates of the ground were closed because those responsible for the ground had come to the conclusion that it was filled to capacity. Outside the ground many hundreds, if not thousands, of people were waiting to get in, including many with tickets which in the ordinary way ought to have admitted them into the ground, and for which, no doubt, they had paid. Adjacent to the ground are a number of houses—Nos. 402 to 426 (inclusive) Fulham Road. When the gates of the ground were shut it occurred to some of the more enterprising spirits in the crowd outside that they might be able to see the match by invading these houses, and that they did on a very large scale. In the result, the property belonging to the plaintiff was damaged to an amount of £175. The plaintiff's gardener, Mr. James Green, told me what he remembers of that afternoon. He saw a large crowd outside the garden, he saw the garage gate burst open, and hundreds of people rush in, and, he says: "They took my two ladders and they climbed on to the roof of the garage." He tried to rescue his ladders, and he was there on top of the garage with some 40 or 50 men and women, trying to get his ladders back. He was knocked down, and told by one or more members of the crowd on the garage roof that, if he did not put the ladder down, he would be got down himself. He said he was looking after the property he was paid to look after. One man "hit him a bang," and when he got on to the garage roof, apparently a second time, another man hit him with a bottle. It is clear from his evidence that there was a riot, not only in the technical sense, but also in the ordinary sense of that word.

Mr. Green's evidence proves every one of the elements about which I have to be satisfied, except, possibly, the putting in fear of a person of reasonable firmness and courage. Mr. Green says that he was not afraid, but I am rather disposed to think that he was possessed of firmness and courage in a degree which other witnesses did not possess, and I find here that other people were afraid. I am quite satisfied from the evidence of the plaintiff's daughter, Miss Munday, that she was afraid. She went out to try and get some people out of the garden and to keep them out by holding the gates, but two men got hold of her and held her against the wall. She said: "I kicked and cried 'Let me go,' " and she said that she was frightened. Other witnesses have said also that they were frightened, and it is unnecessary to detail their evidence or to go into it any further. I am quite satisfied that the element of fear was present, and, therefore, I hold that what took place was a riot and that the plaintiff is entitled to the compensation of £175 which he claims. I give judgment for him for that amount.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Clark & Son (for the plaintiff); Ellis & Ellis (for the defendant).
[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CARTER v. PICKERING.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J. and Humphreys, J.), January 14, 1949.]

Intoxicating Liquor—Licence—Justices' licence—Surrender—Application for new licence—Existing licence handed to justices' clerk before hearing—New licence refused—Original licence returned to licensee—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 65 (1).

The licensee of a public house applied to the licensing justices for the issue of a fresh licence free from certain conditions which had been attached to his existing licence. Before the hearing of the application he handed his existing licence to the justices' clerk to enable the justices to retain it and to issue a new licence (if they were so minded) without there being two licences in force simultaneously. The application was refused and the old licence was handed back to the licensee. He was subsequently prosecuted for having sold intoxicating liquor by retail without holding a justices' licence, contrary to the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 65, on the ground that the old licence had been surrendered and was no longer in force.

HELD: a licence was surrendered to the justices only if the justices accepted it, and, since the original licence had been returned to the licensee, it was not surrendered, but was still in force.

R. v. Taylor. R. v. Amendt ([1915] 2 K.B. 593; 113 L.T. 167), considered.

[AS TO SALE WITHOUT JUSTICES' LICENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, pp. 124, 125, para. 293.]

AS TO DURATION OF LICENCES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 19, p. 36, paras. 95-98.]

Case referred to :

- (1) R. v. Taylor, R. v. Amendt, [1915] 2 K.B. 593; 113 L.T. 167; sub nom. R. v. Taylor, Ex. p. A.-G., R. v. Amendt, Ex. p. same, 79 J.P. 332; 30 Digest 35, 272.

CASE STATED by Sussex justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Hayward's Heath on Aug. 4, 1948, an information was preferred by the appellant, Clarence Richard Carter, a licensed victualler, charging the respondent, Cyril John Pickering, under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 65, with having sold by retail intoxicating liquor—namely, beer—which he was not licensed to sell. The appellant contended that the respondent's original justices' licence had been surrendered when it was handed to the justices' clerk before the hearing of an application for the issue of a fresh licence which had been refused. The justices held that the decisions in R. v. Taylor, R. v. Amendt (1) had been overruled by the Finance Act, 1947, s. 73 (1), and that the handing in of the old licence (which had subsequently been returned to the respondent) did not amount to a surrender of it and they dismissed the information. An appeal from their decision was now dismissed by the Divisional Court.

Sidney Lamb for the appellant.

Percy Lamb for the respondent.

HUMPHREYS, J.: My Lord has asked me to give judgment first in this case.

The respondent, who held a full public-house licence granted for a term on conditions, desired to have the conditions removed from the licence and applied to the justices at the general annual licensing meeting for their consent thereto. He was represented by a solicitor who was, apparently, of the opinion that he must hand in his existing licence to the justices' clerk before, or at the time of, the application. His solicitor, therefore, handed in the licence to the justices' clerk with the information that the document would be required in the course of the application then before the court. In my opinion, the effect of handing in the document was merely to assure the justices that they could keep that document if they were minded to issue a different one, i.e., a licence without the conditions indorsed on them. The application to grant the licence without the conditions was refused on its merits, and the piece of paper, which is called the licence and is, in fact, a permission to obtain from the excise authorities a licence to sell liquor at the named premises, was returned by the clerk to the justices to the respondent's solicitor.

After having the document handed back to him, the respondent continued to sell intoxicating liquor. Some time afterwards information was given that persons were served with intoxicating liquor in his premises—and there is no doubt that they were—during lawful hours every day, and a prosecution was instituted against the respondent under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 65, which provides :

“(1) . . . a person shall not sell or expose for sale by retail any intoxicating liquor unless he holds a justices' licence authorising him to hold an excise licence for the sale of that intoxicating liquor . . . (2) If any person acts in contravention of this section, he shall be liable . . . ” to certain penalties. In point of fact, the respondent did hold a justices' licence at the time when he sold intoxicating liquor. He held the original justices' licence, but it was argued by the appellant that, because it had been handed in to the justices' clerk on the application to obtain a new licence, the original licence had become in some way bad and was no longer an authorisation to him to sell liquor.

One finds no justification whatever in the licensing Acts for the assumption that a licensee who has a licence granted to him for a year in the normal case, or, as in this case, for a term of $3\frac{1}{2}$ years, can put an end to that licence merely by handing it to someone and saying : “I do not want it any more.”

There is no justification for saying that the premises in question would thereafter become unlicensed premises in such circumstances. In R. v. Taylor, R. v. Amendt (1) it was held that, if a person desired to obtain a licence for premises which were already licensed, he had to satisfy the justices that he did not propose to carry on the premises under both licences, as there could not be two licences in respect of one set of premises. Those decisions are, no doubt, still good law, subject to the Finance Act, 1947, s. 73. Therefore, it was a perfectly proper thing for the respondent's solicitor to hand in the licence to the justices on the understanding that the respondent would get it back again unless he was granted a new and different licence. The justices stated the law quite correctly when they said :

“We dismissed the said information, being of opinion that the submission of the respondent before the licensing justices that it was essential for the existing licence to be surrendered before the application for a new licence could be granted was erroneous in law and the handing in of the licence had no valid effect.”

In my opinion, this appeal ought to be dismissed.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : I agree. One very short answer to the case, I think, would be that a person cannot surrender a licence to the justices unless the justices accept it. It is clear that, whatever the respondent may have said or thought he was doing, he did not surrender his licence because the justices gave it back to him.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Jennings, Son & Ash, agents for Gates & Co., Brighton (for the appellant) ; Laurence Legg, Brighton (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GEORGIUS v. OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS (DELEGATES) AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.JJ.), January 17, 18, 1949.]

Libel—Interrogatory—Source of information—Annual reference book.

The plaintiff alleged that he had been libelled in the preface to CROCKFORD'S CLERICAL DIRECTORY, an annual publication, and he brought proceedings against the publishers. He sought to administer an interrogatory to the defendants asking from whom they obtained the information on which the alleged defamatory matter was based. The master disallowed the interrogatory, and his refusal was upheld by the judge.

HELD : there was no reason to interfere with the exercise of the judge's discretion in disallowing the interrogatory.

Per DENNING, L.J. : "There is a rule of practice that such an interrogatory is not allowed in the case of newspapers except in special circumstances. I see no reason for drawing a distinction between newspapers and monthly, quarterly, or annual reviews."

[AS TO INTERROGATORIES IN ACTIONS FOR LIBEL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 416-418, paras. 509-511; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 18, pp. 203-206, Nos. 1512-1544.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Lawson v. Odhams Press, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 717; [1949] 1 K.B. 129.
- (2) Adam v. Fisher, (1914), 110 L.T. 537; 18 Digest 205, 1533.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of BIRKETT, J., dated Dec. 20, 1948, upholding the decision of a master disallowing an interrogatory as to the source of information on which an alleged libel was based. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal.

Stephen Terrell for the plaintiff.

Beney, K.C., and Marven Everett for the defendants.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I will ask DENNING, L.J., to give the first judgment.

DENNING, L.J. : The question in this appeal is whether a certain interrogatory should be administered. It arises in the course of a libel action brought against the delegates of the Oxford University Press in respect of the preface to CROCKFORD'S CLERICAL DIRECTORY. CROCKFORD'S DIRECTORY is published annually and the preface reviews the events of the previous year. The plaintiff alleges that in that preface he has been libelled. The defence is fair comment, pleaded in the form of the "rolled up plea." To make good that defence the defendants will have to prove that the matter was one of public interest, that the facts stated were true, and that the comment was fair. The plaintiff has been allowed to administer to the defendants two interrogatories asking what information they had at the time they published the preface and what steps they took to test its accuracy, but he has not been allowed to administer a third interrogatory : "From whom did you obtain the information?" That interrogatory has been disallowed by the master and by the judge, and the plaintiff appeals to this court from their refusal.

There is a rule of practice that such an interrogatory is not allowed in actions against newspapers except in special circumstances. That rule has become so well established that this court might interfere if it was not observed, but apart from the case of newspapers there is no rule of practice either way. There is no rule that such an interrogatory should be allowed, nor, conversely, is there a rule that it should not be allowed. It is a matter for the discretion of the judge. CROCKFORD'S DIRECTORY is not a newspaper, and, if the judge here had held himself bound by a rule and not exercised his own discretion, we might have interfered. The judge, however, did not do that. He refused the interrogatory in the exercise of his discretion. The only ground on which the court could interfere would be if there were some manifest injustice caused by the way in which the judge had exercised his discretion. In the absence of those circumstances, this court will not review his discretion : see Lawson v. Odhams Press, Ltd. (1).

A Regarding this case apart altogether from any rule of practice relating to newspapers, I see no injustice whatsoever in what the judge has done. The defendants have to prove the facts stated to be true and the comment to be fair. If the comment, objectively considered, is fair comment, that is, if it is fair when considered without regard to the name of the informant, what
B is the plaintiff's object in administering this interrogatory ? He seeks to prove the comment to be unfair by saying : " Although, objectively considered, it is fair, I want to find out the name of the contributor so as to show that he personally may have been actuated by malice, because he may have had some personal spite against me." I see no reason why the plaintiff should be assisted in doing that. If the facts are true and the comment, objectively
C considered, is fair, he has little about which to complain. His only object in administering the interrogatory would be to find out the name of the contributor so as to sue him also, and that is not necessary for justice to be done. His remedy against the publishers is sufficient. So, as a matter of discretion, without regard to any rule of practice one way or the other, it seems to me open to a judge, when considering a case where fair comment
D is pleaded, to refuse to allow an interrogatory as to the name of the informant. I expect that it was for reasons such as these that the rule grew up in respect of newspapers. I should like to say that I see no reason in practice for drawing a distinction between newspapers and monthly, quarterly or annual reviews. We are invited to say here that we so disapprove of the rule protecting newspapers that we should confine it strictly to newspapers and that in the case
E of all other publications the name of the informant should be given. I do not, however, disapprove of the rule, and I think that a judge, when considering publications such as reviews, might, in the exercise of his discretion, well have regard to the rule which exists in respect of newspapers. In my opinion, therefore, BIRKETT, J., was right and this appeal should fail.

F BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree. It may be that in some future case an interrogatory such as that which has been disallowed here will be necessary so that a right conclusion may be come to, and in that event it will, no doubt, be necessary to decide whether a publication such as CROCKFORD'S DIRECTORY comes within the special rule about newspapers. In the present case I think the learned judge was entitled to disallow this interrogatory on the ground that it is not necessary for the purpose of disposing fairly of the cause or matter.
G In my opinion, when coming to a conclusion on that point, the court is entitled to take into consideration the same arguments that, no doubt, led to the formation of the rule which applies in the case of newspapers. Those arguments have been adumbrated by BUCKLEY, L.J., in Adam v. Fisher (2), and they seem to me to be considerations very proper for a judge to consider. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

H Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : R. Crane (for the plaintiff) ; Rivington & Son (for the defendants).
[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BERNBAUM v. BERNBAUM.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.J.J.), January 19, 1949.]

Divorce—Practice—Order of registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17—Appeal to judge in chambers—R.S.C., Ord. 54, r. 12a—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), rr. 59, 82.

Where a husband and a wife are parties to a matrimonial suit, an appeal from an order made by the registrar on an application under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17, lies to a judge in chambers under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, r. 59, notwithstanding the fact that, by r. 82 of those rules, the registrar may exercise all the jurisdiction and powers conferred on a judge by s. 17.

Per curiam: The note to Ord. 54, r. 22a, in THE ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1948, p. 1118, that "where a master tries an issue an appeal from his judgment thereon lies to a Divisional Court" is incorrect.

Decision of BARNARD, J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 1011), affirmed.

[AS TO APPEAL FROM REGISTRAR, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 777, para. 1231, and 1948 Supplement.

FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES RULES, 1947, see RAYDEN ON DIVORCE, 4th Edn., Special Supplement.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Humphery, [1917] 2 K.B. 72; 117 L.T. 7; 27 Digest 260, 2299.

(2) Peduzzi v. Peduzzi, (1948) (unreported).

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of BARNARD, J., dated Nov. 15, 1948, and reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 1011, that the judge in chambers had jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order of the registrar made on the application of the wife (petitioner in a suit for judicial separation) under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The husband had taken a preliminary point before BARNARD, J., that the appeal lay to the Divisional Court and not to the judge in chambers. The Court of Appeal dismissed his appeal.

Seuffert for the husband.

G. L. Hardy for the wife.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I will ask DENNING, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

DENNING, L.J.: The question in this case is: To which court does an appeal lie in respect of applications under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882? Under that section:

"In any question between husband and wife as to the title to or possession of property, either party . . . may apply by summons or otherwise in a summary way to any judge of the High Court . . . and the judge of the High Court . . . may make such order with respect to the property in dispute, and as to the costs of and consequent on the application as he thinks fit . . ."

Under that section, until 1937, applications were made in the first instance to the judge of the High Court himself. If he thought it necessary, owing to the amount of detail, to refer the matter for inquiry and report, he did so by reference to a master, but the judge himself retained seisin of it throughout. Indeed, in Re Humphery (1), SCRUTTON, L.J., pointed out that the section contemplates that the judge is to keep control of the whole matter and that he himself is to determine it. As the result of experience, however, it was found that these applications between husband and wife often concerned a great deal of detail, such as the ownership of many items of furniture and effects, with different considerations applicable to each. Such applications were unsuitable to be dealt with by High Court judges, and in 1937 R.S.C., Ord. 54, r. 12A, was made enabling a master of the Supreme Court to exercise all the jurisdiction and powers conferred on a judge of the High Court by s. 17 of the Act of 1882.

A In the course of the argument, I asked what power the Rules Committee had to make that rule. Section 17 of the Act seemed to me clearly to contemplate that a judge of the High Court should deal with the matter himself. The relevant power of the Rules Committee is that conferred by s. 99 (1) (d) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, which enables rules to be made :

B "For prescribing what part of the business which may be transacted and of the jurisdiction which may be exercised by judges of the High Court in chambers may be transacted or exercised by masters of the Supreme Court, registrars of the Probate Division, or other officers of the Supreme Court."

C It is clear that, if the jurisdiction under s. 17 was a jurisdiction exercised by judges of the High Court "in chambers," the Rules Committee had power to make a rule enabling a master to deal with it, but is the jurisdiction under s. 17 a jurisdiction exercisable by judges of the High Court "in chambers" ? Under the section a judge "may hear any such application in his private room," but does that make the jurisdiction one which is exercised "in chambers" ? Whatever doubts, however, I might have had if this matter were res integra, I am clear that I ought not now to give effect to those doubts. Ever since 1937 masters of the Supreme Court have exercised this jurisdiction.

D The rule has been acted on, titles have been acquired in pursuance of it, and after this length of time this court ought not to say that the rule was ultra vires. It must be held to be intra vires so that titles should not be invalidated.

E Once it is held that a master may exercise this jurisdiction, to what court lies the appeal from him ? It is plain that in 1937, when the rule was first introduced, the appeal lay to the Divisional Court. Ord. 54, r. 22A then provided :

"(1) There shall be a right of appeal from any finding decision order or judgment arrived at made given directed or entered by any master of the King's Bench Division on the hearing or determination by him of
(a) Any trial or reference of any action cause issue or matter . . .
(2) Such appeal shall be to a Divisional Court . . ."

F

Experience showed, however, that it was most inconvenient that appeals in these matters should be dealt with by the Divisional Court because they involved so much detail. In 1940, therefore, an amendment was made to r. 22A which expressly excluded from appeals to the Divisional Court any appeal in an application under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The result of that exclusion was that r. 21 applied. By that rule :
G application under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The result of that exclusion was that r. 21 applied. By that rule :

"Any person affected by any order or decision of a master may (except in the cases provided for in r. 22A) appeal therefrom to a judge at chambers."

H In the note to Ord. 54, r. 22A, in THE ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1948, p. 1118, it is said :

"From an order directing an issue under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, appeal lies to a judge in chambers, but where a master tries an issue an appeal from his judgment thereon lies to a Divisional Court."

I do not agree with that note. Under the amended r. 22A, all applications under s. 17 are excluded from the Divisional Court. They come under r. 21 and appeals lie to the judge in chambers. I would add that, sitting as a King's Bench judge in chambers, I have often heard appeals from masters under s. 17, and there has been at least one appeal from a decision of my own in chambers to this court. No one has suggested that that was not the proper procedure. I am satisfied that in the King's Bench Division, as a result of the rules which I have mentioned, the appeal from a master under s. 17 lies to the judge in chambers and thence, to this court. It was argued, alternatively, by counsel for the husband that if the master is taking the place of a judge under s. 17, the appeal should be direct from the master to the Court of Appeal. The answer is that, r. 12A itself being intra vires, r. 21 is also. The provisions of s. 17 have now to be read subject to the modification contained in the rules.

I turn to the position in the Divorce Division. Until recently the practice there was the same as it had been before 1937 in the King's Bench Division. The application was made to a judge of the High Court who referred it to the registrar for inquiry and report. The judge retained seisin of it throughout himself. That procedure was found to be inconvenient just as it had been found previously in the King's Bench Division. Therefore, by an amendment made in 1947, the procedure in the Divorce Division was brought into line with that of the King's Bench Division. By r. 82 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, the registrar is given power to exercise all the jurisdiction conferred on a judge of the Supreme Court by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17. That being so, the registrar exercises the jurisdiction initially and an appeal from him lies to the judge in chambers, either under r. 59 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, whereby appeals from an order or decision of a registrar go to a judge in chambers, or because the ordinary High Court Rules apply. The basis of counsel's argument was that the note in THE ANNUAL PRACTICE was right, namely, that in the King's Bench Division appeals lie to the Divisional Court. Hence he argued that in the Divorce Division appeals also lay to the Divisional Court. He is wrong as to the King's Bench Division, and so his argument falls to the ground. It is interesting to note, as BARNARD, J., noted, that in the Divorce Division the practice hitherto has been to appeal to the judge in chambers and thence to this court. That was done in Peduzzi v. Peduzzi (2) and no one suggested that the procedure was wrong. It would not be right for us to interfere with a practice which has prevailed for so long, especially when it is the most convenient, expeditious, and inexpensive way of dealing with the troubles which arise between husband and wife. For these reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the learned judge was right. He had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal from the registrar, and the appeal should be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Ferris, Roberts, Thomas & Co. (for the husband) ; J. C. Clifford Watts (for the wife).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HOPKINSON (deceased). LLOYDS BANK LTD. v. BAKER AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), January 11, 12, 1949.]

Charitable Purpose—Advancement of adult education—Particular reference to Labour Party's memorandum annexed to the will—Dominating object of trust.

By cl. 5 of his will, a testator gave his residuary estate after the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and death duties to four prominent members of the Labour Party "as trustees of the educational fund hereinafter mentioned upon trust that they shall stand possessed of the same as an educational fund and shall apply the same both capital and income at their absolute discretion for the advancement of adult education with particular reference to the following purpose (but in no way limiting their general discretion in applying the fund for adult education), that is to say, the education of men and women of all classes (on the lines of the Labour Party's memorandum headed 'A Note on Education in the Labour Party,' a copy whereof is annexed to this my will and signed by me) to a higher conception of social, political and economic ideas and values and of the personal obligations of duty and service which are necessary for the realisation of an improved and enlightened social civilisation." The court found as a fact that the object of the memorandum annexed to the will was to advance the cause of the Labour Party by improving its methods of propaganda and increasing its electoral efficiency.

HELD: the direction to the trustees to have particular reference to the memorandum dominated the whole trust, forming its overriding and essential purpose, and was not merely intended to serve as a guide in the administration of the fund, and, therefore, the trust was one for the attainment of political objects, and not charitable.

Dicta of LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON in Bowman v. Secular Society ([1917] A.C. 442; 117 L.T. 170), RUSSELL, J., in Re Tetley ([1923] 1 Ch. 262), ROXBURGH, J., in Re Strakosch ([1947] 2 All E.R. 609; [1948] Ch. 43), and ROWLATT, J., in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales (1926) (136 L.T. 28), applied.

[AS TO TRUST FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, p. 137, para. 178; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, p. 265, Nos. 268-272 and Supplement.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270.

(2) Re Tetley, [1923] 1 Ch. 258; affmd., A.-G. v. National Provincial & Union Bank of England, [1924] A.C. 262; sub nom. Re Tetley, 131 L.T. 34; Digest Supp.

(3) Re Hummeltenberg, [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.

(4) Re Scovcroft, [1898] 2 Ch. 638; 79 L.T. 342; 8 Digest 247, 68.

(5) Re Hood, [1931] 1 Ch. 240; 143 L.T. 691; Digest Supp.

(6) Re Strakosch, [1947] 2 All E.R. 607; [1948] Ch. 37; 2nd Digest Supp.

(7) Bonar Law Memorial Trust v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 508; Digest Supp.

(8) Tribune Press, Lahore (Trustees) v. Income Tax Comr., Punjab, Lahore, [1939] 3 All E.R. 469; Digest Supp.

(9) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of Christian Churches of England and Wales, (1926), 136 L.T. 27; 10 Tax Cas. 748; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine inter alia whether a gift made by a testator in his will was charitable.

The testator directed a trust fund to be held and applied for the advancement of adult education with particular reference to education on the lines of a Labour Party memorandum which was annexed to his will. The testator had signed his name at the foot of the memorandum, as also had the witnesses who attested the will, and the memorandum was effectively incorporated into the will by reference. VAISEY, J., held that the main object of the trust was that of the memorandum, i.e., the advancement of the cause of the Labour Party, and the trust was, therefore, for political purposes and not charitable. The facts appear in the judgment.

H. A. Rose for the plaintiff, Lloyds Bank Ltd., executor and trustee of the will.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., and McNabb for the first four defendants, named in the will as the trustees of the trust fund.

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., and Wilfrid Hunt for the testator's three children, entitled on intestacy.

D. H. McMullen (Danckwerts with him) for the Attorney-General.

VAISEY, J. : The main question arising on this summons is as to the proper construction of the residuary gift of the will of the testator, Robert Addy Hopkinson, who died on Nov. 14, 1947. If the trusts on which that gift is expressed to be made are charitable in the technical legal sense of that word, the gift is valid and the trusts can and will be carried into effect. If, on the other hand, the trusts do not satisfy the requirement that they must, to be effective, be charitable, then the gift is invalid and the testator's residuary estate passes as on an intestacy to his three children, the defendants, Philip Hopkinson, Alfred Hopkinson, and Kathleen Mary Wilkinson, in equal shares. The other defendants are the four persons to whom the gift is expressed to be made, namely (i) the Right Honourable Philip John Noel Baker, M.P., who at the date of the will was Secretary of State for Air, and, at the date of the testator's death, Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations; (ii) the Right Honourable Emanuel Shinwell, M.P., who at the date of the will was Minister of Fuel and Power, and, at the date of the death of the testator, Secretary of State for War, and at both dates a member of the Executive Committee of the Labour Party; (iii) the Right Honourable Arthur Greenwood, M.P., who at the date of the will was Minister without Portfolio and was, at that date and also at the date of the testator's death, a member of the Executive Committee of the Labour Party; and (iv) Mr. Morgan Phillips, who at both dates was, and still is, the secretary of the Executive Committee. The last defendant is His Majesty's Attorney-General. The plaintiff is Lloyds Bank Ltd., the executor and trustee appointed by the will. The will with a codicil was duly proved by the plaintiff bank in the Wakefield District Registry on Mar. 8, 1948.

I turn to the will. After the appointment of the plaintiff bank as executor and trustee and certain particular dispositions, to which no allusion need be made, I come to cl. 5, by which, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, and death duties, the testator gave the whole of his residuary estate to the first four defendants "as trustees of the educational fund hereinafter mentioned upon trust that they shall stand possessed of the same [the residuary estate] as an educational fund and shall apply the same both capital and income at their absolute discretion for the advancement of adult education with particular reference to the following purpose (but in no way limiting the general discretion in applying the fund for adult education), that is to say, the education of men and women of all classes (on the lines of the Labour Party's memorandum headed 'A Note on Education in the Labour Party,' a copy whereof is annexed to this my will and signed by me) to a higher conception of social, political and economic ideas and values and of the personal obligations of duty and service which are necessary for the realisation of an improved and enlightened social civilisation."

The concluding words, that is to say, from the words "to a higher conception" to the end, may be abridged, fairly I hope, to a more compendious expression such as "to realise the proper duties of good citizenship."

In my judgment, there are two ways of reading the words which I have quoted. They may be read, first, as equivalent to a general trust for the advancement of adult education which, standing alone, would admittedly be charitable, the super-added purpose being treated merely as a rough guide to be followed or as a hint to be taken as to the kind of adult education which the testator had in mind, the strictly educational main purpose always being adhered to, or, secondly, they may be read as indicating that the first part is to be taken as a general direction and the second part beginning with the words "with particular reference to" as the particular direction dominating the whole of the trust. The second of these alternative views seems to me to be the right one. I think that the particular purpose is the main purpose of the trust, that is to say, while every or any other kind of adult education is within the discretion reposed in the residuary legatees, the particular purpose referred to is, so to speak, the overriding and essential purpose, on the nature of which the validity of the whole trust depends.

A The whole difficulty of this case arises from the terms of the Labour Party's memorandum to which the testator alludes, and which he has, by appropriate words, incorporated in and made part of his testamentary dispositions. I do not think it necessary to refer at any great length to that document. It is dated Sept. 18, 1946, that is to say, about two months before the date of the testator's will. It is marked "Private and confidential." It is headed "Labour Party," and as a sub-heading "A Note on Education in the Labour Party" and the opening words of it are: "The question of education in the Labour Party is emerging as a serious and important matter." The purpose of the document appears to me to be plain on the face of it. Its perfectly legitimate and proper object is, in my judgment, to advance the cause of the Labour Party by improving its methods of propaganda and by increasing its electoral efficiency. In para. 2 the memorandum states:

D "A perusal of this document will, however, show that developments are proceeding which will require the establishment of an educational trust in order to provide for the widening of the scope of this special work in a definitely educational manner and for the necessary separation of its financial aspects and procedure from the normal funds and general administrative work of the party."

E I cannot doubt, going no further than this, that the testator believed that he was responding to this need for the establishment of an educational trust, and was establishing or, at any rate, creating the nucleus of, the educational trust which the memorandum represents as a necessity, and this conviction is strengthened by many other passages in the document, to some of which I will briefly refer.

F Paragraph 2 is the source from which the somewhat lengthy phrase, which I have ventured to summarise as indicating the realisation of the proper duties of good citizenship, is taken. Those words are succeeded by the expression of opinion:

G "... that the immediate practical issue becomes one of providing a comprehensive scheme of education which will give facilities for a graduated but wider knowledge to various categories of persons in the party whose activities and influence have a continuous effect on members and high potency in affecting public opinion."

H Later, there is a reference to the equipment of "men and women to use their knowledge in a serviceable and stimulatory way for the ends of democracy and socialism." The memorandum further says:

"In thus providing for a higher and broader intellectual nurture of these persons in the party, it would be reasonable to expect that the general culture of the party as a whole would be elevated, and the impact on the electorate would become vibrantly educative in character."

A reference is made to the intention of the scheme outlined in the document, which is stated to be

"to give the younger men and women an intellectual nurture which would foster their native talents and develop their personalities through culture so that they can become, not only a credit to the labour movement, but men and women of enlarged and competent outlook, ready to face the complicated issues of this decade and resolute to find the solutions by the application of socialist principles."

The extracts I have quoted give not unfairly the general trend of what is intended to be indicated by the document. A Political propaganda masquerading—I do not use the word in any sinister sense—as education is not education within the Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz., c. 4). In other words, it is not charitable. This principle appears to me to be settled by the authority of the highest tribunal, and it will suffice for me to quote the well known passage from the speech of LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON in Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. (1), where his Lordship says ([1917] A.C. 442): B

"... a trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid, not because it is illegal, for every one is at liberty to advocate or promote by any lawful means a change in the law, but because the court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit, and therefore cannot say that a gift to secure the change is a charitable gift." C

I venture to add as a corollary to that statement that it would be equally true to apply it to the advocating or promoting of the maintenance of the present law, because the court would have no means in that case of judging whether the absence of a change in the law would or would not be for the public benefit. The same principle is stated in clear language by RUSSELL, J., in Re Tetley (2) where he said ([1923] 1 Ch. 262): D

"Subsidising a newspaper for the promotion of particular political or fiscal opinions would be a patriotic purpose in the eyes of those who considered that the triumph of those opinions would be beneficial to the community. It would not be an application of funds for a charitable purpose." E

After quoting the words of LORD PARKER, which I have already read, the learned judge goes on:

"To assist the Prime Minister for the time being by paying his income tax, or easing him from any other liability might well be deemed patriotic, but hardly charitable. Other instances need not be given. It is sufficient to say that the court would have no means of judging, in many cases, whether the particular purpose or object selected by the trustees as a patriotic purpose or a patriotic object, was or was not beneficial to the community and therefore charitable. It could not effectively control the trustees in the administration of the trust." F G

The principle that legitimate and proper political aims and ambitions are not charitable is far too well settled for me at this stage to attempt to depart from or refine upon it. I wish to make it clear that the purposes indicated in this memorandum and the purposes indicated by reference thereto in the testator's will are lawful, legitimate, and, from the point of view of those who put them forward, wholly desirable and proper, but they are not charitable. The law has been laid down with clarity over a long period of time, and, if the trust is not charitable, it is one which the court cannot uphold. The reason for that, I think, is partly indicated in what was said, also by RUSSELL, J., in Re Hummeltenberg (3), namely, that, if the trust is one which the court could not administer if the trustees disclaimed their duties thereunder, it would be a trust which could not be supported in law. Applying that to the H present case, supposing the trustees under this will in their discretion thought proper to embark on a scheme of education under the terms of the Labour Party's manifesto, and, for some reason or other, they desired to put the responsibility of the administration on the court, I find it impossible to see how the court could, consistently with the principles which govern this matter, attempt to carry out the administration of the trust.

A I have been referred to other cases, and, in particular, to Re Scowcroft (4) and Re Hood (5), to which I need only refer by saying that they do not appear to me to impinge in any way on, or limit the effect of, the general proposition to which I have referred. I should like to adopt the observations of ROXBURGH, J., in the very recent case of Re Strakosch (6), where a testator left money on trust to be applied for any purposes which, in the opinion of the trustees

B " . . . is designed to strengthen the bonds of unity between the Union of South Africa and the Mother Country and which incidentally will conduce to the appeasement of racial feeling between the Dutch and English speaking sections of the South African community."

In that case ROXBURGH, J., said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 609) :

C "It is, in my judgment, necessary, in all cases where modes of application are indicated, for the court to be satisfied that every possible mode of application which falls within the ambit of the testator's language is in law charitable."

In Bonar Law Memorial Trust v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (7) it was held that the Bonar Law Memorial Trust was not a charity, and, therefore, not exempt from income tax. FINLAY, J., who decided that case said (49 T.L.R. 221) :

D "Was it the correct view that this was a trust for education, the duty of carrying out the education being entrusted to a particular party? That would not, in his opinion, invalidate the charitable purpose. If, on the other hand, the trust was one for the Conservative Party, to which the lectures and courses were subsidiary, then the fact that the lectures, etc., were educative would not make it a charity."

E The learned judge concluded by saying :

F "The appellants [the trustees of the Bonar Law Memorial Trust] seemed to be in this difficulty. If the fund was for charitable purposes only, and if the income was being applied for non-charitable purposes, there was a breach of trust. But when one looked at what was being done one could not doubt that this place was being used as an educational centre for the Conservative Party, and that it was to this that the income was being in fact applied."

G Finally, I should like to mention an important case in the Privy Council, Tribune Press, Lahore v. Income Tax Comr., Punjab, Lahore (8), where a very different state of law had to be considered, because in that part of India at that time the ambit of permissible trusts had been extended from charitable purposes as we understand them in this country so as to include the advancement of any other object of general public utility. That being the law which had to be applied, the Privy Council there held that the publication of a newspaper, although not charitable in English law, was an advancement of an object of general public utility. The case is, I think, chiefly useful because it contains a very comprehensive summary of the authorities. It H referred to Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Temperance Council of the Christian Churches of England and Wales (9) in which ROWLATT, J., said (136 L.T. 28) :

"Any purpose of influencing legislation is a political purpose in this connection. Under these circumstances, this is mainly a trust to secure a certain line of legislation, and if that is so, I do not understand it to be disputed that that would not be a charitable trust. I think the authorities are clear upon it and I am not going to say anything more about it."

Applying that to this case, I should have thought that the testator's object here was plainly to secure, not necessarily a certain line of legislation, but a certain line—and a perfectly proper and permissible line from the point of view of those who advocate it—of political administration and policy. Applying those cases and the principles which they enunciate to the best of my ability, I have come to the conclusion that I am bound to answer the question as to the validity of this particular trust in the negative.

In my judgment, there can be no doubt that the testator's object was, not education in the proper sense of that word, but the furtherance of his political views and the better equipping of those who make it their business to further them. Therefore, I am bound to decide that the trust in cl. 5 of the testator's will does not constitute a valid charitable gift, with the result that the trust fails and the estate now goes to those who are entitled to it under the Administration of Estates Act, 1925.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the estate.

Solicitors: Corbin, Greener & Cook, agents for Raworth & Co., Harrogate (for the executor); Lyell & Bellion (for the first four defendants); Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Alf Masser & Co., Leeds (for the testator's children); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

EDWARDS v. HALL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), January 14, 1949.]

Agricultural Holding—Notice to quit—Sale since Sept. 3, 1939—Conveyance by tenants in common of their interest in farm to other tenant in common—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 62 (4A).

After Sept. 3, 1939, one of several tenants in common of a farm acquired the interest of the others and became sole freeholder of the property. Subsequently she gave the tenant of the farm notice to quit.

HELD: the conveyance by the tenants in common of their interest in the land to the other tenant in common was a sale of an interest in land which was personalty and not a sale of an agricultural holding within the meaning of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), and, therefore, the notice to quit did not require the consent of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries made necessary by the regulation where there had been a sale of a holding after Sept. 3, 1939.

Re Price ([1928] Ch. 579; 139 L.T. 339), applied.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), (now revoked by S.I., 1948, No. 336), see BUTTERWORTH'S EMERGENCY LEGISLATION SERVICE.]

Case referred to:

(1) Re Price, [1928] Ch. 579; 97 L.J.Ch. 423; 139 L.T. 339; Digest Supp.

ACTION for possession.

The plaintiff had been one of several tenants in common of a farm let to the defendant. On Jan. 27, 1944, she acquired the interest of the other tenants in common and became the sole freeholder. On Sept. 26, 1947, she gave the tenant notice to quit on Sept. 29, 1948. The issue was whether the conveyance to her of the interest of the other tenants in common was a sale or contract of sale of the holding within the meaning of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), under which the written consent of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries was required to a notice to quit where such a sale had taken place after Sept. 3, 1939. LORD GODDARD, C.J., held that it was a sale of personalty and not a sale of land and the notice to quit was valid.

H. E. Francis for the plaintiff.

R. Dow for the defendant.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : Regulation 62 (4A) of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, provides :

A "Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale made since Sept. 3, 1939, or has been sold in pursuance of a contract of sale made since that date, any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given to the tenant so as to expire at any time after the end of the year 1941 shall be null and void : Provided that this paragraph shall not apply to any notice if (whether before or after the giving thereof) the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consents in writing thereto."

B The object of that regulation was to prevent a landowner selling his land with vacant possession when there was a tenant farming the land who was in possession of it at the time of the contract of sale. I do not think the position which arises in this case could ever have been in the mind of the framer of the regulation. The farm which the defendant is farming in this case was the subject of a devise by a man named David Walter Evans who left it to certain nephews and nieces, of whom the plaintiff, Jane Edwards, was one, as tenants in common. The plaintiff wished to be the sole freeholder of the land, and she made an arrangement with the other tenants in common by which she acquired their interest. In my opinion, that was not a sale of land at all, because she, as one tenant in common, had an undivided interest in every piece of the land and so had all the other tenants in common. The land could not be sold without the consent of them all. There was nothing to prevent their selling their interest in the land—which is different from selling the land—to one of themselves. The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 34 (2) provides that where there is a holding by tenants in common and there are not more than four persons of full age entitled in undivided shares free from encumbrances, the land shall vest in them as joint tenants on the statutory trusts. This land is held on the statutory trusts. Section 35 of the Act of 1925 defines the meaning of "statutory trusts" :

F "For the purposes of this Act land held upon the 'statutory trusts' shall be held upon the trusts and subject to the provisions following, namely, upon trust to sell the same and to stand possessed of the net proceeds of sale, after payment of costs, and of the net rents . . . and subject to such powers and provisions, as may be requisite for giving effect to the rights of the persons . . . interested in the land."

G In Re Price (1) CLAUSON, J., held that these undivided shares were personality and, therefore, what the other tenants in common sold to the plaintiff was personality. Quite apart from Re Price (1) I should hold that there was never a sale of land here. There was nothing but a sale to one of the tenants in common of the interest of the other tenants in common.

H In those circumstances this regulation does not apply. This is not a case where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale. The contract here was merely a sale of the interests of the other tenants in common. For these reasons the consent of the Minister of Agriculture was not required, the notice to quit is valid, and the plaintiff must have judgment for possession with mesne profits from Sept. 29 last until possession is given.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors : T. D. Jones & Co., agents for Hugh Williams, Son & Co., Llandilo (for the plaintiff); Kinch & Richardson, agents for W. Herbert Lewis & Co., Aberayron (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. REID'S TRUSTEES.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), November 30, December 1, 2, 1948, January 20, 1949.]

Income Tax—Capital or income—“Income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom”—Dividend paid out of capital profits of South African company—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case V. A

Trustees held as part of the trust fund shares in a company incorporated and carrying on business in South Africa. In March, 1943, the company, which was not authorised by its memorandum of association to trade in the buying and selling of land, sold some of its buildings, then out of date, which it had used as stores and offices. The profit estimated to have been made by the sale was £17,451, and the directors resolved to declare a dividend of 20 per cent. payable from this sum. The trustees received £6,866 in respect thereof. The Crown claimed from the trustees income tax under sched. D, case V, on the £6,866 received by them. B

Held: as the corpus of the assets in the hands of the trustees remained unaltered by the payment of the dividend, the latter must have been income and not capital in their hands, and, therefore, it was “income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom” within case V, and properly chargeable to income tax. C

(AS TO INCOME TAX UNDER SCHED. D, CASE V, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 195-202, paras. 400-418; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 79-81, Nos. 433-450.] D

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hill (R. A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd., [1930] A.C. 720; 144 L.T. 65; Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Bates, [1928] Ch. 682; 139 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Doughty, [1947] 1 All E.R. 207; [1947] Ch. 263; 176 L.T. 173; 2nd Digest Supp. E
- (4) Forgie's Trustees v. Forgie, 1941 S.C. 188; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Gilbertson v. Fergusson, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 562; 46 L.T. 10; 1 Tax Cas. 501; 28 Digest 79, 431.
- (6) Canadian Eagle Oil Co., Ltd. v. R., Selection Trust, Ltd. v. Devitt, [1945] 2 All E.R. 499; [1946] A.C. 199; 173 L.T. 234; 27 Tax Cas. 206; 2nd Digest Supp. F
- (7) Bradbury v. English Sewing Cotton Co., [1923] A.C. 744; 129 L.T. 546; 8 Tax Cas. 481; 28 Digest 81, 445.
- (8) Ross's Trustees v. Nicoll, (1902), 5 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 146.
- (9) Cull v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1939] 3 All E.R. 761; [1940] A.C. 51; 161 L.T. 173; sub nom., Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Cull, 22 Tax Cas. 603; 2nd Digest Supp. G
- (10) Neumann v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1934] A.C. 215; 150 L.T. 481; 18 Tax Cas. 332; Digest Supp.
- (11) Barnes v. Hely Hutchinson, [1939] 3 All E.R. 803; [1940] A.C. 81; 161 L.T. 181; 22 Tax Cas. 655; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Macaura v. Northern Assurance Co., [1925] A.C. 619; 133 L.T. 152; 29 Digest 43, 63. H

APPEAL by the Crown from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session on a Case stated under the Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 149, by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

The Crown claimed income tax under case V of sched. D in respect of dividends paid to recipients in the United Kingdom by a South African company out of capital profits. The Special Commissioners discharged the assessment, and were upheld by the Court of Session. The House of Lords allowed the Crown's appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of each of their Lordships, except that of LORD MACDERMOTT.

D. H. Johnston, K.C. (S.-G. for Scotland), Donovan, K.C., J. H. Stamp, R. P. Hills and H. A. Shewan (of the Scottish Bar) for the Crown.

A Millard Tucker, K.C., and C. J. D. Shaw (of the Scottish Bar) for the taxpayers.

The House took time for consideration.

Jan. 20. The following opinions were read.

B LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, this appeal is brought against an interlocutor pronounced by the First Division of the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland on a Case stated under the Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 149. The Case was stated on a requisition by the appellants who were aggrieved by a determination of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts discharging an assessment on the respondents in a sum of £6,866 in circumstances which I shall shortly narrate. That determination was upheld C in the Court of Session. Hence the appeal to this House.

The respondents are the trustees of the will of Joseph Reid, an iron merchant of Glasgow, who died in the year 1909. The assets of the trust include 3,433 shares of £10 each in a South African company, Reid Brothers (South Africa), Ltd., which had in 1918 been incorporated in the Transvaal under the Companies Act, 1909 (Act No. 31 of 1909). The objects for which it was established were D to purchase and carry on the business of Reid Brothers (Johannesburg), Ltd., which had been incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, with its registered office in Scotland, and to carry on the business of iron and steel merchants and kindred businesses which did not include the buying and selling of land. The shares in question are held by the trustees as to one quarter E for each of the three daughters of the truster for their respective life rents, the fee being payable to their respective heirs, and as to the remaining quarter on discretionary trusts for behoof of a son of the truster.

On Oct. 23, 1943, the board of directors of the company recommended a payment of a dividend of 15 per cent. from the trading profits of the company for the year ended June 30, 1943. This dividend was declared accordingly at the annual general meeting of the company on Dec. 14, 1943, and, so far F as it was paid to shareholders in the United Kingdom (including the trustees), it was subjected to deduction of United Kingdom income tax in the hands of the paying agent of the company, one James M. Reid. On the same Oct. 23, 1943, the board of directors also resolved that a dividend of 20 per cent. be declared from capital profits realised on the sale of properties during the past financial year. This dividend also was duly declared and paid. No deduction G of income tax was made in the hands of the paying agent or otherwise. The sum of £6,866 now in question represents this dividend of 20 per cent. on the 3,433 shares held by the trustees. I am content to state thus shortly the facts which are set out in great detail in the Case because I do not understand it to be denied by the Crown that the dividend of 20 per cent. was, in fact, paid out of what are conveniently called "capital profits," that is to say, profits which H were derived from a sale of capital assets at an enhanced value, and would not, if the company were being assessed to tax under case I of sched. D, be included in the computation of its trading profits. It is in these circumstances that the question arises whether the Court of Session, affirming the Special Commissioners, has rightly held that tax is not exigible.

The claim of the Crown is founded on case V of sched. D. They say that this sum of £6,866 is "income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom," that the shares in a South African company are possessions out of the United Kingdom, and that the sum in question is income arising from those shares. They say that there is no tertium quid. This sum is either capital or income. How can it be capital if the shares remain intact—so many shares of £10 each in the capital of the company? There is a way of distributing a dividend, while leaving the capital intact, and there is a way of returning part of the capital. It is the former course that has here been taken. This, then, they say, is income. When LORD MACNAGHTEN reminded this House in an oft-quoted phrase that income tax is a tax on income, he did not mean that that only was income which fell within case I of sched. D, but he intended a wider and more popular test, a test which is here satisfied by the fact that the sum has been without question treated, not as capital, but as income of the trust, and that this treatment has legal sanction in relevant decisions of high authority: see, e.g., Hill (R. A.) v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd. (1), Re Bates (2), Re Doughty (3), Forgie's Trustees v. Forgie (4).

My Lords, this is the short and simple case made by the Crown and I see no answer to it. The learned Lord President accepted an answer which he thus stated:

“The short answer of the trustees, accepted by the Special Commissioners, after investigating the facts, is that this sum is not the income of any one and never was. I agree.”

My Lords, I must say with great respect that I think that this conclusion can only be reached by ignoring that what may be regarded as capital in the hands of the payer may yet be income in the hands of the payee. It is begging the question to say that this sum is not income in the hands of the shareholders. By every practical test it has proved to be income. I will assume that the money out of which the dividend was paid was capital in the hands of the company for the purpose, at any rate, of ascertaining its taxable profit. I think that the commissioners were entitled to find that as a fact, but it was not the fact, and they were not entitled to find as a fact, that the dividend in the hands of a recipient shareholder was not his income. But, it was urged, this will create a strange anomaly. If this was an English company, carrying on its trade in the United Kingdom, and the same series of events occurred—an appreciation of capital assets, a realisation of those assets, and a distribution by way of dividend of so called capital profits—no income tax would be exigible in respect of them in the hands of the company or of its shareholders. My Lords, let it be so. I think it should not be necessary to repeat what has so often been said in this House that the position of a company resident in the United Kingdom (I will call it an English company) and its shareholders is wholly different from that of a foreign company and its shareholders who, being resident here, are taxable in respect of income from their foreign possessions. The most striking difference, which itself cuts at the root of any argument based on a disparity of treatment, is that a shareholder in an English company is not, but a shareholder in a foreign company is, directly assessable to tax in respect of the dividends that he receives. The consequences that flow from this are far-reaching. They led at one time to what was known as the rule in Gilbertson v. Fergusson (5), now happily laid at rest. They still produce this anomaly, that, while a shareholder in an English company is not assessable to tax because the company (though not his agent) has “notionally” paid it for him or because his dividend has been “franked” by payment by the company (both expressions are used), yet the shareholder in a foreign company must pay tax on the whole of his dividend under case V, whether or not that dividend has been paid out of profits which themselves had already borne tax in the hands of the company: see Canadian Eagle Oil Co., Ltd. v. R., Selection Trust, Ltd. v. Devitt (6). So, too—and it is really another facet of the same proposition—while under r. 20 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D an English company may, if it thinks fit, deduct tax from the

A dividend that it pays, that rule has no application to the case of a foreign company whether or not it has, in fact, paid tax on some part of the profits out of which the dividend is paid. It is not, I think, going too far to say that for the determination of the question whether under case V the dividend payable on the shares of a foreign company is taxable income, it is irrelevant and, more than that, misleading to look to the analogy of an English company. And here too I would remind your Lordships of the observation of LORD PHILLIMORE in Bradbury v. English Sewing Cotton Co., Ltd. (7) ([1923] A.C. 770), that in regard to the income arising from foreign possessions "the officers of the Crown do not know and do not care what is the character of the sources from which the money comes."

B I must not be taken as suggesting any inaccuracy or insufficiency in the information which has in this case been furnished by the South African company, but it is obvious that as a general rule the Inland Revenue authorities cannot have the same facilities for investigating the affairs of a foreign company and checking its statement that a dividend is paid out of "capital profits." They must work on a broader basis, and I cannot imagine a safer or better one, where the question is as to income arising from a foreign possession, than to ask whether the corpus of the asset remains intact in the hands of the taxpayer. C That question can in the case of the shares here in question only be answered in the affirmative. The shares the trustees held before the distribution of dividend they still hold intact. The dividend they received was income arising out of those shares. I, therefore, move that this appeal be allowed and the interlocutor of the Court of Session reversed in so far as it affirmed the determination of the Special Commissioners and answered in the negative the question D of law raised by the Case. So far as it related to expenses, the interlocutor will remain undisturbed, and by an arrangement properly made by the Crown they will pay the costs of the trustees of the appeal to this House, such costs to be taxed as between party and party.

E LORD NORMAND : My Lords, an assessment under sched. D, case V, of the Income Tax Act, 1918, in the sum of £6,866 for the year 1943-44 was made on the trustees, who appealed to the Special Commissioners. They discharged the assessment and their determination was affirmed by the First Division of the Court of Session, from whose interlocutor this appeal is now taken.

F The respondents are Scottish testamentary trustees, who hold as part of the trust estate 3,433 shares of £10 each of Reid Brothers (South Africa), Ltd., a company incorporated and carrying on business in South Africa as dealers in and suppliers of equipment and appliances for mining. The company is not authorised by its memorandum of association to trade in the buying and selling of property in land. In 1943 the company owned certain stands or parcels of land with buildings which were used as stores and offices. The buildings were, however, out of date and unsuitable for the company's business, and it G was intended to erect suitable store and office premises elsewhere. In March, 1943, therefore, these stands were sold on conditions which entitled the company to remain in occupation pending the erection of the new premises. The estimated profit on the sale was £17,451 19s. 10d., and this sum was transferred first to profit and loss account, and thence to a property suspense account. The value of the properties still held by the company is, in the opinion of the directors, H greater than the balance shown in the property account. On Oct. 23, 1943, the board passed a resolution which is thus worded in the minute of the directors : "It was resolved that a dividend of 20 per cent. be declared payable from capital profits realised on the sale of properties during the past financial year." This dividend of 20 per cent. amounting to £15,604 was, in fact, paid out of the sum of £17,451 19s. 10d. representing the profit on the sale of the properties, and the £6,866 in which the trustees were assessed is their part of the dividend.

My Lords, the argument for the Crown was based on the words of sched. D, case V, and sought no aid from other provisions of the Income Tax Act. There are two parts of sched. D to be considered. The first is the charging section which provides that tax under the schedule shall be charged in respect of (a) the annual profits or gains arising or accruing (i) to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any kind of property whatever, whether situate in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. The rest of the section is not material. The second section deals with the several cases under which the tax shall be charged. The tax under case V is "tax in respect of income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom." It is, therefore, necessary before tax can be charged under sched. D, case V, to show that there is a profit in the nature of income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom.

The Special Commissioners and the First Division agreed in holding that the dividend in this case is not income. The Special Commissioners' finding is that it is of the same capital nature as the source from which it was paid. The Lord President, delivering the judgment of the First Division, held that it was not the income of any one and never was. He said:

"... no doubt the trustees still hold the same 3,433 shares as they held before this distribution, but part of the fixed assets in which the company's capital had been sunk has disappeared as a result of the sale, and, to the extent of £2 in each share, the trustees have in substance received in cash a return of their capital."

I respectfully think that in this passage there may lurk some ambiguity about what are the possessions out of the United Kingdom from which the dividend arises, but it seems to me beyond dispute that "the possessions" are the shares, and that it is incorrect, both in law and in substance, though I would prefer to draw no such distinction, to treat the shareholder as possessing the capital assets of the company. The Lord President also attached importance to the diminution in the value of the company's assets, and, therefore, of the shares in a winding-up, caused by the withdrawal of the sum required to pay the dividend, but, with respect, the same result must follow the withdrawal of money to pay a dividend the source of which is ordinary trading profits.

There are, in my opinion, valid reasons for treating the dividend as taxable income in the trustees' hands. The payment was quite properly described as a dividend, and a dividend is at least prima facie income of the recipient. In law capital cannot be returned to shareholders by a mere money distribution, whether called a dividend or by some other name, and there was in this instance no return of capital. The shares of the company remained after the distribution intact and precisely as they were before it. The payment wears on the face of it, therefore, the appearance of an income receipt in the hands of the shareholders. It is not irrelevant to consider how similar dividends have been dealt with in a question between liferenter and fiar or tenant for life and remainderman. It has been held that, according to the law of England, a payment received by way of dividend out of the proceeds of a sale of the company's assets prima facie goes to the tenant for life as income of the trust estate. In Re Bates (2) the sum distributed represented profits on the sale of steam trawlers previously owned and operated by the company. EVE, J., held ([1928] Ch. 687) that it was a fund which the company "... could treat as available for dividend and could distribute as profits, or having regard to its power to increase capital could apply to that purpose by, for example, increasing the capital, declaring a bonus and at the same time allotting to each shareholder shares in the capital of the company paid up to an amount equivalent to his proportion of the bonus so declared. Unless and until the fund was in fact capitalised it retained its characteristics of a distributable profit."

In Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales, Ltd. (1), LORD RUSSELL

OF KILLOWEN, delivering the opinion of the Privy Council, expounded the law in a series of propositions of which it is enough here to cite the following ([1930] A.C. 731):

- A “(2) A limited company not in liquidation can make no payment by way of return of capital to its shareholders except as a step in an authorised reduction of capital. Any other payment made by it by means of which it parts with moneys to its shareholders must and can only be made by way of dividing profits. Whether the payment is called ‘dividend’ or ‘bonus’ or any other name, it still must remain a payment on division of profits.
- B (3) Moneys so paid to a shareholder will (if he be a trustee) prima facie belong to the person beneficially entitled to the income of the estate. If such moneys or any part thereof are to be treated as part of the corpus of the trust estate there must be some provision in the trust deed which brings about that result. No statement by the company or its officers that moneys which are being paid away to shareholders out of profits are capital, or are to be treated as capital, can have any effect upon the rights of the beneficiaries under a trust instrument which comprises shares in the company.”

- C These two cases were followed in Re Doughty (3).

These cases do not turn on any principle which is not common to the law of England and the law of Scotland: Forgie's Trustees v. Forgie (4); and they are, I think, entirely congruous with the principle applied by LORD PRESIDENT KINROSS in Ross's Trustees v. Nicoll (8). The question there was whether the duplicands of feuduty payable to trustees who held the superiority of certain lands together with the several feuduties and casualties payable to the superior fell to be paid to the liferentrix entitled to the free income of the estate. The Lord President said (5 F. (Ct. Sess.) 148):

- E “The question asked is whether these duplicands of feuduty form part of the income of the trust estate, and I am of opinion that they do. They do not come out of capital, and they leave the capital of the estate untouched.”

This is no more than an application of the civil law conception of ususfructus as a jus alienis rebus utendi fruendi salva rerum substantia which still plays its part in our law of liferent and fee. Your Lordships are not in this appeal concerned to construe the terms of the trust deed, and I, therefore, express

F no opinion whether the dividend under consideration was properly treated as the revenue of the liferentices, but these authorities show that a distribution of money to shareholders out of profits realised by the sale of the company's assets without any alteration of the share capital is normally a payment of the nature of income.

- G But then the trustees say that, though the dividend may be of the nature of income, it is not taxable income. They say justly that a profit derived from the sale of a capital asset would neither have been taxed in the hands of the company if it had been registered in the United Kingdom, nor have been taxed by deduction when the dividend was paid. The company would not have been taxed on this profit, for it would not have been reckoned part of the profits and gains of the company's business under the rules by which the profits and
- H gains of the company would have been computed if it had been a British company. The shareholder would not have suffered any deduction because the dividend was not paid out of profits and gains brought into charge. The argument for the trustees then attempted an elaborate analogy between the taxation of the British company and its shareholders and the taxation of a foreign company and its shareholders. It assumes an overriding principle of taxation consistently applied both to British and to foreign companies and their respective members. The Income Tax Act is an unpromising field for the argument from analogy and it has been said in authoritative expositions of the law in this House that there is no analogy between the provisions for taxing the profits of British companies and the provisions for taxing the profits of foreign companies, and no overriding principle common to both.

In Cull v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (9) LORD ATKIN states the law applicable to British companies ([1939] 3 All E.R. 763):

"... it is now clearly established that in the case of a limited company, the company itself is chargeable to tax on its profits, and that it pays tax in discharge of its own liability and not as agent for its shareholders. The latter are not chargeable with income tax on dividends, and they are not assessed in respect of them."

The position of the British company and its shareholders in relation to income tax is special: Neumann v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (10), per LORD TOMLIN ([1934] A.C. 222); and hinges on the deduction at the current standard rate of income tax from dividends before payment, now authorised by r. 20 of the General Rules, a rule which does not apply to foreign companies: see Canadian Eagle Oil Co.'s case (6) ([1945] 2 All E.R. 504), per LORD SIMON, L.C., and per LORD THANKERTON (ibid., 508). As LORD MACMILLAN said in Cull's case (9) ([1939] 3 All E.R. 768):

"So far as income tax at the standard rate is concerned, dividends received by the shareholders of a [British] company are regarded as franked by the payment by the company of income tax on its profits or gains."

The position of foreign companies and their shareholders resident in the United Kingdom is entirely different. The foreign company is beyond the jurisdiction and is not assessable and cannot be taxed. The British shareholder is directly assessable and is taxed on the full amount of the dividend received by him: r. I of the Rules Applicable to Case V. In the Canadian Eagle Oil Co.'s case (6) LORD SIMON, L.C., said ([1945] 2 All E.R. 503):

"The provision of the Income Tax Act, 1918, by which deduction at the source is authorised in the case of dividends in respect of shares in companies resident in the United Kingdom, stands in sharp contrast to the rules which relate to dividends of foreign companies."

LORD MACMILLAN in the same case pointed out (ibid., 512), that there was a fundamental distinction drawn in the income tax code between income arising from sources in this country and income arising from sources outside the United Kingdom, and observed that

"The topic [viz., the position of a foreign company and of its shareholders] has been darkened rather than illuminated by a false analogy which it has been sought to draw with the case of the taxation of the income of United Kingdom companies and their shareholders."

LORD SIMONDS said (ibid., 517):

"The shareholder in an English company is not taxed upon his dividend, but he goes untaxed because on the true construction of the Income Tax Act no tax is imposed on his dividend. He does not escape tax because some overriding principle says that he shall not be taxed... But in the case of the foreign company's dividend the Act imposes tax in unambiguous terms. It is impossible to escape it by some overriding principle."

In Barnes v. Hely Hutchinson (11), a case dealing with the liability to tax of a British shareholder in a foreign company, LORD WRIGHT said ([1939] 3 All E.R. 808):

"I do not think, for several reasons, that the analogy of dividends of an English company applies, and I see no sufficient ground in a case like the present for relieving the respondent from what is expressed to be his liability under case V."

These citations may suffice, though it would be easy to add to their number, to show that the argument from analogy has no validity.

A The liability to tax of a British shareholder of a foreign company depends, therefore, on the proper construction of sched. D, case V, which is not affected by the provisions for exemptions or abatements or for the assessment of surtax. For the reasons which I have already given my conclusion is that the trustees are liable under sched. D, case V, and I would allow the appeal.

B LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON : My Lords, the respondents hold, as trustees of the trust disposition and settlement of Joseph Reid, decd., 3,433 shares of £10 each, fully paid, in Reid Brothers (South Africa), Ltd., a company incorporated and registered in South Africa, hereafter referred to as "the company." During the year in question, the trustees received two dividends in respect of these shares. One was a dividend of 15 per cent. declared as "payable from the company's trading profits for the year ending June 30, 1943." The other was a dividend of 20 per cent., or £2 a share, and the Special Commissioners found as a fact that this latter dividend was paid "out of profits realised from the sale of capital assets, to wit, four properties in Johannesburg which belonged to the company and were occupied by it as warehouse and office premises." That sale took place in March, 1943. It is not disputed that the former dividend is chargeable to income tax in the United Kingdom and the tax thereon has already been paid. It is contended by the Crown that the latter dividend also is chargeable to income tax in the United Kingdom as being "income arising from a possession out of the United Kingdom" within case V of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918. This contention is disputed by the trustees, who were successful before the Special Commissioners and in the First Division of the Court of Session.

E Was this sum of £6,866 received by the trustees on Dec. 14, 1943, "income arising from a possession out of the United Kingdom" within case V? If the trustees had owned the four properties in Johannesburg which were sold in March, 1943, and if their agents in South Africa had remitted part of the proceeds of sale to the trustees, there would be no doubt that these moneys would form part of the capital of the trust and would not come within case V. In that event the trustees would merely have transformed one form of capital, the four properties, into another form of capital, cash, which would have to be invested as part of the trust capital. The trustees did not, however, own these four properties. They were owned by a different entity, namely the company. The trustees owned the 3,433 shares, and the "possession" from which the sum of £6,866 "arose" was the shares. This sum must be either income arising from that possession or part of the capital of that possession. Despite the ingenious argument of counsel for the trustees, I am clearly of opinion that it cannot be part of the capital of that possession. No part of that possession has been sold. No part of the capital paid up on that possession has been returned. Before the payment was made, the trustees held 3,433 shares of £10 each, fully paid, in the company. After the payment was made their holding was exactly the same. All that happened was that certain cash belonging to the company, and representing part of the profit realised by the sale of a capital asset belonging to the company, was paid away as a dividend. Your Lordships are not concerned to consider whether the company could or could not have given its shareholders the benefit of this profit in a form which would have been capital in the hands of the trustees. The directors, having this sum in their hands representing a profit which they were at liberty to distribute, very naturally decided to utilise it in paying a dividend.

H For the reasons which I have briefly stated, I must reject the contention that this dividend came to the trustees as part of the capital of the "possession."

It follows, I think, inevitably that the dividend is income arising from the "possession." Prima facie a dividend paid on shares is income. It has been held that, even if a distribution by way of dividend has been made out of profits arising from some dealing with the company's capital assets, the distribution is income as between the persons beneficially interested in capital and income respectively: see Re Bates (2), Hill v. Permanent Trustee Co. of New South Wales Ltd. (1), Re Doughty (3). None of these cases is binding on your Lordships' House, but I see no reason to differ from any of them. These cases are not decisions as to the incidence of income tax, and, of course, the destination of sums paid to the trustees of a will must depend on the language used by the testator. The decisions are, however, helpful as showing that the word "income," when used in its ordinary sense, includes a dividend paid out of a profit of the kind that is sometimes called a "capital profit."

My Lords, I see no good reason for giving to the words "income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom" some special meaning which would exclude from their scope the dividend now in question. This dividend is, I think, income according to the ordinary use of the word. It is part of the income of the trust estate in the hands of the trustees, and in holding it to be income within the meaning of this taxing provision your Lordships would in no way be disregarding the fact that income, and not capital, is the proper subject of taxation under an Income Tax Act. Counsel for the trustees sought to base an argument, by analogy, on the position which would have arisen if the company had been incorporated in the United Kingdom, had sold capital assets in the United Kingdom, and had paid this dividend out of a profit arising from such sale. In my view, this argument only leads to confusion, for reasons which have already been fully stated.

I regret to find myself unable to accept the reasoning of the learned Lord President, with which the other two judges of the First Division agreed. Accepting the finding of the Special Commissioners that the sum in question was paid out of profits realised from the sale by the company of capital assets, I would agree that this sum, while it remained in the hands of the company, was not income of the company, but I must respectfully part company with the Lord President when he says "this sum is not the income of anyone, and never was." The italics are mine. For the reasons I have already stated, I think that it became income of the trustees when it was paid to them. The tree owned by the trustees, whereof this sum was the fruit, was their holding of 3,433 shares, and they have treated that fruit, rightly, in my view, as belonging beneficially to the persons entitled to the income of the trust estate. If the sum in question were not the income of anyone, it surely could not rightly be so treated. I would allow the appeal.

LORD MACDERMOTT: My Lords, had Reid Brothers (South Africa), Ltd., been a British company, the trustees would not have been called on to pay the tax now in dispute. They would have been shielded by the taxation of the company in respect of its profits, and in assessing that taxation the Crown, recognising the basic principle that income tax is not a tax on capital, would have ignored that part of the profits arising from the realisation of the appreciated capital assets, such realisation, as was conceded, not being in the way of trade. The result, on this hypothesis of a British company, would, therefore, have been that the tax claimed by the Crown in these proceedings would not have been sought of anyone—company, trustees or beneficiaries. It is of importance to note, however, that this deliverance would not have flowed merely from the distinction observed between capital and income according to what I shall call the "true income" rule. It would also have been due to the state of the law in this country, which, by a merciful, if somewhat anomalous, dispensation, disregards in this connection the juristic personality of the incorporated company, and, in effect, treats its taxation as the taxation of its members. This principle, which finds reflection in the definition of "body of persons" in s. 237 of the Act of 1918, I shall call the "representative" rule for lack of a better description. It has its limitations, but these are not now material.

A A return to the situation as it exists finds the trustees claiming that they are not assessable to tax on the dividend of 20 per cent. "payable," as the relevant resolution has it, "from capital profits realised on the sale of properties during the past financial year." They rely on the true income rule and they are entitled to do so because it is a fundamental and pervading principle. They also call in aid the representative rule, but this they are not entitled to do for no assessment has or could have been made on the South African company, and no theory based on the collective taxation of a number of persons is, therefore, available. The field of enquiry is thus considerably narrowed. The B peculiarities of the law relating to the taxation of "bodies of persons" in this jurisdiction, and the authorities bearing on that and cognate subjects, may, therefore, be put to one side, leaving as the matter for determination the question whether this "capital profits" dividend is subject to charge, as the Crown claims, under case V of sched. D which provides for "tax in respect of income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom."

C Now case V does not, of course, extend the scope of the schedule as delineated by r. 1 thereof, and what I have called the true income rule remains applicable. It is also clear that "possessions" in case V must here refer to the shares held by the trustees in the company. That was conceded, and properly so, for in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it must be assumed that this company, which is incorporated and registered in South Africa, has the general D characteristics of a British company incorporated under the Companies Acts, and, accordingly, that the proprietary interest of its members is limited to their shareholding and does not include, at all events while the company is a going concern and its capital structure remains unaltered, "any right to any item of property owned by the company": see Macaura v. Northern Assurance Co. (12), per LORD BUCKMASTER ([1925] A.C. 626). This dividend, then, was E income arising from the trustees' shareholding, and the question, accordingly, reduces itself to this: Is it permissible, in order to determine the liability of the dividend to tax in the hands of the respondent shareholders, to look beyond the immediate source, the shareholding, and to examine the make-up of the profits out of which the dividend has been declared? In my opinion, the answer must be in the negative. Apart from the difficulties of ascertaining F in the United Kingdom the facts relating to the internal management of a foreign company, the process of exploring payments beyond their immediate source, if once admitted for this purpose, would have no end. The matter, however, does not rest merely on considerations of convenience or expediency. The trustees and the company are distinct entities, and must be so regarded, but, if the answer to the question now under discussion were in the affirmative, the G words of case V "income arising from possessions" would have to be read as relating to the possessions of the person charged or, at his option, to the possessions of someone else instead, and that is a construction for which I am unable to find any justification either in principle or authority. If I am right in this, it means that the application of the true income rule has to be determined by reference to the dividend and the shareholding alone, but here the H shareholding, which was the only relevant capital in the trustees' hands, rested as it was, and the dividend cannot, therefore, be said to have contained an element of capital. No doubt, the shares abated in market value after the payment of the dividend, but they nevertheless remained intact. The ripe tree loses weight and worth when it sheds its fruit, but the fruit remains fruit and no more unless in its fall it has taken part of the tree with it. For these reasons I am of opinion that the dividend in question fell within case V and is subject to tax. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

LORD REID : My Lords, I think that the decision of this case depends on the question whether a dividend from a foreign company which comes to a shareholder in this country must in all cases be held to be received by him as income within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts. In this case the trustees held more than one-third of the shares in a company incorporated and registered in the Union of South Africa. That company does not trade in land. It held a considerable amount of land in or near Johannesburg and sold a part of this land which it did not need. A sum of over £17,000 was estimated as profit on this sale, and the greater part of this sum was distributed as a dividend. This dividend was declared by minute of the directors to be "payable from capital profits realised on the sale of properties during the past financial year." It is not disputed that if this had been a British company no income tax would have been payable by the company in respect of such profits. The phrase "capital profits" is not an accurate description of such profits, but it is a convenient short name for them, and I shall use it as such. A

The main argument for the trustees depended on a comparison with the position which arises when a British company distributes capital profits as dividend. In that case there is no liability on the shareholders to pay income tax either at the standard rate or in the form of surtax on such a dividend, but the reason for that is not that what the shareholder receives is capital. It is that a shareholder is never directly assessable in respect of any dividend paid by a British company and that the surtax provisions in the Income Tax Acts do not impose any liability to pay surtax in respect of dividends paid by a British company out of profits which were not of a kind which is taxable in the hands of the company. It has frequently been pointed out that the Income Tax Acts treat payments by foreign companies quite differently from payments by British companies. I need only refer in this matter to the Canadian Eagle Oil Co. case (6). I think that little or no assistance towards the decision of the present case can be got from statutory provisions or authorities dealing with similar dividends paid by British companies. C D

The assessment in the present case was made under case V of sched. D in respect of income from possessions out of the United Kingdom. I do not think that there can be any doubt that the trustees' shares in the South African company were possessions out of the United Kingdom or that the dividend in question arose from those shares. The only question is: Was that dividend received by the trustees as income within the meaning of sched. D? The question whether a capital dividend is capital or income in the hands of the shareholder who receives it may arise in trust administration. If a trustee, without giving any special directions to his trustees, merely directs them to hold a fund including certain shares for one beneficiary in life and for another in fee, does a capital dividend from those shares go to the life tenant or must it be retained as part of the capital of the trust fund? It has been held in England that it goes to the tenant for life: Re Doughty (3); and Scottish authority points to the same result: Forgie's Trustees v. Forgie (4). In some cases the dividing line between capital and income is not the same for the purposes of income tax as for trust administration, but I see no reason why that should be so in this case. If a dividend ought to be regarded as income as between life tenant and fee, I think that that points to its being income within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, but it is not conclusive. E F G

The crucial question in this case must, therefore, be decided with little direct assistance from authority. The contention for the Crown has the merit of extreme simplicity, if that be a merit in questions of income tax. It is that the dividend cannot be capital because the trustees' foreign possessions, the shares, remain intact, and, therefore, the dividend must be income. It is admitted that, if the money had been paid by way of reduction of the share capital, that would not have been income. The shares would not have remained the same. It H is also admitted that, if the surplus profits had been used to create bonus shares, or even it may be bonus debentures, there would have been no receipt of income. New capital assets would have been created. But it is said that so long as the capital asset abroad remains the same anything received by the shareholder in this country must be income subject to assessment under case V of sched. D. This may seem a technical argument which neglects the real fact that the capital value of the trustees' foreign asset has been reduced by the making of the payment, but a company can, and often does, reduce considerably the market value of its shares by paying a dividend out of accumulated trading profits, and there can be no doubt that such a dividend would fall within case V if it came from a foreign company. There are many ways in which a company can deal with its profits. If it adopts certain methods, the result is the creation of new capital assets. If it adopts other methods, the result is the receipt of income by its shareholders. In either case it is immaterial whether the profits were trading profits or capital profits. It is true that, owing to the special provisions of the Income Tax Acts which distribute liability for income tax (including surtax) between a British company and its shareholders, a dividend paid by a British company out of its capital profits is not taxable, but there are no provisions applicable to a foreign company which bring about this result. I can find no satisfactory alternative to the view that, if a foreign company chooses to distribute its surplus profits as dividend, the nature and origin of those profits does not and cannot be made to affect the quality of the receipt by the shareholder for the purpose of income tax. I, therefore, agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed. The trustees' costs of this appeal as between party and party to be paid by the Crown by agreement.

Solicitors: Solicitor for Scotland of the Board of Inland Revenue, and Solicitor for England of the Board of Inland Revenue; Ince, Roscoe, Wilson & Griggs, agents for Boland King & Stewart, Glasgow, and Simpson & Marwick, W.S., Edinburgh (for the trustees).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOOR MOHAMED v. R.

[JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parcq, Lord Oaksey, Sir Madhavan Nair and Sir John Beaumont), November 16, 17, 18, 1948, January 19, 1949.]

Criminal Law—Evidence tending to show commission of other crimes—Murder—Evidence of previous death in similar circumstances.

The appellant was convicted of the murder by poisoning of a woman, A., with whom he had gone through a ceremony of marriage after the death of his first wife, G. There was no direct evidence that he had administered the poison. At the trial evidence was admitted tending to show that the appellant had also murdered G. in the same manner on the ground that it tended to rebut the possible defences that the woman, A., had committed suicide or had taken poison accidentally. He had never been charged with the murder of G.

HELD: the evidence should not have been admitted. If the appellant had been proved to have administered poison to A. in circumstances consistent with accident, then proof that he had previously administered poison to G. in similar circumstances might well have been admissible, but there was no direct evidence in either case that the appellant had administered the poison.

Principles in Makin v. A.-G. for New South Wales ([1894] A.C. 57; 69 L.T. 778), applied.

Per the JUDICIAL COMMITTEE: In Thompson v. R., LORD SUMNER said ([1918] A.C. 232; 118 L.T. 421). "Before an issue can be said to be raised, which would permit the introduction of [evidence of previous offences] so obviously prejudicial to the accused, it must have been raised in substance if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant. The mere theory that a plea of Not Guilty puts everything material in issue is not enough for this purpose. The prosecution cannot credit the accused with fancy defences in order to rebut them at the outset with some damning piece of prejudice." Their Lordships respectfully agree with what they conceive to be the spirit of LORD SUMNER's words, and wish to say nothing to detract from their value. On principle, however, and with due regard to subsequent authority, their Lordships think that one qualification of the rule laid down by LORD SUMNER must be admitted. An accused person need set up no defence other than a general denial of the crime alleged. The plea of Not Guilty may be equivalent to saying: "Let the prosecution prove its case, if it can," and, having said so much, the accused may take refuge in silence. In such a case it may appear (for instance) that the facts and circumstances of the particular offence charged are consistent with innocent intention, whereas further evidence, which incidentally shows that the accused has committed one or more other offences, may tend to prove that they are consistent only with a guilty intent. The prosecution could not be said, in their Lordships' opinion, to be "crediting the accused with a fancy defence" if they sought to adduce such evidence. It is right to add, however, that in all such cases the judge ought to consider whether the evidence which it is proposed to adduce is sufficiently substantial, having regard to the purpose to which it is professedly directed, to make it desirable in the interest of justice that it should be admitted. If, so far as that purpose is concerned, it can in the circumstances of the case have only trifling weight, the judge will be right to exclude it. Cases must occur in which it would be unjust to admit evidence of a character gravely prejudicial to the accused even though there may be some tenuous ground for holding it technically admissible. The decision must then be left to the discretion and the sense of fairness of the judge.

Rule laid down by LORD SUMNER in Thompson v. R. ([1918] A.C. 232; 118 L.T. 421), qualified.

Dictum of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in R. v. Sims ([1946] 1 All E.R. 701; [1946] K.B. 539; 175 L.T. 74), doubted.

[AS TO EVIDENCE OF RELEVANT FACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 183-188, para. 267-270; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 14, pp. 366-403, Nos. 3875-4233.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Makin v. A.-G. for New South Wales, [1894] A.C. 57; 69 L.T. 778; 58 J.P. 148; 14 Digest 371, 3924.
- (2) Maxwell v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1935] A.C. 309; 151 L.T. 477; 98 J.P. 387; Digest Supp.
- (3) Thompson v. R., [1918] A.C. 221; 118 L.T. 418; 82 J.P. 145; 14 Digest 360, 3810.
- (4) R. v. Sims, [1946] 1 All E.R. 697; [1946] K.B. 531; 175 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) R. v. Bond, [1906] 2 K.B. 389; 95 L.T. 296; 70 J.P. 424; 14 Digest 371, 3921.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant was convicted before the Supreme Court of British Guiana of murdering a woman with whom he had gone through a ceremony of marriage following the death of his first wife. In both cases death was due to poisoning by potassium cyanide. At the trial evidence was admitted as to the circumstances of the death of the first wife. The Judicial Committee now held that this evidence was irrelevant and should not have been admitted and advised His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed. The facts appear in the judgment.

The case is reported in view of the qualification by the Board of the rule laid down by LORD SUMNER in Thompson v. R. ([1918] A.C. 232 ; 118 L.T. 421) and their LORDSHIPS' criticism of the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal A in R. v. Sims ([1946] 1 All E.R. 697 ; [1946] K.B. 531 ; 175 L.T. 72).

Page, K.C., T. B. W. Ramsay, and A. Stone for the appellant.
Gahan for the Crown.

Nov. 18, 1948. After hearing the arguments of counsel for the appellant and for the Crown, their Lordships announced that they would advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed and the conviction of the appellant B quashed, and would state their reasons for tendering this advice at a later date.

Jan 19, 1949. The following advice was delivered by LORD DU PARCQ : The appellant was tried before the Supreme Court of British Guiana on a charge of murdering a woman commonly known, and referred to during the trial, as Ayesha. The jury found him Guilty, and he was C sentenced to death. Evidence was admitted at the trial to which objection was taken by the appellant's counsel on the ground that it tended to show that the appellant had murdered another woman, his wife Gooriah. It was said on behalf of the appellant that the evidence ought to be excluded as being prejudicial to him and irrelevant. For the Crown it was contended, on grounds D attending the two deaths made evidence concerning the earlier of them relevant to the charge. It was properly conceded at their Lordships' Board on behalf of the Crown that, if the evidence were found to have been wrongly admitted, it would follow, according to the settled principles by which their Lordships are guided in criminal cases, that the appeal must be allowed.

The evidence which related directly to the charge of murdering Ayesha may E be summarised as follows. The appellant's wife, Gooriah, died on May 17, 1944. At some time in that year Ayesha had left her husband and gone to live with the appellant. They lived together as man and wife, and there was evidence that in 1945 they went through a ceremony of marriage according to the rites of the Mohammedan religion, although Ayesha's husband was still living. After the first few weeks of their union, their life together had not been F happy. It was said that the appellant had often beaten Ayesha, and had sometimes driven her from his house. On one occasion she had lived apart from him for two weeks, though she seems to have continued to feel affection for him and to have been anxious to return to him. The earlier quarrels were due to the fact that the appellant suspected and accused her of infidelity. Later, he made a different charge against her. On a day in August, 1946, a neighbour G named Mildred James, who employed Ayesha to do some dress-making, witnessed an assault on her by the appellant. She tried to rescue Ayesha, whereupon the appellant said, according to the witness : "Through this woman people got to say I kill my first wife. She must go away." Ayesha refused to go, and the appellant was alleged to have threatened her with the words : "If you can't go alive, you got to go dead." There was also evidence of a quarrel H and a threat by the appellant to kill Ayesha on the night of Sept. 16, 1946. On the morning of the following day, Ayesha died of poisoning by potassium cyanide. It must here be stated that the appellant is a goldsmith by trade and used a solution of potassium cyanide in the ordinary course of his business. He kept it in a press or cupboard. This cupboard was usually locked, but the padlock in use was defective, and it was not difficult to force the cupboard door. Potassium cyanide is a poison which acts quickly and causes loss of consciousness in a few seconds.

Ayesha was said to have been seen alive at or after 9 a.m. on the morning of Sept. 17. A witness called for the Crown swore that he had then seen her go with the appellant into the house in which they lived. This evidence was inconsistent with statements made by the appellant. According to him, his daughter, a child of fourteen, had awakened him shortly before 9.30 a.m. from a sleep which followed a drinking bout, and had told him that Ayesha "was frothing." He said that he had found the woman unconscious. After some delay, he had reported this to a chemist in the neighbourhood. It appeared that he had told this chemist that he had gone to fetch a doctor, but had not found him at home. He was advised to take his "wife" to hospital and did so between 9 and 10 a.m. The appellant, at the request of the assistant dispenser there, had produced a sheet on which Ayesha had vomited. There was a stain on it which the appellant said smelled like gold solution. The assistant dispenser said he could smell nothing. Ayesha was given a stimulant by the assistant dispenser, and the appellant was advised to take her to the doctor. At 11 o'clock the appellant arrived at a doctor's surgery, bringing with him what the doctor found to be the dead body of Ayesha. A post-mortem examination showed without doubt that death was due to cyanide poisoning. It also indicated that there had been exaggeration in some of the evidence as to the more recent assaults on Ayesha by the appellant, since, although some "bruise blood" was found near the right kidney, there were no external signs of violence. This evidence having been given, the question was argued, in the absence of the jury, whether evidence tendered as to the death of Gooriah should be admitted. The learned judge, after an elaborate argument, decided to admit it. At this stage the defence had put forward no theory as to the manner in which the poison had been taken by, or administered to, Ayesha. Later, in his final address to the jury, counsel for the defence suggested that the facts were consistent with suicide. A

Counsel for the appellant at their Lordships' Bar laid stress on the fact that at the trial counsel for the Crown, in the course of his submission that the evidence complained of was admissible, stated, according to the note of his submission, that the appellant had said to Ayesha: "I will get rid of you as I got rid of my first wife." This sentence certainly occurs in the notes, but their Lordships think that it must have been intended and understood as a gloss or comment on the facts proved rather than an allegation of fact. If it had been intended as a quotation from a statement made by the appellant it would have been easy for the appellant's counsel to point out, what, indeed, the learned judge would himself have observed, that there was no evidence that he had used the words imputed to him. B

Their Lordships do not find it necessary to set out in any detail the evidence relating to Gooriah's death. It is sufficient to quote in full para. 7 of the respondent's Case which is as follows:—

"The prosecution then called a great deal of evidence relating to Gooriah's death, including evidence of the following facts:—(1) The appellant believed Gooriah to be unfaithful and used to beat her. (2) The appellant had said of Gooriah to Ayesha's husband: 'Buddy ah got a mind to poison this bitch.' (3) Gooriah on the day of her death, May 17, 1944, went to the nearby house of the appellant's brother-in-law, carrying a piece of folded white paper wrapped in her hand. She had had toothache and the appellant was overheard to say to her: 'You must drink this; it will do you good.' (4) Shortly after a boy ran for the appellant shouting: 'Pawah Gooriah dead.' The appellant went to the house and summoned Dr. Besson, who was passing. (5) The appellant went to the window and called a boy to bring him a paper, similar to that which Gooriah had had in her hand, from the yard. The boy brought the paper which the appellant handed to Dr. Besson saying it smelt of cyanide. The doctor found that the paper had no substance G on it and had no smell. A little later the appellant brought the doctor an enamel cup saying : ' This cup smells of cyanide.' The cup was empty and had no smell. (6) Gooriah died, and Dr. Besson's examination showed her death to be consistent with potassium cyanide poisoning. On analysis two grains of potassium cyanide were found in Gooriah's stomach. Dr. Besson stated that her death was caused by cyanide poisoning."

- A Their Lordships now turn to the important question of law raised by this appeal. By the terms of the Criminal Law (Procedure) Ordinance in force in British Guiana the practice and procedure there are in general the same as the practice and procedure in force in criminal causes in the High Court of Justice and Courts of Assize in England. There are no special provisions in the Ordinance to which their Lordships find it necessary to refer.
- B The first comment to be made on the evidence under review is that it plainly tended to show that the appellant had been guilty of a criminal act which was not the act with which he was charged. In Makin v. A.-G. for New South Wales (1), LORD HERSCHELL, L.C., delivering the judgment of the Board, laid down two principles ([1894] A.C. 65), which must be observed in a case of this character. Of these the first was :
- C " It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried."
- D In Maxwell v. Director of Public Prosecutions (2) ([1935] A.C. 317, 320) this principle was said by LORD SANKEY, L.C., with the concurrence of all the noble and learned Lords who sat with him, to be "one of the most deeply rooted and jealously guarded principles of our criminal law" and to be "fundamental in the law of evidence as conceived in this country." The second principle stated in Makin's case (1) was ([1894] A.C. 65) :
- E "... the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused."
- F The statement of this latter principle has given rise to some discussion. A plea of Not Guilty puts everything in issue which is a necessary ingredient of the offence charged, and if the Crown were permitted, ostensibly in order to strengthen the evidence of a fact which was not denied, and, perhaps, could not be the subject of rational dispute, to adduce evidence of a previous crime, it is manifest that the protection afforded by the "jealously guarded" principle
- G first enunciated would be gravely impaired. This aspect of the matter was considered by the House of Lords in Thompson v. R. (3). Their Lordships need not allude to the facts of that case. It is enough to say that the evidence there admitted was held to be relevant as one of the indicia by which the accused man's identity with the person who had committed the crime could be established : see per LORD PARKER of WADDINGTON ([1918] A.C. 231).
- H In the words of LORD ATKINSON (ibid., 230) it rebutted the defence of an alibi which otherwise would have been open. Nothing of the kind can be suggested in the present case. The value of the case for the present purpose is that LORD SUMNER dealt particularly with the difficulty to which their Lordships have referred, and stated his conclusion thus (ibid., 232) :

" Before an issue can be said to be raised, which would permit the introduction of such evidence so obviously prejudicial to the accused, it must have been raised in substance if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant. The mere theory that a plea of Not Guilty puts everything material in issue is not enough for this purpose. The prosecution cannot credit the accused with fancy defences in order to rebut them at the outset with some damning piece of prejudice."

Their Lordships respectfully agree with what they conceive to be the spirit of LORD SUMNER's words, and wish to say nothing to detract from their value. On principle, however, and with due regard to subsequent authority, their Lordships think that one qualification of the rule laid down by LORD SUMNER must be admitted. An accused person need set up no defence other than a general denial of the crime alleged. The plea of Not Guilty may be equivalent to saying: "Let the prosecution prove its case, if it can," and, having said so much, the accused may take refuge in silence. In such a case it may appear (for instance) that the facts and circumstances of the particular offence charged are consistent with innocent intention, whereas further evidence, which incidentally shows that the accused has committed one or more other offences, may tend to prove that they are consistent only with a guilty intent. The prosecution could not be said, in their Lordships' opinion, to be "crediting the accused with a fancy defence" if they sought to adduce such evidence. It is right to add, however, that in all such cases the judge ought to consider whether the evidence which it is proposed to adduce is sufficiently substantial, having regard to the purpose to which it is professedly directed, to make it desirable in the interest of justice that it should be admitted. If, so far as that purpose is concerned, it can in the circumstances of the case have only trifling weight, the judge will be right to exclude it. To say this is not to confuse weight with admissibility. The distinction is plain, but cases must occur in which it would be unjust to admit evidence of a character gravely prejudicial to the accused even though there may be some tenuous ground for holding it technically admissible. The decision must then be left to the discretion and the sense of fairness of the judge.

Their Lordships have considered with care the question whether the evidence now in question can be said to be relevant to any issue in the case. They have asked themselves, adopting the language of LORD SUMNER in Thompson v. R. (3) ([1918] A.C. 236; "What exactly does this purport to prove?" At the trial the learned counsel for the Crown, when submitting that the evidence should be admitted, referred to the possible defences of accident and suicide. In his address to the jury he said, according to the note, that the evidence was led "to meet the defence of suicide," and pointed out that the circumstances surrounding the deaths of the two women "followed a similar pattern." At their Lordships' Bar it was submitted that this similarity of circumstances would lead to the inference that the appellant administered poison to Ayesha with felonious intent.

There can be little doubt that the manner of Ayesha's death, even without the evidence as to the death of Gooriah, would arouse suspicion against the appellant in the mind of a reasonable man. The facts proved as to the death of Gooriah would certainly tend to deepen that suspicion, and might well tilt the balance against the appellant in the estimation of a jury. It by no means follows that this evidence ought to be admitted. If an examination of it shows that it is impressive just because it appears to demonstrate, in the words of LORD HERSCHELL, L.C., in Makin's case (1) ([1894] A.C. 65), "that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried," and if it is otherwise of no real substance, then it was certainly wrongly admitted. After fully considering all the facts which, if accepted, it revealed, their Lordships are not satisfied that its admission can be justified on any of the grounds which have been suggested or on any other ground. Assuming that it is consistent with the evidence relating to the death of Ayesha that she took her own life, or that she took poison accidentally (one of which assumptions must be made for the purposes of the Crown's argument at the trial) there is nothing in the circumstances of Gooriah's death to negative these possible views. Even if the appellant deliberately caused Gooriah to take poison (an assumption not lightly to be made, since he was never charged with having murdered her) it does not follow that Ayesha may not have committed suicide. As to the argument from similarity of circumstances, it seems on analysis to amount to no more than this, that, if the appellant murdered one woman because he was jealous of her, it is probable that he murdered another for the same reason. If the appellant were proved to have administered poison to Ayesha in circumstances consistent with accident, then proof that he had previously administered poison to Gooriah in similar circumstances might well have been admissible. There was, however, no direct evidence in either case that the appellant had administered the poison. It is true that in the case of Gooriah there was evidence from which it might be inferred that he persuaded her to take the poison by a trick, but this evidence cannot properly be used to found an inference that a similar trick was used to deceive Ayesha, and so to fill a gap in the available evidence. The evidence which was properly adduced as to Ayesha shows her to have been acquainted, as were, it may be supposed, most of the inhabitants of the village in which the appellant lived, with the fact that suspicion rested on him in respect of Gooriah's death, and the theory that Ayesha was deceived into taking poison by a similar ruse to that which is supposed to have succeeded with Gooriah seems to their Lordships to rest on an improbable surmise. The effect of the admission of the impugned evidence may well have been that the jury came to the conclusion that the appellant was guilty of the murder of Gooriah, with which he had never been charged, and, having thus adjudged him a murderer, were satisfied with something short of conclusive proof that he had murdered Ayesha. In these circumstances the verdict cannot stand, notwithstanding the care with which the learned judge summed up the case, and the fairness with which the trial was conducted in all other respects.

Their Lordships are aware that their statement of the principles to be applied to such a case as this, and of the right way of applying them, may not accord with some at least of the dicta contained in a recent decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in England, to which counsel rightly directed their attention. In R. v. Sims (4) LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivering judgment, expressed the opinion of the court as to the proper method of approaching a question concerning the admissibility of evidence of other offences than that charged in these words ([1946] 1 All E.R. 701) :

"If one starts with the assumption that all evidence tending to show a disposition towards a particular crime must be excluded unless justified, then the justification of evidence of this kind is that it tends to rebut a defence otherwise open to the accused ; but if one starts with the general proposition that all evidence that is logically probative is admissible unless excluded, then evidence of this kind does not have to seek a justification but is admissible irrespective of the issues raised by the defence, and this we think is the correct view. It is plainly the sensible view."

With all due deference to the Court of Criminal Appeal, their Lordships feel bound to say that they are not convinced that the method of approach which it thus approved has any advantage over that which it rejected as incorrect. The expression "logically probative" may be understood to include much evidence which English law deems to be irrelevant. Logicians are not bound by the rules of evidence which guide English courts, and theories of probability sometimes cause a clash of philosophic opinion. It would, no doubt, be wrong to interpret the observations of the Court of Criminal Appeal as meaning that evidence can sometimes be admitted merely for the reason that it shows a propensity in the accused to commit crimes of the nature of that with which he is charged. It cannot be supposed that the court intended to lay down a proposition which would conflict with principles which have been laid down, or approved, by the House of Lords. It may be assumed that it is still true to say, as LORD SUMNER said in Thompson v. R. (3) ([1918] A.C. 232) :

"No one doubts that it does not tend to prove a man guilty of a particular crime to show that he is the kind of man who would commit a crime, or that he is generally disposed to crime and even to a particular crime."

If all that the court in R. v. Sims (4) meant to say was that evidence of the kind specified in the first of the principles stated in Makin's case (1) may be admitted if it is relevant for other reasons, then the dictum has no novelty. It does seem, however, that the passage quoted was intended at least to bear the meaning that evidence ought to be admitted which is in any way relevant to a matter which can be said to be in issue, however technically, between the Crown and the accused, because a little later in the judgment the following passage occurs ([1946] 1 All E.R. 701) :

"In any event, whenever there is a plea of Not Guilty, everything is in issue and the prosecution have to prove the whole of their case, including the identity of the accused, the nature of the act and the existence of any necessary knowledge or intent."

The Court of Criminal Appeal would thus appear to have rejected altogether the opinion of LORD SUMNER which, although, as their Lordships have said, they believe that it must in one respect be somewhat qualified, has hitherto been generally accepted as a governing principle. Recent dicta of the Court of Criminal Appeal, though carrying great weight, do not necessarily out-weigh earlier dicta in the House of Lords or the Court of Crown Cases Reserved or in the Court of Criminal Appeal itself, and, if their Lordships have correctly understood those which they have quoted, they can only regard them as in some degree inconsistent with settled principle.

Their Lordships think that a passage from the judgment of KENNEDY, J. ([1906] 2 K.B. 398) in the well-known case of R. v. Bond (5), may well be quoted in this connection :

"... if, as is plain, we have to recognise the existence of certain circumstances in which justice cannot be attained at the trial without a disclosure of prior offences, the utmost vigilance at least should be maintained in restricting the number of such cases, and in seeing that the general rule of the criminal law of England, which (to the credit, in my opinion, of English justice) excludes evidence of prior offences, is not broken or frittered away by the creation of novel and anomalous exceptions."

Their Lordships respectfully approve this statement, which seems to them to be completely in accord with the later statement of LORD SANKEY, L.C., in Maxwell's case (1) when he said ([1935] A.C. 320) :

"It is of the utmost importance for a fair trial that the evidence should be prima facie limited to matters relating to the transaction which forms the subject of the indictment and that any departure from these matters should be strictly confined."

They would regret the adoption of any doctrine which made the general rule subordinate to its exceptions. They must add, however, that, though they had been unwilling to adopt the approach to the problem which the Court of Criminal Appeal has recommended, they, of course, refrain from expressing any opinion as to the propriety of the actual decision in Sims's case (4). It is unnecessary, and, therefore, undesirable, that they should do so.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Hy. S. L. Polak & Co. (for the appellant); Burchells (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. O./C. DEPOT BATTALION, R.A.S.C., COLCHESTER.

Ex parte ELLIOTT.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finemore, JJ.), January 18, 19, 1949.]

A Habeas Corpus—Court martial—Deserter arrested abroad—Detention in England—Non-compliance with rule of military procedure—Delay in convening court martial—Recall from reserve—Army Act, s. 45 (1) ; s. 154 (1)—Armed Forces (Conditions of Service) Act, 1939 (c. 17), s. 4 (5).

B On Aug. 29, 1946, authority was given to the applicant, who was a private in the Royal Army Service Corps, to go into the reserve on compassionate grounds for a period of two months. On Oct. 29, 1946, the day before he should have reported under his orders of recall, he left the country, and for two years evaded arrest until, on Oct. 9, 1948, he was arrested at Antwerp by British officers accompanied by two Belgian police officers. Having been detained in a police station in Antwerp until Oct. 11, he was escorted to British Army quarters in Germany, and thence to England where he was charged with desertion and detained at Colchester Barracks without a court martial being convened. On Dec. 22, 1948, the applicant applied for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was not a person subject to military law and that he was wrongfully held in custody. The writ issued, and on the return it was submitted that the arrest and subsequent detention of the applicant by the military authorities was illegal because D (i) he was arrested in Belgium contrary to Belgian law and (ii) his arrest was not in compliance with the provisions of s. 154 of the Army Act. It was also contended that the delay in bringing the applicant to trial was oppressive.

E HELD : (i) if a person is arrested abroad and is brought before a court in this country charged with an offence which that court has jurisdiction to hear, the court has no power to go into the question, once that person is in lawful custody in this country, of the circumstances in which he may have been brought here, but the court has jurisdiction to try him for the offence in question, and, therefore, in the present case the court martial had jurisdiction to deal with the applicant and the High Court would not interfere.

F Ex parte Scott (1829) (9 B. & C. 446) and Sinclair v. H.M. Advocate (1890) (12 R. (Ct. Sess.) 38), applied.

(ii) The arrest of the applicant was justified by s. 45 (1) of the Army Act, and the procedure prescribed by s. 154 (1) for the arrest of a suspected deserter or absentee and bringing him before a court of summary jurisdiction did not apply.

G (iii) if, in military proceedings, there had been such delay in bringing a man to trial as to amount to oppression the High Court could interfere, and admit him to bail.

H (iv) in considering whether there had been gross and oppressive delay the court would take into account the regulations which were laid down on the subject, but the mere fact that those regulations might not have been observed was not a matter for the court once it was shown that a man was subject to military law.

R. v. Secretary of State for War. Ex parte Martyn ([1949] 1 All E.R. 242), applied.

Per curiam : If a man is released for a definite period and has given an address to which he is proceeding so that the officer in charge may know where to send the recall papers, and he leaves that address without indicating where those papers are to be forwarded, he cannot be heard to say he did not receive the orders of recall.

[FOR THE ARMED FORCES (CONDITIONS OF SERVICE) ACT, 1939, s. 4 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, p. 954.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Ex p. Scott, (1829), 9 B. & C. 446 ; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 361 ; 2 Man. & Ry. M.C. 308 ; 14 Digest 188, 1684. A
- (2) Sinclair v. H.M. Advocate, (1890), 17 R. (Ct. Sess.) 38.
- (3) Williams v. Secretary of State for War, (1947), unreported.
- (4) Blake's Case, (1814), 2 M. & S. 428 ; 105 E.R. 440 ; 39 Digest 343, 288.
- (5) Jenkes's Case, (1676), 6 State Tr. 1190 ; 2 Swan. 12, 43 ; 36 E.R. 518, 524 ; 16 Digest 256, 577. B
- (6) R. v. Secretary of State for War, Ex p. Martyn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 242.

MOTION for habeas corpus.

A writ was issued on the allegation that the applicant was not a person subject to military law and that he was wrongfully held in custody by the military authorities. On the return of the writ it was conceded that the applicant was subject to military law, but it was contended that his arrest and detention were illegal. The Divisional Court held that the detention was lawful and discharged the rule. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J. C

Collard for the applicant.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and H. L. Parker for the Crown. D

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. On Dec. 22, 1948, the applicant, Richard Arthur Elliott, by his counsel, moved for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was not a person subject to military law and that he was wrongfully held in custody. The court, on the charges stated in his affidavit, and especially as it appeared that he had been in custody for some 70 days, ordered the writ to issue and that he might be brought before the court on the next day, when the court admitted him to bail. If we had known as much of the case as we do now, we should not have directed the writ to issue, for the applicant supported his application by an affidavit which, I do not hesitate to say, was deliberately untrue to his knowledge. In para. 3 of his affidavit the applicant stated that he was called up for military service in 1944, and then in para. 4, the material paragraph, he says : E

" In May, 1946, I was discharged from the Army on a ' W.T.' release, which meant I was released from the Army to follow my civil occupation and that I was no longer subject to military law. Such release can be terminated by the service of recall papers, but none was ever served on me." F

I will now deal with the charges which are disclosed and are not seriously challenged. During May, 1946, an application for compassionate leave was made by the applicant, who, incidentally, had already received a sentence of 12 months for desertion and had been absent without leave five times, and may, therefore, fairly be described as a persistent offender against military law, the ground for the application being that he might be enabled to attend to his personal matters. Later, he submitted medical certificates with regard to the woman with whom he was living. The matter was considered by the competent authority, and on Aug. 29 an authority was given to his commanding officer allowing him to be sent to the reserve on compassionate grounds for a period of two months. Men who are called up for service under the Military Service Acts are treated in the same way as Territorial soldiers and under the Armed Forces (Conditions of Service) Act, 1939, s. 4 (4) it is provided : G

H

" At any time during the present period of embodiment any officer or man belonging to an embodied part of the Territorial Army may, by order of the competent military authority, be released from the obligations which he is under by reason of the embodiment of that part of the Territorial Army ; and, so long as the order remains in force, he shall be in the position in which he would be if that part of the Territorial Army were not embodied. . . ."

In other words, from the time he is released he has civilian status. The section continues :

" Any such order may be revoked by the competent military authority.

(5) On revoking an order under the last preceding sub-section, the competent military authority may, if the person with respect to whom the order was made is still an officer or man of the Territorial Army, give directions requiring him to attend at the place and time fixed by those directions ; and, for the purposes of s. 20 of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (which provides for the punishment of a person failing to appear at the time and place appointed for assembling on embodiment) those directions shall have effect as if they were directions under s. 17 of that Act directing the embodiment of a part of the Territorial Army to which that person belonged."

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this judgment to refer in any detail to the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907. Suffice it to say that, if a man does not obey the orders to appear at the place to which he is directed, he becomes liable to trial by court-martial, and in the opinion of this court as soon as the man does receive his orders of recall he reverts to the position that he had occupied before he was granted the privilege of going into the Reserve for a certain time and he is a soldier and subject to military law. About that the court has no doubt whatever. The reason why men who are treated as embodied Territorials are put into the Reserve instead of being given ordinary leave where it is a question of compassionate release, is because, if they were given ordinary leave, they would be entitled to pay, and if they obtain compassionate leave to attend to domestic or business affairs, they are giving no service to His Majesty and there is no reason why His Majesty should pay them for that time. In the present case the applicant was given permission to go into the Reserve for two months. The court is satisfied that he was given a form which is given to all these men who are released from service on compassionate grounds. It is a form which it is very important he should have, in case he is picked up by the civil or military police as a deserter, because by it he can show permission to be at large. The form says : " This is to certify, " then it gives his number, rank, name, and unit, " has been relegated to . . .,"—in this case it is Class W with a " T " indicating Territorial Reserve—for a period, giving the dates from which, and to which, he is released. A notice which was sent under the regulations to the regimental paymaster was exhibited and showed that the applicant was discharged for a period of eight weeks. On the back of the form which was sent to the applicant there are certain printed instructions by which he was told : " Any change in your address must be immediately notified to the officer in charge of records on " a post-card " which is supplied to you for the purpose. You will receive instructions shortly before you are recalled to rejoin the colours and you must then report as directed bringing this form with you. With the order of recall to the colours you will receive (a) a travelling warrant to enable you to proceed to the station of the unit you are to join, and (b) a postal order for 5s." Then in big letters is printed : " A release for a definite period. Should instructions not be received by you within seven days of the expiration of a definite period of release you should inform your officer in charge of records accordingly and await his instructions."

We are quite willing to accept that a man who is relegated for the time being to the Reserve commits no offence if he does not report directly on the expiration of the period and may wait until he gets orders of recall, but he is told, that if he has been released for a definite period and does not get his orders of recall he should communicate with the officer in charge of records. What the applicant did was that, having been relegated to the Reserve, he returned to the place where the woman with whom he was living resided, stayed with her for two days, and then went off. He visited the house where she was living from time to time for short periods, and an order of recall was sent to that house which was the address he had given to the military authorities as the address to which they could send the papers. If it were necessary, the court would have no hesitation in holding that, if a man is released for a definite period and has given an address to which he is proceeding so that the officer in charge may know where to send the recall papers and he leaves that address without indicating where those papers are to be forwarded, he cannot be heard to say he did not receive the orders of recall. Otherwise a man could give any address he liked and then deliberately go and stay a couple of streets away so that he did not receive the recall. If a man chose to behave like that, he would be rightly charged as a deserter. In the present case the court is satisfied that the applicant did receive the recall papers.

On Oct. 29, 1946, the day before he should have reported under his orders of recall, the applicant left this country in possession of a passport which was stamped on that date. He evaded arrest until he was arrested at Antwerp on Oct. 9, 1948, by Major Latimer and a corporal who were accompanied by two Belgian police officers. He was detained in the police station until Oct. 11, when he was escorted by Major Latimer, Warrant Officer Vivian, and an army sergeant to British Army quarters in Germany. He was then brought to England and, after being taken to the Tower of London, which is a place of detention for soldiers, he was removed to Great Scotland Yard, also a military establishment (it was not New Scotland Yard as he seemed to think), and thence he was taken to the detention barracks at Colchester where he was charged with being a deserter.

On the applicant's behalf two points have been taken. It is said that his arrest was illegal because (i) the British authorities had no authority to arrest him in Belgium and he was arrested contrary to Belgian law, and (ii) his arrest was not in compliance with the provisions of s. 154 of the Army Act. The point with regard to the arrest in Belgium is entirely false. If a person is arrested abroad and he is brought before a court in this country charged with an offence which that court has jurisdiction to hear, it is no answer for him to say, he being then in lawful custody in this country: "I was arrested contrary to the laws of the State of A or the State of B where I was actually arrested." He is in custody before the court which has jurisdiction to try him. What is it suggested that the court can do? The court cannot dismiss the charge at once without its being heard. He is charged with an offence against English law, the law applicable to the case. If he has been arrested in a foreign country and detained improperly from the time that he was first arrested until the time he lands in this country, he may have a remedy against the persons who arrested and detained him, but that does not entitle him to be discharged, though it may influence the court if they think there was something irregular or improper in the arrest. Once he is before the court, it can hold him to bail until his trial and conviction. The point has been dealt with in these courts before. The headnote in Ex parte Scott (1) is:

"A rule nisi had been obtained for a habeas corpus to bring up Susannah Scott in the custody of the marshal, in order that she might be discharged. It appeared by the affidavits that a bill of indictment for perjury had been found against her, and on Feb. 11, LORD TENTERDEN, C.J., granted a warrant for her apprehension, in order that she might appear and plead to the indictment, etc., Ruthven, a police officer, to whom the warrant was specially directed, apprehended Scott at Brussels; she applied to the English ambassador there for assistance, but he refused to interfere, and Ruthven conveyed her to Ostend, and thence to England, and on Apr. 9, she was brought before LORD TENTERDEN, and by him committed to the King's Bench prison."

That was to await trial on the indictment which had been found against her, and it was argued that she should be discharged on habeas corpus because she was illegally arrested. LORD TENTERDEN, C.J., said (9 B. & C. 448):

"The question, therefore, is this, whether if a person charged with a crime is found in this country, it is the duty of the court to take care that such a party shall be amenable to justice, or whether we are to consider the circumstances under which she was brought here. I thought, and still continue to think, that we cannot inquire into them. If the act complained of were done against the law of the foreign country, that country might have vindicated its own law. If it gave her a right of action, she may sue upon it. I am not, indeed, aware of any cases where the government of a foreign country has interposed, in order that a person might be brought here on a charge of misdemeanor. In cases of felony, I know it has been done."

I refer, to show how generally accepted this statement of the law is, to a more recent case in Scotland, Sinclair v. H.M. Advocate (2). There a person was brought before the Court of Justiciary who had been arrested in Portugal. The Lord Justice-Clerk (LORD MACDONALD), who gave the judgment, said (17 R. (Ct. Sess.) 41):

"It is said that the government of Portugal did something wrong, and that the authorities in this country are not to be entitled to obtain any advantage from this alleged wrongdoing. As I have said, we cannot be the judges of the wrongdoing of the government of Portugal. What we have here is that a person has been delivered to a properly authorised officer of this country, and is now to be tried on a charge of embezzlement in this country. He is therefore properly before the court of a competent jurisdiction on a proper warrant. I do not think we can go behind this. There has been no improper dealing with the complainer by the authorities in this country, or by their officer, to induce him to put himself in the position of being arrested, as was the case in two of the cases cited."

LORD M'LAREN put the matter extremely shortly and clearly in a judgment in which he said (ibid., 45):

"With regard to the competency of the proceedings in Portugal, I think this is a matter with which we really have nothing to do. The extradition of a fugitive is an act of sovereignty on the part of the state who surrenders him. Each country has its own ideas and its own rules in such matters. Generally it is done under treaty arrangements, but if a state refuses to bind itself by treaty, and prefers to deal with each case on its merits, we must be content to receive the fugitive on these conditions, and we have neither title nor interest to inquire as to the regularity of proceedings under which he is apprehended and given over to the official sent out to receive him into custody."

That, again, is a perfectly clear and unambiguous statement of the law administered in Scotland. It shows that the law of both countries is exactly the same on this point and that we have no power to go into the question, once a prisoner is in lawful custody in this country, of the circumstances in which he may have been brought here. The circumstances in which the applicant may have been arrested in Belgium are no concern of this court.

The second point which was urged in favour of the applicant is, in my judgment, equally groundless. Under s. 45 of the Army Act it is provided :

"The following regulations shall be enacted with respect to persons subject to military law when charged with offences punishable under this Act :—(1) Every person subject to military law when so charged may be taken into military custody."

and then there are provisions with regard to a report and so on. I have already stated the reasons of the court for saying that the applicant is subject and has been subject to military law ever since Oct. 30, 1946, on which day he was due to report.

Section 154 provides :

"With respect to deserters and absentees without leave the following provisions shall have effect :—(1) Upon reasonable suspicion that a person is a deserter or absentee without leave, it shall be lawful for any constable, or if no constable can be immediately met with, then for any officer or soldier or other person, to apprehend such suspected person, and forthwith to bring him before a court of summary jurisdiction."

It is said that, as this procedure was not followed in this case, the applicant was in unlawful custody. In my opinion, that sub-section deals with an entirely different state of affairs, viz., where there is a reasonable suspicion that a person is a deserter, and its main object is to give the same protection to a person arresting a deserter for the offence of desertion as is given by the common law to a police officer, or to use the old expression, a peace officer, when apprehending a person on reasonable suspicion that a felony has been committed. The law of arrest for felony is that a peace officer can arrest a person on suspicion that a felony has been committed and having a reasonable suspicion that the person he arrests is the felon, whereas a private person who arrests can arrest a person on suspicion that he has committed a felony if a felony has, in fact, been committed, but, if a felony has not in fact been committed, he cannot justify the arrest. This sub-section gives to any person the same protection that a police officer has. If he reasonably suspects that a person is a deserter, a constable, a soldier or any other person may arrest that person and then must bring him before a magistrate. If this section applied to all deserters, as the Army Act is not limited territorially, but applies wherever the Army happens to be, you would have the absurd situation that, if a man had deserted from the army in Germany, North Africa, Burma, or wherever His Majesty's Forces were fighting during the late war, he would have had to be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction. Section 45 deals with persons who are subject to military law. If one of those persons is arrested, the arrest will be justified by that section, but if a soldier arrests a person who is not liable to military law, he has no defence to an action for false imprisonment. If a man subject to military law could not be arrested, another absurd situation might arise. An officer or a non-commissioned officer might see a man stealing out of barracks and going in the direction of the railway station without permission. Is it to be said that he cannot pursue him and bring him back as a deserter? Section 45 of this Act allows the man, if he is subject to military law, to be arrested in those circumstances. That obviously was the opinion of the court who heard Williams v. Secretary of State for War (3). The point, however, seems to me to be clear and not to require authority to support it.

We have, therefore, established that the applicant was a deserter in that he had, although released for two months, received his orders of recall and had disobeyed them, and we have also held that he was properly brought in custody to this country and that neither the High Court nor the court martial are concerned in any way with the circumstances attendant on his apprehension in Belgium. We are also of opinion that it was unnecessary to take any proceedings under s. 154 of the Army Act, since s. 45 amply justified the arrest.

- It now remains to deal with the only point in which there was any substance in this application, and that is whether there has been such delay that this
- A court ought to interfere. Let me say at once that it is not denied by the Attorney-General, and, indeed, there is authority, although it may be an old case—the authority of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Blakes' Case (4) (2 M. & S. 431)—that, if there has been such delay in bringing a man to trial as to amount to oppression, this court will interfere. There is only one way in which it can interfere. There is no provision in the Army Act—and it is not for this
- B court to express any opinion whether there should or should not be—for admitting prisoners to bail. There is a somewhat similar proceeding in the result in that it is in the discretion of the commanding officer to decide whether a man is to be kept under close arrest or under open arrest, and the difference between close arrest and open arrest is not unlike the difference between the position of a man remanded in custody and a man remanded on bail. If a
- C man is kept an unreasonable time awaiting trial to such an extent that this court thinks it is oppressive, they can interfere and admit him to bail—as, indeed, this court, on the untruthful affidavit which the applicant put forward, did in the present case—the condition of the bail being that he shall surrender at the court martial when he receives notice that that court is to proceed. That is the utmost extent to which this court could go. I do not wish any-
- D body to be under the impression that in a case such as this a release on habeas corpus is an acquittal. It is not. On an application for habeas corpus the court does not go into the merits so far as the offence is concerned. It only deals with the man's detention in prison. Anyone who has knowledge of the law of habeas corpus knows that the most frequent use to which the writ was put in the eighteenth century, at any rate, was to obtain bail where a
- E bailable offence was alleged, but the prisoner was detained in custody for a long period. The Habeas Corpus Act, 1679, sets out how the object of the writ was often evaded, so that it had to lead to the issue of an alias and in some cases the issue of a pluries, and if one reads Jenkes' Case (5), which is supposed to have given rise to the statute of Charles II (though I do not know if that is accurate) one sees that the most common use which was made of the writ in those
- F days was to bring up a man who had been charged, perhaps by order of the Council or by speciale mandatum regis, and was held in prison and not brought to trial, and to bail him until he could be brought to trial. The question whether he was or was not guilty of the offence was never dealt with. What we were asked to do in the present case, and the most we could have been asked to do, was to admit the prisoner to bail until the court was ready to
- G try him.

- Another thing I want to emphasise is this. Our attention was called, very properly, by counsel for the applicant, to the various rules of procedure which have been made under the provisions of the Army Act relating to the time within which prisoners are to be brought for trial by court martial, the various reports which are to be made to the various authorities, and matters of that
- H sort. In our opinion, they only have this materiality, that, in considering whether there has been gross and oppressive delay, the court would naturally take into account the regulations which are laid down on the subject, but that is only one matter to be taken into account, and the mere fact that those regulations may not have been observed is not a matter for this court once it is shown that the man is subject to military law. Whether he may have a remedy or not merely because the eight, fifteen or sixty-one day report, is not sent in, is not a matter with which this court can deal. In fact, in R. v.

Secretary of State for War, Ex parte Martyn (6), we said ([1949] 1 All E.R. 243):

"Once it is conceded, as it has been in this case, that he was a soldier, a court martial had jurisdiction to try him. If the court martial in the present case has not observed the proper rules of procedure, that is a matter for the convening officer and, if necessary, the Judge Advocate General to deal with, but it is not a matter for this court, which can only interfere with military courts and matters of military law in so far as the civil rights of the soldier or other person with whom they deal may be affected."

That there has been considerable delay in this case is conceded on all hands. When the case came before the court on Dec. 22 and the court ordered the writ to issue, the applicant had been in custody for something over 70 days. Whether or not there has been excessive delay, let alone oppressive delay, must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. I need not stress how desirable it is, especially when a man is under close arrest, that he should be brought to trial at the earliest possible moment and as soon as a court martial can be convened. I know that by the committee which was presided over by LEWIS, J., and whose findings are contained in the REPORT OF THE ARMY AND AIR FORCE COURTS-MARTIAL COMMITTEE, 1946 (Cmd. 7608) a great deal of attention was paid to the desirability of getting cases promptly disposed of, and I have the permission of LEWIS, J., to mention that cases were brought to their attention in which there had been delay which seemed to the committee to call for the most rigorous inquiry. Each case, however, must depend on its own particular circumstances. For instance, these rules apply equally in time of peace or in time of war. They apply to the Army at home and to the Army abroad. There may be many difficulties which arise in a particular case, more especially where either the prisoner's unit or the units to which the witnesses belong have moved with the result that it is not possible to trace and secure the attendance of witnesses. In the present case it seems to the court that the real cause of the delay has been the case which the applicant himself set up. I am satisfied that the officers who were concerned had before them matters which made it a complicated case and one which it was difficult for them to decide. It is impossible for this court to say that the detention of the applicant has been due to any negligence or improper conduct on the part of the officers concerned. It is suggested that the delay has been such that this court ought to interfere. This court will not interfere, and the order of the court is that the applicant be remanded.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors: Bundy & Bundy (for the applicant); Treasury Solicitor (for the Crown).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HOLMES v. BRADFIELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 20, 1949.]

Town and Country Planning—Revocation of permission to develop—Compensation—“Expenditure in carrying out work which is rendered abortive by the order” —Plans prepared, but no building operations carried out—Plans prepared before permission obtained for building—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 7 (2) (3).

The Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 7, provides: “(2) Where any permission for the development of land is revoked or modified by an order under this Act, then . . . if any person has, before the date of the order, incurred expenditure in carrying out any work which is rendered abortive by the order . . . he shall be entitled to recover from the interim development authority by way of compensation an amount equal to the expenditure so incurred . . . (3) For the purposes of this section, any expenditure incurred in the preparation of plans for the purpose of any work, or upon other similar matters preparatory thereto, shall be deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out that work, but except as aforesaid no compensation shall be paid under sub-s. (2) of this section in respect of any work carried out before the date on which the permission was granted . . .”

In December, 1945, the claimant was refused permission under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, and the Town and Country (Interim Development) Act, 1943, to erect bungalows on certain plots of land. In January, 1946, he appealed to the Minister of Town and Country Planning, but on Mar. 1, 1946, he withdrew his appeal, it being agreed that his rights under the Act of 1943 to compensation for the refusal of permission should be preserved. In August, 1946, he was granted permission to build the bungalows, but, in June, 1947, before any physical work had been done on the building site, this permission was revoked. In a claim under s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1943 for compensation for work rendered abortive by reason of the revocation, it was sought to include the cost of plans which had been prepared before the withdrawal of the appeal on Mar. 1, 1946, and, therefore, at a time when the claimant had no permission to build.

HELD: the expenditure incurred in the preparation of the plans might, in the assessment of compensation, be “deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out” the work within s. 7 (3) of the Act of 1943 although (i) the work for the purpose of which the plans were prepared was not begun before the making of the order revoking the permission which had previously been given for the performance of the work, and (ii) the plans had been prepared before Mar. 1, 1946, when the appeal against the refusal of permission was withdrawn.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. The Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, and the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, are now repealed by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, but s. 22 of the last-named Act contains a provision corresponding to s. 7 (2) and (3) of the 1943 Act involved in this case.

AS TO THE RIGHT TO COMPENSATION UNDER THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACTS, see HALSBURY, Vol. 32, pp. 247-252, paras. 380-387; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp., Title Public Health.]

SPECIAL CASE stated by an arbitrator.

The claimant, a builder, claimed compensation under the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 7 (2), from the local planning authority for expenditure incurred on work rendered abortive by the revocation of permission for development. The claim was referred to arbitration under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, s. 6 (1). The issue was whether compensation was recoverable in respect of professional work (the preparation of plans) although no building operations had been carried out on the site and although the plans had been prepared before the withdrawal of an appeal against an earlier decision of the local planning authority refusing permission for the same development. The court held that the compensation was payable. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Kekwick for the claimant.

Squibb for the local authority.

FINNEMORE, J., delivered the following judgment of the court. This is an award in the form of a Special Case stated by the official arbitrator in an arbitration in which the claimant, John Herbert Holmes, claimed compensation from the respondents, the Bradford Rural District Council, in connection with the proposed building of certain bungalows.

Under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, if a person proceeded to build in an area where a resolution had been passed to adopt a scheme or where a scheme was already operative, he did so at his own risk, and the authority might stop him. On the other hand, he could obtain permission to build. If he obtained permission, the authority could still revoke that permission, but, subject to certain provisions, he would be entitled to compensation. Under the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, the position was somewhat the same, but the Act of 1943 applied to the whole of the country, which was put, as it were, under a kind of national planning scheme.

In September, 1945, the claimant applied to the appropriate local authority for permission to erect a bungalow on plot No. 1 of the land concerned in this case. He was granted permission. In November, 1945, he applied for permission to erect 10 more bungalows on plots Nos. 2 to 11. In December, 1945, the local authority indicated that they were prepared to give him permission to erect bungalows on plots Nos. 2, 3 and 4, but they refused the application so far as it related to the other plots. In January, 1946, the claimant appealed to the Minister of Town and Country Planning and the Minister of Transport, and, on Mar. 1, 1946, after some negotiations the appeal was withdrawn, subject to his being granted the right to carry on the building of bungalows on plots 2, 3 and 4, and also preserving whatever rights to compensation he had with regard to plots 5 to 11. On Jan. 22, 1946, he was granted the formal consent to erect bungalows on plots 2, 3 and 4. On Aug. 23, 1946, he was granted permission by the local authority to build bungalows on plots 5 to 11. Then the Minister intervened, and on Oct. 15, 1946, by his direction the local authority served on the claimant a notice of intention to apply to the Minister for confirmation of an order revoking the consent dated Aug. 23, 1946. Ultimately, in June, 1947, the permission to build the bungalows 5 to 11 was revoked. It is with those bungalows alone that we are concerned in the present case.

The claimant thereupon claimed compensation under the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 7 (2) and (3). Sub-section (2) provides :

“ Where any permission for the development of land is revoked or modified by an order under this Act, then, without prejudice to the provisions of s. 4 (4) of this Act, if any person has, before the date of the order, incurred expenditure in carrying out any work which is rendered abortive by the order, or entered into a contract for the purpose of any work which is abandoned by reason of the order, he shall be entitled to recover from the interim development authority by way of compensation an amount equal to the expenditure so incurred or, as the case may be, to any sums reasonably paid by him in discharge of any liability arising under the contract in respect of the abandonment of that work."

By sub-s. (3) :

A "For the purposes of this section, any expenditure incurred in the preparation of plans for the purpose of any work, or upon other similar matters preparatory thereto, shall be deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out that work, but except as aforesaid no compensation shall be paid under sub-s. (2) of this section in respect of any work carried out before the date on which the permission was granted, or in respect of any liability arising under a contract made before that date."

B The official arbitrator raises two questions for decision by this court—(i) whether, in s. 7 (2) of the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, the words "work which is rendered abortive by the order" include work on the preparation of plans which is so rendered abortive although no building work has actually been begun, and (ii) whether, in the circumstances of the withdrawal by the claimant of his appeal in March, 1946, the claimant is entitled to compensation under s. 7 (2) of the Act in respect of work done C before Mar. 1, 1946, being the date of the withdrawal of the appeal.

The point which has been argued is : What is the meaning of "work" ? It would seem, reading s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1943 and referring to other sections, both in the Act of 1943 and in that of 1932, that when the word "work" is used, as it usually is used, in connection with the word "building," it refers to the actual building on the site and prima facie does not include the professional D services involved in the preparation of plans. Section 7 (2) of the Act of 1943, however, deals not only with a person who has incurred expenditure in carrying out any work which is rendered abortive by a revocation order, but also with one who has entered into a contract for the purpose of any work which is abandoned by reason of such an order, and in s. 7 (3) special provision is made for this very matter—"expenditure incurred in the preparation of plans"—which, E the sub-section says, "shall be deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out that work." Counsel for the claimant has argued that the professional charges which his client has had to pay were incurred under the terms of a "contract for the purpose of any work which is abandoned . . ." within s. 7 (2). Further he refers to sub-s. (3)—"plans for the purpose of any work" or "other similar matters preparatory thereto"—and he contends that F sub-s. (3) provides in plain terms that these charges are to be deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out the work. He says that the claimant had the plans prepared ; that in August, 1946, he obtained permission to carry out the work ; that subsequently an order was made revoking that permission ; and, therefore, he is entitled to be compensated for his expenditure on the plans because it is to be "deemed to be included in the expenditure G incurred in carrying out" the work.

Counsel for the rural district council, on the other hand, argues that only when some kind of physical work is done on the site can one add the expenditure incurred in making the plans for that work. If the order revoking the permission is made before any physical work has been done on the land, one cannot, he says, be compensated for expenditure on plans which have been prepared in con- H templation of the work, because the cost of the plans cannot be included in the expenditure on physical work which has not been carried out. That would lead, as it seems to the court, to a very unfortunate and absurd position, for it would mean that a man who has prepared plans and has done a mere hour's work on the site is entitled to compensation for the preparation of the plans, while another man who has had similar plans prepared and incurred the same expense, but has not actually started the work on the site, is not entitled to include the cost of the plans in "the expenditure incurred in carrying out" the work. The mere fact that the results of a statute may be unjust or absurd does not entitle this court to refuse to give it effect, but, if there are two different interpretations of the words in an Act, the court will adopt that which is just, reasonable and sensible rather than that which is none of those things. We can see nothing inappropriate in applying the words in s. 7 (3), "shall be deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out that work," to plans which have been made, even though the physical work has not been started. The sub-section does not say that the expenditure on plans is necessarily to be added to something else, or can only be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out the work if there are other items to be included with them. Part of the expenditure incurred in carrying out the work is incurred in the preparation of plans, and, in the opinion of this court, the reasonable interpretation of the words of the sub-section is that, if plans are prepared for the purpose of carrying out work for which permission is subsequently given, and that permission is revoked before the actual building work has been begun the expenditure incurred on those plans is to be "deemed to be included in the expenditure incurred in carrying out that work."

The second question is whether expenditure on plans incurred before the claimant obtained permission for the building can be considered for the purposes of compensation in the circumstances of this case. It is clear that by s. 7 (3) he is entitled to include plans which had been produced before the date of the permission for the work in August, 1946. The local authority, in effect, argue that because the claimant had had these plans prepared before March, 1946, and because he then withdrew his appeal relating to the work which the plans were to carry out, no further regard must be paid to them. Later, however, the claimant was given permission for work to be done according to those plans, and they, therefore, become plans which he had prepared for the purpose of the work within s. 7 (3). That work has been rendered abortive by the subsequent revocation, and, therefore, he is, in our opinion, entitled to include the cost of the plans in his application for compensation. Accordingly, we answer both the questions put by the arbitrator in the affirmative.

Award in favour of the claimant affirmed with costs of the special case and argument.

Solicitors: Whitlock & Storr (for the claimant); Layton & Co., agents for Collins, Dryland & Thorowgood, Reading (for the council).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COOK v. COOK.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Pearce, J.), January 21, 1949.]

Condonation—Return of wife to matrimonial home as housekeeper.

The husband had been living with another woman for a considerable time and the wife had gone to live with her parents. Early in 1948, the husband's mistress left him and he asked his wife to return and act as his housekeeper. This she did, it being arranged that the husband would pay her for her services. After some three months, during a dispute about the amount of the payments to the wife, the husband asked her: "When are you going home?" to which she replied: "On Monday or Tuesday," and, in fact, she returned to her parents' home at the end of that week. On a summons against the husband for a maintenance order being taken out by the wife before justices, in which the wife alleged inter alia adultery by the husband, it was held that the wife, by returning to the matrimonial home with the knowledge of the husband's adultery, had condoned that adultery and the summons was dismissed. On an appeal by the wife,

HELD: the wife had been received back into the matrimonial home as a housekeeper and had not been reinstated as a wife, and, therefore, there had been no condonation of the husband's adultery.

Dictum of LORD SIMON, L.C., in Henderson v. Henderson ([1944] 1 All E.R. 45; [1944] A.C. 52; 170 L.T. 84), applied.

A Per LORD MERRIMAN, P.: Reconciliation involves a bi-lateral intention on the part of both spouses to be reconciled.

Dictum of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Mummery v. Mummery ([1942] 1 All E.R. 555; [1942] P. 109; 166 L.T. 344), approved.

B Dictum of WILLMER, J., in Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin ([1948] 2 All E.R. 125), disapproved.

[AS TO CONDONATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 679-682, paras. 1004-1009; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 339, 340, Nos. 3184-3203.]

Cases referred to:

- C (1) Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 32 L.T.O.S. 321; 27 Digest 336, 3166.
- (2) Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin, [1944] 1 All E.R. 44; [1944] A.C. 49; 170 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Tilley v. Tilley, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1113.
- (4) Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 173 L.T. 108; 2nd Digest Supp.
- D (5) Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; [1942] P. 107; 166 L.T. 343; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2846.
- (7) Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin, [1948] 2 All E.R. 123.

E APPEAL by the wife from a decision of Grimsby justices, dated July 1, 1948, dismissing a summons taken out by her by which she asked for a maintenance order on the ground of her husband's adultery and his wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her. The justices held that the adultery had been condoned by the wife. The Divisional Court now allowed her appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P.

F T. H. K. Berry for the wife.
Swanwick for the husband.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: This is an appeal by a wife against the dismissal by the Grimsby borough justices of her summons for maintenance against her husband based, first, on the ground of his adultery, and, secondly, on the ground of his wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her. The G justices decided, on a submission by the husband that there was no case to answer, that both charges should be dismissed on the ground that the husband's adultery had been condoned by the wife. The only witness in the case was the wife. As, in my opinion, we have only one course in this case open to us, namely, to send it back for a rehearing, I desire to say nothing which will embarrass the justices on the rehearing of the facts, but, at the same time, I wish to give H such guidance as I can on the principles which should inform their decision, for it is plain that they have completely misapprehended the law on this subject.

This was not a case in which there was merely an isolated act of adultery on the part of the husband. He had been living with another woman for a long time. In 1948 this other woman left him. According to the wife, that occurred about the time when the husband's mother, who was an old woman, had fallen ill. In those circumstances, the husband having been deserted by his mistress and his mother being unable to look after him, he asked the wife to go and attend to him as his housekeeper. She did so on March 1, 1948. On Sunday, May 9, when she demanded more money than he was minded to give her and told him plainly that she did not intend to be an unpaid servant (which implied clearly that she had regarded herself, so far, as being nothing but a paid servant), and after a controversy about the amount which had been arranged, the husband asked: "When are you going home?", to which the wife replied: "On Monday or Tuesday," and, in fact, she left on the Thursday or Friday of that week. Her case, in other words, was that there was no resumption of anything which could be called cohabitation. She merely went to help her husband out of a difficulty. That is her case. On that it was submitted that she must be held to have condoned the adultery, and we are told that no less than eight leading cases were cited in support of that proposition. I do not know what they were, but in the end the justices found that the wife returned to the matrimonial home on March 1, 1948, with full knowledge of her husband's adultery, and in doing so was reinstated as the husband's wife, and, therefore, she had condoned his adultery. We have been pressed to say that we are obliged to support the justices because they saw the witness and we have not seen her and passages in the evidence can be selected or underlined which would support their finding. I will assume all that without deciding it, but it is one thing to say that on a proper direction to themselves on the issues involved the justices have found the facts on evidence which could possibly support their conclusions, and, therefore, the findings should not be interfered with by this court, and another thing to say that where justices have misdirected themselves on a point of law they can compel this court to support them merely by stating that they have found the issue against the appellant as a question of fact.

To my mind this submission and this judgment that there was no case for the husband to answer were wholly misconceived. I am not going to deal with the whole law of condonation. I propose to content myself with two or three passages from cases some of which are so well-known and well-established as to need no quotation. I preface my short examination of the authorities by saying that I read the judgment of the justices as meaning that the fact that this woman returned physically, as she did for three months or thereabouts, to the matrimonial home, with knowledge of her husband's adultery, ipso facto reinstated her as the husband's wife, and was, therefore, as a matter of law, conclusive that she had condoned his adultery. I am going to begin with one short passage at the end of the judgment in Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1). I do not think it necessary to read the earlier part of the judgment, because I suggest that the whole of what goes before, including this passage, is succinctly summarised in a couple of sentences in LORD SIMON's speech in Henderson v. Henderson (2). In Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1) LORD CHELMSFORD, L.C., says (1 Sw. & Tr. 357):

"I see no reason at all to differ with the Judge Ordinary in the way in which he has stated the law of condonation to the jury; but with him I think that the forgiveness which is to take away the husband's right to a divorce must not fall short of reconciliation, and that this must be shown by the reinstatement of the wife in her former position, which renders proof of conjugal cohabitation, or the restitution of conjugal rights, necessary."

In Henderson v. Henderson (2) LORD SIMON, L.C., said ([1944] 1 All E.R. 45):

"Condonation in connection with the law of divorce has been defined in a variety of phrases in many previous judgments. The essence of the matter is (taking the case where it is the wife who has been guilty of the matrimonial offence) that the husband with knowledge of the wife's offence should forgive her and should confirm his forgiveness by reinstating her as his wife. Whether this further reinstatement goes to the length of connubial intercourse depends on circumstances, for there may be cases where it is enough to say that the wife has been received back into the position of wife in the home, though further intercourse has not taken place. But where it has taken place, this will, subject to one exception, amount to clear proof that the husband has carried his forgiveness into effect."

- A The key to that passage is in the word "wife." The wife has been received back into the position of wife in the home, and all I need say at the moment is that, in the present case, there is ample evidence by the wife to justify her assertion that she was never received as a wife at all. She was received as a housekeeper, and she refused to stay unless, as a housekeeper, she was given the money which, she said (though the husband disputed it), it had been agreed she should be paid as such. The evidence that the husband asked the wife :
- B "When are you going home?"—not "How long are you going to stay at home?"—seems to me to be evidence of anything but a set of circumstances which could properly be described as showing that the wife had been received back into the position of wife in the home, or, to refer again to Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1) that the reinstatement of the wife in her former position had occurred because it was proved that there had been at least conjugal cohabitation
- C or the restitution of conjugal rights. I would like to add that, for reasons with which I am completely in accord, DENNING, L.J., in Tilley v. Tilley (3) explained that the position in relation to the burden of proof of condonation is mutatis mutandis precisely the same as that in relation to connivance which was explained in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Churchman v. Churchman (4).
- D Reference has been made to a passage in my own judgment in Mummery v. Mummery (5), delivered when I was sitting as a judge of first instance. I should not have referred to it but for the fact that our attention has been directed to a judgment of WILLMER, J., which appears to conflict with it. I need not go into the very remarkable circumstances of Mummery v. Mummery (5). In a sentence the question was whether the desertion of a wife by a husband
- E was either condoned, or the continuous flow of the period of desertion interrupted, by the fact that, she having welcomed him home from the horrors of Dunkirk in 1940, they had slept together that night and had sexual intercourse, she fervently desiring reconciliation, and the husband making it as plain as words could possibly make it the next morning that he had not, and never had had, the slightest intention of contemplating reconciliation. With regard to those
- F facts I said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 555) :

- "... the whole question turns on what cohabitation means ... LORD MERRIVALE said more than once that no judge has ever attempted a comprehensive definition of desertion and that no judge would ever succeed in doing so. Among the descriptions of desertion which he gave was one which has always appealed to me. He said that desertion was a withdrawal, not from a place, but from a state of things (Pulford v. Pulford (6) ([1923] P. 21)). Similarly, I doubt whether any judge could give a completely exhaustive definition of cohabitation, and certainly I am not going to attempt to do so. At least a resumption of cohabitation must mean resuming a state of things—that is to say, setting up a matrimonial home together. That involves, so it seems to me, a bi-lateral intention on the part
- H of both spouses so to do."

I do not recede from a word of that. Indeed, it seems to me that the very word "cohabitation" involves the conception that it must be bi-lateral, and so does "reconciliation," but I see that in a judgment in Wilmut v. Wilmut and Martin (7) WILLMER, J., says ([1948] 2 All E.R. 125) :

"The proposition that it takes two to bring about condonation, in the same way as it takes two to make a quarrel, is one of such simplicity that, if it were sound in law, I should have expected it to be well-founded in authority, but, although I have asked for authority for the proposition, I have had none. No case has been cited to me which lays down, as a matter of law, that condonation, before it can be operative, must be something joint between the two parties, or that there can be no condonation unless the guilty party consents to being condoned."

I confess that I am not perfectly clear what that passage actually means. If it means that, if the parties consent to a state of things from which in law the inference of condonation ought to be drawn, it is immaterial whether they consent to the drawing of the conclusion of condonation, I have nothing more to say about it, but if it means that the mutual or bi-lateral element is not required in the reconciliation, reinstatement, conjugal cohabitation, or restitution of conjugal rights (to quote four of the phrases which have been used in one or other of the well-known authorities to which I have already referred), then I respectfully dissent from it and from the statement that there is no authority in support of it, because I have read a passage which I think is authority in support of it. At any rate, by this judgment I intend to make Mummery v. Mummery (5), so far as this court can, an authority which may be cited as decisive of this point, although it is a judgment of my own given as a judge of first instance, and, what is more particularly to the point, I intend that the justices who are to rehear this case shall be guided by it and not allow themselves to be misled into thinking that a man who takes his wife back as a housekeeper, or acts in such a way as to make her think she is being taken back as a housekeeper, necessarily produces the legal result that all his past misdoings are condoned.

As I have already said, I do not intend to decide the merits of this case. They need a good deal more careful consideration by the next bench of justices than they were given by those who have already decided this matter, and I hope (and I say this particularly because we are told that it is impossible for us to send the case back to any other petty sessional division or any other clerk), there will be no feeling that they must support their late decision on the next occasion. Our order, therefore, is that the appeal will be allowed, the order set aside with costs to the wife of this appeal and costs below in any event, for the whole of this unfortunate business results from the fact that a submission, entirely misconceived, was made at the close of the wife's case. The costs of the rehearing will be at the discretion of the justices who hear the case, and the husband will provide £10 security for the wife's costs of the hearing.

PEARCE, J. : I agree. The passage from his judgment in Mummery v. Mummery (5), which the learned President has read is, in my view, a clear and correct expression of the law. The words "resumption of cohabitation" must mean resuming a state of things, that is to say, a setting up of a matrimonial home together and that involves a bi-lateral intention on the part of both spouses so to do. That is an important principle which I do not think the justices can have appreciated. There is nothing in the evidence on which the justices could find a reconciliation or a bi-lateral intention on the part of both these spouses to set up a matrimonial home together. I agree with the order that my Lord has suggested.

Appeal allowed with costs here and below.

Solicitors : Taylor, Jelf & Co., agents for James Young, Grimsby (for the wife) ; G. Warr & Co., agents for John Barker, Grimsby (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ERITH CORPORATION v. HOLDER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.JJ., and Vaisey, J.), January 20, 1949.]

Requisition—Land—Dwelling-house—Purchase of requisitioned premises—Right of purchaser to possession—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended)), reg. 51 (1).

A Under reg. 51 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (as amended), the Minister of Health has power to take possession of any land and to delegate such power. In accordance therewith the Minister delegated his powers by means of "circulars." Circular No. 138 of 1945 gave local authorities power to requisition unoccupied houses, not only for persons rendered homeless by enemy action, but also for persons who were inadequately housed, unless the owner, within fourteen days of the notice of intention to requisition, notified the local authority that it was his intention to occupy the house. By Circular No. 5 of 1946 it was provided that "all houses at present requisitioned by local authorities may in future be used as a general pool of accommodation for the inadequately housed." By Circular No. 141 of 1946 the operation of Circulars Nos. 138/45 and 5/46 was extended for a further period, subject to the following modification:—

B "In the present shortage of housing accommodation it is necessary to ensure as far as possible that all houses are reasonably fully occupied, and this is the main intention of the requisitioning powers which the Minister has delegated to the clerks of local authorities. Accordingly, where an owner notifies his intention to occupy the house by himself or his family the clerk to the local authority is authorised under Circular 141 to retain possession of the premises if the local authority are satisfied that to release the house for occupation by the owner or his family would result in serious under-occupation of the house, subject to the owner, if he so desires, being allowed to occupy such proportion of the premises by himself or his family as the local authority deem reasonable for his needs and on such terms as to payment and otherwise as the local authority may approve."

C

D

E The plaintiff corporation requisitioned a certain dwelling-house in 1941, and put in as occupiers a family which had been rendered homeless by enemy action. Shortly before that family vacated in 1947, the defendant purchased the property, and, when the occupying family quitted, he entered into occupation. The corporation, thereupon, sought to eject him as a trespasser. It was contended by the defendant that, as he had notified his intention to occupy the house by himself and his family, the local authority were only authorised under Circular 141 to retain possession of the premises if they were satisfied that the release of the house for occupation by the defendant would result in its serious under-occupation, and there was no evidence that they were so satisfied.

F

G HELD: Circular No. 141 applied, not to premises which were already under requisition (as was the house in the present case), but only to a house the requisition of which the local authority were contemplating.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, REG. 51, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, pp. 1362-1363.]

Cases referred to:

- H (1) Blackpool Corpn. v. Locker, [1948] 1 All E.R. 85; [1948] 1 K.B. 349; 112 J.P. 130.
- (2) Westminster (Duke) v. Swinton, [1948] 1 All E.R. 248; [1948] 1 K.B. 524.
- (3) Progress Building, Ltd. v. Westminster City Corpn., [1947] 1 All E.R. 684; 111 J.P. 300; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Gordon, Dadds & Co. v. Morris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 616; sub nom., Gordon, Dadds & Co. v. Minister of Health, 174 L.T. 136; 110 J.P. 119; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of His Honour JUDGE SIR GERALD HURST, K.C., made at Dartford County Court on June 10, 1948, granting possession of a certain dwelling-house to the plaintiff corporation. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

Cleworth, K.C., and Sofer for the defendant.
Simes, K.C., and Squibb for the corporation.

A

BUCKNILL, L.J.: In my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed. The plaintiffs are the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the borough of Erith, and the defendant is Mr. John Raymond Holder. By the particulars of claim, which were filed in the Dartford County Court, the plaintiffs claimed the recovery of a certain dwelling-house, No. 68, Amberley Road, Abbey Wood, London, S.E.2, which they alleged was in the wrongful occupation of the defendant. The nature of the plaintiff corporation's claim was that:

B

"The premises are in the legal possession of the Minister of Health by virtue of reg. 51 of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, and the plaintiffs are, under the authority of the Minister, using the said premises for purposes authorised by the said regulation. The defendant wrongfully, and without the consent of the Minister or the plaintiffs, went into occupation of the said premises on Dec. 16, 1947, and has since remained in occupation."

C

To that the defendant delivered a defence in which he alleged that he was lawfully in possession of the dwelling-house. The question which the learned judge had to decide was whether at the time when the defendant went into physical possession of the premises the house was under requisition by the plaintiffs.

D

The house was originally requisitioned in February, 1941, when notice was given by the town clerk to the then owner, a Mr. Ashdown, that he, the town clerk, in exercise of the powers delegated to him by the Minister of Health under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, "had this day taken possession of the premises." That requisition has been extended right up to the time when the dispute arose in the present case. On Aug. 11, 1947, the defendant wrote to the town clerk of Erith a letter in which he said he was purchasing 68, Amberley Road, and wished to apply for the property to be de-requisitioned when it was vacated by the existing occupants. They were the people who went into the house when it was requisitioned and stayed in it until the defendant moved in. I need not read the rest of the defendant's letter except to say that he points out that he is married, has served in His Majesty's Forces for some years, and is a proper person to have a house if he can get one. To that letter the housing manager of the borough of Erith replied saying:

E

F

"I regret that I am not in a position to say whether it will be possible to release the above property from requisition when the present occupiers move to their own house. Your application will be considered at that date, but the matter depends on the state of emergency which may exist at that time."

G

The defendant, therefore, in August, 1947, had full notice that his desire to obtain occupation of this house might not be gratified. On Aug. 20, 1947, the defendant wrote to the Ministry of Health saying he was negotiating for the purchase of the house and wished to have it released from requisition when it was vacated by the existing tenants, and he said:

H

"This house which I wish to occupy was built in 1937 at a cost of £600, and is being sold to me for £1,050. If it were sold with vacant possession it would most probably fetch £1,800, which figure would be beyond my resources."

To that the Ministry of Health replied :

A " It is noted that you have no previous residence within the borough of Erith, and in these circumstances and having regard to the great number of necessitous families that the authority are committed to re-house, together with the limited amount of accommodation at their disposal, the Minister regrets that he cannot question the decision of the council to retain the premises under requisition until the housing position eases."

On Dec. 8, the defendant wrote to the corporation saying :

B " I am now the owner of this property and wish to apply for the property to be released from requisition as soon as it is vacated by the present tenants. I have already informed you that I desire this property for occupation by my wife, daughter and self, and I wish to emphasize that my need for possession is very great. We are at present lodging with my parents in law, and the only accommodation we have is the bedroom which we occupy. I served in the army for the period Dec. 12, 1939, to June 3, 1946, and was abroad in South-east Asia from 1943 until my demobilization in 1946, so that you will appreciate that it was impossible for me to obtain any housing accommodation during that time. At present, I am employed as a clerk in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, where I have been since 1937, except for my army service. I, therefore, request that you will give this matter due consideration and release the property, and I would add that I am prepared to take possession at the shortest possible notice."

D In reply to that the housing manager of the borough of Erith replies :

" In reply to your letter of Dec. 8, I regret that I am unable to give you any information as to when the above property may be released from requisition."

E On Dec. 17, 1947, the licensees moved out of the house, and the defendant moved in with his furniture.

The question now arises whether he is justified in moving in or whether the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the house. The only point now taken by counsel for the defendant is based on Circular No. 141, dated June 28, 1946, issued by the Ministry of Health to all local authorities and county councils

F in England. It is as follows :

G " I am directed by the Minister of Health to refer to Circular 5/46 and to say that he has decided to extend and hereby extends the operation of Circular 138/45 as amended by Circular 5/46 until Dec. 31, 1946, subject to the following modification. In the present shortage of housing accommodation it is necessary to ensure as far as possible that all houses are reasonably fully occupied, and this is the main intention of the requisitioning powers which the Minister has delegated to the clerks of local authorities. Accordingly, where an owner notifies his intention to occupy the house by himself or his family the clerk to the local authority is authorised to retain possession of the premises if the local authority are satisfied that to release the house for occupation by the owner or his family would result in serious under-occupation of the house, subject to the owner, if he so desires, being allowed to occupy such proportion of the premises by himself or his family as the local authority deem reasonable for his needs and on such terms as to payment and otherwise as the local authority may approve."

H On behalf of the defendant it is argued that Circular No. 141 of 1946 applies to the present case and the corporation were only authorised under it to retain possession of the house in certain circumstances, namely, if they were satisfied that to release it for occupation by the owner or his family would result in serious under-occupation of the house and so on. It is argued that there was no evidence that the corporation ever were so satisfied and, therefore, they were not authorised to retain possession. That argument would be one of weight if this circular applied to the present case, but, in my opinion, when one studies it—and still more when one studies Circular 138 of 1945 and Circular 5 of 1946—it becomes clear that the Ministry are dealing in the circular with unoccupied houses which they are contemplating requisitioning and that the circular has no application to houses which have already been validly requisitioned at the relevant time. The circular refers at the very outset to the requisitioning of unoccupied houses. It seems clear that if the circular applies to such a case as the present, any requisitioned house could be de-requisitioned by some stranger buying it and persuading the occupant to go out, subject, of course, to the right given to the local authority to retain possession if satisfied that release from requisition would result in serious under-occupation of the house. I asked counsel for the defendant when it was he said the house became de-requisitioned, and, as I understood his answer, he said it became de-requisitioned as soon as the defendant had bought it. If that is sound, it would greatly hamper the efforts of local authorities to house applicants in a fair way, according to their time of waiting and according to their needs.

We were referred in argument to Blackpool Corpn. v. Locker (1), and there is a passage in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J., which I think I might profitably read, dealing with this question of occupied and unoccupied houses ([1948] 1 All E.R. 90) :

“ Before I approach the history of the ways in which in the present case the corporation, on the one hand, and the Ministry, on the other, sought to use or misuse the provisions of the circulars, it is necessary to consider their true legal effect. As I have already indicated, they seem to me to have been well drafted for the purpose of effecting a considerate and fair adjustment between the public duty of housing the homeless and the private rights of the individual householder in possession, carefully differentiating between the occupied and the unoccupied, the furnished and the unfurnished, house . . . ”

I think the contention of the corporation is right, and, therefore, Circular No. 141 does not apply to this case, the defendant had no right to go in, he is a trespasser, and the plaintiffs are entitled to possession.

DENNING, L.J. : I agree. I approach this case, as I think it should be approached, on the footing that the corporation, relying as they do on special powers to turn a man out of his house, must prove their case beyond any possibility of doubt. If there is any doubt, the benefit should be given to the owner of the house.

The essential feature is that when the defendant bought this house it was requisitioned and had been requisitioned since February, 1941. On July 3, 1940, the Minister of Health, under powers conferred by the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 51, delegated to local authorities or their clerks powers to take possession of buildings for the accommodation of persons rendered homeless by enemy bombing. On Feb. 19, 1941, in pursuance of that power the town clerk of Erith requisitioned this house. On Feb. 27, 1941, the Minister of Health confirmed that action of the corporation. There can be no doubt that that requisition was lawful under the Defence Regulations then in force. In pursuance of it, the corporation put into the house a family which had been rendered homeless by enemy action. That family remained there until December, 1947. A few weeks before they left, Mr. Ashdown agreed to sell it to the defendant, and, when the occupying family quitted on Dec. 16, 1947, the defendant went into possession. Between 1940 and 1946 the Minister had delegated more, extensive powers to local authorities. Some of them are set out in the report of Blackpool Corpn. v. Locker (1). In particular, in July, 1945, by Circular No. 138, owing to the very difficult housing situation which then existed, the Minister delegated to local authorities the power to requisition unoccupied houses, not only for persons rendered homeless by enemy action, but also for persons who were inadequately housed. In delegating that power he laid down a number of conditions for the protection of the owners of the unoccupied houses. The local authority were to give the owner 14 days' notice of their intention to requisition, and, if the owner within those 14 days notified the authority that it was his intention to occupy the house, the authority were to hold their hands and not proceed with the requisition. In June, 1946, the Minister issued Circular No. 141. It had been found that the owner of a large house, suitable for five or six families, might prevent it being requisitioned by saying that he wished to occupy a small part of it himself, as in Westminster (Duke) v. Swinton (2). Accordingly, by Circular No. 141 the Minister said: "If the owner intends to occupy only a part of the house, the local authority need not release the requisition, but they must allow the owner to occupy a reasonable part of the house if he so desires." That, in my opinion, is the true construction of Circular 141. It is simply a modification placed on Circular No. 138. Whereas under Circular No. 138 the owner of an unoccupied house could prevent the requisition by saying that he intended to occupy himself, under Circular No. 141 he could only so do if he really needed the whole house for himself and his family.

Counsel for the defendant, however, argued that Circular No. 141 was independent of Circular No. 138; that, even after the 14 days had elapsed—indeed, long after the local authority had put a homeless family into occupation—the owner could claim the benefit of Circular No. 141; and, accordingly, that, if the owner notified the local authority of his intention to occupy the house, the authority could not retain possession but had to turn out the family and give up the house to the owner. That would mean, as counsel for the defendant was forced to admit, that any person who had sufficient money could buy a requisitioned house and determine the requisition by notifying the local authority that he intended to occupy it himself. If that were correct, it would destroy the whole policy of housing the homeless. That is not the true construction of the circular. The defendant got this house much cheaper than he otherwise would, solely because it was requisitioned. He now seeks to be in as good a position as if he had bought with vacant possession. He cannot do that.

During the argument I asked counsel for the corporation whether the corporation had any right to retain the house after the occupying family had quitted. In other words, when a local authority are authorised to requisition a house for a certain purpose, does not the requisition determine automatically as soon as that purpose ceases? Counsel gave answers to these questions which convinced me. He agreed that, if it could be affirmed that the original purpose has, in fact, ceased, the local authority would prima facie have no right to continue the requisition, but would have to make a fresh requisition. This is recognised by Circular No. 138 itself which says that, if the purpose of the requisition is changed, as, for instance, from warehouse purposes to housing purposes, the local authority ought to go through the procedure afresh of giving the owner 14 days' notice, and so forth. The local authority must make a new requisition for the new purpose. If that had been necessary here, the defendant, after the family had quitted, would have received the usual 14 days' notice and would have been entitled to occupy the house himself. The answer which counsel for the corporation gave was that in this case the original purpose had not ceased. Erith was heavily bombed and the corporation may still require the house to house families rendered homeless by enemy action. Counsel also pointed out that in January, 1946, by Circular No. 5 of 1946, the Minister said:

"... all houses at present requisitioned by local authorities may in future be used as a general pool of accommodation for the inadequately housed."

That means that thenceforward the houses which had been requisitioned by the local authorities for the early purposes, such as to house refugees from enemy attack, could be retained by them for the general purpose of the inadequately housed. By Circular No. 5, therefore, the Minister authorised the local authority to retain houses for the inadequately housed without making a fresh requisition. I think those answers are correct. It was clearly within the power of the Minister to change the purpose without a fresh requisition: see Progress Building, Ltd. v. Westminster City Corpn. (3), and so, too, he was within his rights in authorising the local authority to retain the houses for the inadequately housed: Gordon, Dadds & Co. v. Morris (4). So long as the corporation retain the house for that purpose, the defendant has no right to be there. He must wait until the corporation release it from the requisition. For these reasons I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed.

VAISEY, J. : At first sight it is surprising that the true owner of this property is in no better position than any other deserving and meritorious person who is, as he is, homeless, either owing to bomb damage or to the prevailing housing shortage otherwise occasioned. But only at first sight, because, in my judgment, the whole scope and intention of the relevant legislative provisions is to place requisitioned property at the unrestricted disposal of local authorities as the accredited delegates of the Ministry of Health. I find Circular No. 141 somewhat obscure in its expression and not altogether easy to interpret in conjunction with the other circulars to which reference has been made, but I have come to the conclusion that it applies only to the initial stages of a requisition. In my judgment, this property was validly requisitioned in 1941 and never ceased to be requisitioned property, and Circular No. 141 has no application to the present case. One point was adverted to in argument to which no reference has been made by my Lords. The fact that Circular No. 141 was included in the list of circulars put forward by the plaintiff corporation as relevant to the issue in the action and in this appeal cannot possibly operate as a kind of estoppel so as to preclude the corporation from alleging, as they now do, that it is nothing to do with the case. I agree that this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Thomas (H. E.) & Co. (for the defendant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for J. A. Crompton, town clerk, Erith (for the corporation).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BEESTON & STAPLEFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL AND ANOTHER v. SMITH.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, J.J.), January 20, 21, 1949.]

Solicitor—Unqualified practitioner preparing instruments—Clerk to local authority—Mortgage deeds for advances under Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899 (c. 44), s. 1 (1)—Right of authority to charge mortgagors—"Fee, gain or reward"—"Public officer"—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 47 (1), (3) (a)—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 188 (1).

An urban district council, acting under s. 1 (1) of the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899, advanced money to residents within their area to enable them to acquire the ownership of the houses in which they lived. In the course of these transactions the titles of the houses had to be investigated and mortgage deeds prepared for execution by the borrowers who paid to the council certain charges which the council made for this work. The council employed to do the work their clerk who was not a solicitor or other qualified person specified in s. 47 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1932.

A HELD: (i) the expense of preparing the deeds was not a "liability falling to be discharged by the council" within s. 188 (1) of the Local Government Act, 1933, and so was not to be discharged out of the general fund of the council, but was rightly charged on the mortgagors.

(ii) the council had prepared the deeds for "fee, gain or reward" within s. 47 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1932, although the charges paid by the mortgagors were paid into the general fund of the council.

B (iii) the clerk was not a "public officer" within the exemption to the provisions of s. 47 (1) contained in s. 47 (3) (a), the expression "public officer" in that paragraph being confined to the officer of a department of State whose salary is paid out of national, as distinct from local, funds.

[AS TO UNQUALIFIED PERSONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 312-317, paras. 346-351; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 411-416, Nos. 4724-4784.]

C Cases referred to:

(1) Lyne Regis Corpn. v. Henley, (1834), 1 Bing. N.C. 222; 8 Bli. N.S. 690; 2 Cl. & Fin. 331; 1 Scott, 29; 44 Digest 83, 642.

(2) Re Mirams, [1891] 1 Q.B. 594; 5 Digest 725, 6297.

CASE STATED by Nottinghamshire justices.

D At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Nottingham on March 22, 1948, informations were preferred by the respondent, Robert James Tull Smith, a solicitor, on behalf of the Law Society, under s. 47 of the Solicitors Act, 1932 (as amended by s. 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1941), against the first appellants, Beeston and Stapleford Urban District Council, for that on various dates between Apr. 7, 1947, and Oct. 11, 1947, they, not being a barrister, solicitor, law agent, writer to the signet, notary public, special pleader, or draftsman in equity, for or in expectation of fee, gain, or reward indirectly or directly did draw or prepare instruments relating to real estate, namely, certain mortgage deeds. The second appellant, Charles Harold Wragg, who was the clerk to the first appellants, was charged on further informations with drawing the deeds in question. These deeds were drawn in connection with advances made by the first appellants under the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899, to residents in houses to enable them to acquire the ownership thereof. The justices convicted the appellants and fined them each 10s. on each information. The appellants appealed, and the Divisional Court now dismissed their appeals.

Fitzgerald, K.C., and Cotes-Freedy for the appellants.

Paull, K.C., and Cumming-Bruce for the respondent.

G LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The appellant council has adopted the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899, as amended by the Local Government Act, 1933. Under those Acts they can act much in the same way as a building society acts—they can make advances to ratepayers in their district to enable them to buy the houses in which they reside, and they repay the loans over a period of instalments, the council taking a mortgage on the property by way of security. For some years past the council employed solicitors to do the conveyancing business rendered necessary by the taking of the mortgage—the investigation of the title and the drawing of the mortgage deed. In many of these cases, no doubt, the drawing of the mortgage deeds is a very simple matter, because a printed form is used, and so also is the investigation of title, now that we have registration of title.

H The Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1) (as amended by the Solicitors Act, 1941 s. 23), provides that an unqualified person, i.e., any person who is not a barrister, solicitor, conveyancer, and so forth

“ . . . who, unless he proves that the act was not done for or in expectation of any fee, gain or reward, either directly or indirectly, draws or prepares any instrument relating to real or personal estate . . . ”

commits an offence. In this case, the local authority, finding that they were losing money over the transactions under the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899, sought to recoup themselves in respect of their losses by instructing their clerk to do the mortgage business and the conveyancing attached to it, instead of instructing solicitors. Their clerk is not one of the qualified persons mentioned in the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47, although I have no doubt that, so far as his duties as clerk to a local authority are concerned, he is a highly skilled official. The justices have stated two findings in the Case. They express the opinion, first, that it was ultra vires the local authority to make any charge. With all respect to the justices, who evidently gave great attention to this case, I think that they were quite wrong on this point, and counsel for the respondent does not seek to uphold the convictions on that ground. By the Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899, s. 9 (3) :

“ All expenses of a local authority in the execution of this Act shall be paid in the case of a county out of the county rate, and in the case of a county borough out of the borough fund or borough rate, and in the case of any urban or rural district out of any fund or rate applicable to the general purposes of the Public Health Acts . . . ”

That was repealed by the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 307, and sched. XI, pt. IV, and s. 188 (1) of the Act of 1933 provides that all liabilities falling to be discharged by the council shall be discharged out of the general rate fund. The justices, I think, took the view that these conveyancing charges were a liability of the council, which, of course, they were not. The charges are a liability which the mortgagor has to discharge. In the present instance the mortgagors paid the charges to the solicitor employed by the council when the council employed solicitors, and they paid them to the council when the council appointed their clerk to do the business instead of employing solicitors. Counsel for the appellants submitted that they did not act for any fee, gain or reward, because the fee, gain or reward went into the general rate fund. We cannot accept that contention. The council are a corporation, and, by the Solicitors Act, 1934, s. 1, for the present purpose they are a “ person ” within the meaning of s. 47 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1932. They can, of course, only act by their servants, and they are responsible for the acts of their servants and the instructions which they may give their servants. They made a charge which the mortgagor had to pay, and, therefore, they were acting for a “ fee, gain, or reward.” It matters not into what banking account or fund the money found its way when it had been received by them.

The justices further held that the clerk was a public officer within the exemption from the provisions of s. 47 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1932, contained in s. 47 (3) (a). Therefore, they said, if it had not been for the fact that they had held that making the charges was ultra vires the council, they would have dismissed the summons. We think that they were wrong in that view also. The Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (3) provides :

“ This section shall not extend to (a) any public officer drawing or preparing instruments in the course of his duty . . . ”

The words “ public officer ” are words to which different meanings can be given according to the statute in which they occur. For instance, in the course of the argument I called attention to the expression “ public officer ” which is to be found in the Country Bankers Act, 1826. In that Act, country bankers who were carrying on business in partnership had to appoint for certain purposes certain members of the partnership who were to be known as "public officers." Under that Act one did not have to consider whether a public officer was paid out of public funds. In the case of the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (3), however, we have to consider whether the expression "public officer" refers to any clerk of a local authority or whether it must not be given a stricter interpretation, i.e., an officer of a public department.

- A Our attention was called to Lyme Regis Corpn. v. Henley (1), but that case merely decided that where a corporation had a grant of land which imposed a duty to keep it in good order any member of the public who was injured by failure to fulfil that duty could maintain an action in the same way as a member of the public who uses the highway and is injured by an act of misfeasance has a cause of action against the public authority who is responsible for the maintenance of the road. Lyme Regis Corporation were public officers for that purpose. In the present case we have to remember that the object of the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 47 (1), is to ensure that conveyancing matters are carried out by qualified persons. We ought not, therefore, to give a very wide meaning to the word "public officer" in s. 47 (3) (a), because that would, perhaps, open the door to a great number of people claiming the right to do conveyancing which it was not intended by Parliament that they should do.

- C The expression "public officer" is again used in the Solicitors Act, 1933, s. 4 (1). The definition which follows in s. 4 (2)—and which is, it is true, limited to the particular section—is :

- D "In this section the expression 'public officer' means an officer whose remuneration is defrayed out of—(a) moneys provided by Parliament ; or (b) the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall or the Duchy of Lancaster ; or (c) the common fund of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners ; or (d) the general fund of Queen Anne's Bounty ; or (e) the fund of the Electricity Commissioners ; or (f) the Forestry Fund ; or (g) the Development Fund ; or (h) any other revenues or fund for the time being prescribed by the Treasury."

- E A "public officer" within the meaning of s. 47 (3) (a) is an officer of a public department, one of the departments of State or one of the departments which is set out as a public department under various Acts of Parliament, whose salary is charged on national as distinct from local funds. That is supported by the opinion of CAVE, J., in Re Mirams (2). In that case CAVE, J., sitting in bankruptcy, had to consider whether the assignment of the salary of a chaplain of a workhouse and workhouse infirmary was void as being against public policy, because it had been held in many cases that a public officer, that is to say, an officer who was paid out of national funds, could not assign his salary. CAVE, J., said ([1891] 1 Q.B. 596) :

- G "In this case it is true that the salary is paid out of a poor rate, and that the chaplain, although appointed by the guardians, can only be dismissed by the Local Government Board ; but I am of opinion that this is no solid ground of distinction. To make the office a public office, the pay must come out of national and not out of local funds, and the office must be public in the strict sense of that term."

- H There, as I say, the judge was, no doubt, considering whether a certain transaction was void as being against public policy, but it seems to me that those words equally apply to this case, and I have no doubt the words "public officer" in this sub-section should be limited to a public officer in the strict sense, that is to say, an officer of a public department whose salary is charged on national and not local funds.

For these reasons, the appeal fails. The convictions must be held to be right, but on different grounds from those on which the justices convicted, which we think were wrong.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

FINNEMORE, J. : I also agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Savery, Stevens & Nutt, agents for R. A. Young & Pearce, Nottingham (for the appellants) ; Hempsons (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

d. R. v. MATTHEWS. [1950]
R.137.

RUSE v. READ.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 17, 26, 1949.]

Larceny—Original taking a trespass—Subsequent animus furandi.

On June 30, 1948, the respondent was staying at his mother's home at S. An amusement fair was being held at S. on that day, and at about 9.30 p.m. one P. rode his bicycle to the fair and left it against the wall on the side of the entrance to the fair ground, into which he went. On returning at 9.45 p.m. he found the bicycle missing. That evening the respondent had visited several public houses, where he had drunk a quantity of liquor, before he went to the fair ground. He saw the bicycle, took it and rode it for about two hours. He had by then become sober and, not knowing what to do with the bicycle, he took it home with him and put it in the lane behind his mother's house. Next morning, being in a "panicky" condition and not knowing what to do with the bicycle, he took it to S. railway station and consigned it by rail, addressing the label : "Mr. R., Y. railway station, to be collected." The respondent, being charged before justices with the larceny of the bicycle, gave evidence that, when he took the bicycle, he did not realise, in consequence of his condition, the significance of what he was doing, and that his object in sending it to Y. was to get it out of his possession. He had no intention of going to Y. to collect the bicycle. The justices held that at the time of taking the bicycle the respondent had no intention of permanently depriving the owner of his property and was incapable of forming such an intention, and, consequently, that he was Not Guilty of the offence charged. Accordingly, they dismissed the information. On an appeal by the prosecutor,

HELD : the original taking of the bicycle by the respondent being wrongful, i.e., a trespass (though not felonious because of an absence of any animus furandi), the misappropriation of the machine on the following day, when the respondent clearly intended to deprive the owner permanently of his property, amounted to larceny, and the respondent should have been convicted.

R. v. Riley, (1853) (Dears. C.C. 149 ; 20 L.T.O.S. 228), followed.

[AS TO INTENTION TO DEPRIVE OWNER OF GOODS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 498, 499, para. 857 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, pp. 884-990, Nos. 9702-9768.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Public Prosecutions Director v. Beard, [1920] A.C. 479 ; sub nom., R. v. Beard, 122 L.T. 625 ; 84 J.P. 129 ; 14 Digest 65, 306.
- (2) R. v. Riley, (1853), Dears. C.C. 149 ; 20 L.T.O.S. 228 ; 17 J.P. 69 ; 15 Digest 878, 9634.
- (3) R. v. Ashwell, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 190 ; 53 L.T. 773 ; 50 J.P. 181 ; 15 Digest 877, 9627.
- (4) R. v. Hudson, [1943] 1 All E.R. 642 ; [1943] K.B. 458 ; 169 L.T. 46 ; 107 J.P. 134 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Devon justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction at Sidmouth an information was preferred by the appellant, Ruse, a police officer, charging the respondent, Ivan Steward Read, with the larceny of a pedal bicycle, the property of R. A. M. Purchase, contrary to s. 2 of the Larceny Act, 1916. The justices dismissed the information. The Divisional Court now allowed an appeal by the prosecutor. The facts appear in the headnote and the judgment of the court.

- A Malcolm Wright for the appellant (the prosecutor).
Dewar for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 26. HUMPHREYS, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Case stated by justices of Devon sitting at Sidmouth on a question of law arising on the hearing of an information whereby the respondent was charged at the instance of the appellant, a police sergeant, for that he, on June 30, 1948, stole a pedal bicycle with a pump and a dynamo lighting set, the property of one Raymond Purchase. The respondent elected to be tried summarily and the justices dismissed the information.

- C It was proved that the bicycle in question was wrongfully taken by some person between 9.30 and 9.45 p.m. on June 30 from the entrance to an amusement fair being held at Yard Mead Meadow, on the Sidford road within two or three miles of Sidmouth. The respondent was an electrical artificer in the Fleet Air Arm stationed at Warrington, in Lancashire, but on June 30 he was on leave and living in his mother's house at Sidmouth. He was 19 years of age and of good character. His connection with the bicycle in question is best told in the words of the Case. Paragraph 4, sub-paras. (3) and (4) of the Case state :

- E “ (3) On the same evening the respondent who had visited at least five public houses and had been drinking a quantity of rough cider and beer walked to the fair ground and round the various side shows there. On leaving the fair ground he noticed the bicycle belonging to Raymond Purchase leaning against the wall. It was noticeable and because of its bright red colour he was attracted to it. He took the bicycle and rode about on it in the neighbourhood for about two hours. He had by then sobered up, and, not knowing what to do with the bicycle, he went home and put it in the lane behind his mother's house in which he was then living and went straight to bed. (4) On July 1, 1948, at about 9 a.m. he was, as he said in his sworn evidence, in a ‘panicky’ condition and wondered what to do with the bicycle. He had told no one that he had taken it, but to get it away from his mother's house he removed the dynamo and pump from the bicycle. The dynamo he then sent by registered post addressed to himself at H.M.S. ‘Ariel,’ West Warrington. The pump he left at his home. At 10.45 a.m. at Sidmouth railway station he consigned the bicycle by rail for the sum of 12s. 2d. to York labelled ‘Mr. Read, York railway station, to be collected’.”

Paragraph 5 says :

- H “ On the same day at 4.30 p.m. Arthur Thomas White, a schoolboy returning home from school, saw the bicycle at Sidmouth railway station, recognised it as belonging to Raymond Purchase, and the police were informed.”

That evening the respondent was seen by a police constable. He then made a statement to the effect stated in para. 4, sub-paras. (3), (4), and added :

“ My purpose in sending it (the bicycle) to York was to get rid of it as I didn't know what to do with it after sobering up. I thought if I sent it away and as I was returning to my station on Friday, July 7, no one would know anything about it.”

On the hearing of the information the respondent gave evidence on oath to the same effect as his statement to the police. In the course of his evidence he said that when he sent the bicycle to York he had no intention of going to York to collect it. The opinion of the justices is :

" We carefully considered all the evidence, including that of the respondent and his manner and demeanour in giving it. We came unanimously to the conclusion that at the time of the taking he had no intention of permanently depriving the owner of his property and was incapable of forming one, and that, consequently, he was not guilty of the offence charged and dismissed the same."

The question which the court is asked to answer is whether on this statement of facts the justices came to a correct decision in point of law, which we construe as meaning whether there was any evidence to support the finding which I have just read.

This court is always loth to disturb a finding of fact by justices, and, particularly, where the finding is in favour of an accused person, but the decision in this case, having regard to the evidence, does seem to us a startling one. It is to be observed that no attempt was made to show that the respondent formed any intention at the time of the taking, such as an intention to borrow the machine and then return it to its owner. The argument accepted by the justices was that by reason of drunkenness he was incapable of forming any intention at all. The only evidence in support of that finding was (i) that after leaving the public house he walked to the fair ground and round the various side shows, (ii) that he was considerably under the influence of drink when he took the bicycle, (iii) that he rode the bicycle, apparently without accident, for two hours, and (iv) that he rode it home and then secreted it in the lane behind his mother's house. The respondent in the witness box did not put his case higher than that at the time of taking the bicycle, " in consequence of his condition, he did not realise the significance of having taken it," whatever that may mean.

The decision of the House of Lords in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard (1) shows that on the question of intention evidence of a state of drunkenness rendering the accused incapable of forming the intent necessary to constitute the particular crime should be taken into consideration with the other facts of the case, not because drunkenness in itself is an excuse for the crime, but because the state of drunkenness may be incompatible with the actual crime charged, and may, therefore, negative the commission of that crime. Can it be said that a man who is able to mount and ride a bicycle for two hours is yet so incapable drunk that he is unable to apply his mind to the simple question whether he intends to take the machine away for good or to borrow and return it ? Had there been no other question to be considered, the court would have found it very difficult to uphold this decision, but counsel for the appellant has drawn our attention to another aspect of the case—perhaps, of more general importance. Whatever may have been the state of mind of the respondent on the night of June 30, it is clear beyond dispute that on the next morning, not only did he fail to take any steps to return the bicycle to the place from which he had taken it or to inform the police or anyone else that he was in possession of the machine, but, on the contrary, he did everything in his power to prevent the discovery by the owner of either the machine or the accessories. Nothing could be more indicative of his then intention to deprive Mr. Purchase permanently of his property. It is equally clear that on the previous evening in taking away the bicycle he had committed a trespass since he had no permission from the owner.

The question then arises : Even if the taking on June 30, though unlawful, was not felonious because of the absence of the essential intention, did it become so when that intention was manifested on the following day? Counsel for the appellant relies on R. v. Riley (2). That was a case in which Riley had put into a field belonging to one Clark 29 of his own lambs, there being already there 10 lambs belonging to one Burnside. Early in the morning Riley drove away his 29 lambs and with them one lamb belonging to Burnside. He sold his lambs, and, it being pointed out by the purchaser, that there were 30 lambs, he completed the sale and received the price of the 30 lambs which he appropriated to his own use. He later denied having done so and told other untruths about the matter. He was indicted for stealing the lamb of Burnside, and the jury returned a verdict as follows (Dears C.C. 151):

" . . . at the time of leaving the field the prisoner did not know that the lamb was in his flock, and that he was guilty of felony at the time it was pointed out to him."

On a Case reserved the Court for Crown Cases Reserved unanimously held that the conviction was right. In the course of the argument PARKE, B., put the matter succinctly as follows (ibid., 156):

"The taking being a trespass; when there is the animus furandi it becomes a felony."

Without calling upon counsel for the Crown, POLLOCK, C.B., delivered judgment, distinguished some earlier cases and said (ibid., 158):

"In the case now before the court, the prisoner's possession of the lamb was from the beginning wrongful. Here the taking of the lamb from the field was a trespass . . . if the original possession be rightful, subsequent misappropriation does not make it a felony; but if the original possession be wrongful, though not felonious, and then a man disposes of the chattel, animus furandi, it is larceny."

PARKE, B., in his judgment observed (ibid.):

"The original taking was not lawful. The prisoner being originally a trespasser, he continued a trespasser all along . . . and, being a trespasser, the moment he took the lamb with a felonious intent, he became a thief. He at first simply commits a trespass; but as soon as he entertains a felonious intent that becomes a felonious trespass."

WILLIAMS, J., TALFOURD, J., and CROMPTON, J., concurred in that decision. In the case put, where the original possession was rightful, regard must, of course, be had to-day to the provision now embodied in the Larceny Act, 1916, making larceny by a bailee punishable, otherwise Riley's case (2) stands. It was not new law in 1853. SIR MATTHEW HALE in his HISTORY OF THE PLEAS OF THE CROWN, vol. 1, p. 509, writes:

" . . . if my servant without my privity, takes my horse, and rides abroad 10 or 12 miles upon his own occasions, and returns again, it is no felony, but if in his journey he sells my horse, as his own, this is a declarative of his first taking to be felonious and animus furandi."

SIR MATTHEW HALE would apparently have approved the decision in Riley's case (2). That decision is treated by SIR JAMES STEPHEN in his DIGEST OF THE CRIMINAL LAW, 8th ed., p. 329, art. 366, as part of the law of England. In that authoritative work, POSSESSION IN THE COMMON LAW, by POLLOCK and WRIGHT, SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, who wrote Part 2, states at p. 114 that:

" . . . the judgment of PARKE, B., in Riley's case (2) . . . has now been accepted as authoritative, though not always without reluctance, for more than 30 years."

In Part 3, written by SIR ROBERT WRIGHT, afterwards R. S. WRIGHT, J., at p. 142 the case is fully discussed as an important authority apparently with approval. R. v. Ashwell (3), where the fourteen judges were equally divided (though, as afterwards appeared, the difference of opinion was rather on the facts than on the law), was also referred to by counsel for the appellant. The facts in that case were that Ashwell asked Keogh for the loan of a shilling. Keogh gave him what he believed to be a shilling and Ashwell took it under the same belief. Some time afterwards Ashwell discovered that the coin was a sovereign. He then and there fraudulently appropriated it to his own use. Ashwell, being convicted of larceny of the sovereign, DENMAN, J., reserved the question for the judges. The only one of the judges who referred to the case of Riley (2) was LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., who observed (16 Q.B.D. 226) that the conviction in that case was upheld on a ground extremely technical, but regarded it as "... an authority under circumstances hardly different from those in the present case for upholding this conviction."

A

B

The only other case to which our attention was drawn was the decision of this court in R. v. Hudson (4). In that case the appellant had received by post an envelope intended for some other person. He kept it for some days and then on opening it he found inside a cheque drawn to J. Hudson, but intended, as he knew, for some other person. He then fraudulently appropriated the cheque. Being convicted of larceny of the cheque, he appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeal. The argument on his behalf was to the effect that, as he had no animus furandi when he received the envelope containing the cheque, he could not be convicted. The court upheld the conviction on the ground that the effective taking of the cheque by the appellant was when he opened the envelope and at once appropriated the contents since, as CHARLES, J., said ([1943] K.B. 462), in the course of delivering the judgment of the court,

C

D

"At that moment, for the first time, he was in a position—in which he had not been before—to form an intent."

We agree with that decision. Being of opinion that the decision in Riley's case (2) is still good law and binding on this court and that the case is not distinguishable from the present one, our judgment is that the justices misdirected themselves and should have found the offence proved. The case must go back to them with that expression of opinion.

E

Appeal allowed. Case remitted with direction that offence proved.

Solicitors: Crawley and de Reya, agents for J. C. M. Dyke, McLusky and Hughes, Exeter (for the appellant); Gibson and Weldon, agents for Chard and Corwell, Sidmouth (for the respondent).

F

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Lied. WHITTY v. SCOTT-RUSSELL.
[1 All E.R. 884.]

LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH.

G

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell and Singleton, L.JJ.), January 20, 21, 24, 1949.]

Rent Restriction—"Dwelling-house"—Two separated flats let together—Rateable value of the dwelling-house—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16 (1)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), ss. 3 (1), 7 (1).

H

Estoppel—Landlord's assumption of applicability of Rent Acts—Subsequent denial.

By an agreement, dated July 1, 1941, two flats, which up to that date had been let separately, were let together to one tenant on a quarterly tenancy commencing on Sept. 1, 1941. The flats were on the same floor, but were separated by other flats. On Apr. 1, 1939, the rateable value of one flat was £98 and of the other £92. At no time were the two flats assessed together as one dwelling-house.

HELD : (i) the flats together constituted a dwelling-house within the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 16 (1).

Sheehan v. Cutler ([1946] K.B. 339; 174 L.T. 411) and Selwyn v. Hamill ([1948] 1 All E.R. 70), distinguished.

(ii) although the two flats were first let as one dwelling-house in 1941 the rating valuation list in April, 1939, showed the rateable value of the dwelling-house for the purposes of ss. 3 (1) and 7 (1) of the Act of 1939 in that the separate value of each flat appeared and the aggregate of their separate values exceeded £100 and, therefore, the dwelling-house was outside the Rent Acts.

Vaughan v. Shaw ([1945] 2 All E.R. 52; [1945] K.B. 400; 173 L.T. 6), considered.

(iii) the landlords were not estopped, by their assumption throughout most of the negotiations that the Rent Acts applied, from pleading that they were inapplicable.

Decision of BIRKETT, J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 439; [1948] 2 K.B. 423), affirmed.

[AS TO PREMISES WITHIN THE RENT RESTRICTIONS ACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-316, paras. 368-373; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 557-559, Nos. 7042-7067.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Sheehan v. Cutler, [1946] K.B. 339; 174 L.T. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Selwyn v. Hamill, [1948] 1 All E.R. 70.

(3) A.-G. v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Assocn., Ltd., (1876), L.R. 1 Exch. D. 469; 35 L.T. 224.

(4) Vaughan v. Shaw, [1945] 2 All E.R. 52; [1945] K.B. 400; 173 L.T. 6; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from a judgment of BIRKETT, J., dated June 11, 1948, and reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 439.

The landlords claimed possession of two flats which, by an agreement dated July 1, 1941, had together been demised to the tenant on a quarterly tenancy commencing on Sept. 1, 1941. The tenant counterclaimed for money paid in excess of the standard rent. BIRKETT, J., found that the Rent Restrictions Acts did not apply since (1) the flats did not constitute a "separate dwelling-house"; (2) even if they did, the rateable value on Apr. 1, 1939, exceeded £100; and he further held that (3) the landlords were not estopped by their assumption over a period that the Acts did apply. He, therefore, gave judgment for the landlords. The Court of Appeal differed from BIRKETT, J., as regards (1), but agreed with his holdings (2) and (3), and dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

Scott Henderson, K.C., and I. H. Jacob for the tenant.

Beney, K.C., and Heathcote-Williams for the landlords.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : SOMERVELL, L.J., will deliver the first judgment.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : The landlords sought possession of certain premises, 13 and 15, West Heath Court, Golders Green, London, and garage No. 24, from the tenant. Those premises had been let to the tenant under successive tenancy agreements, the first of which was dated July 1, 1941, and the last of which had been duly determined at the time when the proceedings were brought. The tenant claimed the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts, and the landlords disputed his right to do so. If any Rent Restrictions Act applies to protect the tenant, it is common ground that it is the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939.

The premises consisted of two flats which had previously been separately let. They were on the same floor of a block of flats, though not next to each other. They were first let by a memorandum of agreement dated July 1, 1941 :

"The landlord agrees to let and the tenant agrees to take all those dwelling-rooms and premises being on the fourth floor and numbering 13/15 of the messuage and tenement known as West Heath Court North End Road Golders Green in the county of London together with garage No. 24."

It is not disputed that the tenant took these two flats as a home for himself and some relatives. The judge decided that he was not entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts.

The first point taken by counsel for the landlords was that this was not a letting of a dwelling-house within the definition of "dwelling-house" in s. 16 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, that section being incorporated in the Act of 1939 by appropriate words which occur in s. 7 of the latter Act. The definition of "dwelling-house" in s. 16 of the Act of 1933 is :

" 'Dwelling-house' has the same meaning as in the principal Acts, that is to say, a house let as a separate dwelling or a part of a house being a part so let."

Counsel for the landlords submitted that two self-contained flats capable of being let, and, in fact, having been previously let, as separate flats cannot be let as a separate dwelling. I think the learned judge accepted this contention, although he decided the case on another ground ; but, if he did accept it, with respect I do not agree. It is plain that the words in the definition "dwelling-house . . . that is to say, a house," include and cover a flat. Under the Interpretation Act, 1889, the singular includes the plural unless the context otherwise requires. In my opinion, if the facts justify such a finding, two flats or, indeed, so far as I can see, two houses, could be let as a separate dwelling-house within the meaning of the definition. Here the tenant wished to accommodate in his home the relatives to whom I have referred and he wanted more accommodation than could be conveniently found in one flat. He, therefore, took the two flats and made those two flats his home. Counsel for the landlords suggested at one time that there might be some absurdity, if, say, a man took under a single lease (which does not seem very probable) two flats in widely separated districts, but that case can be dealt with when it arises.

I turn to the judgment of BIRKETT, J., because on this point he relied on two cases which dealt with a different subject-matter—the question whether the accommodation which a landlord seeking possession was offering was suitable alternative accommodation, and the provisions of s. 3 (1) and s. 3 (3) of the Act of 1933 had to be construed and applied. Those are the familiar provisions which provide that in certain circumstances no order for possession can be made unless the court is satisfied that suitable alternative accommodation will be available to the tenant when the order or judgment takes effect. Sub-section (3) sets out certain requirements which have to be fulfilled if the accommodation is to be considered suitable alternative accommodation. In both those cases what in effect was being offered was accommodation in a house supplemented by a room in another and separate house. BIRKETT, J., after citing passages from the judgment of MORTON, L.J., in Sheehan v. Cutler (1), summed up the ratio decidendi of the decision in that case thus ([1948] 2 All E.R. 441) :

"The learned Lord Justice goes on to deal further with those matters and comes to the conclusion, with which the other members of the court agree, that the question of suitable alternative accommodation is not satisfied by the offer of a house with the additional offer of a single room in another house but contemplates similar accommodation to that which he originally had."

The other case, in which Sheehan v. Cutler (1) was followed and applied, was Selwyn v. Hamill (2). As it seems to me, when a landlord is seeking possession from a tenant who has been accommodated with his family in a single house, the question whether alternative accommodation which requires one member of the family to use a room in a separate house is reasonably suitable is different from that which we have to decide on this part of the present case, and I do not think that what is said in those cases on the construction of those sub-sections, regard being paid to the context which excludes the application of the Interpretation Act, 1889, providing that the singular includes the plural, affects in any way the validity of the decision to which I have to come in this case. I think that these premises do come within the definition of "dwelling-house" in s. 16 of the Act of 1939.

The second point arises on certain sections of the Act of 1939. The landlords say that the tenant is not entitled to the protection of that Act because the rateable value of the dwelling-house exceeds the limits within which that Act is applicable. The relevant provision is s. 3 of the Act of 1939 which provides :

"(1) Without prejudice to the operation of the two preceding sections in relation to any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts applied immediately before the commencement of this Act the principal Acts, as amended by the last preceding section, shall, subject to the provisions of this section, apply to every other dwelling-house of which the rateable value on the appropriate day did not exceed (a) in the metropolitan police district or the city of London, £100."

Did the rateable value on the appropriate day exceed £100? To ascertain what was the appropriate day and how the rateable value is defined one has to refer to s. 7 (1) of the Act of 1939 which provides :

"... 'rateable value on the appropriate day,' in relation to any dwelling-house, means (subject to the following provisions of this section) the value shown, with respect to that dwelling-house, on that day in the valuation list then in force, as the rateable value or, where the net annual value differs from the rateable value, as the net annual value; and 'the appropriate day' means, as respects the administrative county of London, Apr. 6, 1939, or, as respects the remainder of England, Apr. 1, 1939. . ."

Counsel for the tenant relied on sub-s. (2) of this section which provides :

"In relation to any dwelling-house of which the rateable value on the appropriate day was not on that day separately assessed, any reference in the preceding provisions of this Act to the rateable value on the appropriate day shall be construed as a reference to such proportion of the rateable value on that day of the property in which the dwelling-house is comprised as may be apportioned to the dwelling-house by the county court in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (3) of s. 12 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920."

That sub-section, in my opinion, does not assist in this appeal, because it is dealing with a case, which I shall show is not this case, namely, where the dwelling-house is part of a larger rateable or rated unit. Sub-section (3) provides :

"In relation to any dwelling-house first assessed after the appropriate day, any reference in the preceding provisions of this Act to the rateable value on the appropriate day shall be construed as a reference to the rateable value on the day on which the dwelling-house was first assessed."

The two flats on the appropriate day within the definition which I have read being separately let at that time appear in the valuation list, one at £98, and the other at £92. There was a retrospective reduction at a later date, but the effect of that still left the sum of the two assessments in excess of £100. I will leave aside the garage for the moment because a separate argument was based on that. The first question, as it seems to me in view of the terms of s. 7 of the Act of 1939, is: Was a value shown with respect to this dwelling-house on the appropriate day in April, 1939, in the valuation list then in force? As was pointed out in the course of the argument by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, the Rent Restrictions Acts deal with premises which constitute in ordinary language the home of the tenant, whereas Rating Acts deal with hereditaments. The two often coincide. A man's home is a separately rateable and rated hereditament, and no particular problem arises, but there are many cases, and the Act makes special provision for them, in which the premises taken by the tenant as his home, as a dwelling-house within the meaning of the Act, is only part of the hereditament which the authorities have rated, and in those circumstances there is provision for an apportionment. If, however, I am right in the earlier part of this judgment, the dwelling-house which has to be considered may consist of two rateable hereditaments, as happened here, there having been separate assessments of No. 13 and No. 15. Counsel for the tenant submitted that when the tenant entered into his first tenancy agreement in respect of Nos. 13 and 15, a new rateable hereditament came into existence. That hereditament, he said, has never been assessed, and he relied on s. 7 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938, which provides:

"If any question arises in any proceedings whether the principal Acts apply to a dwelling-house, it shall be deemed to be a dwelling-house to which those Acts apply unless the contrary is shown."

He said that the contrary cannot be shown because there never has been a first assessment of this dwelling-house within s. 7 (3) of the Act of 1939, and, therefore, the landlords have failed to discharge the onus of proof which the section places on them of showing that the dwelling-house is outside the Act. I am unable to accept this contention. As it seems to me, if a man takes two flats, as here, or two adjoining houses, that fact has no relevance from the point of view of the rating valuation. If the tenant, having taken the two houses under one document, proceeds to sub-let one of them, counsel for the tenant did not suggest that that could have any effect on the rating valuation. As I followed his argument, if the tenant, having taken the two houses, puts, say, his parents in one of them without charging a rent, but the parents have their own establishment there, eat there and sleep there and have their living rooms there, then again he would not say that a new rateable unit had come into existence, but he submits that the position is different if, as here, the two separately rated premises (as to which I should, perhaps, have stated there was no structural alteration of any kind made when they were taken by the tenant) are used as what I may call a combined establishment, and that in such a case a new rateable hereditament comes into existence to which the entries in the valuation list as at April, 1939, have no application. I could not appreciate any real reason for that submission which counsel for the tenant advanced. The view which I have formed is that it is incorrect to say that, if a man takes two flats, the rateable value is affected by that fact, even though he uses them in the way described here, namely, all the meals being taken in one flat, and the other being used for sleeping and living purposes. It seems to me, therefore, that, although this dwelling-house consisting of the two flats combined was first let as a dwelling-house in 1941, that does not alter the fact that in the valuation list in force in April, 1939, a value was shown with respect to that dwelling-house, that value being the sum of the rateable values of flat No. 13 and flat No. 15.

Counsel for the landlords, in submitting that the conclusion to which I have come was right, referred us to two cases. It is only necessary to refer to one of them, namely, A.-G. v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association, Ltd. (3). In that case, which dealt with some rather complicated provisions, there were blocks of flats, each block containing suites, like chambers in the Inns of Court, and those suites had, for certain statutory purposes, all been separately rated. The question was whether for other statutory purposes, for which it was held that the defendants had to be rated as occupiers of the whole of the blocks, that value could be arrived at by aggregating the rateable values placed on the separate suites. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., after referring to certain words in the statute, said (L.R. I Exch. D. 481) :

"Now it is said that, under those words, inasmuch as you have to value the house, and the house as such has not been separately valued in any valuation list, though each tenement composing the house has been so valued, it is necessary to make a separate valuation of one hereditament, namely, the house. One answer to that might be that the words 'separately valued' mean when you cannot ascertain its separate value; and that in the present case you can ascertain its separate value from the valuation list by adding up the value of all the tenements; in fact, that it is for this purpose separately valued, because you can ascertain without going beyond the list the total separate valuation of the hereditaments. It may be in two parts or in ten parts, but the total of the two or the ten parts does give you the separate valuation."

The statutory provisions there were different, but it seems to me that the principle which has led me to the conclusion at which I have arrived in the present case on the construction of the statutes with which we have here to deal is in accordance with the principle which was applied in that case. I should also refer to a case which was relied on by counsel for the tenant, namely, Vaughan v. Shaw (4) which dealt with a dwelling-house which :

"... was let on Sept. 1, 1939, to two tenants occupying distinct, but not structurally separated, tenements at rents of 17s. and 15s. 6d. a week respectively. In January, 1941, the house was let as a whole to a tenant at 25s. a week."

The question there was : What was the standard rent of the house let as a whole ?, and the Court of Appeal (McKINNON, LAWRENCE and MORTON, L.JJ.) held "... that the standard rent of the house was 25s. a week, being the rent at which it was first let as a whole, and not 32s. 6d. the aggregate of the rents of the two parts."

I do not propose to go through that case in detail, but there seems to me to be no inconsistency in holding in the present case that, although these two flats were first let as a dwelling-house in 1941, that does not prevent its rateable value as defined in the Act of 1939, being ascertained by reference to entries in the valuation list in force in April, 1939.

Counsel for the tenant raised a separate point with regard to the garage. The garage was one of a number of garages which were assessed as a block, and a figure of some £6 was said to be the proportion of the total assessment of the block which should be allocated to this garage. Counsel submitted that there is no assessment on what was let here, namely, the two flats and the garage; there had been no legal apportionment by a court of the total rateable value of the block of garages. There was merely an estimate put forward, and, therefore, he said, the dwelling-house, which included the garage, has never been assessed, and the rateable value of the dwelling-house, which includes the garage, cannot be found by looking at the valuation list. I do not think that that argument succeeds, for the reason that what one has to consider here is whether or not the rateable value on the appropriate day exceeded £100. If you find, when looking at the valuation list, that, as here, the rateable value of the dwelling-house, apart from the garage, exceeds £100, that seems to me sufficient proof by the landlord that what he has let is outside the Act. You may, of course, get borderline cases. If the rateable value of the premises, apart from the garage, was, say, £99, and the landlord sought to show that when there was added the rateable value of a garage which had never been separately assessed that brought the value over £100, he might have to take steps which have not been taken here, the nature of which it is not necessary to consider because that is not this case. In this case the landlords can show that the value of that part of what was let which, in fact, comprised the whole of the premises in which the tenant was to dwell exceeded £100, and that, it seems to me, is sufficient for them. As was pointed out by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS when this point was under discussion, one might have a case where a man agreed to take a house the rateable value of which was say, £150, on condition that the landlord put up a garage. The landlord did so, the house was taken, and, if the argument of counsel for the tenant is right, the tenant could say: "This dwelling-house, which now includes the garage, has never been assessed, and, therefore, you have failed to show that it was outside the Act." That would be a remarkable conclusion, and I do not find any words in the Act which would lead one to it. On this point the learned judge decided in favour of the landlords, for the reasons which I have tried to express, and I agree with his conclusion on that point. A

B
C
D

Another issue was argued below. It was sought to be said that, even if the Acts did not in law apply, the landlords were estopped from so maintaining. I think there is no doubt that at a certain stage in the negotiations, or, possibly, throughout most of them, the landlords thought that these premises were within the Acts, and there were various discussions about what was the standard rent and so on. So far as the point of estoppel was concerned, counsel for the tenant, I think, admitted—in any event we all clearly hold—that what was pleaded in the statement of claim could not constitute an estoppel. He also conceded that there was no evidence that the tenant had acted on any representation of fact which might have been alleged as an estoppel if it had been pleaded in the defence. For those reasons we ruled against counsel for the tenant on this point. When those points emerged we decided that the plea of estoppel could not be raised in this court, and so we did not ask counsel for the landlords to deal with it. For these reasons, I think that this appeal fails and must be dismissed. E
F

SINGLETON, L.J. : I agree. G

LORD GREENE, M.R. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Franks, Charlesly & Leighton (for the tenant); Stikeman & Co. (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ACTON CORPORATION v. WEST MIDDLESEX ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND ANOTHER.

[KING's BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finmore, JJ.), January 26, 1949.]

Rating—Derating—Industrial hereditament—Premises used for testing aeroplane propellers and correcting minor faults—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1).

The Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3 (1), provides :
 “. . . the expression ‘industrial hereditament’ does not include a hereditament occupied and used as a factory or workshop if it is primarily occupied and used for . . . (f) any . . . purposes . . . which are not those of a factory or workshop.” The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1), provides : “The expression ‘non-textile factory’ means . . . (c) any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to any of the following purposes, namely—(i) the making of any article or of part of any article ; or (ii) the altering, repairing, ornamenting or finishing of any article ; or (iii) the adapting for sale of any article, and wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there.”

An aeroplane manufacturing company used certain premises for the testing of propellers, including prototype propellers prior to their being put into production, propellers in regular production before delivery to purchasers, and propellers which had showed faults during operational flights. The component parts of the propellers were manufactured elsewhere, but, when sent for testing, they were assembled on the premises in question and were dismantled after testing. Where a propeller showed faults on test, it was corrected either by minor adjustments and modification on the said premises, or, in the case of more serious faults, by sending it to another factory of the company for alteration.

HELD : the work performed on the premises was part of the process of, or was incidental to the process of, the making of an article within s. 149 (1) (c) (i) of the Act of 1901, and the premises were, therefore, an industrial hereditament within s. 3 (1) of the Act of 1928.

Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd. ([1931] A.C. 450 ; 145 L.T. 73), distinguished.

[AS TO DERATING OF INDUSTRIAL HEREDITAMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 27, pp. 435-459, paras. 871-887 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Grove (Dudley Revenue Officer) v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd., [1931] A.C. 450 ; 145 L.T. 73 ; 95 J.P. 115 ; Digest Supp.
- (2) Jobling (James A.) & Co., Ltd. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee, [1944] 1 All E.R. 500 ; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by consent of the parties under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 11.

De Havilland Propellers, Ltd., made a proposal for an amendment of the valuation list with regard to a propeller testing station occupied by them on the ground that the hereditament was an industrial hereditament. The assessment committee amended the list as proposed, and the Divisional Court now dismissed an appeal by the rating authority. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Rowe, K.C., and Squibb for Acton Corporation.

Scott Henderson, K.C., and Ramsay Willis for the company.

Ramsay Willis and W. L. Roots for the assessment committee.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated for the opinion of the court under s. 11 of Baines' Act and it raises the question whether a certain hereditament is an industrial hereditament and as such entitled to be derated, or whether it is a hereditament which has no claim to be called an industrial hereditament, in which case it falls to be assessed. When counsel for the rating authority opened this case and read LORD DUNEDIN's speech in Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd. (1), I thought the case was covered by it, but the argument of counsel for the company has convinced me that it is not and that this is an industrial hereditament.

The ratepayers in the present case are De Havilland Propellers, Ltd., who are manufacturers of aeroplane propellers which are principally manufactured for the Ministry of Supply. The Ministry have made it a term of the contract that all the propellers should be tested, but I do not base my judgment merely on that ground. The hereditament in question is occupied for the purpose of testing propellers under conditions as like as possible to those of flight. The Case states :

"The testing carried on in the said hereditament falls into three main categories : (i) The testing of prototype propellers intended to be used in connection with a new or modified type of aircraft. These experiments continue until a type of propeller is judged perfect for the particular need and is ready to be put into production. (ii) Testing of propellers already in regular production before their delivery under contract for sale to the Ministry of Supply. (iii) Testing necessitated by failures or faults in propellers occurring during operational flights. The tests described in (i) and (iii) are not directly connected with production, but are in the nature of research. The bulk of the testing, however, is in connection with production tests as described in (ii), and the hereditament is primarily occupied in connection with tests of this category. The component parts of the propellers are manufactured in other premises occupied by the company and are sent to the hereditament to be tested. On arrival, the components are assembled and prepared for test in a part of the hereditament where also are installed the aero-engines to which the propellers have to be attached to drive the propeller during the test. These aero-engines have to be mounted on test beds in test cells, and, in addition to fitting on the propeller, there has to be fitted certain piping and electrical wiring. Manual labour is involved in the whole of the foregoing procedure and in the subsequent dismantling of the propellers, engines, and ancillary equipment after testing. The majority of the propellers manufactured by the respondent company are made to the order of the Ministry of Supply which makes it a condition of their contract that all propellers shall be tested before delivery. Accordingly, while such propellers are manufactured elsewhere, they are brought to the hereditament for testing as described under heading (ii) hereof. Where a propeller shows faults on test it is not scrapped, but is, dependent on the extent of such faults, dealt with either by minor adjustments or modifications which are made on the said hereditament, or, in case of more serious faults, by returning it to premises of the company elsewhere to enable such alterations or modifications to be made as the test has shown to be necessary, after which the propeller is returned to the said hereditament, where it is submitted to a further test."

The material section is s. 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, where it is provided :

"... the expression 'industrial hereditament' does not include a hereditament occupied and used as a factory or workshop if it is primarily occupied and used for the following purposes or for any combination of such purposes, that is to say . . . (f) any . . . purposes . . . which are not those of a factory or workshop."

Section 3 (2) throws us back to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the definition of a factory, and s. 149 (1) of that Act provides :

A " . . . the expression ' non-textile factory ' means . . . (b) any premises or places named in pt. II of [sched. VI to this Act] wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there ; and (c) any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or

B incidental to any of the following purposes, namely—(i) the making of any article or of part of any article ; or (ii) the altering, repairing, ornamenting or finishing of any article ; or (iii) the adapting for sale of any article, and wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there."

C No doubt " steam, water or other mechanical power " is used for the processes employed in the hereditament with which we are now dealing.

Reliance has been placed on Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd. (1), to which I have already referred, in which a testing station was held not to be an industrial hereditament, but there seems to me to be a distinction between that case and this. In that case cable manufacturers, having made their cables,

D had to send them to another company, Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd., to get a certificate that the cable had a certain strength, and, to use the words of LORD HEWART, C.J., when the case was in the Divisional Court : " Their task [that is the testing company's task] is not to adapt the cables for sale, but to see that they have been so adapted." In the present case I think (not without some hesitation because, as I say, it is a difficult case) the testing which is

E carried out on this hereditament is all part of the process of manufacture or is incidental to the process of manufacture. It seems to me that if a manufacturer has to make an article to answer a certain specification, it is essential that he should, in the course of his manufacture, take steps to see that the particular parts of the article and the article itself when finished answer that specification, and to ensure that, if they do not, they do not go out from the factory. I

F think that distinguishes this case from one where the manufacturer, having, presumably, satisfied himself, sends the article to somebody else who has merely then to say whether or not the article answers a particular requirement, or to place a hall mark to it, and not to do any work on it himself if it does not. Therefore, I think that the case is distinguishable from Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd. (1). I agree, therefore, with the decision of the assessment

G committee and I think the Case should be answered in favour of the respondents.

FINNEMORE, J. : I have come to the same conclusion. The question, which, I agree, is one of great difficulty, depends entirely on the interpretation which is to be given to certain words in the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, which was passed to provide machinery for the derating of H industrial hereditaments. In s. 3 (1) it laid down what those industrial hereditaments are. That sub-section adopts the meaning given to the expression " factory and workshop " in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 to 1920, and provides :

" In this Act the expression ' industrial hereditament ' means a hereditament . . . occupied and used . . . subject as hereinafter provided, as a factory or workshop. Provided that the expression ' industrial hereditament ' does not include a hereditament occupied and used as a factory or workshop if it is primarily occupied and used for . . . (f) any . . . purposes . . . which are not those of a factory or workshop."

In other words, if a factory or workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts is primarily occupied and used for purposes which are not those of a factory or workshop, it is excluded from the phrase "industrial hereditament." Turning to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1), one finds the definition of the phrase "non-textile factory," which this must be, A

" . . . any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to any of the following purposes, namely—(i) the making of any article or of part of any article ; or (ii) the altering, repairing, ornamenting or finishing of any article ; or (iii) the adapting for sale of any article, and wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there." B

This hereditament was used for the purpose of testing aeroplane propellers made by the company—in the main for the testing of propellers already in regular production before their delivery under a contract of sale to the Ministry of Supply. C

Counsel for the rating authority takes two points. He says, first, that there is nothing which makes this a factory or workshop, and, secondly, that, even if it be a factory or workshop, it is primarily used for a purpose which is not that of a factory or workshop. I think his two points really come to one because his case is that this hereditament is used solely for testing, and not for manufacturing or for the adapting for sale of any article. It is right to remember, as was decided in Jobling v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee (2), in the words of LORD GREENE, M.R. ([1944] 1 All E.R. 501): D

"The unit for rating is not the business but the hereditament, and you have to find out what is being done in the hereditament with which the rating authorities are dealing." E

What this company may do elsewhere is, therefore, irrelevant. The question on which the decision of this case depends is what was being done at this particular hereditament. Counsel says all that was being done there was testing the propellers and that is not one of the purposes specified in s. 149 (1) (c) of the Act of 1901 or incidental thereto. Counsel for the company, however, points out that the component parts of the propellers come unassembled to this hereditament where they are assembled, and the modifications, if they are not serious modifications, are made at this hereditament. Although, of course, the purpose for which the hereditament was used was that of testing, it was not merely for passing or rejecting work which had been done. It was an essential part of the manufacture which any prudent manufacturer would employ before saying: "This article is now manufactured and is ready for sale." F

The great difficulty in the way of the finding of the assessment committee is Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co., Ltd. (1) to which my Lord has referred. There a cable was sent to a cable testing company to be tested and to have a certificate of fitness given to it without which it could not have been sold. G It was argued in that case that that testing was the adapting for sale of the cable. LORD DUNEDIN, in his speech, in which all the members of the House of Lords concurred, said that all that the cable testing company did in that case was to test. Assuming they found any defect they did nothing to put it right. All they did was to say, aye or no, that a cable made by somebody else was fit for a certificate or it was not. In the present case we are dealing with people who manufacture certain articles, namely, aeroplane propellers. In H the course of making those articles they test them, and one imagines every prudent manufacturer who has to make important articles would test them from time to time. They have a special hereditament for the purpose of testing. If they find things are wrong, they are put right, if possible, in this hereditament. If they are too big to be put right there, they go to one of the other of the company's factories for it to be done. That seems to me to be quite different from what happened in Grove's case (1), where Lloyds were concerned with nothing other than testing. Here, at this hereditament the company were concerned with testing and putting right defects which they might find.

I think this case can be put on two grounds. It could be said this was incidental to the adapting for sale of an article. I should have thought it was clearly incidental to adapting for sale for the people who are manufacturing an article to make sure that any defect in it is put right. I think it is also right here to say that this testing was incidental to the making of the article. It was a normal process which the manufacturers would apply to the manufacture of this article. The testing process was not carried out just to see whether it was ready to be sold. It was part of the manufacture to ensure that the articles were being made properly in accordance with the contract and in accordance with the obligations which the Sale of Goods Act places on manufacturers. For these reasons I think that this hereditament was rightly found to be an industrial hereditament.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I asked FINNEMORE, J., to give his judgment before I expressed any views of my own because I have felt and still feel the most profound difficulty in deciding this question. The distinction is very fine and might well be decided the other way, but, having heard the judgments of my Lord and FINNEMORE, J., I feel that I cannot differ from them.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : H. C. Lockyer, town clerk, Acton (for the rating authority); Blundell, Baker & Co. (for the company); H. G. Greenwood, Ealing (for the assessment committee).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MACKLEY AND ANOTHER v. NUTTING.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Cohen and Asquith, L.JJ.), January 12, 13, 31, 1949.]

Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy by estoppel—Passing of tenant's right to enforce estoppel to tenant's personal representative—Conversion of right into tenancy.

N., a tenant of a dwelling-house, died intestate in 1935, and his tenancy vested in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division in accordance with s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. No letters of administration were at any time taken out. His widow continued to reside in the house and paid rent to the landlords until her death intestate in 1946. Her daughter, who had at all times lived with her parents or the surviving widow, remained in possession of the premises, and in March, 1947, took out letters of administration to her mother's estate. In May, 1947, the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division was served by the landlords with notice purporting to determine the tenancy which had become vested in him on the death of N. On a claim for possession by the landlords against the daughter it was found as a fact that on the death of N. the intention of the landlords and the widow was to create a tenancy on the same terms as that under which N. had held.

HELD : as possession had been given by the landlords to the widow under the tenancy so created the landlords were estopped from repudiating the tenancy; on the death of the widow her right to rely on that estoppel as against the landlords passed to the daughter as her legal personal representative; that right became a tenancy when the interest of the President was determined by the notice to quit of May, 1947; and, therefore, the landlords were not entitled to possession.

[AS TO ESTOPPEL BETWEEN LANDLORD AND TENANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 504-509, paras. 572-577; and FOR CASES, see A DIGEST, Vol. 30, pp. 347-366, Nos. 63-292.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Thynne v. Salmon, [1948] 1 All E.R. 49; [1948] 1 K.B. 482.
- (2) Smith v. Mather, [1948] 1 All E.R. 704; [1948] 2 K.B. 212.
- (3) Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 13 Digest 527, 789.
- (4) Rhodes v. Liverpool Commercial Investment Co., (1879), 4 C.P.D. 425; 13 Digest 538, 901.
- (5) Seymour v. Coulson, (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 359; 13 Digest 538, 902.
- (6) Clarkson v. Musgrave, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 386; 13 Digest 527, 788.
- (7) Webb v. Austin, (1844), 7 Man. & G. 701; 8 Scott, N.R. 419; 3 L.T.O.S. 282; 21 Digest 284, 998.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE FIELD, K.C., made at Leicester County Court on July 29, 1947, granting possession of a dwelling-house to the landlords. The court now allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

Stimson for the landlords.

Mrs. Y. Frazer for the tenant.

Victor Russell as amicus curiae.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31. COHEN, L.J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal from a judgment dated July 29, 1947, of His Honour JUDGE FIELD, K.C., sitting in the Leicester County Court, whereby he ordered that the tenant do deliver up possession of a dwelling-house, No. 274, Harrison Road, Leicester, to the landlords.

The facts which gave rise to the appeal are peculiar. The premises were originally let by the landlords' predecessors in title, a Mr. Wood, and subsequently, a company named Wood & Martin, Ltd., of which Mr. Wood was a director, to the tenant's father, Mr. Nutting, on a weekly tenancy at a rent of 12s. 6d. a week. Mr. Nutting died at a date which is alleged in the particulars of claim to be Feb. 29, 1935, but is stated by the learned county court judge to have been after 1935 but before 1942. It is clear that he was still a contractual tenant at the time of his death, that he does not appear to have made a will, that no letters of administration to his estate were granted, and that, therefore, the benefit of his tenancy for what it was worth vested, and remained vested, in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division under s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. His widow remained in possession of the premises and continued to pay the weekly rent until her death on Sept. 11, 1946. On the widow's death the tenant, who had lived throughout with her parents or the survivor of them, remained in possession of the premises. On Mar. 27, 1947, letters of administration of her mother's estate were granted to the tenant. Down to that date no notice to determine a tenancy had been given to anyone, but on May 5, 1947, the landlords, who had acquired the freehold reversion in the premises, gave notice to the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division purporting to determine the tenancy which became vested in him on the death of Mr. Nutting. On receipt of this notice the Treasury solicitor replied as follows :

"I have been instructed by the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division to reply to your letter of May 5, and I return the copy of the notice to quit duly endorsed. That may be sufficient for your purposes, but I think I should point out that, in my opinion, the nature of the vesting in the President of the property of an intestate, by virtue of s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, is not such as to impose on him any liability in respect of the property, and, in those circumstances, the notice to quit appears to me to be misconceived so far as the President is concerned."

It being clear that the interest, if any, of the President in the premises, had determined, the landlords then demanded possession of the premises from the tenant. On her refusing to deliver up the premises the landlords issued their plaint herein on June 13, 1947. The tenant put in her defence, and the matter came on for hearing before the learned county court judge on July 29, 1947. He made the order for which the landlords asked, the ratio decidendi of his judgment being that the widow was a statutory, not a contractual, tenant, and that her daughter could have no rights under the statute since the effect of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, on the right of a tenant to remain in possession after notice to quit had been served, was exhausted by the widow's statutory tenancy. From that decision the tenant has appealed.

When the learned county court judge gave his judgment, he had not the advantage of the guidance given by the decisions of this court in Thynne v. Salmon (1) and Smith v. Mather (2). The first of these decisions lays it down that para. (g) of s. 12 (1) of the Act of 1920 does not apply where the tenancy which was vested in a contractual tenant at his death passed by his will or on his intestacy to some person other than his widow or a member of his family residing with him at the time of his death. The second decision showed that there is no logical distinction between the position of the President and that of any other person in whom the tenancy is vested, and it follows, therefore, that para. (g) cannot apply where the tenancy is vested in the President on the intestacy of the deceased, at any rate, unless on that intestacy the widow is absolutely entitled under s. 46 (1) (v) of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. This being the position, counsel for the landlords properly admitted that he could not support the decision of the learned county court judge on the basis of his reasoning. He contended, however, that some observations of SOMERVELL, L.J., in Smith v. Mather (2) concluded the present case in his favour. The passage on which he relied is ([1948] 1 All E.R. 706) :

"TUCKER, L.J., in his judgment [in Thynne v. Salmon (1)], pointed out that, if there is a relative who comes within the words of the definition in para. (g), assuming 'tenant' to cover a contractual tenant, and there is also someone in whom the contractual tenancy has vested under a grant of letters of administration or under a will, there are two tenants, both, presumably, liable to pay the rent and entitled to possession of the house, and so on. That is an impossible position and one which the legislature cannot have contemplated."

If, said counsel for the landlords, this court were to take the view that Mrs. Nutting was a contractual tenant, we should be assuming the co-existence of two tenants, one Mrs. Nutting and the other the President, both presumably, entitled to possession of the house, and that, he says, is the position which SOMERVELL, L.J., regarded as impossible. This argument seems to me, however, to ignore the context in which the observations of SOMERVELL, L.J., were made. What the court was there considering was the construction of s. 12, and the court held that, if there are two alternative constructions, it is reasonable to adopt that which will avoid the inconveniences to which SOMERVELL, L.J., referred. There the court was not considering the question which we have to consider, which is in part one of fact and in part one of law. The question of fact is : What was the bargain (if any) between the landlords and Mrs. Nutting ? The question of law is, assuming the intention of the parties to that bargain was to create a tenancy : What was the effect of the bargain having regard to the outstanding interest vested in the President ?

On the question of fact the only possible conclusion from the evidence is that the intention of the parties was to create a tenancy on the same terms as that under which Mr. Nutting had held. Counsel for the landlords, however, says that effect cannot be given to that tenancy because of the interest of the President. Counsel for the tenant sought to meet this argument by saying that the landlords, claiming as they did through Messrs. Wood & Martin, Ltd., were estopped from denying the tenancy. Counsel for the landlords then took the objection that this point had not been raised before the learned county court judge, and was not, therefore, open before us. He relied on the well known observations of LORD HALSBURY, L.C., in Smith v. Baker & Sons (3) [1891] A.C. 333 :

“My Lords, this was an action originally tried in the county court, and it is very important to bear in mind that only a limited appeal is allowed by law in actions so tried. There is no power to review the decision of fact arrived at in the county court by any other tribunal than the county court itself. A matter of law can be made the subject of appeal, but then only when the point has been raised at the trial before the learned judge. That question was decided in Rhodes v. Liverpool Commercial Investment Co. (4). In Seymour v. Coulson (5) the principle was affirmed that the point of law must be taken ; and finally in Clarkson v. Musgrave (6), where all the cases were reviewed, it was established (and I think has been accepted ever since) that the raising of the point of law at the trial is a condition precedent to any appeal from the decision of the county court. My Lords, I think there are good reasons for the enactment which has so limited an appeal, and in truth even where written pleadings render such precautions as the statute has enforced in the county court less necessary, the same precaution has been constantly enforced where applications for a new trial have been made in the Superior Courts. It is obvious that it would be unjust to one of the parties if the other could lie by and afterwards, having failed on the contention that he in fact set up, be permitted to rely on some other point not suggested at the trial, but which if it had been suggested might have been answered by evidence.”

Now it is true that the point of estoppel was not dealt with in the court below, but that was because of the erroneous view that the learned county court judge took of the law, which resulted in his not considering what the intention of the parties was. In these circumstances the question of estoppel never arose. Accordingly, it seems to me that a grave injustice would be done to the tenant if she were now to be debarred from raising the question of estoppel. On the other hand, I cannot see that any injustice would be done to the landlords if she were allowed to raise it. It was clear on the pleadings that the tenant was alleging a contract of tenancy between the then landlords and her mother, and counsel for the landlords was quite unable to suggest any further evidence which he might have been able to adduce if the point had been expressly pleaded or raised in argument before the learned county court judge.

The legal position, on the assumption that Messrs. Wood & Martin, Ltd., purported to grant a tenancy to Mrs. Nutting is, in my opinion, correctly stated in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, Hailsham Ed., Vol. 13, p. 504. Paragraph 572 is in these terms :

“Generally, a tenant is estopped from disputing the title at the time of the demise of the landlord by whom he has been let into possession ;

but this estoppel has no application even while the tenancy exists when the question of title arises between the parties, not in the relationship of landlord and tenant, but of vendor and purchaser. The doctrine of estoppel which operates between landlord and tenant is not confined to leases by deed, and applies to tenancies from year to year, at will, or on sufferance, as well as to leases for years; and anyone holding under a tenant, or defending as landlord in an action of ejectment, is bound by it. Similarly, the lessor is estopped from repudiating a lease under which possession has been given or a tenancy which he has acknowledged, and the assignee of the lessor's interest is estopped from denying anything which the lessor is estopped from denying."

Note (r), on p. 505, is in these words: "This is an example of the dictum that estoppels must be mutual and reciprocal." Mrs. Nutting, had she been alive, could, therefore, clearly have relied on estoppel as against the landlords. Does that right pass to the tenant as her legal personal representative? In my opinion, it does: see SPENCER BOWER ON ESTOPPEL BY REPRESENTATION, p. 151. I will read the first two sentences of para. 176:

"Speaking generally, on the death or disability of the representee the persons who in right of him or his estate would be entitled to enforce any contract made with him are the persons who can take advantage of any rule of evidence, and, therefore, of any estoppel, which would be available to the representee if alive, or free from disability. Thus, the executor, administrator, heir, or devisee (as the case may be) of a deceased representee succeeds, in this as in any other respects, to the rights which that representee had at the moment of his death."

I would add that, the right having passed to the tenant, her interest in the premises, which on her mother's death was only a right to enforce the estoppel, became a tenancy when the interest of the President was determined as the result of the notice to quit dated May 5, 1947: see Webb v. Austin (7), where TINDAL, C.J., delivering the judgment of the court, said (7. Man. & G. 724):

"The doctrine on this subject, as it has been generally understood by the profession, may be collected from Mr. PRESTON'S TREATISE ON ABSTRACTS, vol. ii, p. 210, and the authorities there cited. That general understanding appears to be, that 'An indenture of lease, or a fine sur concessit, for years, will be an estoppel only during the term. It first operates by way of estoppel, and finally, when the grantor obtains an ownership, it attaches on the seisin and creates an interest, or produces the relation of landlord and tenant; and there is a term commencing by estoppel, but for all purposes it becomes an estate or interest. It binds the estate of the lessor, etc., and therefore continues in force against the lessor, his heirs, etc. It also binds the assigns of the lessor and of the lessee'."

For these reasons, I would allow the appeal. The tenant is entitled to costs in the court below on the appropriate scale and such costs of the appeal as she is entitled to as a poor person.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be allowed for the reasons set out in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Wright & Bull, agents for Wright & Freeman, Leicester (for the landlords); Wilberforce Allen & Bryant, agents for A. H. Headley, Leicester (for the tenant); Treasury Solicitor (instructing counsel as amicus curiae).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LAWRENCE v. SINCLAIR.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ., and Hodson, J.), January 27, 28, 1949.]

Landlord and Tenant—Business premises—Compensation for goodwill—Carrying on business for five years—Continuous period covering two contracts of tenancy—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 4 (1).

On May 5, 1936, the tenant acquired the unexpired term of a 21-years under-lease of certain business premises, and, as a result of business carried on there, goodwill became attached to the premises. On June 21, 1946, the under-lease expired, and the tenant, who had not made any claim for compensation, held over as a tenant from year to year. On Mar. 1, 1947, the landlord served the tenant with notice to quit on June 1, 1948, and within one month of the service of that notice the tenant served a notice on the landlord claiming a new lease under s. 5 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, or compensation as provided by s. 4 (1) of the Act. The claim for a new lease failed, because the landlord required the premises for his own occupation. As regards the claim for compensation, the question for the court was whether the tenant, by carrying on business at the premises under two successive contracts of tenancy—the under-lease and the yearly tenancy—had complied with the condition contained in s. 4 (1) that he should have carried on business “for a period of not less than five years.”

HELD: a tenant complies with the condition if he carries on business for a continuous period of five years, whether under a single contract of tenancy or under two or more such contracts.

[AS TO COMPENSATION FOR GOODWILL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 294-297, paras. 333-339; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Clift v. Taylor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 113; [1948] 2 K.B. 394.

(2) Barrell v. Fordree, [1932] A.C. 676; 96 J.P. 278; sub nom., Fordree v. Barrell, 147 L.T. 206; Digest Supp.

(3) Donegal Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Stephenson, (1929), 141 L.T. 262; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from a decision of His Honour JUDGE GRANVILLE SMITH, sitting at Barnet County Court, on June 29, 1948, whereby he awarded the tenant £465 as compensation for loss of goodwill. The learned referee, to whom the matter had been referred, reported, first, that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim by reason of the tenant having carried on business under two separate tenancies, but that, if a tribunal had jurisdiction, the tenant was entitled to £465 compensation. The county court judge ruled that the tribunal had jurisdiction and awarded compensation. From that decision the landlord appealed. The Court of Appeal now dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

Heathcote-Williams and Plume for the landlord.

J. W. Russell for the tenant.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE GRANVILLE SMITH, sitting at Barnet County Court on June 29, 1948, whereby he awarded to Mr. Lawrence, a tenant of certain premises, the sum of £465 for compensation for loss of goodwill under s. 4 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. The premises consisted of a half shop with two flats above in Ballard Lane, North Finchley. On July 11, 1935, the premises were let, by an under-lease, to S. Cliff & Co., for a term of 21 years less three days. The under-lease began on June 24, 1925, so that it expired on June 21, 1946. On May 5, 1936, S. Cliff & Co., with the then landlord's consent, assigned the unexpired term of that under-lease to the tenant, Lawrence. On Nov. 4, 1946, Sinclair, who is the present landlord, acquired the lease-hold interest in the property and became the immediate landlord of Lawrence. After the lease had expired on June 21, 1946, the tenant held over as tenant from year to year. On Mar. 1, 1947, the landlord served notice to quit on the tenant to terminate his tenancy on June 1, 1948. On Mar. 28, 1947, the tenant served a notice under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), claiming a new lease or compensation in respect of the business carried on by him since May, 1936. On June 6, 1947, Mr. Horton-Smith was appointed referee, under s. 21 (2) of the Act of 1927, to make a report. He held his reference in January and February, 1948, and he took a preliminary point that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim either for a new lease or for compensation, but as it was merely his duty to report, he did so after hearing argument on the matter. On Mar. 12, 1948, he reported, first, that, in his view, the tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim; secondly, that, if there was jurisdiction, he found that goodwill had attached to the premises; thirdly, that the claim for a new lease was defeated by the defence that the landlord required the premises for his own occupation; and, finally, he recommended an award of £465, by way of compensation. In due course that report was considered by the learned judge, and counsel for the landlord contended, as he had before the referee, that the tribunal had no jurisdiction. The learned judge refused a new lease and awarded the tenant £465 compensation.

The material section is s. 4 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, which provides:

“(1) The tenant of a holding to which this Part of this Act applies shall, if a claim for the purpose is made in the prescribed manner—(i) in the case of a tenancy terminated by notice, within one month after the service of the notice on the tenant; and (ii) in any other case, not more than 36 nor less than 12 months before the termination of the tenancy; be entitled, at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding, to be paid by his landlord compensation for goodwill if he proves to the satisfaction of the tribunal that by reason of the carrying on by him or his predecessors in title at the premises of a trade or business for a period of not less than five years’ goodwill has become attached to the premises by reason whereof the premises could be let at a higher rent than they would have realised had no such goodwill attached thereto: Provided that . . . (b) the tenant shall not be entitled to compensation in respect of such goodwill if within two months after the making of the claim the landlord serves on the tenant notice that he is willing and able to grant to the tenant, or obtain the grant to him of a renewal of, the tenancy of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on at such rent and for such term not exceeding fourteen years as, failing agreement, the tribunal may consider reasonable; and if the tenant does not within one month from the service of the notice send to the landlord an acceptance in writing of the offer the tenant shall be deemed to have declined the offer.”

By sub-s. (3):

“Where an offer of the renewal of a tenancy by the landlord under this section is accepted by the tenant, the rent fixed by the tribunal shall be the rent which in the opinion of the tribunal a willing lessee other than the tenant would agree to give and a willing lessor would agree to accept for the premises having regard to the terms of the lease, but irrespective of the value of any goodwill which may have become attached to the premises by reason of the tenant or his predecessors in title having carried on thereat a particular trade or business.”

Section 25, the interpretation section, provides:

“The expression ‘tenant’ means any person entitled in possession to the holding under any contract of tenancy, whether the interest of such tenant was acquired by original contract, assignment, operation of law or otherwise."

The preamble to the Act is :

"An Act to provide for the payment of compensation for improvements and goodwill to tenants of premises used for business purposes, or the grant of a new lease in lieu thereof ; and to amend the law of landlord and tenant."

The argument put forward on behalf of the landlord is, shortly, that the claim for compensation must be in respect of one tenancy only, and in the present case the compensation is claimed partly in respect of the tenancy for 21 years and partly in respect of the tenancy from year to year. Section 4 (1) (ii) of the Act of 1927 clearly lays down that in the case of a tenancy which is not terminated by notice, notice of the claim for compensation must be made not less than 12 months before the termination of the tenancy. No such notice was given in the present case in respect of the tenancy which came to an end in 1946, and, therefore, it is argued, the tenant has got no right to compensation under that lease, that he has not been a tenant for 5 years under the tenancy from year to year, and in those circumstances he is debarred from making a claim for compensation in respect of this admitted goodwill, which has been valued at £465. It is said that it is impossible for a tenant to aggregate two separate tenancies as has been done in the present case, and that there was clearly a new tenancy when, the original lease, having expired, the tenant held over from year to year. It is argued that after the words "for a period of not less than five years" there must be read into the section the words "under one and the same title." Finally, reference was made to a judgment of SCOTT, L.J., in Clift v. Taylor (1). SCOTT, L.J., speaking of this Act, said (1948] 2 All E.R. 116) :

"(i) The Act interferes with freedom of contract and thus modifies an important right of the individual. Any real ambiguity of language in any particular provision, still apparent even when construed in the light of the whole Act, ought to be resolved in favour of maintaining common law rights. (ii) For the same reason, its plain meaning should not be strained in favour of any presupposed intention to enlarge the tenant's or to cut down the landlord's contractual rights."

The question is whether there is any real ambiguity in the words of the section which I have read. In Clift v. Taylor (1) the point which has now been argued, was not raised, and, although this Act was passed in 1927 the point has never been raised in any legal proceedings, so far as I know, until it was raised before the learned official referee in the present case.

Counsel for the tenant, on the other hand, went back to first principles when he referred to MAXWELL ON THE INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES, 9th ed., p. 3, where the author thus deals with how a section of this kind is to be read :

"Section 2—Literal Construction : The first and most elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that the words and phrases of technical legislation are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one, and, otherwise, in their ordinary meaning ; and, secondly, that the phrases and sentences are to be construed according to the rules of grammar. From these presumptions it is not allowable to depart where the language admits of no other meaning. Nor should there be any departure from them where the language under consideration is susceptible of another meaning, unless adequate grounds are found, either in the history or cause of the enactment or in the context or in the consequences which would result from the literal interpretation, for concluding that that interpretation does not give the real intention of the legislature."

There follows a quotation from the judgment of WARRINGTON, L.J., in Barrell v. Fordree (2) :

“ ‘The safer and more correct course of dealing with the question of construction is to take the words themselves and arrive, if possible, at their meaning without, in the first place, a reference to cases’ .”

There being no cases which deal in any way directly with this point, we can look at the words themselves.

A Is this a case where a tenancy has been terminated by notice ? There is no doubt that it is. Proper notice has been given. Was the claim made within one month after the service of the notice ? It was. Has the tenant
B quitted the holding ? He has. Has he proved to the satisfaction of the tribunal that, by reason of the carrying on by him at the premises of a trade or business for a period of not less than five years, goodwill has become attached to the premises ? He has proved that. Why, then, should he not get compensation ? The only reason put forward is that one must read into this section words which are not there, namely, that he must have held the premises under one and the same title. In my view, to read those words into the section would be wrong according to the principles of construction to which I have referred and would also defeat the object of the Act set out in the preamble. So far
C I think that s. 4 (1) (f) helps the tenant in this matter. Paragraph (f) is in the following terms :

D “ . . . compensation under this section shall not be payable if the tenant has determined the tenancy or failed to exercise an option for a further term contained in the lease or in a collateral agreement, unless, in the case of an option, the terms of the option are such that the tenant could not reasonably be expected to exercise it.”

My comment on that paragraph is that a tenant who exercises an option is very much in the same position as a tenant under a new tenancy. No authority has been given for that proposition, but it was admitted by counsel for the landlord. If that proposition is correct it would seem to me to indicate
E that the tenant, having exercised the option, would be entitled to claim compensation in respect of his tenancy under that option. It might very well be that the option might be, say, for a tenancy for three years. What is the position of the tenant in that case ? If he has, for instance, been in occupation of the premises for two years under the original lease and then continues under the option for another three years, he would, if
F the learned judge is right, be entitled to claim compensation because he had been in occupation for five years, but, if the landlord is right, it would seem that unless the tenant, a year before the original lease expired, had given notice that he was going to claim compensation, he would be debarred from claiming any compensation in respect of the total of five years. That seems to me to put the tenant in a very unreasonable position. He is faced with the option
G and with a section in the Act of Parliament which says that compensation shall not be payable unless he exercises the option. He does not make any claim for compensation, and then at the end of three years he finds that he is not entitled to any compensation. He is forced to construe the section in such a way as to say : “ It is true I have to wish on, but I cannot get compensation unless I file a claim for compensation a year before the original lease has expired.” I do not think that Parliament intended to place the tenant in such H a position. For those reasons, in my view, this appeal should be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. The question is whether the tenant has fulfilled the conditions precedent to his right to compensation provided for in the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 4 (1). The terms of that section are, in my view, quite unambiguous, and there is nothing to qualify their plain, grammatical meaning.

To entitle a tenant to compensation under the sub-section, his application must show a number of things—first, that he was the tenant of a holding within the definition of the Act. It is conceded that the tenant in the present case has shown that. Secondly, he must show that he has given notice of his claim in the prescribed manner, which (when, as in this case, his own lease was determined by notice to quit) is by giving notice to the landlord within a month after receiving that notice to quit. This also he has done. Then he must show to the satisfaction of the tribunal three things—(i) that he or his predecessors in title have carried on at the premises a trade or business for a period of not less than five years; (ii) that goodwill has, in consequence, attached to the premises; and (iii) that, by reason thereof, the premises could have been let at a higher rent than they would have realised otherwise. The second and third of these last requirements are not in dispute, but the landlord maintains that the first condition is not satisfied, and he bases his contention on the ground that the five years referred to must be five years during which the tenant is holding under a single tenancy or title, and must not be spread over two tenancies, even if they are immediately consecutive the one on the other. It is conceded that the five years must be continuous. So much is clearly implied in the expression “period of five years.” There seems, however, to be no warrant for the second qualification which counsel for the landlord attempts to embroider on the simple terms of the sub-section. The latter nowhere says that the five years must be under a single tenancy, and there seems to be no room and no need for any such implication. Incidentally, the evil struck at by the Act, which is the appropriation by the landlord of the fruits of the tenant's industry and labour, would be just the same in quantity and quality whether the five years were spread over one tenancy, two tenancies, or a dozen. It is said by counsel for the landlord that the construction of the section contended for by the tenant should be avoided because it places the tenant in as strong a position as if he had given notice of his claim 12 months before the 21 years' lease expired whereas, in fact, he failed to do so, and that his failure ought to preclude him for good from claiming in respect of any goodwill acquired during the period of that early lease. It is true that if, on the termination of the 21 years' lease, he had quitted instead of getting a renewal, he could not have made a claim because he would not have been, within the express terms of the opening words of s. 4 (1), a tenant of a holding who had made a claim in the prescribed manner, which, in the events assumed, would be a claim made 12 months, at least, before the termination of that 21 years' lease. In the actual events of this case he held over at the end of the 21 years, and by such holding over he became a tenant who had to give, and has given, one month's notice, and he qualifies under the opening words of the section. The effect of this is to entitle him to compensation if he can further show that he carried on at the premises a trade or business for a period of not less than five years. This he has shown. If it is said that this puts him in as strong a position as if he had given a proper notice of a claim 12 months before the 21 years' lease expired, I can only say that, in my view, the plain, unambiguous language of the section leads to that result, and if the legislature wished to avoid it they should have said so.

There are two other points with which I will deal shortly. Counsel for the landlord laid some stress on the fact that the word “tenancy” in s. 4 (1) is in the singular number, but I do not think that that fact helps him because the tenancy which the section is discussing is the tenancy on whose termination the tenant quits, not a tenancy—such as the 21 years' tenancy—on whose termination he did not quit. The other point is that the assistance which counsel for the landlord sought to derive from s. 4 (1) (f) is, I think, not his to claim. I have nothing to add to what my Lord has said under that heading. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

HODSON, J. : I agree. The application before the court was for a new lease under s. 5 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, but the tenant had first to qualify under s. 4. The argument for the landlord is that the tenant has not qualified under that section because he has irrevocably lost the rights which he had under the lease which expired in 1946, not having made an application in time, because part of the five years must necessarily have passed during the currency of that lease. The proposition which counsel for the landlord put is stated shortly in FOA's GENERAL LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT, 7th ed., p. 756 :

"Compensation for goodwill is not payable—unless the tenant has made a claim within the time prescribed."

He relied on Donegal Tweed Co. v. Stevenson (2), for the proposition that the time cannot be extended by the court, and said that since no application had been made in due time under the long lease the tenant had lost his right forever and that it could not be resuscitated. That is the argument which he put forward. It has certain attractions, but I agree that, faced with the plain language of the statute, the tenancy which has to be considered is that which exists at the quitting of the holding. Although the tenant's claim for compensation under the original lease was barred, that bar only applied if he quitted the holding at the time of the expiration of the lease. On the simple construction of s. 4 the tenant qualifies for compensation if he is a tenant at the time of quitting the holding, notwithstanding the fact that the tenancy which then came to an end has not subsisted during the whole five years. For those reasons, and those which have already been given, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : E. E. Pugh & Co. (for the landlord) ; Merton Jones, Lewsey & Jefferies (for the tenant).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HALL v. BECKENHAM CORPORATION.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Finnemore, J.), February 2, 1949].

Nuisance—Recreation ground—Liability of local authority—Park dedicated to public—Noise from model aircraft flown in park—No contravention of bye-laws—Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 164.

A local authority owned, controlled and managed a public park acquired by them under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 164, and made bye-laws for its regulation under the powers conferred by that section. The bye-laws contained no provision regulating the flying of model aircraft in the park, and such aircraft, fitted with internal combustion engines which made a considerable noise, were frequently flown therein. The noise was alleged to be a nuisance by an occupier of an adjoining house who sought an injunction to restrain the local authority from permitting the commission of the nuisance and damages.

HELD : the park was dedicated to the public use and was not in the beneficial occupation of the local authority, and, although the authority had the management and control of the park, their power to regulate the conduct of members of the public using the park was limited to the enforcement of the bye-laws ; the flying of model aeroplanes was not contrary either to those bye-laws or to the general law ; and, therefore, the local authority had no power to prevent the use of the park in that manner and were not liable in respect of the noise complained of.

Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council ([1897] A.C. 625 ; 76 L.T. 795), applied.

North Riding of Yorkshire¹ County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corpn.
 ([1942] 2 All E.R. 589; [1943] 1 K.B. 114; 168 L.T. 81), distinguished.

[AS TO PERSONS LIABLE TO BE SUED FOR NUISANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 24, pp. 83-88, paras. 147-153; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 213-217, Nos. 558-591.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) A.-G. v. Tod Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560; 76 L.T. 174; 36 Digest 177, 221. A
- (2) Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan, [1940] 3 All E.R. 349; [1940] A.C. 880; 164 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A.C. 625; 76 L.T. 795; sub nom., St. Mary, Lambeth (Churchwardens and Overseers) v. London County Council, 61 J.P. 580; 36 Digest 247, 12.
- (4) North Riding of Yorkshire County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corpn., [1942] 2 All E.R. 589; [1943] 1 K.B. 114; 168 L.T. 81; 106 J.P. 11; 2nd Digest Supp. B

POINT OF LAW set down for decision in an action for damages for nuisance, for an injunction, and for a declaration that the defendant local authority were not entitled to cause or permit the commission of a nuisance by noise. C

The plaintiff was the owner and occupier of a house adjoining a public park provided by the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 164. He sought to restrain the local authority from permitting users of the park to cause noise by flying model aircraft, which, he alleged, constituted a nuisance. The defendants claimed that the park was dedicated to the public and that they had no power to prevent the use of the park for any particular purpose except by means of bye-laws which they had made under the Act, none of which was applicable. By consent this point of law was set down for hearing before the trial. FINNEMORE, J., dismissed the action. D

Hackforth-Jones for the plaintiff.

Squibb for the local authority.

FINNEMORE, J.: The plaintiff, Mr. Hall, lives near a park called the Blake Recreation Ground, which is under the control of the defendants, Beckenham Corporation. In recent times there has grown up the pastime of flying model aircraft, which, instead of being comparatively harmless, quiet, instruments driven by elastic, or something of that sort, as formerly was the case, have been fitted with internal combustion engines which have no silencers and, in consequence, make a considerable noise. The plaintiff is asking for damages to compensate him for having to endure the nuisance of this excessive noise occurring in the recreation ground, and an injunction to prevent its recurrence in the future. I am not trying those issues, because a preliminary point has been argued in front of me, and that is, that, however true the plaintiff's complaint may be, he has no right against the defendant corporation. He may have a right against the actual perpetrators of the nuisance, but the defendants say that that is nothing to do with them. Counsel for the plaintiff says: "Here is a nuisance. You are the occupier of the land, the recreation ground. Although the nuisance is caused by other people, you must so manage and control your property that there is no nuisance committed on it. If that nuisance is created by other people, even by trespassers, and you allow it to continue and take no reasonable steps to stop it, you are at common law responsible in damages." Those observations, addressed to a private individual, would be correct under A.-G. v. Tod Heatley (1) and Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan (2) which are authorities for that proposition. The reason is plain. An owner of private property, if he likes to take the necessary measures, can prevent people coming on his land and committing a nuisance, because he can shut everyone out if he so wishes. Counsel's point for the plaintiff is that Beckenham Corporation are in exactly the same position. They are the owners. E
F
G
H

and the occupiers, and they certainly have the management and control of the recreation ground. If other people, licensees he would call them, come into that park and create a nuisance, and the corporation do nothing about it, they, as occupiers, and, in any event, as managers and controllers, are responsible, unless they take reasonable steps to stop it.

This land was established as a recreation ground under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 164, which provides :

- A "Any urban authority may purchase or take on lease, lay out, plant, improve, and maintain lands for the purpose of being used as public walks or pleasure-grounds, and may support or contribute to the support of public walks or pleasure-grounds provided by any person whomsoever. Any urban authority may make byelaws for the regulation of any such public walk or pleasure ground, and may by such byelaws provide for the removal from such public walk or pleasure-ground of any person infringing any such byelaw by any officer of the urban authority or constable."

- B Two points are taken by counsel for the defendants. The first is that in the strict sense the corporation are not the occupiers of this park, certainly not within the meaning of "occupiers for rating purposes," and in support of that he has cited Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (3). That was a case where the London County Council, under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1890, acquired a place called Brockwell Park for the perpetual use of the public for exercise and recreation, and the question arose whether that park was liable to the poor-rate. LORD HALSBURY, L.C., made it quite plain that it was not, and he stated the grounds on which he arrived at that conclusion. He said ([1897] A.C. 630) :

- E "The fact that the park is vested in the county council does not make them the occupiers. It would be absurd to contend that wherever the legal estate is there is occupation. A road is vested in someone, but, if a public road, there is no occupation of it any more than of a milestone or a direction-post. I have hitherto dealt only with the question of occupation, and, as I have said, I think there is no occupation at all, the county council being merely custodians and trustees for the public . . . Once it has been found, as in this case, that the occupation cannot as a matter of law be a beneficial occupation, there is an end of the question. I say as matter of law, because that it does not give a beneficial occupation as matter of fact is nothing to the purpose. Here there is no possibility of beneficial occupation to the county council ; they are incapable by law of using it for any profitable purpose ; they must allow the public the free and unrestricted use of it."

- G Counsel for the plaintiff answers that, by the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 163, any land belonging to a local authority and not occupied for the purpose for which it was acquired may be appropriated for any other purpose approved by the Minister of Health for which the local authority are authorised to acquire land. He also quoted the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 42, and argued that as now with the permission of the Minister of Town and Country Planning, the Blake Recreation Ground might, in certain circumstances, be used by the corporation for some other purpose, which might be a profitable purpose, the ratio decidendi of Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (3) no longer applies. I think on that point one ought to refer also to the much later case of North Riding of Yorkshire County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corpn. (4). In that case the corporation purchased the foreshore of certain lands to be used as public walks and pleasure-grounds, and on a part of that property they set up baths, a bathing pool, a boating lake, a putting golf course, a car park, and a pavilion or concert hall, and they also let the foreshore in the summer for roundabouts and swings and other amusements which people frequent at the seaside. For these they charged admission. It was held that these buildings were in the occupation of the Redcar Corporation and were not merely ancillary to the use by the public of the walks and pleasure-grounds in which they were situated, and to that degree the court distinguished Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (3). I think, if the point made by counsel for the plaintiff on this is right, it must follow that the principle in Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (3) would now have to be re-considered in view of the Acts of 1933 and 1947. That was not, as far as I know, suggested in any form before the Divisional Court which decided the Redcar case (4). Indeed, Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (3) was referred to, and the principle was, I think, accepted without question. TUCKER, J., in his judgment, makes this, to my mind, quite clear, because he says ([1942] 2 All E.R. 594), after agreeing with the other learned judges :

" . . . the inference I draw (and I think the inference is almost irresistible) is that there never was any intention to dedicate these lands exclusively to the public, that such dedication never in fact took place, and that the user of these buildings is not ancillary to the use of the hereditament as a whole as a pleasure park."

I think that must mean two things. It must mean, first, that you may still have a pleasure-ground which is dedicated to the public use. If so, it is not considered to be in beneficial occupation for rating purposes. Secondly, the reason why those particular hereditaments were rateable was because they could not be considered as just ancillary to the use of the pleasure-park. In the latter part of his judgment, CASSELS, J., said (ibid., 600) :

" Beneficial occupation does not mean that pecuniary profit has to be established. It merely means that there must be an occupation which is of value to the occupier. There is nothing about any one of these seven hereditaments which entitles the Redcar Corporation to say that it is not capable of occupation or that its occupation is of no value, or that it is occupied by the public who cannot be occupiers for the purpose of rateability. I hold that the Redcar Corporation are in rateable occupation of these seven hereditaments . . . "

The general conclusion that I draw from all these matters is that the Acts of 1933 and 1947 do not alter the position of a local authority in regard to land which it has acquired under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 164, for the purpose of public walks or pleasure-grounds. It is not for the local authority to decide to turn this land to some other use. That could only be done, as I read the Acts, with the consent of the Minister. As far as the local authority is concerned, if the land is purchased under their statutory powers, it is dedicated to the use of the public for the purpose of a park. Counsel for the plaintiff points out that on certain days and at night this park is closed, and, therefore, the public do not have unrestricted access to it. I think those points have been referred to in the cases with which I have dealt. To my mind, it would not affect what I believe is true—that this recreation ground was bought under statutory powers and was dedicated to the use of the public as a park.

That does not, however, end the matter, because, whether the corporation are occupiers in the normal sense of the word or not, they are certainly invested with the management and control of this park. If further evidence were needed of that, the bye-laws have been produced, which they themselves have drawn up to regulate, as far as they can, the use of the park. I think the legal position would be the same as if they were occupiers. Whether you are an occupier of land in the strict sense or whether you have management and control of it, you must occupy it, or manage and control it, so that it is not a nuisance. It is true that in some circumstances an Act of Parliament may authorise a nuisance, but, as is shown by cases which counsel for the plaintiff cited to me—and, indeed, it is well-known law—the fact that you do something by statutory authority does not entitle you to disregard other people's rights or to create a nuisance to other people unless the Act authorises you to do things which cannot be done without creating a nuisance. In some cases we have to accept the position that Parliament has legislated, knowing it was affecting other people's rights and intending so to do. So long, however, as there is a way of carrying out a statutory obligation, especially a statutory permission, without affecting other people's rights, you must, of course, adopt that way. Therefore, if

- A Beckenham Corporation used, or permitted to be used, the Blake Recreation Ground so that it became a nuisance, they would be liable, subject to the consideration which, to my mind, is decisive of the point which I have to decide, namely, whether the powers of the corporation over this recreation ground are sufficiently extensive. The corporation have the right to make bye-laws for its proper conduct, and they have express powers to eject people who infringe those bye-laws. If they go beyond those powers, it seems to me quite plain that their officer, and, therefore, the corporation themselves, would be liable to an action for assault or false imprisonment should they lay hands on someone and forcibly put him outside the park. What they can do with regard to the park is to make bye-laws, and enforce them. If they refuse to enforce their own bye-laws, and a nuisance is created, it might well be that they would be
- C liable, but what can they do beyond that? They have certain rights if people are committing offences against the law, but if a person in the park, near an adjoining dwelling-house, is flying one of these model aeroplanes, making a great noise, under what authority could the park-keeper stop him? There is no bye-law prohibiting the flying of aeroplanes, and he is committing no criminal offence. If someone outside the park says he is committing a nuisance, it is
- D for him to take proceedings and prove his case, if he can, against the person committing the nuisance. It has nothing to do with the park-keeper or the local authority.

- I confess that it is this problem which has posed itself to me as being really the crux of this case. When we find our way through all the other sides of this problem which have been fully explored, I have come to the conclusion that
- E the argument of counsel for the corporation on this point is right. I think that the Beckenham Corporation are the trustees and the guardians of this park, and I think they are bound to admit to that park any citizen who wants to enter within the times that it is open. I do not think they can interfere with any person in the park, unless that person breaks the general law or one of their
- F bye-laws. I do not think the corporation can put themselves in the position of a judge (as it were) of whether a person may be causing a nuisance to someone outside the park. I think their proper attitude is that a person who is complaining of nuisance must take action against the person who is committing the nuisance of which he complains. If something is becoming a nuisance, they may then propose a new bye-law, but that is a matter with which I have
- G no concern. It seems to me that, as things are, a person who so wishes can go into this park and can fly his aeroplane, subject to being proceeded against by the person aggrieved if he commits a nuisance. I do not think that the Beckenham Corporation can be sued for such a nuisance, and, therefore, I think this action is wrongly founded. I decide this preliminary point in favour of the corporation.

- H Judgment for the defendant. Costs were not asked for.
Solicitors: Elands, Nettleship & Butt (for the plaintiff); C. E. Staddon, town clerk, Beckenham (for the local authority).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ECCLES v. KIRKE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Finnemore, JJ.), January 27, 1949.]

Hackney Carriage—Sign indicating vehicle is a hackney carriage—Vehicle carrying sign “M. Mosley Wakefield 19” in compliance with bye-law—Roads Act, 1920 (c. 72), s. 11 (1)—Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1149), reg. 31, sched. V. A

In compliance with the requirements of a local bye-law, the proprietor of a hackney carriage affixed to it a plate bearing the sign “M. Mosley Wakefield 19,” indicating the proprietor's name, the town where he carried on business, and the number of the licence granted him by the local authority. B

HELD: this did not comply, or absolve the proprietor from complying, with the requirements in the Roads Act, 1920, s. 11 (1), and the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941, reg. 31 and sched. V, that there shall be exhibited on every hackney carriage a distinctive sign indicating that the vehicle is a hackney carriage and the number of persons which it seats. C

[FOR THE ROADS ACT, 1920, s. 11, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 19, pp. 94, 95.]

CASE STATED by the Recorder of Bradford.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Bradford on June 1, 1948, on an information preferred by the prosecutor, a police sergeant in the Bradford City Constabulary, the defendant was adjudged proved to have used unlawfully on Mar. 20, 1948, a motor vehicle chargeable with duty as a hackney carriage on a road without having fixed to it a distinctive sign indicating that it was a hackney carriage and the number of persons that it seated, contrary to the Roads Act, 1920, s. 11 (1). The court dismissed the information under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, s. 1 (1). The defendant appealed to Bradford Quarter Sessions, who on Aug. 4, 1948, allowed the appeal. The prosecutor now appealed against that decision. It was contended on his behalf that a plate bearing the letters and figures “M. Mosley Wakefield 19” affixed to the vehicle in compliance with bye-laws of the Wakefield Corporation was not a distinctive sign indicating that the vehicle was a hackney carriage and the number of persons which it seated as required by the Roads Act, 1920, s. 11 (1), or in accordance with the mark prescribed by the Minister of Transport by virtue of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941, reg. 31 and sched. V. The Divisional Court held that the plate did not exhibit the necessary distinctive sign or mark, and allowed the appeal. D E F

Snowden for the prosecutor. G

H. R. B. Shepherd for the defendant.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by the Recorder of Bradford and it raises a very short and somewhat unusual point under the Roads Act, 1920, and the regulations made thereunder. Section 11 (1) of that Act provides: H

“There shall, subject to the prescribed exceptions, be exhibited on every vehicle which is chargeable with duty as a hackney carriage, in conjunction with the mark required under this Act to be fixed on the vehicle indicating the registered number of the vehicle, a distinctive sign indicating that the vehicle is a hackney carriage and the number of persons which the vehicle seats, and regulations made by the Minister [of Transport] under this Act shall provide for the sign to be so exhibited . . .”

Therefore, the Minister has to make regulations providing for this sign subject to any prescribed exceptions. The Minister made the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations, 1941, which provides by reg. 31 :

- A " Any vehicle (other than a tramcar) licensed under the provisions of para. 3 of sched. II to the Finance Act, 1920, in respect of which the rate of duty paid is less than the rate of duty which would have been payable had the vehicle been licensed under para. 6 of the said schedule, shall display in addition to the index mark and registration number of the vehicle a mark of the dimensions and form set out in sched. V hereto in the position prescribed in that schedule unless such vehicle is licensed to ply for hire and carries in a conspicuous position on the outside of the vehicle a mark in the form prescribed by the authority by whom it is licensed to ply for hire
- B indicating clearly that the vehicle is a hackney vehicle so licensed . . . "

The form in the schedule is the well-known form showing " hackney carriage " and so many seats with registered number below. The corporation of Wakefield have made a bye-law which provides :

- C " (18) Every proprietor of a hackney carriage shall cause the number of the licence granted to him in respect of such carriage to be painted or marked on each of two plates in figures not less than two inches in height, of proportionate breadth, and of such a colour, or in such a manner as to be clearly distinguishable from the colour or nature of the ground whereon such figures are painted or marked."
- D That is a requirement of the local authority, but by it the local authority have not absolved the proprietor from indicating clearly that the vehicle is a hackney carriage so licensed. If they had purported to do so, it would have been ultra vires because the exception in reg. 31 requires a clear indication that the vehicle is a hackney vehicle. I do not think it can possibly be argued that merely to paint on it " M. Mosley Wakefield 19 " indicates that it is a hackney vehicle
- E licensed to ply for hire. " Wakefield 19 " is entirely ambiguous, and when I first read the Case I thought it meant the telephone number of Mr. Mosley so that anybody who saw his car would know where to ring him up. For these reasons I think the learned recorder was wrong in allowing the appeal. The justices from whose decision the appeal was brought were right in finding the offence proved although they dealt with it under the Probation of Offenders
- F Act, which I should think in the circumstances, as the proceedings were intended to be a test case, was the proper thing to do. The judgment of the learned recorder must be set aside and the decision of the justices restored.

HUMPHREYS, J. : I agree.

FINNEMORE, J. : I agree.

G

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Torr & Co., agents for W. H. Leathem, town clerk, Bradford (for the appellant) ; Maude & Tunnickiffe, agents for Green, Williamson & Way, Wakefield (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HARARI'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS.
WORDSWORTH v. FANSHAWE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), February 3, 1949.]

Settlement—Investment—Power to trustees to invest “in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit”—Whether power limited to trustee securities.

By a settlement dated June 16, 1938, a settlor recited the transfer of certain securities, none of them a trustee investment, to trustees and directed: “The trustees shall hold the said investments so transferred to them as aforesaid upon trust that they may either allow the same to remain in their present state of investment so long as the trustees may think fit or may at any time or times with the consent of the daughter realise the said investments or any of them or any part thereof respectively and shall with the like consent invest the moneys produced thereby and also all capital moneys which may be or become subject to the trusts of this settlement in the names or under the control of the trustees in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit . . .”

HELD: on the true construction of the settlement, there was no justification for implying any restriction of the words “in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit,” and the trustees had power, under the plain meaning of those words, to invest in any investments which they honestly thought to be desirable, whether or not they were investments authorised by law for the investment of trust funds.

Re Braithwaite ((1882) 21 Ch.D. 121; 48 L.T. 857), and Bethell v. Abraham (1873) (L.R. 17 Eq. 24; 29 L.T. 715), explained.

Re Smith ([1896] 1 Ch. 71; 73 L.T. 604), and Re McEacharn's Settlement Trusts ([1939] Ch. 858; 161 L.T. 263), applied.

[AS TO INVESTMENT AT DISCRETION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 234-236, para. 418; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 927-930, Nos. 3648-3682.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Maryon-Wilson's Estate, [1912] 1 Ch. 55; 105 L.T. 692; 43 Digest 935, 3729.
- (2) Re Braithwaite, (1882), 21 Ch.D. 121; 48 L.T. 857; 43 Digest 837, 2834.
- (3) Bethell v. Abraham, (1873), L.R. 17 Eq. 24; 29 L.T. 715; 43 Digest 930, 3675.
- (4) Re Smith, [1896] 1 Ch. 71; 73 L.T. 604; 43 Digest 936, 3749.
- (5) Re McEacharn's Settlement Trusts, [1939] Ch. 858; 161 L.T. 263; ✓ Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Wragg, [1919] 2 Ch. 58; 121 L.T. 78; 43 Digest 928, 3662. ✓

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the power given by a settlement to trustees to invest trust moneys “in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit” enabled them to invest money in any investment which seemed fit to them, whether or not it was an investment authorised by law for the investment of trust funds, or whether the discretion was limited in its operation to trustee investments. JENKINS, J., held that, on the natural and proper meaning of the words used in their context, there was no justification for implying any restriction.

E. I. Goulding for the plaintiff, a trustee of the settlement.

H. F. MacMaster for the first and second defendants, the settlor's daughter and her husband.

R. O. Wilberforce for the third defendant, contingently interested in the capital of the trust fund and one of the settlement trustees and also representing all persons (other than the first and second defendants), including unborn persons, beneficially interested under the settlement.

JENKINS, J. : This case raises a short question of construction on a settlement dated June 16, 1938, made by Sir Victor Harari, Pasha, as settlor for the benefit of his daughter, Marie, for life, with various remainders over, subject, in her lifetime, to certain protective trusts for her benefit. I have to decide whether, on the true construction of the few words in the settlement referring to investment, the trustees have an unrestricted discretion to invest in such investments as they think fit, whether they are or are not of a kind authorised by law for the investment of trust funds, or whether such discretion as they have should be construed as limited in its operation to the trustee range of investments.

The settlement is made between Sir Victor, the settlor, of the first part, Marie Fanshawe, his daughter, of the second part, and the trustees therein named, of the third part. It recites that the settlor is desirous of making provision for the benefit of his daughter, Marie, and the transfer into the names of the trustees at the National Bank of Egypt at Cairo in an account called "The Marie Trust Fund" of the investments mentioned in the schedule to the settlement, "to the intent that the same may be held upon the trusts hereinafter expressed." The investments in the schedule to the settlement comprise holdings of certain Egyptian Government fixed interest stocks, a holding of Credit Foncier bonds in a nominal amount expressed in Egyptian pounds, 300 ordinary shares in a concern called Kom Ombo, and 100 5 per cent. Sucreries bonds. So that one observes in passing that none of the investments comprised in the trust fund as originally constituted was a trustee investment.

Paragraph 1 of the settlement is in these terms :

"The trustees shall hold the said investments so transferred to them as aforesaid upon trust that they may either allow the same to remain in their present state of investment so long as the trustees may think fit or may at any time or times with the consent of the daughter realise the said investments or any of them or any part thereof respectively and shall with the like consent invest the moneys produced thereby and also all capital moneys which may be or become subject to the trusts of this settlement in the names or under the control of the trustees in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit with power with such consent to vary or transpose any investments for or into others and such investments shall be placed in the names of the trustees in the said account called 'The Marie Trust Fund,' which shall remain at the National Bank of Egypt of Cairo or at such bank or institution in Egypt or out of Egypt as the trustees in their absolute discretion may see fit."

By para. 2 :

"The said investments so transferred to the trustees as aforesaid and the investments money or property representing the same or which may be or become subject to the trusts hereby declared are herein called 'The Marie Trust Fund' (sometimes referred to herein as 'the trust fund'), which expression is intended to mean the constituents for the time being of the said fund."

Then follows a beneficial trust. There are protective trusts for the benefit of the daughter during her life, the discretionary trust, in the event of it arising, being in favour of the daughter and her husband, if any, and her children or more remote issue, and, if there is no husband or issue, to the daughter and the persons who would, if she were actually dead, be entitled to the trust fund or the income thereof. After the death of the daughter, there is power to her to appoint a life interest or a less interest than a full life interest to any husband of hers who survives her, and, subject to any exercise of that power of appointment, the fund is to be held in trust for a class of persons consisting of the children or remoter issue of the daughter by any husband, or their respective husbands or wives, or any one or more exclusively of the other or others of the beneficiaries under four other settlements to which the settlor here refers, being settlements on his other children, each of them in identical form, for the benefit of that child. In default of and subject to any such appointment there is a trust for all or any of the children or child of the daughter at 21, or, if female, marriage under that age, and, if more than one, in equal shares, and, in default of any child of the daughter attaining a vested interest, there is an ultimate trust for the trustees of the other four settlements. The daughter, Mrs. Fanshawe, has a husband, but up to the present no children.

The question turns primarily on the meaning to be attached to the words "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit." Prima facie those words mean what they say—that the trustees are not to be limited in any way by any statutory range of investments, but can invest in any investment which they may select as seeming to them a fit one for the moneys subject to the trusts of the settlement. There is, however, a good deal of authority, which must be borne in mind, to the effect that investment clauses should be strictly construed and should not be construed as authorising investments outside the trustee range unless they clearly and unambiguously indicate an intention to that effect. I was first of all referred to Re Maryon-Wilson's Estate (1), which was cited for the proposition, sufficiently, I think, stated in the headnote in these terms :

"Per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and FARWELL, L.J. : Clauses in trust instruments enlarging the power of investment beyond what the general law sanctions ought to be construed strictly."

In Re Braithwaite (2) there was a trust under which the sum of £5,000 free of duty was given to the testator's daughter "for her sole and separate use and to be invested by trustees to be nominated by her so that she shall have the income for her life without power of anticipation," and after her death the principal sum was to fall into the testator's residuary estate. The testator authorised the trustees to invest on such securities as they might think fit. The action was brought for the execution of the trusts of the testator's will so far as they related to the legacy of £5,000, and it was claimed that the legacy ought to be brought into court and duly invested. HALL, V.-C., said (21 Ch.D. 122) :

"I do not think that the rule [as to the bringing of funds into court] is as absolute as the counsel for the plaintiff have contended, although the fund would, no doubt, be brought into court in any case where there was reasonable ground for the application. But there is here no pretence for the court taking the fund into its own hands and administering it. The testator did not think fit himself to appoint trustees, but considered it more satisfactory to leave the legatee for life herself to appoint her own trustees, who were to select their own investments, which must however, of course, be such as the law permits."

The learned VICE-CHANCELLOR, stating the proper course to be taken, said (ibid.) :

"Certainly in this case the proper course is, according to the terms of the will, to pay over this £5,000 to the trustees appointed by the legatee, and there must be an order for the purpose. It must be invested by them in their names in some or one of the investments upon which trustees can, by law, properly invest trust funds, and they must give notice of every change of investment. A proper declaration of trust must be executed . . ."

That is some authority for the proposition that a power to trustees to invest in such securities as they may think fit means "such securities authorised by law for the investment of trust funds as they may think fit." It is not, however, a very satisfactory authority. The learned VICE-CHANCELLOR gives no reason for his decision, and the matter is confused by the fact that the question really before him was whether an order ought to be made for the £5,000 settled legacy to be brought into court or whether it ought to be allowed to remain in the hands of the trustees, and, if so, on what terms. I think the essence of the learned judge's decision was that there was not a sufficient case made out to render it necessary to require the fund to be brought into court provided that the court was satisfied that it was properly invested in trustee investments, as it would have been if it had been brought into court. So that case leaves it in some obscurity whether the learned judge's view was anything more than that, if the fund were to remain out of court, the trustees ought to be put on terms to confine themselves to investments of that nature.

In Bethell v. Abraham (3) the investment clause under consideration was in these terms (L.R. 17 Eq. 24):

"All the residue of the income of my estate shall be accumulated and invested at the discretion of my trustees during such five years, and the money also receivable on my policies shall be invested at their discretion. My trustees shall not be obliged to alter any investment, or to convert perishable into permanent securities, but may continue or change securities from time to time as [sic.] the majority shall seem meet."

The testator must have meant, "as to the majority shall seem meet." The question arose whether there was an absolute discretion as to the investments to be made or whether they had to be authorised trustee investments. SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in the course of the argument, said (ibid., 26):

"Is it quite clear that you have the discretion you claim? The testator says, the trustees 'may continue or change securities from time to time, as to the majority may seem meet'; these words would be satisfied if the discretion were confined to determining the time at which a change of securities is to be made; there are no words shewing that if a change is made the trustees may invest in the way the majority of them think fit; must not then the mode of investment be left to the operation of law?"

At the beginning of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said (ibid., 27):

"I am not satisfied that the trustees have the power they claim. It is not necessary for me at the present moment to say more than that."

It must be borne in mind that the observations of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS (ibid., 26) indicate pretty clearly that, in his view, if there were power to invest in such investments as the trustees thought fit, as opposed to discretionary words which could be satisfied by reference to the time of investment or the question whether an investment should be changed or not, then he would have been of opinion that the words did give the trustees discretion to invest in an unrestricted range of investments. It is only because the discretionary words in the clause he was considering could be satisfied in one or other of the ways I have mentioned that he was not satisfied, as he said, that the trustees had the power they claimed.

In Re Smith (4) the trustees of a will had power to invest "in such stocks funds and securities as they should think fit." The trustees invested a proportion of the trust funds in some debentures of a limited company, and the question arose whether that was an authorised investment. KEKEWICH, J., was clearly of opinion that these words authorised the trustees to invest in an investment such as the debentures in question, provided they decided to do so bona fide. He said ([1896] 1 Ch. 76):

"I should say the words clearly authorised them to invest money on mortgage if they, having a sufficient knowledge of the property, thought that the investment was desirable. The question is, what is the meaning of the words 'shall think fit'? I have formed a very strong opinion that they mean 'shall honestly think fit.'"

He proceeded to deal with the matter on that footing, and so he clearly held that, if the trustees honestly thought fit to invest in debentures of a limited company, they would not be travelling outside their powers of investment. Attention was called in the course of the argument to the fact that, in some of the cases, there is an enumeration of the types of investment—as in Re Smith, "stocks funds and securities"—but I do not think that that really makes any difference unless, indeed, the enumeration includes a reference to some type of investment which, on the face of it, could not be an investment in the trustee range. "Stocks funds and securities" is an enumeration which is quite consistent with a range confined to trustee investment only.

In Re McEacharn's Settlement Trusts (5) the settlement contained a provision enabling the trustees to invest the trust funds in such stocks, funds and securities as they should think fit. The question raised and argued in the case was whether those words were wide enough to authorise an investment in fully paid shares of a limited company. BENNETT, J., held that they were wide enough. There was no express decision as to the width of the investment powers conferred by the words "such stocks funds and securities as they shall think fit," but it was assumed by everybody, including the learned judge, that those words gave power to invest in an unrestricted range of investments. It must have been so assumed, as otherwise the question whether fully paid shares in a limited company were included must have been in limine answered in the negative. As the matter proceeded entirely on that assumption, the learned judge's judgment was confined to his reasons for saying that the word "stocks" was sufficient to include fully paid shares.

Lastly, I was referred to Re Wragg (6), which I do not think really touches the question with which I am now dealing. The clause there was, on the face of it and most explicitly, of the widest possible nature, and the question before P. O. LAWRENCE, J., was whether the clause included investment by way of purchase of land and he held that it did. That is rather a different question from that to which I am addressing myself at the moment.

That, I think, is a representative collection of the authorities bearing on this topic, and, having given them the best consideration I can, it seems to me that I am left free to construe this settlement according to what I consider to be the natural and proper meaning of the words used in their context, and, so construing the words "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit," I see no justification for implying any restriction. I think the trustees have power, under the plain meaning of those words, to invest in any investments which, to adopt KEKEWICH, J.'s observation, they "honestly think" are desirable investments for the investment of moneys subject to the trusts of the settlement. To hold otherwise would really be to read words into the settlement which are not there. The wide construction which the words themselves are, in my view, sufficient to bear, is, I think, to some extent, supported by the fact that the investments brought in, in the first place, are non-trustee investments, and also to some small extent by the reference in para. 2 to "investments money or property representing" the trust fund. There is nothing in those words that one can say is really inconsistent with a limitation on the range of investment to trustee investments, but there is, perhaps, more likelihood of something which in common parlance would be described as "property" rather than an "investment" coming into the hands of the trustees in the course of exercising their powers of investment if the range is the unrestricted one rather than the narrow one. The real ground, however, for my decision is the plain and ordinary meaning of the words "in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit." Having found nothing in the authorities to constrain me to construe those words otherwise than in accordance with their plain meaning, that is the meaning I propose to place on them.

For these reasons, I will declare that the power given by the settlement in question to the trustees to invest trust moneys, with the consent therein mentioned, in or upon such investments as to them may seem fit, with power to vary or transpose any investments for or into others, enables investments to be made in any investments which seem fit to the trustees, whether or not they are investments authorised by law for the investment of trust funds.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be taxed and paid out of the trust fund.

Solicitors : Wordsworth & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DEMBY HAMILTON & CO., LTD. v. BARDEN (ENDEAVOUR WINES, LTD. (Third Party)).

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Sellers, J.), January 19, 20, 24, 28, 1949.]

Sale of Goods—Transfer of risk—Delivery delayed through fault of buyer—Buyer's liability for loss—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 20.

A manufacturer contracted to supply 30 tons of apple juice in accordance with sample to a wine merchant, to be delivered in weekly truckloads. He crushed the apples, put the juice in casks, and kept it pending delivery. It was found as a fact that it would have been difficult to supply juice complying with the sample unless all the apples had been crushed at one time and that the juice was rightly and reasonably kept for the fulfilment of the contract, but that the property in it had not passed to the buyer. After 20½ tons had been delivered no further deliveries were made through the delay of the buyer in breach of the contract between the parties and notwithstanding requests for delivery instructions from the seller, and in due course the undelivered juice went putrid and had to be thrown away. It was found that delivery had been delayed through the fault of the buyer within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 20. In an action by the seller for damages for breach of contract or the price of the goods sold,

HELD : (i) "goods" within the meaning of the first proviso to s. 20 meant the contractual goods which had been assembled by the seller for the purpose of fulfilling the contract and making delivery and were ready to be delivered.

(ii) after the delay, therefore, the apple juice was at the risk of the buyer who was liable in respect of its loss.

Per SELLERS, J. : If the seller had been in a position to sell the goods elsewhere and acquire other goods for the postponed time of delivery and he had not done so and there was some loss in the meantime, the responsibility for the loss would have fallen on him, but in the present case the seller had to keep the goods ready for delivery as and when the buyer proposed to take them.

[AS TO DAMAGES FOR NON-ACCEPTANCE OF GOODS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 189, 190, para. 255.

FOR THE SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893, s. 20, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 17, p. 623.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Martineau v. Kitching, (1872), L.R. 7 Q.B. 436 ; 26 L.T. 836 ; 39 Digest 528, 1417.
- (2) Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S.A. v. Luis de Ridder, Limitada, [1949] 1 All E.R. 269.

(3) Inglis v. Stock, (1885), 10 App. Cas. 263 ; 52 L.T. 821 ; 39 Digest 530, 1433.

(4) Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 78 ; 128 L.T. 402 ; 39 Digest 529, 1421.

ACTION for damages for breach of contract or for the price of goods sold.

The plaintiffs (the sellers) were suppliers of apple juice, and on Nov. 8, 1945, they contracted with the defendant (the buyer), a wine merchant, to supply "approximately 30 tons of 'Cyas' apple juice as per sample at £58 per ton" to the third parties, also wine merchants, on the buyer's behalf, "the first truck to be despatched in about three weeks' time, the remainder by sending one truck per week, in casks of 6 or 12 cwts." The sellers crushed 30 tons of cider apples, the last apples which they had that season for crushing, put the liquid into casks, and kept it for the fulfilment of the contract. Deliveries were begun in accordance with the contract, and, if they had continued to be made punctually, they would have been completed in February, 1946, but on Dec. 11, 1945, following a communication from the third parties, the buyer requested the sellers to stop delivery until further notice. Further deliveries took place on Jan. 28, and Apr. 4, 1946, but thereafter, although the sellers were able and willing to make delivery and notwithstanding requests for delivery instructions made by them, no further deliveries were accepted. On Nov. 7, 1946, the buyer was informed that the contents of the casks which had been kept ready for delivery had become putrid and been thrown away. It appeared from the evidence that it would have been very difficult to comply with the sample unless all the apples had been crushed at one time and that the apple juice was rightly kept for the fulfilment of the contract. There was nothing in the contract inconsistent with the view that the parties recognised throughout that the 30 tons were going to be crushed and the casks containing the apple juice kept until delivery, but there was no specific statement in the correspondence that they were ready for delivery. It was found on these facts that the property in the apple juice had not passed to the buyer, but that the loss had arisen from the fault of the buyer in delaying taking delivery in breach of contract, and that the buyer and also the third parties were liable for the loss under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 20.

T. J. F. Hobley for the sellers.

Leonard Lewis for the buyer.

Mocatta for the third parties.

SELLERS, J. : [His LORDSHIP stated the facts and continued :] The first question which arises is whether the sellers are entitled to recover on the basis on which they framed their case by reason of the provisions of s. 20 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, which provides :

" Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer, the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not. Provided that where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either buyer or seller the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault . . . "

It would appear that this proviso to s. 20 has not so far called for consideration in the courts—at least, no case has been produced in the course of this hearing in which that proviso has been considered or applied. It appears, however, from the footnote in CHALMERS' SALE OF GOODS, 12th ed., p. 78, that it is probably based on some observations of the court in Martineau v. Kitching (1). In the course of his judgment in that case BLACKBURN, J., said (L.R. 7 Q.B. 453) :

" As a general rule, res perit domino, the old civil law maxim, is a maxim of our law ; and when you can show that the property passed the risk of the loss, prima facie, is in the person in whom the property is. If, on the other hand, you go beyond that, and show that the risk attached to the one person or the other, it is a very strong argument for showing that the property was meant to be in him. But the two are not inseparable. It may be very well that the property shall be in the one and the risk in the other."

A The learned judge continued (ibid., 456) :

" Now by the civil law it always was considered that, if there was any weighing, or anything of the sort which prevented the contract being perfecta emptio, whenever that was occasioned by one of the parties being in mora, and it was his default, though the emptio is not perfecta, yet if it is clearly shown that the party was in mora, he shall have the risk just as if the emptio was perfecta. That is perfectly good sense and justice, though it is not necessary to the decision of the present case, that, when the weighing is delayed in consequence of the interference of the buyer, so that the property did not pass, even if there were no express stipulation about risk, yet because the non-completion of the bargain and sale, which would absolutely transfer the property, was owing to the delay of the purchaser, the purchaser should bear the risk just as much as if the property had passed."

In BENJAMIN ON SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY, 7th ed., p. 426, it states :

" It should be observed that the second clause of s. 20 of the Act . . . is not identical with BLACKBURN, J.'s proposition. He speaks of mora delaying the transfer of the property whereas the Act refers to a delay in delivery, i.e., in the transfer of possession, and, though in many instances the same acts operate to transfer both, yet this is not always the case. It would therefore seem that the law, as laid down by him, has been extended by the Act. Moreover, the risk to be borne by the party in fault is the risk of any loss which ' might ' not otherwise have occurred ; and this provision seems to throw on the party in fault the onus of showing positively that the loss would have occurred independently of his fault. The case is of course stronger where the loss would not have happened had there been no delay."

I am not going so far in this case as to say that I place the onus on the buyer to show that the loss did not occur or might not have occurred. I think that all the facts and circumstances have to be looked at in very much the same way as a jury would look at them in order to see whether the loss can properly be attributed to the failure of the buyer to take delivery of the goods at the proper time. That, I think, is essentially a matter for the jury—a question of fact—having regard to all the circumstances. The first requirement of the proviso in question is that delivery has been delayed through the fault of the buyer. I am satisfied on the facts in the present case that a good delivery, which would have avoided all loss, was delayed through the fault of the buyer, and that of the third parties. The next requirement of the proviso is that, where delivery has been delayed through the fault of the buyer, the goods are at the risk of the party in fault "as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault." The goods referred to there must be the contractual goods which have been assembled by the seller for the purpose of fulfilling his contract and making delivery. The goods may have been defined goods, goods manufactured for the purposes of delivery, or goods which had been acquired by the seller from somebody else for the purpose of fulfilling his contract. It does not seem to me that the Act requires to be construed in any narrow sense. The real question is whether the loss which has accrued was brought about by the delay in delivery, and that must have regard to the goods which were there to be delivered. Different circumstances may arise in different cases. It may be that the seller was in a position to sell the goods elsewhere and acquire other goods for the postponed time of delivery, and if he does not do that and there is some loss in the meantime the responsibility for the loss would be held to fall upon him. Again, there may be cases (and I think this is one of them) where the seller has his goods ready for delivery and has to keep them ready for delivery as and when the buyer proposes to take them. In the present case the position is clear. The casks of apple juice which were not accepted were manufactured at the time of the contract, and the contract required that delivery should be in accordance with sample. It would have been very difficult to have obtained goods which complied with the sample unless the apples had all been crushed at the same time. They would have had to be apples from the same district and the juice from them, when obtained, would have had to be of the same maturity. The condition of apples changes. They may be unripe at one time and too ripe at another. The 30 tons of juice were goods which the sellers rightly and reasonably kept for the fulfilment of their contract. These were the last apples which the sellers had that season for crushing, and, therefore, the goods in question were goods which the sellers had awaiting delivery in fulfilment of their contract with the buyer.

I have to ask myself whether this loss might not have occurred but for the fault of the buyer. I am satisfied that it would not have occurred but for his fault. There is, of course, an obligation on a seller to act reasonably, and, if possible, to avoid any loss. As to that, one or two questions arise for consideration. Was there anything the sellers could reasonably do to dispose of these goods when they still had an outstanding obligation to keep them at the disposal of the buyer and when they had to be ready and willing to deliver them when requested? If delivery had been asked for at a later date and they had let these goods go elsewhere they could not have fulfilled their contract. I do not hesitate to find (although to construe this proviso is not easy) that in a practical and business sense this loss has fallen on the sellers by reason of the fact that the buyer refused to take delivery at the proper time and postponed the date of delivery until the goods had deteriorated, and I come to the conclusion that the liability for that loss falls on the buyer.

There is no authority which has dealt with this proviso, but I was referred to a recent case in the House of Lords, Comptoir D'Achat et de Vente du Boerenbond Belge S.A. v. Luis de Ridder, Limitada (2), and reliance has been placed on what LORD PORTER there said (ante, p. 276) :

" . . . it is difficult to see how a parcel is at the buyer's risk when he has neither property nor possession, except in such cases as Inglis v. Stock (3), and Sterns, Ltd. v. Vickers, Ltd. (4), where the purchaser had an interest in an undivided part of a bulk parcel on board a ship, or elsewhere, obtained by attornment of the bailee to him."

Other passages also in the speeches of the noble Lords in that case were relied on, but I do not think that that case assists the court in the present matter except in a very general way, because the House was not considering the effect of the proviso to s. 20 of the Act. In my opinion, the sellers have justified their claim of £412 6s. 0d., and I give judgment for them for that amount against the buyer. [HIS LORDSHIP then held the third parties liable to the buyer for the sum the buyer had to pay to the sellers, for the buyer's loss of profit, and for his costs in defending the action.]

Judgment for the plaintiff against the defendant with costs : judgment for the defendant against the third parties with costs (costs as between solicitor and client in defending the plaintiffs' claim).

Solicitors : Ernest W. Long & Co. (for the sellers) ; Goodman, Monroe & Co. (for the buyer) ; Cosmo Cran & Co. (for the third parties).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DE BEAUJEU.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), December 10, 1948, February 4, 1949.]
Contempt of Court—Chambers proceedings—Ward of court—Report of order made in chambers.

At the hearing of summonses by a judge in chambers an applicant challenged the jurisdiction of the judge. The challenge was not pressed, but the judge was of the opinion that the proper forum for dealing with the matter, which concerned the custody and maintenance of infants who were wards of the court, was the competent court in the province of Quebec and he gave permission for the removal of the infants to Canada. In reporting subsequent proceedings in Quebec, a London newspaper stated: "An earlier attempt . . . to obtain possession of the children failed when it was ruled that the Chancery Division of the High Court in England lacked jurisdiction." In a motion for leave to issue a writ of attachment against the editor of the newspaper on the ground that the report was a contempt of court because it referred to proceedings in chambers:

HELD: the judge had not directed that the order made on the chambers proceedings or a summary thereof should not be published, and, therefore, the report was not a contempt of court.

Dictum of NORTH, J., in Re Martindale ([1894] 3 Ch. 201, 202; 71 L.T. 471), applied.

Per WYNN-PARRY, J.: In proceedings involving wards of court the judge has a complete discretion to allow or forbid publication of the proceedings or any order made therein. In the absence of any special direction, I am of opinion that prima facie it would be a contempt of court to publish an account of proceedings relating to an infant conducted in chambers without the express permission of the judge who heard the case. I use the words "prima facie" because I do not intend to attempt to state any exhaustive rule. There may well be cases in which the permission of the judge is not required, because, for example, of the lapse of time between the hearing and the date of the publication. Such cases must be dealt with as and when they arise and cannot conveniently be made the subject of any hard and fast or exhaustive rule. On the other hand, I am of opinion that it would not be a contempt of court to publish the order, or an accurate summary of the order, made on such proceedings unless the judge directed that neither the order nor such summary should be published.

[AS TO CONTEMPT OF COURT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 2-12, paras. 1-14; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 16, pp. 30-32, Nos. 292-302.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Martindale, [1894] 3 Ch. 193; 71 L.T. 468; 16 Digest 32, 302.
- (2) Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; 109 L.T. 1; 16 Digest 31, 301.

MOTION for leave to issue a writ of attachment against the editor of a newspaper for the publication of a report referring to an order made in proceedings which had been heard in chambers. Leave was refused. The facts appear in the judgment.

Manningham-Buller, K.C., and Neil Lawson for the applicant, the mother of two infant children, plaintiffs in an action.

Sir Valentine Holmes, K.C., and John Davidson for the respondent, the editor of the newspaper.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 4. WYNN-PARRY, J., read the following judgment. This is a motion for leave to issue a writ of attachment against the respondent, Percy Cudlipp, for an alleged contempt of court. The relevant facts may be stated shortly as follows. On Nov. 15, 1948, I made two orders on two summonses in this matter. On the first, a summons by the applicant on this motion, the mother of the two infant plaintiffs, I gave the applicant liberty to take the infant plaintiffs out of the jurisdiction to Montreal on certain terms and subject to certain conditions to which I do not propose to refer. The applicant, by her summons, challenged the jurisdiction of this court over the infant plaintiffs, A but at the hearing this challenge was not pressed and the matter proceeded on the basis that the infant plaintiffs were wards of this court and subject to its jurisdiction. The other summons was a summons by the father of the infant plaintiffs asking for directions as to custody and maintenance. On this summons I made no order.

In accordance with the invariable practice of the court the summonses were heard in chambers as, so far as effective, they were concerned solely with matters relating to the interests of the infant plaintiffs. In view, however, of this motion which was heard and the judgment on which is being delivered in open court, I think it right to say that the reason why I gave leave to the applicant to take the infant plaintiffs to Canada and why I made no order on the father's summons was because I took the view, for reasons which I do not propose to state, that the proper forum for the disposal of the matters raised before me was the competent court in the province of Quebec. Pursuant to my order, the applicant took the infant plaintiffs to Montreal, and the necessary proceedings were started by the father before the competent court in that province. C

The respondent to this motion is the editor of the DAILY HERALD newspaper. In the issue of that newspaper of Nov. 30, 1948, there appeared the following paragraph : D

“ A writ of habeas corpus was issued by Quebec Chief Justice Tyndale yesterday ordering the divorced wife of Jacques Debeaujeu, a journalist, of Forge Cottage, Penhurst, Kent, to produce the two children of the marriage in court and justify their retention. An earlier attempt by Mr. Debeaujeu to obtain possession of the children failed when it was ruled that the Chancery Division of the High Court in England lacked jurisdiction. Mr. Debeaujeu married Juliana Becqaert in Antwerp and obtained a divorce from the divorce committee of the Canadian senate.” E

The paragraph is inaccurate in two respects. In the first place, as I have already stated, the jurisdiction of this court over the infant plaintiffs was not challenged. In the second place, the divorce between the applicant and the father of the children was obtained by the applicant against the father and not by him against her. The information contained in the paragraph in question was supplied to the DAILY HERALD by a reputable news-agency. It was passed for publication by the night editor, who at the time was not aware of the proceedings before me. F G

It is alleged that, putting aside the inaccuracies in the report, the publication of the paragraph in question was a contempt of this court because it referred to proceedings which were held in chambers, and reliance was placed on the judgment of NORTH, J., in Re Martindale (1). On the other hand, it was argued for the respondent that no contempt had been committed because all that was done was to publish a statement (inaccurate, as it turned out) of the result of the proceedings before me, and that the mere publication of such a statement did not amount to a contempt. H

As I read the judgment of NORTH, J., he does not lay down that publication of an order of this court, or of the effect of such an order, is a contempt merely because the proceedings leading up to the order were held in chambers. It is true that NORTH, J., said ([1894] 3 Ch. 201, 202) :

" . . . I cannot conceive a clearer contempt of court than that a party concerned, or any person, should proceed forthwith to make known to the world the very matter which the court had deliberately, in the exercise of its discretion, decided ought not to be published . . . But, as I have already said, there was no contempt in announcing the fact that the ward had become the wife of Hueffer; the contempt was in purporting to give the public information, though meagre, of what the judge had decided ought not to be disclosed, by determining to hear the case in private and excluding the public."

He does not, however, go so far as to say that the effect of proceedings being held in chambers is to preclude publication of the result.

In Scott v. Scott (2), LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE said ([1913] A.C. 482) :

" Upon this head it is true that to the application of the general rule of publicity there are three well recognized exceptions which arise out of the nature of the proceedings themselves. The three exceptions which are acknowledged to the application of the rule prescribing the publicity of courts of justice are, first, in suits affecting wards; secondly, in lunacy proceedings; and, thirdly, in those cases where secrecy, as, for instance, the secrecy of a process of manufacture or discovery or invention—trade secrets—is of the essence of the cause. The first two of these cases, my Lords, depend upon the familiar principle that the jurisdiction over wards and lunatics is exercised by the judges as representing His Majesty as parens patriae. The affairs are truly private affairs; the transactions are transactions truly intra familiam; and it has long been recognized that an appeal for the protection of the court in the case of such persons does not involve the consequence of placing in the light of publicity their truly domestic affairs. The third case—that of secret processes, inventions, documents, or the like—depends upon this: that the rights of the subject are bound up with the preservation of the secret. To divulge that to the world, under the excuse of a report of proceedings in a court of law, would be to destroy that very protection which the subject seeks at the court's hands. It has long been undoubted that the right to have judicial proceedings in public does not extend to a violation of that secret which the court may judicially determine to be of patrimonial value and to maintain. But I desire to add this further observation with regard to all of these cases, my Lords, that, when respect has thus been paid to the object of the suit, the rule of publicity may be resumed. I know of no principle which would entitle a court to compel a ward to remain silent for life in regard to judicial proceedings which occurred during his tutelage, nor a person who was temporarily insane—after he had fully recovered his sanity and his liberty—to remain perpetually silent with regard to judicial proceedings which occurred during the period of his incapacity. And even in the last case, namely, that of trade secrets, I should be surprised to learn that any proceedings for contempt of court could be taken against a person for divulging what had happened in a litigation after the secrecy or confidentiality had been abandoned and the secrets had become public property."

In my judgment, in proceedings involving wards of court the judge has a complete discretion to allow or forbid publication of the proceedings or any order made therein. In the absence of any special direction, I am of opinion that prima facie it would be a contempt of court to publish an account of proceedings relating to an infant conducted in chambers without the express permission of the judge who heard the case. I use the words "prima facie" because I do not intend to attempt to state any exhaustive rule. There may well be cases in which the permission of the judge is not required, because, for example, of the lapse of time between the hearing and the date of the publication. Such cases must be dealt with as and when they arise and, as I see it, cannot conveniently be made the subject of any hard and fast or exhaustive rule. On the other hand, I am of opinion that it would not be a contempt of court to publish the order, or an accurate summary of the order, made on such proceedings unless the judge directed that neither the order nor such summary should be published. No such direction was made by me in this case, and, in my judgment, the act complained of did not constitute a contempt of court.

That would be sufficient to dispose of the motion. I desire to add, however, that, even had my conclusion been otherwise, the contempt involved would have been of the most technical character, and I find it difficult to see how it could be said to have been necessary or desirable in the interests of the infant plaintiffs to launch this motion. I am satisfied as to the good faith of the newspaper in the matter, and it is to be observed that the information supplied to it (inaccurate as it was) did no more, so far as reference to the infant plaintiffs is concerned, than refer to a challenge to the jurisdiction. Had that question been pursued, I should have adjourned the matter into court, at any rate, for the purpose of giving judgment. The night editor, therefore, was not to know from a mere perusal of the information supplied by the news-agency that the proceedings referred to were not proceedings held in open court. In the result, the motion will be dismissed with costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker (for the applicant); Simmons & Simmons (for the respondent).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

✓ Re NORTHCOTE'S WILL TRUSTS. NORTHCOTE v. NORTHCOTE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), January 27, 1949.]

Trustee—Profit from trust—Duty to account to estate—Commission allowed to executors under American law.

A testator, domiciled in England, died having assets both in England and in the United States of America. His executors took an English grant, and, in compliance with an undertaking given by them to the Inland Revenue, they obtained a grant in New York State appertaining to the American assets. They got in the American assets, for doing which the law of that State allowed them agency commission. This they deducted and paid the balance to themselves as the English executors. On the question whether they were accountable to the English estate for the commission so received by them,

HELD: the commission was never part of the English assets and it arose out of the executors' obligation to take the American grant; the money had come to them without their volition; and, therefore, they were not under a duty to account for it.

Re Gee ([1948] 1 All E.R. 498; [1948] Ch. 284), applied.

[AS TO DUTY OF TRUSTEE NOT TO OBTAIN PERSONAL ADVANTAGE FROM POSITION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 220, 221, para. 402; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, vol. 43, pp. 863-866, Nos. 3097-3117.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Gee, [1948] 1 All E.R. 498; [1948] Ch. 284.

(2) Robinson v. Pett, (1734), 3 P. Wms. 249; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 454; sub nom., Robinson v. Lorkin, 2 Barn. K.B. 435; 43 Digest 775, 2151.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, inter alia, whether English executors and trustees who had taken out a grant of probate in the United States of America to the testator's American assets were bound to account to the English estate in respect of commission allowed them under American law on a percentage basis in connection with the getting in of the American assets. HARMAN, J., held that they were not so bound.

Rawlence for the plaintiff.

R. W. Goff for the first defendant, one of the trustees.

Lightman for the second defendant, personal representative of a deceased trustee.

A Craufurd, Parbury and Burnett-Hall for residuary legatees and parties attending the proceedings.

HARMAN, J. : This is a point on which I had hoped to find direct authority, but there does not seem to be any. The testator, who left assets both in this country and in the United States, was domiciled in England, and the principal forum of administration is, therefore, English. The executors took an English grant, and on doing so they were put on terms by the Revenue, because of the requirements of the Revenue for security for the English duty (the English effects being insufficient to pay it), to undertake themselves personally to obtain a grant in New York State in respect of the American assets. In due course they obtained such a grant. As personal representatives of the testator in New York State they got in the American assets, and for so doing the law of that State allowed them agency commission. They deducted this commission, and then paid to themselves as the English executors the net American assets of a million and so many dollars. In the administration touching the English estate it is said : "You, the English executors and trustees, have made a profit out of your trust, to wit, the commission which New York State allowed you to put in your pocket, and for that you are accountable to the English estate." That is based on the old principle which, as I pointed out recently in Re Gee (1), goes back at least to the time of Peere Williams. In Re Gee decd. (1) I said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 503) :

E "The principle that a trustee, in the absence of a special contract, cannot make a profit out of his trust, nor be paid for his time and trouble, is an old one, and is spoken of as established in Robinson v. Pett (2) . . ."

In Re Gee (1) I was dealing with moneys received by a trustee from a company, which, therefore, were moneys paid from outside. I conceive that the present case is exactly in pari materia with that case and the other cases where trustees have received remuneration from an outside source in the course of administering an estate or executing a trust, for the remuneration received by these trustees was never part of the English assets which alone are being administered in this country. It seems to me the question whether or no trustees are accountable for moneys received by them depends on whether it resided within their own power to procure the moneys for themselves or whether the moneys came to them without their volition. Here these trustees were under an obligation to take out this American grant, and everything flows from that. The same remuneration would have been payable to any other person to whom they had given a power of attorney. The only question is whether there is an equity against these trustees to disgorge that which they have put in their pockets from an outside source, on the ground that their interest in the matter conflicted with their duty. I do not think it did. Qua the American executors, they are not accountable for this sum. They have accounted fully in that capacity, and, in my judgment, the English beneficiaries are not entitled to call them to account for a sum which accrued to them by reason of the obligation they undertook in order to obtain the English grant.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : Farrer & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; Torr & Co. (for the first and second defendants) ; Lee & Pembertons, Moon, Gilks & Moon, and Behrend, Kendall, Price & Francis (for English residuary legatees and parties attending the proceedings).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Singleton and Denning, L.JJ.), January 28, 31, February 1, 1939.]

Charterparty—Freight—Computation—Carriage of contemplated cargo—Option to charterer to ship other lawful merchandise—Freight to be paid at rate agreed for contemplated cargo—Vessel completely loaded partly with contemplated cargo and partly with optional cargo. A Demurrage—Computation—Lay days—Carriage of contemplated cargo—Option to charterer to ship other lawful merchandise—Vessel completely loaded partly with contemplated cargo and partly with optional cargo—Calculation of demurrage on cargo actually loaded and discharged.

A charterparty provided that the chartered vessel should load a full and complete cargo of wheat and/or maize and/or rye in bags and/or bulk and deliver the cargo on being paid freight at the rate of 83s. 6d. per ton for wheat and/or maize and/or rye. The charterparty contained the following clause : “ (6) Charterer has the option of shipping other lawful merchandise . . . in which case freight to be paid on steamer’s dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags on this voyage at the rate above agreed on for heavy grain, but steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags . . . All extra expenses in loading and discharging such merchandise over heavy grain to be paid by charterer.” The steamer was to be loaded at the rate of 500 tons per running day and, at the destination, cargo was to be received at an average of not less than 1,000 tons per weather working day for bulk cargo and not less than 750 tons for bagged cargo, otherwise demurrage was to be paid at the rate of 8d. per G.R.T. per day or pro rata for part of a day. Exercising his option under cl. 6 the charterer loaded the ship to capacity with contemplated cargo of maize in bulk, and optional cargo of linseed in bags and pollards, a total of 8,858 tons, or 579 tons short of the vessel’s dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags of 9,437 tons. B C D

HELD : (i) cl. 6 of the charterparty did not entitle the charterer to deduct from the freight which he had to pay the shipowners, a sum which represented the saving of money which had enured to the benefit of the shipowners by reason of the exercise by the charterer of his option under this clause, and, accordingly, the freight should be calculated on the dead-weight capacity of the ship. E

Per TUCKER, L.J. : Freight is the remuneration to which the shipowners are entitled on performance of their obligations under the charterparty, and it is a sum which has no relation to the profits which they may make or the expense which they have to incur in order to earn that freight. F

(ii) with regard to demurrage, the lay days were dependent on the loading and unloading of the actual cargo which was shipped and unloaded.

Decision of SELLERS, J. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 523), varied. G

[AS TO RATE OF PAYMENT OF FREIGHT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 583-588, paras. 741-745 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 654-658, Nos. 4867-4892.]

AS TO COMPUTATION OF DEMURRAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, pp. 344-349, paras. 524-528 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 566-576, Nos. 3910-3998.] H

Cases referred to :

(1) Red “ R ” S.S. Co. v. Allatini Brothers, (1910), 103 L.T. 86 ; 15 Com. Cazar. 290 ; 41 Digest 656, 4882.

(2) Mazarakis (A. & C.) v. Bunge Y. Born, Ltd., (1926), 24 Lloyd L.R. 244, C.A. ; 26 Lloyd L.R. 169, H.L.

APPEAL by the shipowners and cross appeal by charterer from a decision of SELLERS, J., dated July 5, 1948, on a Special Case stated by an arbitrator in respect of freight and demurrage payable by the charterer. The arbitrator accepted the shipowners' computation for both claims, but the learned judge reversed the arbitrator's finding in respect of freight, affirming his finding in respect of demurrage. The Court of Appeal now allowed the appeal, dismissing the cross-appeal by the charterer. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Sir Robert Aske, K.C., and Mocatta for the shipowners.

Sir William McNair, K.C., and H. L. Parker for the charterer.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal by the Hain Steamship Co., Ltd. by way of Special Case in arbitration proceedings in which they were claimants and the Minister of Food was respondent. Those proceedings arose in connection with a charterparty—the Chamber of Shipping River Plate Charterparty, 1914 (homewards)—known under the code name of “Centrocon.” The dispute primarily concerns the proper interpretation of cl. 6 of that charterparty, and it arose in connection with a claim by the shipowners for freight.

The cargo which was loaded on the ship, a motor-vessel named the Trevoise, consisted of 8,858 tons, made up of four parcels, namely, maize in bulk, linseed in bags (two parcels), and pollards in bags. Under cl. 2 of the charterparty wheat and/or maize and/or rye in bags and/or bulk was what has been called the contemplated cargo—that is, the cargo which would normally be carried by the ship. The quantity of cargo loaded on the ship was 579 tons short of the vessel's dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags, the contemplated cargo, and she was not, in fact, down to her marks, though fully loaded. The maize was shipped under cl. 2 and the linseed and pollards were shipped under cl. 6, the optional clause. The cargo, therefore, consisted partly of contemplated cargo and partly of optional cargo. When the cargo was unshipped in this country the pollards and linseed, which were unshipped at Avonmouth and were not weighed on discharge, amounted to 3,155 tons odd, allowing for a shrinkage of .75 per cent., and the balance of the cargo, which was unshipped at Liverpool and was weighed on discharge, amounted to 2,213 tons odd of maize and 3,427 tons odd of linseed. That made a total, allowing for shrinkage, of 8,795 tons odd as against the 8,858 tons which had been shipped.

Clause 6 of the charterparty provides :

“Charterer has the option of shipping other lawful merchandise, cotton, sugar, quebracho wood, quebracho extract and distillery residue excluded, in which case freight to be paid on steamer's dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags on this voyage at the rate above agreed on for heavy grain, but steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags. This option can only be used if the quantity of other lawful merchandise as above shall amount to not less than 200 tons.

All extra expenses in loading and discharging such merchandise over heavy grain to be paid by charterer. The charterer is to have the full reach and burthen of the steamer, including 'tween and shelter decks, bridges, poop, etc. (provided same are not occupied by bunker coals and/or stores).”

It is agreed that the rate of freight in this case is 83s. 6d. per ton, which in the circumstances which existed would have been the rate payable in respect of wheat in bags.

The shipowners say that they are entitled to be paid freight arrived at by a simple arithmetical calculation. The cargo loaded did not take the ship down to her marks, and there was a deficiency between the full capacity of the ship and the load which she in fact carried of 579 tons. That means that the full dead-weight capacity of the ship, calculated in terms of wheat in bags, was 9,437 tons. The shipowners say : “All you have to do is to take 9,437 tons, allow for a normal shrinkage of 0.75 per cent., and multiply the resulting figure by 83s. 6d. per ton." That works out at 9,366 odd tons, which, multiplied by 83s. 6d. per ton, gives a total figure of £39,103 19s. 7d. On the other hand, the charterer says that the proper method of calculation is: "You take the actual out-turn weight of the cargo which was weighed on arrival, and, as to the cargo which was not weighed on arrival, you allow the agreed estimated shrinkage of 0.75 per cent., and you add those two figures together, but you have also to add something further in respect of the 579 tons representing the balance of the available dead-weight capacity of the ship." The charterer says that the proper way of making the calculation is to allow 83s. 6d. per ton on the 579 tons, which amounts to £2,417 6s. 6d., and he says that he is entitled to deduct from that sum the sum of £81 11s. 4d., representing a saving in the expenses of discharging the cargo, of which the shipowners had the benefit by reason of the fact that they did not have to discharge 579 tons of cargo.

On the figures, I think that the issue between the parties can be disposed of without expressing a view as to the two rival methods of calculating the freight which is properly payable. It happens in this case that, putting on one side the saving in the expenses of discharging and the question whether they were properly deductible, the amount payable on the charterer's calculation would have worked out at £39,144 odd, but he would have then said: "As cl. 6 expressly provides that the steamer is not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags, and, as on the shipowners' own calculations on that basis, she would have only earned £39,103 19s. 7d., I must reduce my figure of £39,144 odd to £39,103 19s. 7d." Therefore, but for this question of the claim to deduct these expenses, the result would have been identical whichever party is right as to the proper method of calculation. It seems to me, therefore, that this part of the case turns entirely on the question whether or not the charterer would be entitled, even assuming that his method of calculation is correct, to deduct the sum saved in respect of discharging expenses.

Before going on to consider that matter further, I may state in passing that a clause similar to cl. 6 has been the subject of discussion in two cases which have gone to the House of Lords. In Red "R" S.S. Co. v. Allatini (1) the whole of the cargo was optional cargo. The ship was not loaded to her marks; she was only partially laden. It was decided that the effect of the clause was to entitle the shipowners to recover a sum calculated in the same way as that in which the shipowners make their calculation in the present case. That has been referred to as the "lump sum" method of calculation. In Mazarakis (A. & C.) v. Bunge Y Born (2) there was partly contemplated cargo and partly optional cargo, and the vessel was loaded to her marks. It was held that the application of a clause similar to cl. 6 did not on the facts result in freight calculated in the way it had resulted in the Allatini case (1), that is to say, you did not simply have to make a calculation based on the dead-weight capacity of the ship multiplied by the rate payable. LORD SUMNER stated the matter shortly as follows (26 Lloyd L.R. 171):

"I have come to the conclusion that, when the option given by cl. 6 is exercised and the provisions of that clause have to be reconciled with the other clauses which govern the chartered voyage, the right construction of the words, and the only feasible construction in business, is that the freight payable is payable on delivered weights and on right delivery, and upon such a total weight as may earn freight by right delivery, provided always that the weight of a full and complete cargo of wheat in bags has been shipped."

Then he says (ibid., 172):

"The preferable construction of cl. 6 is, that in the event of a due exercise of the option given by that clause, freight, earned by right delivery and calculated on the delivered weights of the several sorts of cargo delivered, is to be paid at the rate agreed above for heavy grain, but so that, either the steamer shall have been loaded to her marks, or, if not, the total freight paid shall not be less than the agreed rate for wheat in bags on a full and complete cargo, duly delivered. The expression 'lump sum charter,' so much relied on in argument, is, I think, for present purposes misleading. It may well be that the freight payable under cl. 6 is such as to preclude any claim for dead freight if the ship had not been loaded to her marks at her final port of loading. Such a case arose in Red "R" S.S. Co. v. Allatini (1), but it is not the case here, and I therefore think that the expressions there used about a 'lump sum' do not apply now. In no other respect does this term fit the present charter. Nothing that was said in Allatini's case (1) is a binding authority to determine how the calculation of the charterparty freight is to be made when a full cargo has been both shipped and delivered but has lost weight by evaporation during the voyage."

In the Mazarakis case (2), both in the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, the courts had envisaged a case like the present, namely, cargo partly optional and the vessel not loaded to her marks, and I think it is clear that the view taken both in the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords was that neither the judgment in the Allatini case (1) nor the judgments which they delivered in the Mazarakis case (2) were conclusive of the point which arises in the present case. This is what BANKES, L.J., said about that in the Mazarakis case (2) (24 Lloyd L.R. 246) :

"Having regard to the facts of this case it is not material to consider what the position would have been had the cargo shipped consisted partly of contemplated cargo and partly of optional cargo, and if the two together had not completely filled the ship so that the dead-weight capacity of the ship was represented by the cargo shipped. In such a case as that, of course, the effect of cl. 6 is to require the charterer to pay in respect of the optional cargo a sum which will make up the full freight upon the steamer's dead-weight capacity; and in a sense, therefore, the effect of the clause is in a case such as that to bring about something which is not exactly but very similar to a payment of lump sum freight, because there would be no question of paying dead freight, but the sum which would have to be paid would be a sum representing a rate of freight upon the full dead-weight capacity of the steamer. However, that particular point does not arise in this case, because in fact a full cargo was shipped."

WARRINGTON, L.J., and ATKIN, L.J., referred to that possibility, but both refrained from expressing a view on the matter. In the House of Lords, in the passage to which I have already referred, LORD SUMNER envisaged it and dealt with it quite shortly, when he used the words (22 Lloyd L.R. 172) :

"... but so that, either the steamer shall have been loaded to her marks, or, if not, the total freight paid shall not be less than the agreed rate for wheat in bags on a full and complete cargo, duly delivered."

I think, however, that the last part of that statement of LORD SUMNER's and the statement that I have read from the judgment of BANKES, L.J., were both obiter.

The learned umpire took the view that the case which governed the present matter was the Allatini case (1) and that the Mazarakis case (2) did not apply. He did not express an opinion with regard to the dicta of BANKES, L.J., and LORD SUMNER in the Mazarakis case (2), but he held that the Allatini case (1) applied, and, therefore, the shipowners were right in their method of calculation, merely multiplying the dead-weight capacity of the ship, after allowing for normal shrinkage, by the agreed rate of 83s. 6d. per ton. In that view of the case it did not become necessary for him to consider whether or not the claim by the charterer to deduct the saving in expenses of discharging was maintainable or not. SELLERS, J., came to a different conclusion. He held that the charterer was entitled to deduct those expenses, and he arrived at his conclusion in these words ([1948] 2 All E.R. 526) :

"Before the arbitrator the claim seems to have been based on a liability for dead freight or damages. If that were correct, I think the estimated discharging expenses would be deductible from the freight attributable to the shortage, but the two cases cited establish clearly that the liability arising under cl. 6 is not for dead freight but is for freight due under the contract—not for breach of it. The argument was not so put or restricted before me."

The learned judge had considered the Allatini case (1) and the Mazarakis case (2) and had said (ibid.) :

"The learned arbitrator has accepted the shipowner's contention and held that their calculation of freight is correct. The conclusion so reached does not, as I see it, fully deal with or exhaust the charterer's submissions before this court. Neither of the two cases cited deals with the position which arises here where part of the cargo consists of specified and part of optional cargo and the two together do not reach the dead-weight capacity of the ship of wheat in bags, but, as Mazarakis (2) is the later case and as it deals with parcels of specified and optional cargo, I am of opinion that it should be applied to the present case and that the charterer is right in making his calculation of freight on the several sorts of cargo delivered. Whichever view is taken, however, the argument on behalf of the charterer still subsists that, in assessing the freight, whether on a notional cargo of wheat in bags to cover the shortage in dead-weight or to cover freight on the entire cargo, an allowance must be made to the charterer for the discharging expenses saved by the shipowners. This argument was not advanced in either of the cases to which I have just referred."

I think that there SELLERS, J., was taking the view that the Mazarakis case (2) governed the present matter to the extent that the charterer was right in his contention that the calculation had to be made on the several sorts of cargo delivered and allowing for something with regard to the notional cargo which had not been shipped, which was, I think, the method of calculation indicated by LORD SUMNER. The learned judge went on to say that, although this deduction in respect of the saving in discharge expenses could not be justified on a basis of dead freight because on the authorities there had been no breach of contract on the part of the charterer, none the less the same result could be arrived at by a different process, and this is how he arrives at it ([1948] 2 All E.R. 526) :

"I think the charterparty should be looked at as a whole, especially as cl. 6 has been described more than once as ambiguous and puzzling. The charterparty is essentially one for the carriage of grain, and where the option is given to ship any other lawful merchandise, except a few specified commodities, the freight on such merchandise is based on the carriage of wheat in bags at the rate for heavy grain fixed by the charterparty—i.e., it keeps the ship, as far as earnings are concerned, on the same basis as for one of the specified grain cargoes. There is nothing to indicate that the ship should gain by this. The indications are that she should be in the same position, neither better nor worse, whether grain is loaded or not. All extra expenses are for the charterer. The steamer is not to earn more freight. If wheat in bags only were shipped and the cargo failed to reach the dead-weight then dead freight or damages would be recoverable from the charterer and any saving to the ship would be taken into consideration. If a full cargo were shipped, then the ship would recover freight on the out-turn weights and would have the expense of discharging the full cargo in order to earn the freight. In my opinion, the charterparty (and cl. 6 in particular) should be so interpreted that the shipowner is placed in no better position than if he, in fact, carried wheat in bags instead of the optional cargo and that the charterer's contention is right."

I have arrived at a different conclusion with regard to the construction to be put on cl. 6. I cannot find in that clause any justification for deducting these discharging expenses. The clause, in my view, is designed to provide a method of calculation in respect of freight payable when the option conferred by the clause is exercised—and it provides in that case :

" . . . freight to be paid on steamer's dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags on this voyage at the rate above agreed on for heavy grain, but steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags. This option can only be used if the quantity of other lawful merchandise as above shall amount to not less than 200 tons. All extra expenses in loading and discharging such merchandise over heavy grain to be paid by charterer."

If that clause had not contained an express provision that the charterer was to pay extra expenses in loading and discharging as compared with heavy grain the shipowners would have been liable under the other provisions of the charterparty for the extra expenses of loading and discharging, and, therefore, it was necessary to put in that provision in order that they might escape that liability, but that is a liability quite apart from the freight which is payable. The freight which is earned, in my opinion, has nothing whatever to do with the payment of the expenses of loading and/or discharging. If, furthermore, it had been intended that, where optional cargo is shipped but the ship is not down to her marks, and, therefore, there is a saving in expense in the unloading of the cargo by the shipowners, in that event there should be a reduction in the freight payable, it would have been easy to say so. The argument is that there is a contrast between the words "freight to be paid" and the words "steamer not to earn more freight," but I do not think that such a distinction can properly be drawn. The argument of the charterer really amounts to contending that this language means that in such an event the shipowners are not to make any greater profit out of the venture than they would if contemplated cargo had been shipped. Freight is the remuneration to which the shipowners are entitled on performance of their obligations under the charterparty, and it is a sum which has no relation to the profits which they may make or the expenses which they have to incur in order to earn that freight. Clause 6, on its proper construction, does not entitle the charterer to deduct from the freight which he has to pay the shipowners, a sum which represents the saving of money which has enured to the benefit of the shipowners by reason of the exercise by the charterer of his option under this clause.

It was said by counsel for the charterer that, if the words "steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags" have not the meaning for which he contends, there can be no good reason for their inclusion in the clause. I do not think that that argument should prevail. I think there are other reasons which would, or might, necessitate such language as this—for instance, differences might arise as a result of shrinkage of the cargo on the voyage. However that may be, I cannot interpret "freight earned" as meaning or equivalent to "profit made on the voyage." For these reasons, even assuming that the charterer's method of calculating freight is the correct one, he is not entitled to make this deduction, and, that being so, the result in the present instance is the same in figures as that contended for by the shipowners.

Taking that view of the matter, it becomes necessary to deal with the claim in respect of demurrage. On this point SELLERS, J., said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 527) :

"The second issue between the parties is in respect of demurrage. The shipowners contend 'that the lay days must be calculated on the actual quantities, viz., 8,858 tons and 8,796½ tons, loaded and discharged, respectively.' The charterer contends 'that at the loading port the calculation must be based on the dead-weight capacity of the vessel for wheat in bags, viz., 9,437 tons, and, at the discharging ports, on the aggregate out-turn weight at Liverpool, the bill of lading weights (with no allowance for shrinkage) of the cargo discharged at Avonmouth and the weight on which . . . dead freight is payable, which aggregate amounts to 9,399½ tons'."

He then sets out the demurrage clauses and proceeds :

"The learned arbitrator has found as follows : 'Clauses 13 and 25 (which provide for the lay days at ports of loading and discharge respectively) are wholly independent of the clauses which provide for the calculation and payment of freight, and, on their true construction, provide that the lay days shall be calculated on the weights of cargo actually loaded and discharged respectively. Accordingly, I hold that the shipowners' calculation of demurrage are also correct'."

SELLERS, J., having referred to the clauses in question, continues (ibid.) :

"On this issue I agree with the learned arbitrator. The charterer has loaded cargo to the full capacity of the ship and if he had loaded and discharged at the agreed rate the shipowners would have been free to employ their vessel elsewhere during the time for which they now claim demurrage. The clauses provide for demurrage on a tonnage rate and draw no distinction between specified and optional cargo which may vary very considerably in the rate of loading or discharging."

With regard to that, I find myself in agreement both with the learned umpire and the learned judge. It would require a lot to be read into cl. 13 if it was to have the meaning attributed to it by counsel for the charterer. It would certainly have to read : "The steamer shall be loaded at the rate of 500 tons per running day, calculated on the dead-weight capacity of the ship." I think that the learned umpire was right when he said that cl. 13 and 25 are wholly independent of the clauses with regard to freight. I do not understand him as meaning that, in construing cl. 13 and 25, it is not proper to take into consideration all the other relevant clauses of the charterparty. What he says is that he cannot see anything in the other clauses of the charterparty which has any bearing on the question of demurrage. The view that he and the learned judge took was that the lay days were to be dependent on the loading and unloading of the actual cargo which was shipped and unloaded, and it seems to me that that is clearly the right view with regard to the claim in respect of demurrage, whatever may be the proper construction to be put upon cl. 6 of the charterparty. For these reasons, I think that the appeal of the shipowners succeeds and that the cross-appeal of the charterer fails.

SINGLETON, L.J. : I agree. Under cl. 2 of the charterparty the obligation of the charterer, prima facie, was to provide, and of the shipowners to receive from the charterer, "a full and complete cargo of wheat and/or maize and/or rye in bags and/or bulk." Under cl. 6 of the charterparty the charterer had an option (which he exercised) of shipping "other lawful merchandise" (with certain exceptions), and, if he did exercise that option, freight was to be paid "on steamer's dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags on this voyage at the rate above agreed on for heavy grain, but the steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags." The exercise of that option resulted in only 2,213 tons of maize being carried in the ship. The remainder of the cargo (linseed and pollards) took up the rest of the space in the ship, and the total cargo loaded filled the carrying space of the ship. The total weight carried was 579 tons short of the ship's total dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags. The charterer thereupon claimed to deduct from the freight payable the discharging expenses which the shipowners had saved by not having to load or to discharge the full amount of cargo. The amount in dispute between the parties in respect of this matter is comparatively small. It is a little surprising to me that in all the years that this charterparty has been used this specific question has, apparently, never been the subject of litigation, although there has been a good deal of litigation on other clauses of this charterparty.

The first thing that has to be remembered is that one is not dealing with a claim for damages in any sense of the word. The rights of the parties depend on the contract made between them, and the terms of that contract are to be found in cl. 6 of the charterparty. That clause, after specifying "freight to be paid on steamer's dead-weight capacity for wheat in bags" and "steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags," says: "All extra expenses in loading and discharging such merchandise over heavy grain to be paid by charterer." When the shipowners were asked to give the charterer an option at the time the agreement expressed in this charterparty was entered into, or when some amendment of it was made, the shipowners obviously said that they would do so on certain terms, one of which was the method of payment already mentioned, and the other was that all extra expenses in loading and discharging were to be paid by the charterer and the shipowners should not be put to any expense on that basis. If the charterer was to have the benefit of any saving because of less expenses it would have been quite easy to add to the words of cl. 6 some such words as these: "... and any saving of expenses in loading or discharging to be credited to, or for the benefit of, the charterer." No such words appear here. The argument of counsel for the charterer is that the words "but steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags" means "net freight," or something of that kind. I agree with what counsel for the shipowners said in regard to that matter. I do not know (for this purpose) what is the meaning of "net freight." "Freight" means "freight." It does not mean "freight less expense of earning that freight." "Freight earned" means "freight due under the contract," and the word "freight" is used in that sense in cl. 6 of the charterparty. In the absence of any such words as I have indicated I do not see that the charterer can succeed in his argument, and I agree that this appeal must be allowed. I do not desire to say anything with regard to the cross-appeal. I am in complete agreement with the judgment of SELLERS, J., as to that.

DENNING, L.J.: I agree. When the option given by cl. 6 of the charterparty is exercised the charterer is absolved from the responsibility of loading a full and complete cargo of the contemplated kind. He is given the option of loading "other lawful merchandise," which may be as much as the ship can carry or as little as 200 tons. When that option is exercised the ship need not load a full and complete cargo. The freight at so much per ton of cargo "delivered" is, therefore, inapplicable. So the parties have substituted a sum fixed by the dead-weight capacity of the ship. If the charterer does not choose to utilise the whole of that capacity, that is his affair. So much I take to be clear, but the option clause contains a stipulated maximum whereby the steamer is not to earn more freight than she would have earned if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags. The shipowners say that that maximum operates to reduce the freight calculated on dead-weight capacity because such a cargo would shrink in the course of transit and also to reduce the freight in cases where the ship would not be down to her marks when loaded with a cargo of wheat in bags. The charterer says that a further meaning is to be given to it so as to reduce the freight in cases when the optional cargo costs less to load or unload than wheat in bags. In my opinion, the short answer to this argument, as a matter of construction, is that the clause requires this question to be asked: What freight would the ship earn if loaded with a full cargo of wheat in bags? That question is answered by taking the gross weight delivered in tons and multiplying by the stipulated rate of freight per ton. To ascertain the freight earned, you do not deduct the expenses incurred in earning that freight.

Counsel for the charterer contends that the shipowners should be no better off by reason of the loading of optional cargo, but I see no room for inserting words to that effect in the clause. The clause requires that the shipowners shall be no worse off, but does not say that they shall not be better off. Counsel has disclaimed any intention to treat any part of the freight payable under cl. 6 as dead freight, i.e., as damages, but I think that that is just what he is doing. He is really saying that the shipowners are only to be allowed the damages which they have suffered by reason of the contemplated cargo not being shipped. If this had been a claim for damages, it would mean that the shipowners would have had to give credit for the expenses saved by not having to load and unload the non-existing cargo and for the time saved in loading and unloading. The claim, however, is not a claim for damages and the contract does not provide for any credit of that kind. It provides for a simple calculation of freight. The contention of counsel for the charterer would involve a complicated assessment of the amount the shipowners would save by reason of the optional cargo being shipped. It would open the door to many disputes and arbitrations. It is quite reasonable to suppose that the business men who framed this charter intended to avoid complications of that sort. I agree that the demurrage clauses are quite clear, and that they refer only to the cargo shipped, and I agree with the order proposed by my Lord.

Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Holman, Fenwick & Willan (for the shipowners); Treasury Solicitor (for the charterer).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FINCH v. TELEGRAPH CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J.), January 20, 21, 1949.]

Factory—Protection of eyes—Grinding machine—Obligation to provide goggles—Goggles in foreman's office 30ft. from machine—Safe system of work—Contributory negligence—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 49.

Costs—Tort—High Court action—Damages of £10—"Sufficient reason" for awarding costs on High Court scale—Expectation based on medical evidence of recovering more than £50—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 47 (3) (a).

A factory workman, while operating a double grinding machine and wearing no goggles, suffered an injury from a piece of material thrown up by the machine which entered his eye. It was not disputed that the Factories Act, 1937, s. 49, applied to the process, and that, in conformity with that section, suitable goggles or effective screens should be provided to protect the eyes of the persons employed in the process. Goggles had at one time hung beside the machine for the use of the operator, but it was not the practice to use goggles for grinding in that workshop, and, as the goggles hanging there had been mishandled, the foreman removed them and hung them on a nail inside his office 30ft. away from the machine. The workman did not know where the goggles were.

HELD : (i) the goggles had not been "provided" within the meaning of s. 49, and the company were, therefore, in breach of their statutory duty.

(ii) drawing the attention of the workmen to the need to use goggles and not informing them where they were kept, but leaving the men to ask for goggles if they wanted them, the employer had failed to provide a safe system of work.

(iii) the workman was not guilty of contributory negligence in not asking for the goggles, for it was the duty of the employers to provide them.

Two months after the removal of the grinding, the workman's eye became inflamed and painful, and his vision became misty, so that he was unable to work and sustained loss of wages. The medical report indicated that the eye condition was serious. The workman brought his action in the High Court, but withdrew the contention that the serious eye condition which he contracted was due to the original eye injury. He was awarded £10 damages.

HELD : the workman's mistaken belief in the early stages of the action that there was a claim of substance was not a "sufficient reason" within the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (3) (a), for awarding costs on the High Court scale.

[FOR THE FACTORIES ACT, 1937, s. 49, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 239.]

ACTION for damages for negligence and/or breach of statutory duty.

The plaintiff was a workman who suffered injury to an eye while operating without wearing goggles a double grinding machine in the defendants' factory.

He contended that the defendants had not complied with their statutory duty to provide goggles, and that in their absence there was not a safe system of working. The goggles had been kept in the foreman's office without the workman's knowledge. The workman denied contributory negligence in not asking for the goggles. DEVLIN, J., found for the workman on all three issues and awarded £10 damages with costs on the county court scale, holding that belief, founded on medical evidence, that there was a substantial claim, which was later abandoned, was not a sufficient reason for ordering costs on the High Court scale.

Edgedale, K.C., and Monier-Williams for the workman.

Marven Everett for the defendant company.

DEVLIN, J. : The plaintiff is a plater who was at all material times employed by the defendants at their factory. On Dec. 20, while he was engaged in the process of dry grinding a metal cylinder (he says on a double machine grinder), he got a foreign body into his eye, either a piece of the bobbin which he was grinding or a piece of the grinding itself, and it is in respect of that accident that he brings this action. It is pleaded in two ways. In the first place, he claims that there was a breach of statutory duty under the Factories Act, 1937, s. 49, which provides :

"In the case of any such process as may be specified by regulations of the Secretary of State, being a process which involves a special risk of injury to the eyes from particles or fragments thrown off in the course of the process, suitable goggles or effective screens shall, in accordance with any directions given by the regulations, be provided to protect the eyes of the persons employed in the process."

By the schedule to the Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), the processes to which s. 49 applies include

“Dry grinding of metals or articles of metal applied by hand to a revolving wheel or disc driven by mechanical power.”

[HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence as to the machine on which the plaintiff had been working at the time of the accident, found that it was a double grinding machine, and proceeded:] It is not disputed by counsel for the defendants that the Act and regulations apply, and, accordingly, what I have to consider is whether, on the facts in the present case, suitable goggles were provided to protect the eyes of the workman. On that point there has been a conflict of evidence. The workman's case is that goggles for grinding (that is, with plain glass only) were not provided in the shop in which he worked, and were not, in fact, used. On that he has called, to support his evidence, four fellow workmen, who testify the same thing. The defendants' case rests on the evidence of their foreman, Mr. Stanley, who agreed that it was not generally the practice to use goggles for grinding in the workshop, but, he said, they were used by some men and on long jobs. He agreed that he rarely, if ever, used them himself, but he says that they were available. Originally a pair of goggles had been hanging up beside the double grinding machine, but, owing to the fact that they were carelessly handled while in that position, he hung them inside his office which was about 30ft. from the machine. He did not take any steps at the time he removed the goggles from their place to make it known to the workmen generally that he had moved them to the office, but he says that the men generally knew where the goggles were and could get them if they so desired. I do not think he said that the plaintiff, in particular, knew where the goggles were. I am not prepared to reject Mr. Stanley's evidence that a pair of grinding goggles was hanging up on a nail inside his office, but I think that it is very probable that they were not in a very conspicuous place. I am satisfied by the evidence of the workman and the witnesses who were called for him that neither he nor the majority of the men knew where the goggles were and that they were actually rarely used.

In those circumstances I have to consider whether that was a “providing of goggles” within the meaning of s. 49 of the Act of 1937. I have listened to the careful argument of counsel for the defendants, but I have come to the conclusion that it was not a “providing.” Of course, goggles would be “provided” if they were given to each man individually. I do not think that is the only way in which they could be “provided,” but, in my view, in order to “provide” them within the meaning of the Act it would be necessary either that they should be put in a place where they come easily and obviously to the hand of the workman who is about to grind, or, at the very least, that he should be given clear directions where he is to get them. Accordingly, I think there has been a breach of s. 49.

It is unnecessary to say very much about the alternative provision, about the “safe system of work,” but it might be convenient if I expressed my view about that. I find there was no safe system of work in this workshop with regard to the provision of goggles. I accept the evidence, which was not contradicted, of Mr. Thomas, a consulting engineer who was called by the workman that the process of grinding, whether done on the double grinder or by portable grinder, is a dangerous process. Mr. Stanley, the foreman, admitted that he did not consider it any part of his duty to see that goggles were used. There was not at the time, although there is now, a notice on the machine directing the attention of the men to the fact that the goggles should be used. According to Mr. Stanley, it was simply left to each man to ask for goggles if he wanted them. In my judgment, that is not providing a safe system of working, or any system of working at all, and I shall find for the workman on that issue also.

A There is a plea of contributory negligence in the defence, the contributory negligence pleaded being that the workman failed to make use of the goggles provided for his use, which he well knew were kept hanging on a hook inside the door of the foreman's office. I have found that the workman did not have that knowledge, and, accordingly, all that can be left of the allegation is that he failed to make use of goggles which were hanging on a hook inside the door of the foreman's office. In substance the suggestion must be that he, being a man of experience, should know that it was or might be dangerous to work without goggles and ought to have asked for them, and that it was his failure to ask for them that was the cause of the accident. I cannot accept that as being contributory negligence, since it is the duty of the defendants to provide the goggles. The contributory negligence as alleged merely consists in the workman's failure to ask the defendants to do their duty. I do not think that that failure amounts to contributory negligence. Accordingly, the workman succeeds on the issue of liability. On the whole I am satisfied that an award of the sum of £10 would be sufficient to cover the irritation and inconvenience which was caused to him. Accordingly, there will be judgment for the plaintiff for £10.

B
C Edgedale : I have to ask for an order that the costs should be on the High Court scale. There was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court. My instructing solicitors had before them the report of Dr. Preston, in which it was said that this was obviously a very serious matter.

D DEVLIN, J. : Could you help me on the meaning of "sufficient reason" in the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (3) (a). There may be a sufficient reason for bringing an action in the High Court, although very small damages are awarded. Is "sufficient reason" confined to that sort of thing, or is it sufficient reason to bring an action in the High Court that it looks to the plaintiff's advisers as if he might well recover more than £200 damages, although later it turns out that that is a mistaken view?

E Edgedale : I do not think there is any authority about it. It is a matter of the construction of the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 47 (3). The question is whether there is "sufficient reason for bringing the action in the High Court," and that, in my submission, means any sound reason for doing so. There is nothing in the section to limit the word "reason" to a reason based on the number of persons affected or the importance of the matter. If the reason is purely frivolous—supposing that it is obvious the plaintiff cannot recover more than £50—the action ought not to be brought in the High Court, but no one would say, in the present case, on the evidence of Dr. Preston, that this action ought not to have been brought in the High Court. The purpose of the section is to prevent vexatious litigation. I should submit that this was eminently a case which it was proper to bring in the High Court.

F
G Everett : It is submitted that an action cannot be brought in the High Court merely because, on information which the plaintiff has, it appears to be a matter of substance. "Sufficient reason" in s. 47 (3) (a), means something out of the ordinary, a point of law of general importance, or a case which, plainly on the face of it, is a matter of very great moment.

H DEVLIN, J. : It is not a very easy point, but on the whole I find that there is no evidence here on which I am justified in departing from the normal consequence arising from my judgment. I give judgment for the workman for £10 and costs.

Judgment for the workman for £10, and costs on the county court scale.

Solicitors : Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the plaintiff); Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMLES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LINDOP AND OTHERS v. QUAIFE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ., and Hodson, J.), January 25, 26, 1949.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—Apportionment—House converted into flats—Whole house outside Rent Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (3).

By s. 12 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, "Where, for the purpose of determining the standard rent or rateable value of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, it is necessary to apportion the rent at the date in relation to which the standard rent is to be fixed, or the rateable value of the property in which that dwelling-house is comprised, the county court may, on application by either party, make such apportionment as seems just, and the decision of the court as to the amount to be apportioned to the dwelling-house shall be final and conclusive."

In 1941, the landlord took a lease of a house, the rateable value of which was outside the limits of the Rent Restrictions Acts, for 21 years at a rent of £140 a year. He altered and adapted the house, converting it into ten flats, keeping one for his own occupation and letting the others to tenants. On an application by three of the tenants for an apportionment of the rateable value so as to ascertain the rents of their flats, it was contended that there was no jurisdiction since the house as a whole was not subject to the Rent Acts.

HELD: the county court judge had jurisdiction to apportion the value.

Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne ([1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 175 L.T. 350), followed.

Cole v. Harris ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 173 L.T. 50), distinguished.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-314, para. 369 and 1948 Supp.; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 564-566, Nos. 7117-7132.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne, [1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 175 L.T. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Gover v. Field, [1944] 1 All E.R. 151, 417, n.; 170 L.T. 73; sub nom. Field v. Gover, [1944] K.B. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090.
- (4) Woodhead v. Putnam, [1923] 1 K.B. 252; 128 L.T. 281; 31 Digest 572, 7196.
- (5) Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from a decision of His Honour JUDGE PRATT at Torquay County Court, dated July 30, 1948, whereby, to ascertain the rents of certain flats forming part of a house known as "Western House," Torquay, he apportioned the rateable value of the whole of the house. The Court of Appeal held that the learned county court judge had jurisdiction to make the apportionment and dismissed the appeal.

E. R. Mills for the landlord.

Raymond Stock for the tenants.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I will ask ASQUITH, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

ASQUITH, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE PRATT at Torquay County Court fixing by apportionment the rents of certain flats forming part of a house called "Western House," Torquay. In 1941, the landlord, Mr. Quaife, took a lease of 21 years of that house. Its rateable value was £76, and, therefore, it was outside the limits of the Rent Restrictions Acts for provincial houses. The rent was £140 a year. He altered and adapted the house, turning it into 10 flats of which he kept one and let the others. Three of the persons to whom he sub-let these flats applied for their rents to be fixed by an apportionment of the rateable value of the whole house, and the learned county court judge held that he had jurisdiction to make an apportionment.

There is no dispute about the figures if the apportionment was competent and the sole point in this appeal is whether the judge had jurisdiction to make an apportionment. The provisions of the Acts are two-fold. Section 5 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938, provides that an apportionment may take place in the cases to which that section applies, namely, cases in which both the house as a whole and the parts are within the limits of value set out in the Acts. That section, therefore, has no direct bearing on this case. The other provision dealing with apportionment is s. 12 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and it provides :

"Where, for the purpose of determining the standard rent or rateable value of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, it is necessary to apportion the rent at the date in relation to which the standard rent is to be fixed . . . the county court may, on application by either party, make such apportionment as seems just, and the decision of the court as to the amount to be apportioned to the dwelling-house shall be final and conclusive."

On the threshold of the case counsel for the landlord was confronted with an adverse decision which appears to be directly in point and binding on this court. That is Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1). The point taken by counsel for the landlord was that, unless the house as a whole was within the limits of value laid down in the Acts, no application could successfully be made for an apportionment of the rent of the parts sub-let. Upsons' case (1) decides (inter alia) ([1946] 1 K.B. 591) that : "The dictum of SCOTT, L.J., in Field v. Gover (2) suggesting that s. 12 (3) only applies if both the containing building and the contained dwellings were within the Rent Restrictions Acts does not accord with the law as laid down in Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (3), which must be treated as binding." Therefore, that appears at first sight to be a decision binding on us, directly in point and completely adverse to the argument addressed to us for the landlord. Counsel for the landlord, however, sought to circumvent that awkward position by praying in aid other decisions of this court which were, in his submission, inconsistent with it, and one of which was not cited to the court when Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) was being considered. He relied in part on Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (3), to which I have referred, but I do not think that that case assists him. It was a case in which an apportionment was sought of the rateable value of a house the rateable value of which was in excess of the limits covered by the Rent Restrictions Acts, yet it was held that an apportionment was necessary and proper. In his judgment BANKES, L.J., cited a number of decisions and went out of his way to say ([1925] 2 K.B. 223) :

"The result of these decisions undoubtedly is, to use SALTER, J.'s language in Woodhead v. Putnam (4), that 'to entitle a tenant to apportionment under s. 12 (3), it is not necessary that the "property" in which the applicant's dwelling-house is "comprised" should itself be a dwelling-house, or should be subject to the Act'."

No comfort can be drawn by the landlord from that decision.

The main decision relied on by counsel for the landlord was Cole v. Harris (5), but that was a very different case from the present one. In that case, on Sept. 1, 1939, which the learned judge treated as the material date for the purpose, there were not, as in the present case, a head-lease and sub-leases and sub-rents. The owner in fee simple had let directly to two tenants. The very word "apportionment" necessarily implies that there is a rent for premises as a whole which has to be allocated to smaller units carved out of them and those conditions did not exist in Cole v. Harris (5) at what the learned judge held to be the material time. Therefore, there was no rent which was capable of apportionment. The case might further be explained on the basis of the suggestion of counsel for the tenants that it was not necessary to make the apportionment because, at the material time, the owner in fee simple had let direct to Mr. Cole's predecessor on Sept. 1, 1939. The facts of that case are, indeed, remote from this present case, and I do not think there is anything in that decision to qualify the principle laid down in Upsons' case (1) which I propose to follow. That principle seems to be fatal to the only contention put forward by the landlord, and for those reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree. I would only add that SOMERVELL, L.J., in Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) said in the course of his judgment ([1946] 2 All E.R. 312) :

"I have referred above to Barrett's case (3). That case proceeded on the view that s. 12 (3), may apply although the larger property, the rent of which is to be apportioned, is itself outside the Acts and contains premises other than 'dwelling-houses.' Our attention was drawn to a dictum by SCOTT, L.J., in Field v. Gover (2), in which he was inclined to the view that s. 12 (3) of the 1920 Act only applied if both houses, the containing and the contained, were within the Acts. It does not appear that SCOTT, L.J.'s attention was drawn to Barrett's case (3) and the authorities there referred to, and I do not, speaking for myself, think that the dictum should be regarded as throwing doubt on the law as laid down in Barrett's case (3)."

MORTON, L.J., who had already given his judgment, said (ibid., 313 ; [1946] K.B. 597) :

"I should like to add this, that I agree with the observations made by SOMERVELL, L.J., in regard to the true construction of s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920, and in regard to the case of Field v. Gover (2)."

I draw the conclusion from those remarks of MORTON, L.J., that, if there is, in fact—and I do not think there is—any conflict between his decision in Cole v. Harris (5) and his decision in Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1), his second thoughts were best.

HODSON, J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Arnold Carter & Co., agents for Dunn & Baker, Exeter (for the landlord) ; Wood, Nash & Co., agents for Kitsons, Hutchings, Easterbrook & Co., Torquay, and Almy & Thomas, Torquay (for the tenants).

Re GAITE'S WILL TRUSTS. BANKS AND ANOTHER v.
GAITE AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), February 11, 1949.]

Perpetuities—Gift to the grandchildren of named person living at testatrix's death or born within five years therefrom and attaining 21.

A

By her will a testatrix gave a legacy of £5,000 to trustees on trust to pay the income to H.G. for her life, and directed that "after her death [they] shall stand possessed of both income and capital thereof in trust for such of her grandchildren living at my death or born within five years therefrom who shall attain the age of 21 years or being a female marry under that age in equal shares." She also bequeathed a share of residue on trust "for such of the grandchildren of H.G. as shall be living at my death or born within five years therefrom who shall attain the age of 21 years or being female marry under that age in equal shares."

B

C

HELD: under the provisions of the Age of Marriage Act, 1929, a child under the age of 16 years could not lawfully be married; therefore, a child of H.G. born after the death of the testatrix could not be lawfully married and have lawful children within five years of the death of the testatrix, and the bequests did not infringe the rule against perpetuities.

[AS TO PRINCIPLES GOVERNING LIMITATION OF CLASS GIFT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 134-141, paras. 229-237; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 98-102, Nos. 342-373.]

D

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether gifts by will to the grandchildren of a Mrs. Hagar Gaite, living at the date of the testatrix's death or born within five years thereafter and attaining 21 years of age, were void as infringing the rule against perpetuities.

E

The testatrix made her will on Mar. 14, 1947, and died on Nov. 9, 1947. Mrs. Hagar Gaite, who was entitled to a life interest under the will, survived the testatrix and at the date of the summons was aged 67 years and a widow, her husband having predeceased the testatrix. She had two children living at the date of the testatrix's death, and one grandchild, who was born on May 27, 1939. ROXBURGH, J., held that, if Mrs. Gaite had a child after the death of the testatrix, quite apart from any question of physical possibility, it would be impossible for that child to have lawful issue within the five years' limit set by the will because, having regard to the Age of Marriage Act, 1929, s. 1, it could not legally marry within that time, and the rule could not, therefore, be infringed.

F

W. F. Waite for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the will.

Boraston for the first defendant, the grandchild.

G

R. W. Goff for the second and remaining defendants, persons interested under the will or on intestacy.

ROXBURGH, J.: The testatrix gave a legacy of £5,000 to trustees on trust to pay the income to a Mrs. Hagar Gaite for life and directed:

H

"... and after her death [they] shall stand possessed of both the income and capital thereof in trust for such of her grandchildren living at my death or born within five years therefrom who shall attain the age of 21 years or being a female marry under that age in equal shares."

She also bequeathed a share of residue in trust:

"... for such of the grandchildren of Mrs. Hagar Gaite as shall be living at my death or born within five years therefrom who shall attain the age of 21 years or being female marry under that age in equal shares."

The question is whether the reversionary trusts in the case of the legacy and those immediate trusts of a share of residue infringe the rule against perpetuities.

I must assume that Mrs. Hagar Gaite, who was alive at the date of the death of the testatrix, might have had a child within five years after the death of the testatrix. What is impossible is that that child of Mrs. Hagar Gaite, ex hypothesi born after the death of the testatrix, could itself have had a child within that period of five years, and that is essential to qualify for membership of the class. I do not base my judgment on physical impossibility. I leave all questions of that sort open for consideration when they arise because the matter is, in my judgment, concluded—and counsel for the second defendant admitted it was concluded—by the Age of Marriage Act, 1929, s. 1 (1), which provides :

“A marriage between persons either of whom is under the age of sixteen shall be void.”

Ex hypothesi, the child of Mrs. Hagar Gaite born after the death of the testatrix must be under the age of 16 years at the expiration of five years from the death of the testatrix, and, therefore, that child could not lawfully be married and have lawful children. In construing the rule, I must have regard to the statute law of England, and, therefore, I hold that the rule is not infringed.

Bequests declared to be good. Costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker (for the plaintiff, and the defendants, except the first); Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash (for the first defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MULHOLLAND'S WILL TRUSTS. BRYAN AND OTHERS v. WESTMINSTER BANK LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), February 10, 11, 1949.]

Trustee—Profit from trust—Contract entered into before creation of fiduciary relation—Sale to trustee of trust property—Lease to bank with option to purchase—Appointment of bank as lessor's executor and trustee—Option exercised by bank after death of lessor.

By a lease, dated Sept. 1, 1936, the testator demised to a bank certain property for a term of 21 years from Mar. 31, 1936, the lease providing that the bank should have an option to purchase the demised premises subject to the conditions that (1) the option should not be exercisable in the testator's lifetime without his consent, and (2) that, if the testator should die during the term created by the lease, the option should be exercisable by the bank at the price of £2,500 on not less than three calendar months' notice in writing. By his will, dated July 26, 1937, the testator, who died on Mar. 28, 1942, appointed the bank and his widow to be his executors and trustees. By a notice in writing, dated July 11, 1946, the bank exercised the option to purchase granted by the lease, and the property was conveyed to the bank by the bank and the widow on July 31, 1947. Beneficiaries under the will sought to have the conveyance set aside.

HELD: the only contract between the parties was that constituted by the provisions in the lease; the notice exercising the option did not lead to the creation of any fresh contractual relationship between them, nor did it bring into existence any right in addition to that conferred by the option; therefore, the only contractual right was created before the fiduciary relationship arose, and, as the testator could not annul his contract simply by appointing the bank as executor, the bank was entitled to exercise the option and the conveyance must stand.

Vyse v. Foster (1874) (L.R. 7 H.L. 318) and dictum of JESSEL, M.R., in London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm (1882) (20 Ch.D. 582; 46 L.T. 452), applied.

Aberdeen Ry. Co. v. Blaikie Brothers (1854) (1 Macqueen 461, 23 L.T.O.S. 315) and Wright v. Morgan ([1926] A.C. 788; 135 L.T. 713), distinguished.

[AS TO SETTING ASIDE A PURCHASE BY A TRUSTEE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 285-287, para. 501; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 778-785, Nos. 2189-2250.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Aberdeen Ry. Co. v. Blaikie Brothers, (1854), 1 Macqueen 461; 2 Eq. Rep. 1281; 23 L.T.O.S. 315; 10 Digest 1176, 8339.

(2) Vyse v. Foster, (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 318; affgm., (1872), 8 Ch. App. 309; 27 L.T. 774; 43 Digest 916, 3571.

(3) Hordern v. Hordern, [1910] A.C. 465; 102 L.T. 867; 43 Digest 90, 946.

(4) Re Lewis, (1910), 103 L.T. 495; 43 Digest 774, 2142.

(5) Re Macadam, [1945] 2 All E.R. 664; [1946] Ch. 73; 173 L.T. 395;

2nd Digest Supp.

(6) Wright v. Morgan, [1926] A.C. 788; 135 L.T. 713; 43 Digest 781, 2218.

(7) London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 46 L.T. 449; 11 Digest 286, 2141.

WITNESS ACTION.

The plaintiffs, beneficiaries under the will of Thomas Ambrose Mulholland, deceased, claimed an order setting aside a conveyance dated July 31, 1947, and made between the defendant bank and the testator's widow (who were together the executors and trustees of the testator's will), of the one part, and the bank, of the other part, whereby certain property, of which the bank was lessee, was conveyed to the bank on the exercise by the bank of an option to purchase contained in the lease. The plaintiffs also claimed delivery of the conveyance for cancellation, and an account of the rents and profits. WYNN-PARRY, J., held that the bank was entitled to exercise its option and that the conveyance must stand. The facts appear in the judgment.

Upjohn, K.C., and Danckwerts for the plaintiffs, the widow (an executor and trustee) and the children of the testator.

Milner Holland, K.C., and Harold Brown for the bank.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: This is an action brought by the plaintiffs as beneficiaries under the will of the testator, Thomas Ambrose Mulholland, against the defendants, Westminster Bank Ltd., one of the two executors and trustees of the testator, for an order setting aside a conveyance dated July 31, 1947, by which certain freehold property forming part of the estate of the testator was conveyed to the bank.

By a lease, dated Sept. 1, 1936, the testator leased to the bank certain property known as 173, College Road, Great Crosby, Lancashire, for the term of 21 years from Mar. 31, 1936. By the lease it was provided that the bank should have the option to purchase the demised premises as an estate in fee simple in possession free from incumbrances subject to two conditions (i) that the option should not be exercisable during the life of the testator without his consent, and (ii) that, if the testator should die during the term created by the lease, the bank should have the option to purchase at the price of £2,500 by giving not less than three calendar months' notice in writing of such intention at the expiration of the year in which the testator should die or at the expiration of any subsequent year. By his will, dated July 26, 1937, the testator appointed the bank and his widow, the fourth plaintiff, to be the executors and trustees of his will, and declared that the bank should be entitled to remuneration in addition to the customary share of brokerage in accordance with the bank's scale of fees then in force free from duties, and, further, that the bank should, without being liable to account for any profit made thereby, be entitled to act as banker and transact any banking or allied business on behalf of his estate on the same terms as would be made with a customer in the ordinary course of business. He settled his residuary estate on trust for his widow for life and directed that on her death it should be divided among his children who should survive him and attain 21 years of age. The testator had three children, all daughters, who survived him and attained the age of 21, and they are the first three plaintiffs. The testator died on Mar. 28, 1942, and his will was proved by the bank and his widow on Sept. 25, 1942, in the District Probate Registry at Liverpool. By a notice in writing, dated July 11, 1946, the bank exercised the option to purchase granted by the lease. After considerable correspondence between the bank's solicitors and a firm of solicitors acting on behalf of the trustee department of the bank and the widow, as the executors and trustees, as to the requisitions on title, the content and scope of the property, rights to be conveyed and assured, and other similar matters, the property in question was conveyed to the bank by a conveyance dated July 31, 1947, made between the bank and the widow, of the one part, and the bank, of the other part. The point, taken at one time, that the notice of July 11, 1946, did not comply with the terms of the option was not pressed, and the validity of the notice was not disputed.

It was contended that the plaintiffs, as beneficiaries under the will, were entitled to have the conveyance set aside because at the date when the bank exercised the option they were trustees of the property the subject-matter of the option; that, as trustees, they were not entitled to place themselves in a position where their duty and their interests conflicted; and, therefore, having accepted the executorship and trusteeship, they had effectively precluded themselves from exercising the option. Reliance was placed on the well-known passage of LORD CRANWORTH, L.C., in Aberdeen Ry. Co. v. Blaikie Brothers (1), where he said (1 Macqueen 471):

"A corporate body can only act by agents, and it is of course the duty of those agents so to act as best to promote the interests of the corporation whose affairs they are conducting. Such agents have duties to discharge of a fiduciary nature towards their principal. And it is a rule of universal application, that no one, having such duties to discharge, shall be allowed to enter into engagements in which he has, or can have, a personal interest conflicting, or which possibly may conflict, with the interests of those whom he is bound to protect. So strictly is this principle adhered to, that no question is allowed to be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of a contract so entered into. It obviously is, or may be, impossible to demonstrate how far in any particular case the terms of such a contract have been the best for the interest of the cestui que trust, which it was possible to obtain. It may sometimes happen that the terms on which a trustee has dealt or attempted to deal with the estate or interests of those for whom he is a trustee, have been as good as could have been obtained from any other person,—they may even at the time have been better. But still so inflexible is the rule that no inquiry on that subject is permitted. The English authorities on this head are numerous and uniform . . . It is true that the questions have generally arisen on agreements for purchases or leases of land, and not, as here, on a contract of a mercantile character. But this can make no difference in principle. The inability to contract depends not on the subject-matter of the agreement, but on the fiduciary character of the contracting party, and I cannot entertain a doubt of its being applicable to the case of a party who is acting as manager of a mercantile or trading business for the benefit of others, no less than to that of an agent or trustee employed in selling or letting land."

The principle which emerges from those passages is that the existence of the fiduciary relationship creates an inability in the trustee to contract in regard to the trust property. The case, as I read it, does not touch the position arising where the contract in question has been brought into existence before the fiduciary relationship. That in such a case the trustee is not precluded by the subsequent fiduciary relationship from asserting his rights under the pre-existing contract emerges clearly from such cases as Vyse v. Foster (2), Hordern v. Hordern (3), Re Lewis (4) and Re Macadam (5).

In Vyse v. Foster (2) the question arose because a deceased partner in a partnership, the partnership agreement governing which contained a provision that the surviving partners should purchase the share of the deceased partner on terms set out in the deed, appointed a surviving partner his executor and trustee. In the course of his opinion LORD CAIRNS, L.C., said (L.R. 7 H.L. 332):

"My Lords, in point of fact the testator appointed as one of his executors one of his partners, Mr. Henry Vyse. I apprehend it to have been perfectly clear that the testator could not, by appointing one of his partners as his executor, annul that partnership contract which he had deliberately entered into. I cannot admit that it was necessary for the person so appointed executor to disclaim the executorship in order to save his contract. In the view, at least, of a Court of Equity, I apprehend that the contract remained in full vigour, even although there might, from the peculiar position of the executor as a surviving partner, be reasons for watching narrowly the course which he would take with regard to the fulfilment of the contract."

To meet this point, counsel for the plaintiffs relied on Wright v. Morgan (6) the headnote of which is:

"The owner of two estates in New Zealand, known as Surrey Hills and Windermere, provided by his will that they should be offered at valuations, made as therein directed, to the testator's son H.H.W., who was one of the trustees under the will. After the death of the testator, H.H.W. sold and conveyed his rights under the will, including his right to purchase the estates, to D.W., another son of the testator, also one of the trustees. In 1907 the trustees sold Surrey Hills at a valuation, made as provided, to D.W., as being entitled to exercise the option. In 1908 Windermere, including land known as Chapman's Block, which had been bought by the trustees without authority, was similarly sold to D.W. The farming stock on each estate was separately valued and included in the sale, though not referred to in the will. At the date of sale of Windermere D.W. had ceased to be a trustee, but he had arranged the sale before retiring from the trust. In 1922 an action was brought to set aside the sales to D.W., for an account of profits and payments to the trust:—Held, that the sales must be set aside, as the trustees could not sell to one of themselves without a conflict of duty and interest arising."

That case appears to me, on its facts, to be materially different from the present case. In the first place, the right given by the will was only a right to have the property in question offered. In the second place, the right in question was not a contractual right, but it arose under the will. In the third place, the person who purported to exercise the right was not the person to whom the right was given, and, in the fourth place, whereas the time at which the right might be exercised might well be a matter of considerable importance, the same cannot be said as regards the option in the present case, because everything essential was provided in the option at the time of making it, and it could make no difference, so far as the estate of the testator is concerned, when, if at all, the bank should exercise the right. Then it was said that the option here amounted to no more than an offer by the testator which, as consideration had passed, could not be withdrawn; that, if the option should be exercised, the offer would be accepted and a contract to purchase would spring into existence; but that at the date of that contract the fiduciary relationship had come into existence and, therefore, the bank was not entitled effectively to exercise the option.

I do not attempt to state any proposition which will necessarily apply to every type of option. I am dealing in the present case with an option to purchase land, and I confine myself to that type of option. It must be remembered that an option such as this confers an immediate equitable interest in the land which is the subject of the option: see London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm (7), and that equitable interest is one which is capable of being registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, s. 10, class C, sub-para. (iv), which provides that the following class of charge can be registered:

"Any contract by an estate owner or by a person entitled at the date of the contract to have a legal estate conveyed to him to convey or create a legal estate, including a contract conferring either expressly or by statutory implication a valid option of purchase, a right of pre-emption or any other like right (in this Act referred to as 'an estate contract')."

The nature of such an option was considered by SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in London and South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm (7), where he said (20 Ch.D. 582):

"Now is there any substantial distinction between a contract for purchase, or an option for purchase, and a conditional limitation? Is there any difference in substance between the case of a limitation to A. in fee, with a proviso that whenever a notice in writing is sent and £100 paid by B. or his heirs to A. or his heirs the estate shall vest in B. and his heirs, and a contract that whenever such notice is given and such payment made by B. or his heirs to A. or his heirs, A. shall convey to B. and his heirs? It seems to me that in a court of equity it is impossible to suggest that there is any real distinction between these two cases."

